The Doctrine of Sanctification: An Exegetical Examination, with Application, in Historic Baptist Perspective, to which is Appended a Historical, Exegetical, and Elenctic Evaluation of Influential Errors, Particularly the Keswick Theology

NOTE: This is a WORK IN PROGRESS. It is NOT yet completed, but the author felt it was important enough that he wanted to make it available now.

I. Summary of the Significance of Romans 6:6

II. Exegetical Justification for the Significance Assigned

A. Crucifixion with Christ Does Not Mean That Sin Is Already Utterly Destroyed In The Christian Life

B. The Ethically Sinful Portion Of The Regenerate Is Already Legally And Judicially Dead, But In Practical Sanctification What Is Legally Dead Must Still Be Put To Death, A Work That Continues Until And Is Consummated In Glorification

C. The Significance Of And Relationships Between The Old Man, The Body Of Sin, And The Flesh, How These Are To Be Mortified, And The Nature Of Mortification

D. The Nature And Means Of Vivification, The Positive Converse of Mortification

I. The Nature of Vivification

1.) Vivification as Quickening

2.) Vivification as Growth

3.) Vivification as Building Up

4.) Vivification as Strengthening

5.) Vivification as Transformation

6.) Vivification as Perfecting

7.) Vivification as Renewal Sourced in Regeneration

II. The Prerequisites for Vivification

1.) Be Right With God

2.)

III. The Means of Vivification

1.) Vivification Comes By "Exercise"

E. The Body of Sin Is Indeed Destroyed, Not Merely Counteracted

F. Gradual Deliverance From The Power Of Sin Is Consistent With the Aorist Subjunctive Of "To Destroy" (katargeo) In Romans 6:6

G. How Does God Make Believers More Holy in Progressive Sanctification?

I. The Distinction Between Those Right With God And The Backslidden Believer
III. The Certainty of Practical Sanctification For All The Regenerate
A. Scripture Clearly Teaches That All Saved People Will Be Changed
B. 1 John Teaches That All Saved People Are And Will Be Different
IV. Exegetical and Historical Excurses Relevant to Sanctification
C. Excursus I: Does Colossians 2:6-7 Teach Sanctification by Faith Alone?
D. Excursus II: Romans 7:14-25: A Depiction of Part of the Normal Christian Life
E. Excursus III: Does Galatians 2:20, Or Any Other Text of Scripture, Teach that Christ Lives the Christian Life Instead of the Believer?
F. Excursus IV: Hebrews 3-4 As An Alleged Evidence For Perpetually Sinning Christians
G. Excursus V: "And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit" (Ephesians 5:18)
H. Excursus VI: Is Fallen Man's Obligation To Obey God Limited To His Ability To Do So?
I. Excursus VII: Are All Believers Disciples?
J. Excursus VIII: What Does It Mean To Abide in Christ?
K. Excursus IX: Regeneration and Sanctification Are Connected with the Renewal of the Whole Person, Body, Soul, and Spirit—Not with the Spirit Alone
L. Excursus X: Hannah Whitall Smith: Higher Life Writer, Speaker on Sanctification, Developer of the Keswick Theology, Quaker Quietist and Universalist Heretic
M. Excursus XI: An Analysis and Critique of Keswick Theology as Set Forth Particularly In So Great Salvation: The History and Message of the Keswick Convention, by Steven Barabas
N. Excursus XII: Do Keswick Critics Routinely Misrepresent Keswick Theology?
V. A Concluding Exhortation
VI. Classic Documents That Relate To Crucifixion With Christ And Sanctification In General
A. 2nd London Baptist Confession of Faith (1677) / Philadelphia Baptist Confession of Faith (1689/1720), Article 13, Of Sanctification
B. An Orthodox Creed (1678), Article 26, Of Sanctification and Good Works
C. "The Means Of Sanctification," James Petigru Boyce.
D. An Excerpt from A Discourse Concerning the Holy Spirit, John Owen.
E. An Excerpt from The Method of Grace: How the Spirit Works, John Flavel.

F. The Nature of True Holiness Explained, John Brine

G. The Old Man Crucified, Charles H. Spurgeon.

H. The Old And The New Man In Believers, Thomas Boston.

VII. Bibliography

I. Summary of the Significance of the Verse

Romans 6:6 promises that the believer's "old man," the pre-conversion person dominated by sin, the person "in Adam," "is crucified with" Christ. It is judicially dead, having been judicially destroyed at the time of the crucifixion of Christ. The "body of sin," the body dominated by sin when the Christian was still unconverted, has been judicially destroyed. This destruction is associated with positional sanctification.[1] In

---

[1] "Sanctification [is one] of the privileges bestowed upon the people of God, as the result of their union with Christ. . . .[J]ustify . . . means simply to declare just, or to treat as just; sanctify means to make holy. The usage of Scripture is as clear in this case as in that. The word 'holy' in Scripture has, however, various meanings. It is sometimes applied to things, and not to persons only.

1.) It is used in the sense of that which is set apart or dedicated to an especial use. Thus, God threatens that instruments of vengeance will be 'prepared' (sanctified) against 'the king's house of Judah,' Jeremiah 22:7. But the dedication is most frequently for some holy use. Thus, 'holy' is applied to the Sabbath day (Exodus 31:14); and to the house of God (Leviticus 16:33); and to the water (Numbers 5:17); and to the vessels of the young men (1 Samuel 21:5).

2.) Things are also called holy from their connection with holy persons. Thus, the 'place' on which Moses stood was proclaimed 'holy' on account of its connection with Jehovah (Exodus 3:5); likewise the Mount of Transfiguration (2 Peter 1:18).

3.) As descriptive of an act free from sin, and performed with holy motives. Thus, the kiss of Christian salutation, called in 1 Peter 5:14 a kiss of charity, is in several other places called a 'holy kiss.' 1 Corinthians 16:20; 2 Corinthians 13:12; 1 Thessalonians 5:26.

4.) 'Holy,' as tending to produce holiness; as 'most holy faith' (Jude 20).

5.) It is most generally used as descriptive of personal character, whether the holiness be perfect, as in God, or angels, or glorified saints; or partial, as seen in his people on earth. A few of the many instances of its application to this last class are 1 Samuel 2:9; Acts 9:13; Romans 15:25, 26; Philippians 4:21; Ephesians 1:1; Colossians 1:2; Revelation 18:24.

The doctrine of sanctification has reference to the first and last of these usages of 'holy;' to the last more especially, as including the character of holiness produced by the continuous working of the Holy Ghost through the word of truth; but also to the first, as involving that dedication of person and life to God, which constitutes that 'living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God,' which is the believer's 'reasonable service.' Romans 12:1. Christian holiness includes both character and life. 'Sanctification' is the process by which these are accomplished. The 'sanctified' are those who are thus made holy. To 'sanctify' is to make them thus holy" (pgs. 1-2, Chapter 37, "Sanctification," Abstract of Systematic Theology, James Petigru Boyce. Elec. acc. in Christian Library Series, vol. 17: Systematic Theologies, AGES Library, Rio, WI: 2006).

"[Progressive] [s]anctification is not synonymous with holiness—it is not the state of one who is made holy—but it is the act by which such a state is produced. It is . . . the work of God . . . the work of each Person in the Godhead in particular. . . . But, while we regard it as the work of God, it is important in another view that we should regard it as the work of man. The subject of it is a rational and responsible agent. . . . He has a duty to perform and a work to do . . . [i]n prosecuting this work, his reliance for success must be . . . on the Spirit of God working by appointed means. He must be active, and yet he must not depend on himself. . . . [His] encouragement to be active in the use of means . . . rest[s] upon [his] knowledge of the interposition and the agency of God" (pgs. 13-15, The Scripture Doctrine of Sanctification, W. D. Snodgrass).

"[Progressive] [s]anctification may be defined as that operation of the Holy Spirit, involving man's responsible participation, by which he renews man's nature and enables him to live to the praise of God. Sanctification, therefore, is both the work of God and the task of man" (pg. 8, Created In God's Image, Anthony A. Hoekema).

"Sanctification is that continuous operation of the Holy Spirit, by which the holy disposition terms of progressive sanctification, the flesh, the ethically sinful "body of sin," has received its death blow, and its ultimate destruction at glorification is certain, as a man who is on a cross is certain of ultimate death, although he still can struggle and fight within certain limits.[2] The flesh within the believer is certain of utter destruction at death or the return of Christ, but during this life, although crucified and growing weaker, it can still influence the Christian to sin. These remnants of sin in the believer are to be mortified, put to death, to bring the legal and judicial truth and the ultimate certainty of glorification closer to practical reality in this life. This crucifixion with Christ in the believer has the result "that the body of sin might be destroyed." This destruction, judicially completed at the time of Christ's crucifixion, and positionally and legally declared for the believer at the moment of his regeneration, will take place ultimately at glorification, when the remnants of sin in the Christian are entirely removed, finally and imparted in regeneration is maintained and strengthened. . . . [It] consists negatively in the removal of the penal consequences of sin from the moral nature and positively in the progressive implanting and growth of a new principle of life. . . . Although in regeneration the governing disposition of the soul is made holy, there still remain tendencies to evil which are not subdued. . . . The existence in the believer of these two opposing principles gives rise to a conflict which lasts through life. . . . In this conflict the Holy Spirit enables the Christian, through increasing faith, to more fully and consciously appropriate Christ, and thus progressively to make conquest of the remaining sinfulness of his nature. . . . The Christian is "crucified with Christ" (Galatians 2:20), but the crucified man does not die at once. Yet he is as good as dead. Even after the old man is crucified we are still to mortify him or put him to death (Romans 8:13; Colossians 3:5). . . . [I]n the genuine believer, the old does little by little die and the new takes its place. . . . Sanctification does not always proceed in regular and unbroken course, and it is never complete in this life . . . [but] in the life to come . . . sanctification . . . of the soul . . . is completed . . . at death . . . and of the body of the believer . . . at the resurrection" (pgs. 169-179, Section 3: "The Application of Christ's Redemption in its Continuation: Sanctification," in Systematic Theology, Augustus Strong. Elec. acc. Christian Library Series, vol. 17: Systematic Theologies, AGES Library, Rio, WI: 2006).

---

[2] "Christ, by his expiatory sufferings and death, redeemed his people from the curse, brought them under grace, and procured for them the blessing of the Spirit, who creates in them the new man, and dwelling in them, supports the new man against the old man, and gives complete victory over him at last. . . . Christ . . . left . . . sin nailed fast to the cross, crucified, and hard bound, in order to final destruction. The virtue of his cross reaching in due time his people in their own persons, they are justified, delivered from the curse, brought under grace; and they are to consider the old man in them as crucified; in order to his death, and total extinction. . . . [W]e may [also] consider crucifixion as representing . . . the condition in which the old man, sin and the lusts thereof, do remain in the believer; not, as some time, at full liberty, and in full force and prevalence, but, though alive, living in pain, checked, resisted, repressed, and mortified. His efforts, as of one in desperate condition, may be with considerable force, and too often with ill effect to the slothful, unwatchful Christian. Yet at last, like what happened outwardly to the crucified thieves, this malefactor, the old man, will, in the end of the day, be slain by one blow of almighty grace. . . . The expression, however, in this first clause, is not, that the old man is put to death. Persons might live a considerable while, yea some days, on the cross. Crucifixion is not a state of death, but a state of pain, and torment, tending to death. . . . [T]his old man, by a power superior to that of the new man in us, even by the power and virtue of the cross of Christ, is adjudged to death, crucified, and bound fast, as to Christ's cross; so that as surely as the cross of Christ exists in virtue and efficacy, so surely shall he die; and the present effect of this his crucifixion is that this old man . . . is deprived of its force and reigning power, is enervated and enfeebled; so that from henceforth we are not in servitude to it or under its dominion, though it remaineth in us" (pgs. 60-61, 65-66, The Scripture Doctrine of Sanctification, James Fraser).

completely destroyed. However, the beginnings of this utter destruction are already set in motion, even as the crucifixion of the old man with Christ, which took place legally at the time of the Savior's own crucifixion and begins experientially in the life of the elect at the point of their regeneration, progressively removes the life and strength from the old man, the body of sin. The negative aspects of the progressive mortification of sin in this life, is the converse to the vivification, the progressive cleansing, sanctification of the believer, and growth of the new man, produced by the Triune God and especially the Holy Spirit[3] through the Scriptures. This vivification culminates in glorification,[4] when the Christian will be entirely without spot or wrinkle (Ephesians 5:26-27). Since the old man is already judicially crucified and dead, and experientially and progressively crucified and dying, on its way to certain destruction, the believer "henceforth . . . should not serve sin." Freedom from service to sin in this life and the elimination of its reigning power (Romans 6:14) is immediately received at the moment of regeneration. Progressive deliverance from sin, the progressive destruction and progressive weakening of the strength of the old man, are the saint's current portion, and final and ultimate deliverance from all service to sin, and the final and complete destruction of the old man in heaven are his certain inheritance. Regeneration shatters the dominance of sin in the

---

[3] The Author of sanctification . . . is God. . . . The work is attributed to God without reference to any distinction of persons. 1Thessalonians 4:3; 5:23. It is also ascribed to the Father, John 17:17; Hebrews 13:21; and to Christ, Ephesians 5:26; Titus 2:14.

But it is the especial work of the Holy Spirit, who is the author of the process of Sanctification, as he is also the act of Regeneration. 1 Corinthians 6:11; 2 Corinthians 3:18; 2 Thessalonians 2:13; 1 Peter 1:2.

1.) He enlightens the mind. John 14:26; 1Corinthians 2:9-16; Ephesians 1:18; 3:18, 19; 1 John 2:20, 27. On this account he is called "the Spirit of truth," John 14:17; 15:26; 16:13; and the "Spirit of wisdom." Ephesians 1:17.

2.) He gives spiritual strength (Ephesians 3:16), lusting against the flesh (Galatians 5:17), enabling the believer to mortify the deeds of the body (Romans 8:13), leading the sons of God (Romans 8:14), and enabling them to purify their souls in obeying the truth. 1 Peter 1:22.

3.) Inasmuch as he dwells within them (Rom. 8: 9), so that they are his temple (1 Corinthians 3:16), with whom they are sealed as the earnest of their inheritance (Ephesians 1:13, 14), so, also, does he bear witness with their spirits that they are the children of God, and, removing the spirit of bondage to fear, bestows on them the spirit of adoption, whereby they cry Abba, Father. Romans 8:15, 16.

4.) The fruit of this indwelling Spirit is declared to be "in all goodness and righteousness and truth." Ephesians 5:9. It is specifically stated to be "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Galatians 5:22. . . .

[W]hile there is such need of a divine author of sanctification, it is a work in which the believer is passively a recipient, but one in which he actively cooperates. (pgs. 6-7, Chapter 37, "Sanctification," Abstract of Systematic Theology, James Petigru Boyce. Elec. acc. in Christian Library Series, vol. 17: Systematic Theologies, AGES Library, Rio, WI: 2006)

[4] "Glory, therefore, is Grace in its full Maturity, or our spiritual Knowledge of spiritual Things grown up to its intended Perfection. A most pleasing Thought this, and it is what may very justly be considered as a most persuasive Motive, diligently to study . . . sacred Truths" (pg. 19, "The Nature of True Holiness Explained In a Discourse [on Hebrews 12:14], Delivered at a Monthy Exercise of Prayer, with a Sermon, on the Twentieth of April, 1749," John Brine).

believer and imparts a new nature, progressive sanctification brings the growth of the new nature and the progressive dying of indwelling sin, and glorification completes the work of sanctification as indwelling sin is forever extirpated and the believer enjoys perfect holiness in the presence of God. These are the purposes of God in and results of the saint's crucifixion with Christ.

II. Exegetical Justification for the Significance Assigned

A. Crucifixion with Christ Does Not Mean That Sin is Already Utterly Destroyed in The Christian Life

Crucifixion with Christ does not mean that the motions of the sinful remnants within the saint are entirely unable to do anything anymore in practice and are already entirely destroyed.[5] The uses of "crucified with," sustaurao (συσταυρόω) in the gospels, where the word is employed of the thieves crucified with the Lord, certainly do not indicate that those crucified with Christ were already dead in practice (Matthew 27:44; Mark 15:32; John 19:32). A man who is literally condemned to death on a cross is legally dead, his future actual bodily death is certain, and he grows progressively weaker over time. In addition to his future death being certain, he had certain definite limitations imposed upon him from his crucifixion. His arms and legs were immobilized, and their actings were thus subscribed to a certain limited sphere, although not entirely eliminated—a man who has not been crucified can walk and act in a much wider sphere than one who is nailed to a cross. His fleshly struggles against his coming death were more violent at one time than at another, but overall through time grew progressively weaker until he finally died, although his body, his flesh, was still able to perform various [5] "The depravity or corruption of nature is total. . . . Genesis 6:5, 'God saw that every imagination of the thoughts of man was only evil continually.' There can be but a single dominant inclination in the will at one and the same time; though with it there may be remnants of a previously dominant inclination. Adam began a new sinful inclination. This expelled the prior holy inclination. He was therefore totally depraved, because there were no remainders of original righteousness left after apostasy, as there are remainders of original sin left after regeneration. This is proved by the fact that there is no struggle between sin and holiness, in the natural man, like that in the spiritual man. In the regenerate, 'the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh,' Galatians 5:17. Holiness and sin are in a conflict that causes the regenerate to 'groan within themselves,' Romans 8:23. But there is no such conflict and groaning in the natural man. Apostasy was the fall of the human will, with no remnants of original righteousness. Regeneration is the recovery of the human will, with some remnants of original sin." (pg. 64, Chapter 5, "Original Sin," Dogmatic Theology: Anthropology, William G. T. Shedd. Elec. acc. in Christian Library Series, vol. 17: Systematic Theologies, AGES Library, Rio, WI: 2006).

---

actions and exert vigor until the time of its final passing.[6] So the sin within a believer is legally judged dead already, its reign is shattered, it is certain of a coming utter destruction, it is confined within certain limits beyond which it cannot pass (cf. 1 Corinthians 6:9-11; Galatians 5:18-24),[7] and it is growing weaker as through time the believer mortifies it, but it is not yet entirely motionless or its vigor entirely eliminated.

The verb crucify[8] is employed quite a number of times in the gospels for those who have had the sentence of death passed upon them legally, yet are not yet literally dead (Matthew 27:35, 38; 28:5; Mark 15:24, 25, 27; Luke 23:33; John 19:18, 23), just as cocrucify/crucify with is clearly employed in this sense (Matthew 27:34; Mark 15:34; John 19:32). Indeed, no text in Scripture clearly makes crucify and die absolute synonyms, although crucifixion unquestionably leads to literal death, so that one who has been crucified eventually dies as a result (Matthew 20:19; 23:34; John 19:10, etc.). This, however, does not mean that the two words are identical any more than the fact that someone dies from terminal cancer means that to have cancer is a synonym with to die, or the fact that starvation leads to death means that to starve is a synonym with to die. Nor does the fact that the Christian is both crucified with Christ and dead with Christ prove the two terms are synonyms—believers are also buried with and risen with Christ, but nobody would argue that since believers are crucified with Christ and risen with Him crucified and risen are synonyms. Crucifixion brings one to the point of literal death, but only after a drawn-out and painful process of gradual dying. The metaphor of crucifixion with Christ (Romans 6:6; Galatians 2:20) should be interpreted in the same sense,[9] where

---

6 Note that the two thieves crucified with Christ had their drawn out process of dying ended suddenly (John 19:32), as the gradual process of progressive sanctification and mortification is suddenly and entirely completed at the return of Christ or the death of the beleiver.

7 Note section III, "The Certainty of Practical Sanctification For All The Regenerate," below.

8 The forty-two instances of the verb in the NT are: Matthew 20:19; 23:34; 26:2; 27:22-23, 26, 31, 35, 38; 28:5; Mark 15:13-15, 20, 24-25, 27; 16:6; Luke 23:21, 23, 33; 24:7, 20; John 19:6, 10, 15-16, 18, 20, 23, 41; Acts 2:36; 4:10; 1 Corinthians 1:13, 23; 2:2, 8; 2 Corinthians 13:4; Galatians 3:1; 5:24; 6:14; Revelation 11:8.

9 John Murray argues against this view, stating: "[T]he idea that crucifixion is a slow death and therefore to be conceived of as a process by which the old man is progressively mortified until he is finally put to death is to go flatly counter to Paul's terms. . . . Exegetically speaking it is no easier to think of the old man as in process of crucifixion or mortification than it is to think of the resurrected Lord as being still in process of crucifixion" (pg. 213, Principles of Conduct: Aspects of Biblical Ethics). Murray admits that one "could plead the analogy of Paul's usage in connection with other terms. In Paul's thought believers died to sin once for all (Romans 6:2) and yet sin lives in the believer (Romans 7:14-25) . . . Paul in the one case dealing with the definitive breach with sin and the flesh, in the other case with the fact that the believer is not yet perfect. Hence pari passu we might think of him as applying the same kind of distinction to the old man, in the one case his definitive crucifixion, in the other his continuing life and activity." Nonetheless, Murray concludes that a conclusive "objection to this reasoning is that it finds no support in the usage of the apostle [Paul]" (pg. 218, ibid). However, Murray's conclusions are incorrect.

the ultimate and final death to sin takes place with the utter destruction of the ethically sinful flesh at glorification and the gradual process of dying to sin occurs in progressive sanctification throughout life as a product of the crucifixion with Christ and legal sentence of death that took place at the moment of regeneration. That is, the believer becomes legally dead to sin at the moment of his regeneration, progressively is dying to sin throughout his life of progressive sanctification, and is ultimately and finally dead to sin at the time of his glorification. While Christians do grow more dead to sin as they grow more holy, they do not, in progressive sanctification, become more crucified—at regeneration Christians are, once and for all, crucified with Christ. Nevertheless, as the unregenerate grow more inwardly and outwardly wicked (2 Timothy 3:13),[10] the

---

First, the fact that crucifixion is a slow death, and hence, while judicially and legally the old man is dead in the Christian, the old men still progressively dies as the Christian grows in grace, is not an affirmation that the "old man [is] in process of crucifixion." The believer's cocrucifixion took place at the moment of his regeneration and is not a process, but the full results of that crucifixion appear progressively. Murray does not accurately state the position he opposes.

Second, the Bible indicates that both the old man and its corollary, the outward man, progressively decay, while the new or inward man is progressively renewed (cf. 2 Corinthians 4:16a, ὁ ἔξω ἡμῶν ἄνθρωπος διαφθείρεται; Ephesians 4:22, τὸν παλαιόν ἄνθρωπον, τὸν φθειρόμενον; 2 Corinthians 4:16b, ὁ ἔσωθεν ἀνακαινοῦται ἡμέρᾳ καὶ ἡμέρᾳ; Colossians 3:10, τὸν νέον, τὸν ἀνακαινούμενον).

Third, not only does Scripture in general regularly and indisputably speaks of crucifixion for those who are legally or judicially dead but still progressively dying (cf. Matthew 27:35, 38, 44; Mark 15:27, 32)—and even speaks of actions which accelerate the arrival of literal death for those crucified but still alive (John 19:32)—but Paul specifically employs crucifixion metaphorically in connection with indwelling sin that is legally dead but practically still present. The Apostle stated: "And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. . . . God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world" (Galatians 5:24; 6:14, οἱ δὲ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, τὴν σάρκα ἐσταύρωσαν σὺν τοῖς παθήμασι καὶ ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις. . . . ἐμοὶ δὲ μὴ γένοιτο καυχᾶσθαι εἰ μὴ ἐν τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· δι᾽ οὗ ἐμοὶ κόσμος ἐσταύρωται, κἀγὼ τῷ κόσμῳ.). Believers have had their flesh crucified (Galatians 5:24), but they still have the ethically sinful flesh (Romans 6:19; 7:18, 25; 13:14). Believers have had their sinful lusts crucified (Galatians 5:24, ἐπιθυμία), but they still possess such lusts after regeneration (Romans 6:12; 13:14; Galatians 5:16-17; Ephesians 4:22; Colossians 3:5; 2 Timothy 2:22). Believers have been crucified to the world (Galatians 6:14), but the way of the world is something they must still battle (Colossians 2:20). The idea of progressive, practical death in sanctification based upon an already completed crucifixion with Christ appears abundantly in Scripture.

Thus, Scripture contains abundant evidence that the metaphor of crucifixion with Christ is properly interpreted in association with literal crucifixion, where elements of judicial death, progressive dying, and ultimate and final death parallel regeneration, progressive sanctification, and glorification.

[10] The wicked, Paul predicts in 2 Timothy 3:13, "wax worse and worse," προκόψουσιν ἐπὶ τὸ χεῖρον; they "advance in their worseness," and proceed or advance in folly (2 Timothy 3:9) as they are deceived and deceive others and themselves all the more (πλανῶντες καὶ πλανώμενοι), even as certain sins "increase unto more ungodliness" (ἐπὶ πλεῖον γὰρ προκόψουσιν ἀσεβείας, 2 Timothy 2:16), or a child increases in his bodily, psychical, and spiritual capacity (Luke 2:52). Thus, the old man is in a state of progressively worsening corruption (Ephesians 4:22, φθειρόμενον; cf. Jude 10), being hardened by the deceitfulness of sin (Hebrews 3:13), as creatures progressively weaken and die and the fallen creation itself decays under "the bondage of corruption" (τῆς δουλείας τῆς φθορᾶς, Romans 8:21; cf. 2 Peter 2:12), while in the believer the new man is progressively renewed (Ephesians 4:23, ἀνανεοῦσθαι). In the unregenrerate, imputed sin leads to progressively worsening sinning and growing depravity: "Actual sin regenerate grow inwardly more holy and less sinful, and consequently act more like their sanctifying God, as their new nature is strengthened and their indwelling sin eradicated by the power of the Spirit. The gradual weakening of the body of sin and the remnants of sin in the Christian are a result of his already completed cocrucifixion.

B. The Ethically Sinful Portion Of The Regenerate Is Already Legally and Judicially Dead, But In Practical Sanctification What Is Legally Dead Must Still Be Put To Death, A Work That Continues Until And Is Consummated In Glorification

The connection between cocrucifixion (Romans 6:6) and death in Romans 6:6-11 is significant. One who is crucified is already legally dead, although he may not, in practice, yet have in every sense of the word actually physically died. So the believer is legally both crucified and dead—the saint, as identified with Christ, was crucified when Christ was crucified, died when He died, and rose when He rose from the grave. Furthermore, at the moment of regeneration, the believer died in that he was freed from the legal dominion and reigning power of sin (Romans 6:14). As a consequence, in progressive sanctification, he is to put do death or mortify more and more of the deeds of the flesh, and more and more weaken the sin principle in him by the Spirit, and more and more become holy in his nature, habits, and actions, as he is more and more renewed into the image of Christ. This progressive process is entirely completed in actuality at glorification.

The legal sentence of death, with its resultant freedom from the reign of sin, is emphasized in the use of cocrucified, sustaurao, in Galatians 2:19-21. The perfect tense of cocrucified in Galatians 2:20 emphasizes the results of the point action of crucifixion with Christ experientially received at regeneration. Judicially, the believer's ethically sinful flesh is already destroyed and dead, having died on the cross. In the purpose of God, glorification is already a certainty for the saint as well, as is perfect conformity to the image of Christ (Romans 8:29-30). Practically in this life, progressive renewal into not only springs forth from the pollution involved in original sin, it also intensifies the pollution . . . the pollution involved in original sin is both the mother and the daughter of sin" (pg. 173, Created in God's Image, Hoekema). While all the lost are totally depraved, they grow progressively more depraved as sin hardens them, for "[t]otal depravity means the entire absence of holiness, not the highest intensity of sin. A totally depraved man is not as bad as he can be, but he has no holiness, that is, no supreme love of God. He worships and loves the creature rather than the creator, Romans 1:25" (pg. 64, Chapter 5, "Original Sin," Systematic Theology: Anthropology, William G. T. Shedd. Elec. acc. in Christian Library Series, vol. 17: Systematic Theologies). In contrast, the regenerate grow progressively more holy.

---

the image of God[11] and progressive destruction of the principle of sin in saints takes place. At the point of conversion, the believer crucifies the sinful flesh and its ways: "[T]hey that are Christ's have crucified [estaurosan, ἐσταύρωσαν, aorist active indicative] the flesh with the affections and lusts" (Galatians 5:24), so that the believer can say that in his Christian life, "by . . . our Lord Jesus Christ . . . the world is crucified [estauromai, ἐσταύρωται, perfect passive indicative] unto me, and I unto the world" (Galatians 6:14). However, while the legal sentence of death has been passed on the sinful flesh, its future actual destruction is certain, the flesh is progressively weakening on account of its crucifixion, and its actings are subscribed within certain definite limits, the flesh is still able to act in the Christian. No Christian experiences sinless perfection in this life (1 John 1:8-10).[12] The crucified flesh is, in practice, dying, but not yet absolutely

---

[11] The image of God has a broader and narrower sense. The distinction between the two is one between "substance and quality, nature and grace, creation and redemption. . . . the image of God in the broader or structural sense [is] . . . the entire endowment of gifts and capacities that enable man to function as he should in his various relationships and callings . . . in all of these capacities man is like God, and therefore images him. [The broader sense of image includes] . . . man's intellectual and rational powers . . . moral sensitivity . . . conscience . . . responsibility . . . volitional powers . . . [and] aesthetic sense . . . this list [could be] much longer. . . . [T]he image of God in the narrower, material, or functional sense . . . consist[s] in true knowledge, righteousness, and holiness . . . Colossians 3:10 . . . Ephesians 4:24. . . . Thus, the image of God in the narrower sense means man's proper functioning in harmony with God's will for him. These two aspects of the image of God (broader and narrower, structural and functional, or formal and material) can never be separated. Whenever [one] look[s] at the human person, both aspects must always be taken into account. . . . After man had fallen into sin, however, he retained the image of God in the structural or broader sense [cf. James 3:9] but lost it in the functional or narrower sense. . . . In the process of redemption God by his Spirit renews the image in fallen human beings . . . [and] [a]fter the resurrection of the body, on the new earth, redeemed humanity will once again be able to image God perfectly" (pgs. 70-73, Created in God's Image, Anthony A. Hoekema). The narrower aspect of the image of God may be termed the moral image.

[12] Commenting on Psalm 37:37, Nathaniel Hardy wrote:

The perfect man, etc. — Divines well distinguish of a double perfection, it is absoluta or comparata. That is absolutely perfect, to which nothing (that it may be accounted truly good) is wanting; and thus He only is perfectus who is infactus; God, who made all things, and himself is not made, only enjoying an all sufficient perfection, in and of himself. That is comparatively perfect, in which, notwithstanding some wants there is a fulness compared with others. Thus every saint is perfect in comparison of the wicked among whom he liveth. In this respect it is said of Noah, That he was a perfect man in his generations; his grace compared with the wickedness of the old world well deserving the name of perfection; indeed every upright man is perfect in comparison of them who are openly bad, or but openly good; stained with wickedness, or but painted with holiness. Thus one saint may be perfect if compared with another, the strong Christian in respect of the weak, whom he outstrips in grace and piety: such saints Paul means when he saith, "We speak wisdom among them that are perfect;" that is, such as have attained to greater measures of grace than others. It was said of Benaiah, "He was more honourable than thirty, but he attained not to the first three;" and though no saint can ever attain to the perfections of the first three, the blessed Trinity, yet many saints may be honourable amongst thirty perfect in comparison of those among whom they live.

We must further distinguish of a double perfection, it is extrinseca and intrinseca. Extrinsic perfection so called, because by imputation, is that which every believer is partaker of through the perfect righteousness of Christ, whereby all his imperfections are covered; in this respect the author to the Hebrews tells us, "That by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified;" and S. Paul tells the destroyed. The experience of freedom from the service to sin and the destruction of the sinful flesh begins at regeneration and progresses throughout life through mortification, but does not culminate until glorification.

The fact that Christians are "dead to sin" does not deny the gradual nature of mortification. Rather, it is the basis of it. The fundamental idea of death is separation. Spiritual death is separation from God (Ephesians 2:1-3); physical death is the separation of the body and the soul (Genesis 35:18); and the second death is the everlasting separation of the sinner from God in the lake of fire (Revelation 20:11-15). The believer, then, is dead to sin in the sense that he is separated from it; he is freed from its dominion and control on his body, will, mind, affections, soul, and spirit, free from its predominant influence, and is certain of ultimate absolute freedom from its presence. He no longer lives in the realm of sin's power, and consequently no longer walks in sin (Colossians 3:7). The believer is already legally dead (Romans 7:4; Galatians 2:19) with Christ, and the reign of sin is replaced at regeneration by the reign of grace (Romans 6:2, 10-14). His death to sin in regeneration, however, does not mean that there is yet nothing in him that still desires sin—he must still mortify what is ethically sinful in him.[13] Even though believers "are dead" (Colossians 3:3), they still have sinful "members which are upon the earth" (3:5, 2) to which they must not yield (Romans 6:10-14). Similarly, believers are

---

Colossians that they were "complete in him," meaning Christ. Indeed omnia Dei mandata tune facta deptutantua, quando id quod non fit ignoscitur: divine commands are then in God's account fulfilled when our defects for Christ's sake are pardoned; and the evangelical perfection of a Christian consists not in perfectione virtutum, sed remissions vitiorum, in the completion of our graces, but remission of our sins.

Intrinsical perfection, so called because by inhesion, is no less rationally than usually thus distinguished, there is perfectio partium et graduum. He is said to be perfect, cui nihil deest eorum quae ad statum salutis necessaria, who wants no graces that accompany salvation; or he is perfect, cui nihil deest in gradibus gratiarum et virtutum; who is not defective in the measures of those graces; both these are frequently and fitly illustrated by the resemblance of a child, and a grown man; the one whereof hath all the essential and integral parts of a man, the other a complete use and measure of those parts" (Nathaniel Hardy, cited in the Treasury of David, by Charles Spurgeon. Elec. acc. in Hamel, Ken, The Online Bible for Mac, version 3.0).

[13] In the words of John Owen, at the moment of conversion and regeneration "by this change of the will do we become 'dead to sin,' Romans 6:2; that is, whatever remains of lust and corruption there may be in us, yet the will of sinning is taken away" (pg. 26, comment on Hebrews 6:1-2, from Owen's commentary on Hebrews) so that believers are "dead to sin by profession; dead to sin by obligation to be so; dead to sin by participation of virtue and power for the killing of it; dead to sin by union and interest in Christ, in and by whom it is killed: all taken from the death of Christ [as explained in Romans 6]." (pg. 104, The Mortification of Sin in Believers). Nevertheless, Owen writes: "Indwelling sin always abides whilst we are in this world; therefore it is always to be mortified. The vain, foolish, and ignorant disputes of men about perfect keeping the commands of God, of perfection in this life, of being wholly and perfectly dead to sin, I meddle not now with. It is more than probable that the men of those abominations never knew what belonged to the keeping of any one of God's commands, and are so much below perfection of degrees, that they never attained to a perfection of parts in obedience or universal obedience in sincerity" (pg. 16, Mortification of Sin).

already quickened with Christ (Ephesians 2:5),[14] but they can properly pray, "quicken me" (Psalm 119:40, 88, 107), and since they are risen with Christ, they are to seek after heavenly things (Colossians 3:1). Thus, the believer, by the power of the Spirit, must continue to put to death the practices of the body of sin (Romans 8:13, thanatoute, θανατοῦτε, a present indicative). As Colossians 3:1-17 explains, believers are already "risen with Christ" (v. 1) (sunegerthete to Christo, συνηγέρθητε τῷ Χριστῷ), and "are dead" (apethanete, ἀπεθάνετε), v. 3. They formerly "walked" (periepatesate, περιεπατήσατε), v. 7 in sins, when, before their conversion, they "lived in them" (edzete en autois, ἐζῆτε ἐν αὐτοῖς), v. 7, but now it is not so. Because they are already dead to sin, they are to "set [their] affection on things above, not on things of the earth" (ta ano phroneite, me ta epi tes ges, τὰ ἄνω φρονεῖτε, μὴ τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς), v. 2, and "mortify [their] members which are upon the earth" (nekrosate oun ta mele humon ta epi tes ges, νεκρώσατε οὖν τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς), v. 5, that is, put to death those parts within them that still incline to the sorts of sins which they no longer live in as regenerated people (v. 5-7). Since believers are legally and judicially dead to sin, they [14] Note that the doctrine of union with the Messiah in His death and resurrection is taught in the Old Testament in Hosea 6:2. "[A]ntitypically the language [of the verse] is so framed as to refer in its full accuracy only to Messiah, the ideal Israel (Isaiah 49:3; compare Matthew 2:15 with Hosea 11:1), raised on the third day (John 2:19; 1 Corinthians 15:4; compare Isaiah 53:10). 'He shall prolong His days.' Compare the similar use of Israel's political resurrection as the type of the . . . resurrection of which 'Christ is the first-fruits' (Isaiah 26:19; Ezekiel 37:1–14; Daniel 12:2)." (Commentary Critical and Explanatory on the Whole Bible, Robert Jamieson, A. R. Fausset, & David Brown (1871), on Hosea 6:2, elec. acc. Logos Bible Software).

---

"[Hosea 6:2] . . . foreshadows Christ's resurrection on the third day. . . . The New Testament does not explicitly cite this verse, but 1 Cor 15:4 asserts that Christ arose on the third day 'in accordance with the Scriptures,' and no other text speaks of the third day in the fashion that Hosea 6:2 does. It is clear that in its original context this passage describes the restoration of Israel, the people of God; and for many interpreters this is proof enough that the resurrection of Christ is not in view here. Such interpretation, however, understands messianic prophecy too narrowly . . . the prophets . . . couched prophecy in typological patterns in which the works of God proceed along identifiable themes. Furthermore, Christ in his life and ministry embodied Israel or recapitulated the sojourn of Israel. Thus, for example, Christ's forty days in the wilderness paralleled Israel's forty years of wandering, and his giving of his Torah on a mountain (Matthew 5–7) paralleled the Sinai experience. Another great event in Israel's history was its restoration after captivity, an event that was almost a bringing of the nation back from the dead. Ezekiel develops this concept in his dry bones vision (Ezekiel 37:1–14). . . . [T]he use of the verbs חיה and קום here has a strong parallel in Ezekiel 37 . . . From this we can conclude that Christ's resurrection, in addition to its profound soteriological aspects, was a typological embodiment of the 'resurrection' of Israel in its restoration . . . follow[ing] the established pattern of the parallel between the history of Israel and the life of Christ. Furthermore, as so often happens in texts of this kind, the details of the passage work themselves out in different ways. The 'two days' are for Israel metaphorical for a relatively short captivity but have a literal fulfillment in the resurrection of Christ. Similarly, the raising to life is literal in the case of Christ, but in the case of Israel it is a metaphor for restoration. On the other hand, there is also a literal fulfillment for the Israel of God, when [they] shall be raised at his coming (1 Thessalonians 4:13–17)" (The New American Commentary, vol 19A: Hosea, Joel, Duane A. Garrett (1997), note on Hosea 6:2, elec. acc. Logos Bible Software).

are, by the Spirit, to put to death or mortify the remnants of the sin principle in them (Colossians 3:5) and its outward manifestations (Romans 8:13). At the moment of repentance, faith, and regeneration, they "put off the old man with his deeds" (Colossians 3:9) and "put on the new man" (v. 10). They are therefore daily to "put off" sins like anger, wrath, and malice (Colossians 3:8), as their "new man" is gradually "renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him" (v. 10; note the present participle, the progressive action of the new man being renewed, in ton neon, ton anakainoumenon eis epignosin kat eikona tou ktisantos auton, τὸν νέον, τὸν ἀνακαινούμενον εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν κατ᾽ εἰκόνα τοῦ κτίσαντος αὐτόν). Ephesians 4 expresses similar truth to Colossians 3—since believers have already "learned Christ . . . have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus," they are to in practice "put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and be renewed in the spirit of [their] mind; and . . . put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness" (Ephesians 4:20-24). The only noteworthy difference is that Colossians 3:9-10 indicates that the old man was put off and the new man put on at regeneration, while Ephesians 4:20-24 speaks of practically putting off the old man and putting on the new man in the Christian life. This practical putting off/putting on, a consequence of the end of the dominance of the old man in Adam, union with Christ, and putting on of the new man in regeneration, appears as saints put away lying and put on truth (Ephesians 4:25), put away stealing and put on useful labor (4:28), put away corrupt communication and put on edifying speech (4:29), put away bitterness, wrath, anger, and such like sins, and put on kindness, tenderheartedness, and forgiveness (4:31-32). This progressive putting off and putting on is how sin is mortified and the believer is renewed more and more into the moral image of Christ.

As the Spirit works to lead believers to will[15] and do of God's good pleasure (Philippians 2:13),[16] they become more conformed to Christ in their practical death to sin

---

15 "While the power which regenerates and sanctifies must ever be partly incomprehensible to us, the comprehension of the effect is so far easy, that the new birth reverses the moral habitus of the believer's will, prevalently, but not at first absolutely, and that the work of progressive sanctification carries on this change, thus omnipotently begun, towards that absolute completeness which we must possess on entering heaven. In the carnal state, the habitus of the sinner's will is absolutely and exclusively godless. In the regenerate state it is prevalently but not completely godly. In the glorified state it is absolutely and exclusively godly. This statement implies that the believer's motives, in the militant state, are complex; and that while the subjective motives usually dominant are godly, yet there is a mixture of carnal motives, no longer dominant, but not annihilated, which carnal motives enter as part cause even into the renewed soul's holy volitions. And this complex of subjective motives, of which one part may be morally diverse from another, may result in a single act of volition — the volition strictly one, while the motives prompting it are mingled. Thus it is that an act may be . . . formally right in shape and prevalently right in intention, and yet

(Philippians 3:10), more conformed to Christ in positive inward holiness (Galatians 4:19), and more conformed to Christ in their progressive restoration into the moral image of God, the "divine nature" (2 Peter 1:4), into which they are transformed as they grow in experiential knowledge of Jesus Christ (2 Peter 1:3), knowledge which leads them to abound in all holy practices, godliness, virtue, and love (2 Peter 1:5-8). Christians are new men, new in body, soul, and spirit, all of which are progressively sanctified[17] and are not perfectly holy before God. And here is the explanation of that strife between the "law of the mind and the law in our members," of which every Christian is conscious, and to which the apostle points in the 7th of Romans. Now in this prevalently sanctified, but imperfect character, there is a sense in which we may say the carnality and the godliness are complementary the one to the other. As sanctification eliminates the former, the latter extends. Or to speak more accurately, the extension of the principles of godliness is the corresponding exclusion of the principles of carnality, just as spreading light is the gradualremoval of darkness, its opposite — a safe Bible similitude (Acts 26:18)" (pg. 24, "Theology of the Plymouth Brethren," Robert L. Dabney. Elec. acc. in Christian Library Series, vol. 17: Systematic Theologies, AGES Library, Rio, WI: 2006. Orig. pub. The Southern Presbyterian Review, January, 1872, as part of a review of God's Way of Peace, H. Bonar, Müller's Life of Trust, ed. Wayland, Notes on Genesis, by C. H. M., Scripture Testimony, ed. Charles Campbell, A Word to Young Believers, W. B., The Return of the Lord Jesus, J. G. Bellet, Waymarks in the Wilderness. New York: Inglis & Colles. 8 vol, The Witness, and Who are the Plymouth Brethren? H. Grattan Guinness). "[S]in dwells in a believer, but it reigns in an unbeliever. . . . Subordinate volition in the Christian is not always determined in character by the fundamental choice; eddies in the stream sometimes run counter to the general course of the current" (pgs. 170-171, Section 3: "The Application of Christ's Redemption in its Continuation: Sanctification," in Systematic Theology, Augustus Strong.).

---

The change in the predominant inclination of the will in regeneration from unholiness to holiness makes it certain that the believer will act differently. "The real will of the man is in the central inclination or self determination to [righteousness in the regenerate and evil in the unregenerate], and not in the superficial choice of the means of attaining [the one or the other, that is, the volition]. [T]his inclination is . . . the self-motion of the entire will to this one end, in which it is absorbed with an intense energy and interest that opposes and precludes a contrary self-motion. The person in inclining cannot incline or disincline to the end with the same facility that he can choose or refuse the means. . . . The distinction between the will's inclination [its predominant bent], and its volition [particular single actions], is of the highest importance in both psychology and theology" (Dogmatic Theology: Anthropology, William G. T. Shedd, Chapter 3, "The Human Will," & Supp. Help #31. Elec. acc. in Christian Library Series, vol. 17: Systematic Theologies, AGES Library, Rio, WI: 2006). In relation to the will, "progressive sanctification is the continuation of that holy self-determination of the human will which begins in its regeneration by the Holy Spirit, [while] the progressive depravation of the natural man is the continuation of that sinful self-determination of the human will which began in Adam's transgression" (pg. 27, Chapter 5, "Original Sin," Dogmatic Theology: Anthropology, William G. T. Shedd, ibid.).

[16] Since in sanctification "it is God which worketh in [the believer] both to will and to do of his good pleasure," sanctification is not sourced in a believer's actions or works. The works of a believer are a result of God's progressive sanctifying work in him, changing him inwardly and outwardly. The believer is to mortify, put off, put on, etc. but he does so only "through the Spirit" (Romans 8:13). This does not, however, prevent Scripture from employing expressions such as "sanctify yourselves, and ye shall be holy" (Leviticus 11:44) or "sanctify yourselves . . . and be ye holy" (Leviticus 20:7; cf. 1 Peter 1:15-16) or "let us cleanse ourselves . . . perfecting holiness" (2 Corinthians 7:1). God gets all the glory, and all the ability comes from Him, yet the believer can still be said to sanctify or make himself holy.

It is noteworthy that the doctrine taught in Philippians 2:13 is not exclusively found in the New Testament—believers in the Old Testament also knew that it was God who worked in them both to will and to do. "LORD, thou wilt ordain peace for us: for thou also hast wrought all our works in us" (Isaiah 26:12).

[17] "[Concerning] the extent of sanctification, or the parts of the human person affected by it . . . we are renewed in the whole man. In 1 Thessalonians 5:23, the Apostle expresses the same idea of certain of complete transformation at glorification. Their entire persons are being sanctified now (1 Thessalonians 5:23-24; cf. the practical outworkings of this inward transformation in vv. 16-22) as the Lord makes them increase and abound in love and holiness, a process that will culminate in perfect sinlessness when they are glorified at the coming of Christ (1 Thessalonians 3:12-13).[18]

As stated in Colossians three, Ephesians four, and other texts, Romans six similarly explains the significance of being dead to sin. One who is so dead can no longer live in it (6:2). As pictured[19] in baptism, the Christian is now dead to sin and both completeness[.] . . . Now . . . in strictness of speech, the true seat of sanctification is the will: the human soul in that class of its actings expressed in Scripture by the word heart. But the . . . emotional and voluntary capacity of the soul is not a different member, or department of it, from the intellectual. It is the one indivisible unit, acting in different modes. It is the soul which is sanctified, and not a faculty thereof. . . . [S]anctification . . . in its results . . . modifies every acting of the soul, whether through intellect, appetite, or corporeal volition. Every one would consider that he was speaking with sufficient accuracy in using the words 'a wicked thought.' Now, in the same sense in which a thought can be wicked, in that sense the power of thinking can be sanctified. What is that sense? A thought is wicked, not because the faculty of thinking, or pure intellection, is the seat of moral quality, abstractly considered; but because the soul that thinks, gives to that thought, by the concurrence of its active or emotional, or voluntary power, a complex character, in which complex there is a wrong moral element. To sanctify the intellect, then, is to sanctify the soul in such a way that in its complex acts, the moral element shall be right instead of wrong. So we speak, with entire propriety, of a 'wicked blow.' The bones, skin, and muscles, which corporeally inflicted it, are the unreasoning and passive implement of the soul that emitted the volition to strike. But our members are sanctified, when the volitions which move them are holy; and when the impressions of sense and appetite, of which they are the inlets, become the occasions of no wrong feelings or volitions.

---

The sanctification of our bodies consists, therefore, not in the ascetic mortification of our nerves, muscles, glands, &c., but in the employment of the members as the implements of none but holy volitions, and in such management and regulations of the senses, that they shall be the inlets of no objective, or occasional causes of wrong feeling. This will imply, of course; strict temperance, continence, and avoidance of temptation to the sinful awakening of appetite, as well as the preservation of muscular vigour, and healthy activity, by self denial and bodily hardihood. See 1 Corinthians 9:27; 2 Peter 2:14; James 3:2. . . . [T]he body is . . . indirectly holy or unholy, as it is the tool of the soul. The whole delusion [of asceticism], so far as it has sought a Scriptural support, rests on the mistake of the meaning of the word "flesh," "caro," "σάρξ," which the sacred writers use to mean depraved human nature; not the body [as inherently sinful]. What those fleshly members are, which sanctification mortifies, may be seen in Colossians 3:5; Galatians 5:19-21." (Robert Louis Dabney, Systematic and Polemical Theology, Lecture 56, "Sanctification and Good Works." Elec. acc. in Christian Library Series, vol. 17: Systematic Theologies, AGES Library, Rio, WI: 2006.)

[18] "In . . . 1 Thessalonians 5:23 . . . 3:12-13 . . . the sanctification of the whole man . . . is to be found accomplished at the coming of Christ[.] . . . Paul says, "May the God of peace himself sanctify you throughout." You, not some of you; the whole of the Church, not a part of it. And he adds, 'Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it.' His prayer was that God would sanctify them wholly; and that prayer he was certain the Lord would answer—doubtless because he knew it was God's plan and purpose to keep his own, and render them perfect before the day of Christ" (pg. 76-78, Doctrine of the Higher Christian Life Compared With the Teaching of the Holy Scriptures, by Alvah Hovey).

[19] Baptism does not create or effect the believer's death to sin. It is merely a picture of the regenerating work of God, previously received by repentant faith alone. See Heaven Only For the Baptized? The Gospel of Christ vs. Baptismal Regeneration, Thomas Ross. Elec. acc. http://sites.google.com/site/thross7. In the words of Andrew Broaddus:

> We maintain that there is a spiritual regeneration — a Divine birth — a real change of principles — effected by Divine influence, through the instrumentality of the word of truth; the subject "being born again, of free to live and certain of a new life (6:3-5). The statement that "like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life"[20] no more implies uncertainty about the saint's new walk than the similar houto kai (οὕτω καί) + aorist subjunctive construction in Romans 5:21, "That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord."[21] The Divine purposes fulfill their result. As surely as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, so sure is the saint's walking in newness of life. The new walk is as sure as is the existence of the reign of grace by Jesus Christ.[22] The new resurrected walk is as sure as the saint's death and burial with Christ in regeneration (6:4-6). Death with Christ means that the old man has been crucified with Him (6:6). The Christian has received deliverance from sin's bondage (6:6), legal freedom from sin's service (6:7), freedom from death's dominion (6:9) the ability to live for God (6:10-11), and freedom from the dominion of sin and the beginning of the reign of grace (6:14). The culmination of these blessings in this life is future absolute destruction of the body of sin (6:6) and glorification with Christ (6:8). All these are the believer's inheritance. Romans 5:21 sets the stage for the discourse of Romans 6—the believer is free from the reign of sin, and now grace reigns in him through righteousness, by means of Jesus Christ, with the result of eternal life. Nevertheless, until glorification, sin still remains within the believer (Romans 6:6, 10-23).

Romans six does not thus define the death to sin that the believer possesses as absolute freedom from all influence from sin, but as freedom from its reigning power. Paul argues that since the believer is free, he is not to let sin reign in his members. The believer is already legally dead, buried, and risen with Christ, and this legal deliverance guarantees his sanctification now and future bodily glorification. He is consequently to reckon, consider, and believe that this is so (6:11), not allow sin to reign in his mortal > incorruptible seed by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." That by Christ "all who believe are justified from all things;" and that "being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ." That holiness of heart is generated "through sanctification of the spirit and belief of the truth." That internally we "put on Christ" by faith as well as by the cultivation of every gracious temper of heart; and are "in Christ" by a living union, as the branches are in the vine; while externally we put him on by baptism, and a conformity of life to his holy example and injunctions; and thus, that a person is really Christ's when his heart is yielded up to him; though not formally recognized as his, till he has been "baptized into Christ." (pg. 226, Virginia Baptist Ministers, 2nd series, James B. Taylor. New York, NY: Sheldon & Co., 1860. Elec. acc. Baptist History Collection, ver. 1. Paris, AK: Baptist Standard Bearer, 2005.)

---

Broaddus (1770-1848) was a prominent American Baptist pastor and author in his day.

[20] ἵνα ὥσπερ ἠγέρθη Χριστὸς ἐκ νεκρῶν διὰ τῆς δόξης τοῦ πατρός, οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐν καινότητι ζωῆς περιπατήσωμεν.

[21] ἵνα ὥσπερ ἐβασίλευσεν ἡ ἁμαρτία ἐν τῷ θανάτῳ, οὕτω καὶ ἡ χάρις βασιλεύσῃ διὰ δικαιοσύνης εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν.

[22] Note section III. "The Certainty of Practical Sanctification For All The Regenerate," below.

body (6:12) and consequently obey its lusts, or present his members to sin and put them at its disposal (6:13), but rather he is to yield himself to God and yield his members as instruments of righteousness (6:13), knowing that, since he is not under the legal control of the law, but under grace, he has the promise that sin will not have dominion over him (6:14), but God will certainly effectually work in him to sanctify him and bring him to ultimate glorification. He can rejoice that 6:14 is a promise, not a possibility, and consequently yield himself to God, present his members to Him, and put sin to death, knowing that victory over sin is certain.

C. The Significance Of And Relationships Between The Old Man, The Body Of Sin, And The Flesh, How These Are To Be Mortified, And The Nature Of Mortification

The "old man," the person dominated by the ethically sinful flesh,[23] expresses an idea closely related to "the body of sin," the body as dominated by sin. The body of sin is the portion of the old man (who is body, soul, and spirit)[24] that controls the [23] "The old man is human nature in so far as it is controlled by sin" (pg. 533, Systematic Theology, Louis Berkhof). "[W]hat . . . in . . . the Christian . . . is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts [Ephesians 4:22] . . . is the old man . . . as that in him, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness [Ephesians 4:24], is the new man. . . . [T]he old man . . . signifies the corruption of nature . . . the principle of sin, with all its various lusts, which possess and influence a man's faculties, and powers; and that so far as it remains in the true Christian who is renewed by grace, and in whom is the new man: by virtue of, and in comparison with which in him, and in him only, the former is the old man. In persons unregenerate this evil principle is not the old man ; but continues young, in full strength and vigour. It is the old man only in persons regenerate; in true Christians" (pgs. 57-59, The Scripture Doctrine of Sanctification, James Fraser). "'Old man' is a designation of the person in his unity as dominated by the flesh and sin . . . [it represents] what we are by nature: slaves to sin. . . . After the analogy of . . . the old man . . . the new man . . . must mean the person in his unity ruled by the Holy Spirit" (pg. 25, Created in God's Image, Anthony A. Hoekema. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1994).

---

[24] The fact that the believer must still put off the old man and put on the new (Ephesians 4:22-24), while both the old and new man refer to the entirety of the person, body, soul, and spirit, does not mean that the believer has two bodies, two souls, and two spirits, and is two separate and different men, one old and one new. Rather, it means that his one entire person, body, soul, and spirit, is no longer totally in darkness, as before his regeneration, but now is a mixture of the holy and the unholy, of light and darkness. "In order that no one may suppose that, whereas he speaks of old and new, he is introducing a different person, observe his expression, 'That ye be renewed.' [Ephesians 4:23] To be renewed is, when the selfsame thing which has grown old is renewed, changed from one thing into the other" (Homilies on the Epistle of St. Paul to the Ephesians, Homily XIII, John Chrysostom, in Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, First Series, elec. acc.); the same single person is commanded to put off, be renewed, and put on. Similarly, Paul in his regenerate state can identify himself with both sin (Romans 7:14, 20a, 25c) and with righteousness (Romans 7:17a, 20b, 25b), but the Apostle is still a unified person. As the "God of peace sanctif[ies] [the Christian] wholly . . . spirit and soul and body" (1 Thessalonians 5:23) over the course of his earthly pilgrimage, the believer becomes more and more holy and less sinful in his entire person. The old man progressively perishes, and the inward new man is progressively renewed day by day (2 Corinthians 4:16). If regeneration is the end of night and the dawning of a new day in the believer, progressive sanctification is the increase of light as the sun rises, and glorification the absolute abolition of darkness (cf. Acts 26:18). The believer progressively leaves the likeness of fallen Adam and the fallen creation to grow morally into unregenerate individual, that is, his ethically sinful flesh, which is related to his physical body,[25] although the "body of sin," like the old man and the ethically sinful flesh, are psycho-somatic, referring to man in his entire being.[26]

Both the "old man" and "the body of sin" are dead and are crucified, yet are still extant and still in need of mortification, in a different sense. The "old man" and his ungodly deeds are "put off" and the new man and holy actions "put on"[27] at the moment of faith and regeneration in purpose and profession (Colossians 3:9-10) and the dominion of sin is shattered, yet, as already indicated, the old man still is to be constantly and progressively put off in practice as the saint is constantly "renewed in the spirit of [his] mind" and the "new man" constantly "put on" (Ephesians 4:21-24),[28] a process which the image of the second Adam, the Head of the new creation (1 Corinthians 15:22, 45-49). Thus, Ephesians 4 teaches:

---

> [B]elievers have "put off" Adam in order to "put on" Christ. That is, they have severed their connection with the first federal head, in order to enter into a connection with the second federal head. . . . the moral, rather than the forensic, effects of the two covenants are here in view of the apostle's mind. We forsake Adam's "conversation, corrupt according to the deceitful lusts," and adopt Christ's conversation, who was "created after God in righteousness and true holiness," thus sharing the same new creation. . . . How very far is all this from teaching it that depravity remains after the new birth a "real man," unchanged, coexistent with a new, holy nature superadded thereto, which is also a "real man"! (pgs. 26-27, "Theology of the Plymouth Brethren," Robert L. Dabney)

The new man is fully complete when the Christian is fully like Christ, seeing Him as He is (1 John 3:2), at which time the old man is finally and absolutely extirpated; in progressive sanctification the Christian is only incompletely like Christ, seeing Him with less clarity than he will in glory, but, as he comes to see Him more clearly, he becomes more like Him (2 Corinthians 3:18). Thus, the saint on earth is not yet fully renewed, but he remains a mixture of the old and the new. How necessary, then, it is for the believer to see the Lord Jesus, and commune with Him because of his union with Him!

[25] While the ethically sinful flesh expresses itself in the human body (and in the spiritual part of man), nonetheless it is important to remember that "sin has no independent existence. . . . [it is not] something essential and substantial . . . [but] should be thought of as a defect in something that is good. . . . a depravation of the good and . . . also active rebellion against God. . . . The fact that sin is not part of the essence of [human] nature made it possible for Christ to assume a human nature that was not totally other than that of fallen man and still to be without sin. . . . [S]in has not changed [man's] essence but has changed the direction in which [he] is moving. . . . Sin, therefore, is not something physical but something ethical. It was not given with creation but came after creation; it is a deformation of what is" (pgs. 168-169, Created in God's Image, Hoekema).

[26] When the flesh, the sarx, in the "New Testament . . . [refers to] flesh as the tendency within fallen man to disobey God in every area of life . . . we must not restrict the meaning of sarx so as to refer only to what we commonly call 'fleshly sins' (sins of the body); rather, we should understand it as referring to sins committed by the whole person. In the list of 'works of the flesh' . . . in Galatians 5:19-21, only five out of the fifteen concern bodily sins; the rest are what we would call 'sins of the spirit'—such as hatred, discord, jealousy, and the like" (pg. 216, Created in God's Image, Hoekema).

[27] Sanctification as the putting off of evil and the putting on of good is already found in the Old Testament (Job 29:14; Psalm 132:9, etc.

[28] The aorist infinitive for the old man being "put off" in Ephesians 4:22 (ἀποθέσθαι) and the new man being "put on" (ἐνδύσασθαι) in 4:24 convey an imperatival idea similar to the way that the aorist participle ἀποθέμενοι, connected with the present imperative λαλεῖτε, does so for the putting away of lying in v. 25, followed by the imperative forms in v. 26ff., including the aorist imperative to put away (ἀρθήτω) all bitterness, wrath, anger, clamor, and evil speaking and be kind, tenderhearted, and forgiving instead (v. 30-31). Ephesians 4:22-24 does indeed speak of putting off the old man and putting on the new man in progressive sanctification. Against this view, various writers argue that in Ephesians 4 only the putting off and putting on of regeneration is spoken of. For example:

> "[The] Ephesians [were taught] 'that ye [did, when saved,] put off … the old man.' The form of the verb places this putting off as a complete past action. You were taught, the Apostle says, the truth about being in Christ and that by so much your 'old man' was laid aside. The former Adamic standing is in view, and with it its corrupt practices which are no longer in order. At that time, also, ye did put on the new man" (Systematic Theology, Lewis Sperry Chafer, vol. 4, pg. 95; cf. vol. 6, pg. 270. Elec. acc. Logos Bible Software).
>
> "Paul, [in] Ephesians 4:22-24 . . . seem[s] [to be] exhorting believers 'to put off according to the former manner of life the old man' and 'to put on the new man.'. . . [C]onsiderations of grammar would not . . . be violated if this interpretation were adopted. . . . [both] the infinitive . . . with imperative force . . . [and the] infinitive of result . . . [would] be appropriate . . . if believers are conceived of as progressively putting off the old man and putting on the new. . . . But exegetical considerations and the analogy of Paul's teaching elsewhere point to the entirely different conclusion, namely, that when Paul speaks of putting off the old man and putting on the new man he is thinking in terms of result rather than in terms of exhortation. The passage should therefore be rendered as . . . ['so that ye have put off . . . the old man . . . and have put on the new man'" (pgs. 214-215, Principles of Conduct, John Murray).

While the truth that, in one sense, the believer puts off the old man and puts on the new man in regeneration is not in dispute (Colossians 3:9-10), the Greek text of Ephesians 4:22-24 is properly interpreted to refer to a continuing putting on and putting off connected with progressive sanctification, as it does in the English of the Authorized Version (and ancient versions such as the Latin Vulgate).

First, one cannot conclude that ἀποθέσθαι and ἐνδύσασθαι refer to a point action simply because they are aorists rather than in the present tense. Every time ἀποτίθημι appears in the NT the verb is in the aorist (Acts 7:58; Romans 13:12; Ephesians 4:22, 25; Colossians 3:8; Hebrews 12:1; James 1:21; 1 Peter 2:1), and in the LXX the verb only appears in the aorist (Exodus 16:34; Leviticus 24:12; Numbers 15:34; 17:22, 25; Joshua 4:8; 2 Chronicles 18:26; Joel 1:18; 1 Esdras 6:18; 1 Maccabees 1:35; 4:46; 2 Maccabees 8:35; MSS of Tobit 6:4) and the future (Exodus 16:33; Leviticus 16:23; Numbers 19:9; Joel 1:18). While the present tense of the verb did exist in the Koiné (e. g., Shepherd 93:3), it was much rarer than the present tense. The aorist of ἀποτίθημι is what Paul would naturally use in Ephesians 4:22 to describe the decisive rejection of the old man God requires of the regenerate in progressive sanctification. Similarly, the large majority of instances of ἐνδύω in the NT are in the aorist (Matthew 6:25; 27:31; Mark 6:9; 15:17, 20; Luke 12:22; 15:22; 24:49; Acts 12:21; Romans 13:12, 14; 1 Corinthians 15:53–54; 2 Corinthians 5:3; Galatians 3:27; Ephesians 4:24; 6:11, 14; Colossians 3:10, 12; 1 Thessalonians 5:8; there are a few perfects: Matthew 22:11; Mark 1:6; Revelation 1:13; 15:6; 19:14; and one present: Mark 15:17—probably a historical present, thus with its aspectual value suppressed), and in the LXX there are 55 instances of the verb in the aorist (Genesis 3:21; 27:15; 38:19; 41:42; Leviticus 8:7, 13; 21:10; Numbers 20:26, 28; Deuteronomy 22:5; Judges 6:34; 1 Samuel 17:38; 2 Samuel 14:2; 1 Kings 22:30; 1 Chronicles 12:19; 2 Chronicles 6:41; 18:29; 24:20; 28:15; Esther 4:1; Psalm 34:26; 64:14; 92:1; 103:1; 108:18, 29; Proverbs 31:26; Song 5:3; Job 10:11; 39:19; Jonah 3:5; Zechariah 3:4; Isaiah 51:9; 52:1; 59:17; 61:10; Jerermiah 26:4; Baruch 4:20; 5:1; Ezekiel 16:10; Daniel 5:29; Esther 14:1; Judith 10:3; 1 Maccabees 1:28; 3:3; 10:21, 62; 14:9; Sirach 17:3; 45:8, 13; Solomon 11:7), a variety of instances of other tenses (future: Exodus 28:41, 29:5, 8, 30; 40:13, 14; Leviticus 6:3, 4; 16:4, 24, 32; Deuteronomy 22:11; Psalm 131:9, 16, 18; Proverbs 23:21; Job 8:22; Isaiah 22:21; 49:18; 50:3; Jeremiah 10:9; Ezekiel 7:27; 42:14; 44:17, 19; Wisdom 5:18; Sirach 6:31; 27:8; 43:20; perfect: 1 Samuel 17:5; 2 Samuel 6:14; 2 Chronicles 5:12; 18:9; Zephaniah 1:8; Zechariah 3:3; 13:4; Ezekiel 9:2, 3, 11; 10:2, 6, 7; 23:6, 12; 38:4; Daniel 6:4; 10:5; 1 Esdras 5:40; pluperfect: Leviticus 16:23; Job 29:14; Esther 15:6; Judith 9:1; 10:3; imperfect: Psalm 34:13), but only one instance of the present (Baruch 6:32). Furthermore, the aorist is at times employed for actions that are actually durative (e. g., Proverbs 31:26). It is, therefore, reasonable that Paul employs an aorist of ἐνδύω in Ephesians 4:24, rather than a present tense, to express what is in actuality a lifelong putting off and putting on. The aorists in Romans 13:12-14; 1 Thessalonians 5:8; Ephesians 6:11 are also instructive.

Second, an imperatival resultant sense for the infinitives ἀποθέσθαι and ἐνδύσασθαι in Ephesians 4:22, 24 is evident because of their dependence upon the ἐδιδάχθητε of v. 21, as an imperatival sense attaches itself to the infinitive περιπατεῖν in 4:17 because of its connection to a didactic λέγω (cf. also Ephesians 3:8). As in v. 17 Paul instructs, "I say . . . that ye walk not," so in 4:21-24 the Apostle tells the church: "ye have been taught . . . that ye put off . . . that ye put on." Because of this teaching, the Ephesians were to be speaking truth, putting away lying (ἀποθέμενοι τὸ ψεῦδος λαλεῖτε ἀλήθειαν, 4:25), and obeying the series of commands in 4:29-32, including the command to "put away" (ἀρθήτω) will continue until the Christian, in future glory, has become a "perfect man," having reached the complete moral "measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Ephesians 4:13). The product ("wherefore," 4:25) of this continuing and progressive mortification of the old man and vivification or strengthening of the new man is that specific sins are put off and holy actions are put on (Ephesians 4:25-29).[29]

The "body of sin" (Romans 6:6) is the "body of this death" (Romans 7:24), the "body of the sins of the flesh" (Colossians 2:11), and "the body" the "deeds" of which one is to "mortify" (Romans 8:13; cf. also Romans 8:10, 11, 23; Philippians 3:21). This body is put off, just like the old man, at the moment of regeneration, for "the circumcision made without hands" involves the "putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ"[30] (Colossians 2:11). Nevertheless, the body of sin is still present in another sense, for the apostle Paul, although obviously already regenerate, nonetheless complains, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" (Romans 7:24).[31] Thus, Scripture teaches that the body of sin in believers has been permanently put off in regeneration, but, in another sense, it is still present.

Likewise, believers are no longer in the flesh (Romans 7:5), and everyone who is still in the flesh is unconverted and unregenerate (Romans 8:8-9), yet in another sense various sins in 4:31. The following context therefore supports the imperatival sense of v. 22-24. Furthermore, ἀποθέσθαι and ἐνδύσασθαι are aorist infinitives in indirect discourse, and in the over 150 other instances of aorist infinitives in indirect discourse in the NT (cf. Wallace, Greek Grammar Beyond the Basics, pg. 605), none of them represent an aorist indicative in the underlying direct discourse ("have put off/have put on") rather than an aorist imperative ("put off/put on"). "There is apparently no instance in the New Testament of the Aorist Infinitive in indirect discourse representing the Aorist Indicative of the direct form" (pgs. 52-53 (§ 114), Syntax of the Moods and Tenses in New Testament Greek, E. Burton). Context and syntax syntax support an imperatival idea for the infinitives in Ephesians 4:22, 24.

---

While Colossians 3:9-10 refers to the a decisive putting off of the old man and putting on of the new man in regeneration, Ephesians 4:22-24 speaks of putting off the old man and putting on the new man as a part of progressive sanctification.

[29] "The 'old man' cannot continue unmodified in the presence of the 'new man,' because the one principle is the opposite and is exclusive of the other. To die unto sin is to live unto righteousness. The increment of light is the diminution of darkness. The waxing of the "new man" is the waning of the "old man" Hence (and this is the Bible view) if any professed believer has the "old man" as strong and lively as ever, it is proof positive that the "new man" has never entered at all; his faith is vain; he is yet in his sins. (Jam. 2:22, etc.) And if any professed believer finds the old carnal principle reviving, it is proof positive that his spiritual life is proportionally going backward at that time[.] . . . [T]here is another reason why, for those who do not die immediately after conversion, progressive sanctification is still imperative. The principle of holiness, if genuine, is incapable of tolerating indwelling sin in peace. The struggle is inevitable in a true Christian, and as 'he that is with us is more than he that is against us,' gradual conquests, at least over indwelling sin, are the general rule of every genuine Christian life" (pgs. 25-26, "Theology of the Plymouth Brethren," Robert L. Dabney).

[30] ἐν τῇ ἀπεκδύσει τοῦ σώματος τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν τῆς σαρκός, ἐν τῇ περιτομῇ τοῦ Χριστοῦ.

[31] The fact that Romans 7:14-25 describes the Christian life is defended in "Excursus II: Romans 7:14-25: A Depiction of Part of the Normal Christian Life."

Christians still possess the ethically sinful flesh (Romans 6:19; 7:18, 25), although they no longer characteristically walk according to the flesh (Romans 8:1-14). Thus, the old man is "put off" (Colossians 3:9) and the body of sin is "put off" (Colossians 2:11) in regeneration, and all the regenerate are no longer in the flesh (Romans 7:5), yet the old man, the body of sin, and the flesh are still present.

The "body of sin" expresses itself in its parts, its "members." That is, "when we were in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death" (Romans 7:5). These "members" constitute, together, the entirety of the person (1 Corinthians 12:14-27), from the "head to the feet" (12:21). In the sense in which the old man and the body of sin are still present and active, the believer must "mortify . . . [his] members which are upon the earth" (Colossians 3:5). He is commanded: "Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God" (Romans 6:13). That is, "as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield[32] your members servants to righteousness unto holiness" (Romans 6:19). The Christian must mortify his sinful members because he can say, with Paul, "I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members" (Romans 7:23), since he still has "lusts that war in [his] members" (James 4:1; cf. 3:5-6) that seek to "defil[e] the whole body, and . . . [are] set on fire of hell" (James 3:6). Nonetheless, as new men, believers' "bodies are the members of Christ" (1 Corinthians 6:15). As an unconverted person continues to sin, yielding his members to uncleanness and to iniquity, his lesser sins lead on to even greater ones, "iniquity unto iniquity." (Romans 6:19; cf. 1:21-32). Likewise, as the believer yields his members to righteousness, his "righteousness [is] unto holiness" (te dikaiosune eis hagiasmon, τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ εἰς ἁγιασμόν), that is, progressive yielding [32] If someone wished to conclude from the fact that the verb "yield" in Romans 6:19 is an aorist imperative (παραστήσατε) that the verse speaks solely of a decision that one makes only once in his entire life, he would, it seems, also have to conclude that in their unregenerate life the Roman Christians only yielded themselves to sin once in their life, because Romans 6:19 describes their past life of yieldedness to sin with an aorist (παρεστήσατε). Somehow the unsaved would, it seems, have to yield themselves to sin only once, and permanently, for their whole lives. All of the members of the church at Rome would have engaged in this once-for-all yielding to sin. They then would have to have made this permanent yielding to sin temporary when they were converted and turned from their sins. The clear fact of the matter is that the proponents of the argument that the aorist imperative "yield" in Romans 6:19 must refer solely to a once-for-a-lifetime yielding are reading very greatly into the verse and ignoring the plain requirements of the immediate context. Concluding that the aorist requires a once-for-life action also is clearly more than is required by the Greek syntax (cf. pgs. 719-721, Greek Grammar Beyond the Basics, Daniel Wallace. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1996). This is not to deny, of course, that a believer holding on to sin is required to make a clean and immediate break with it.

---

of his members to righteousness leads to progressive growth in holiness within him as a person. The mortification of the remnants of sin within the believer takes place as the believer opposes, by the Spirit, the various members of the body of sin that still remain within him.

Romans 8:13 states, "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit[33] do mortify (thanatoute, θανατοῦτε, present active indicative) the deeds of the body, ye shall live." Colossians 3:5 states, "Mortify (nekrosate, νεκρώσατε, aorist active imperative) therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry." These two texts, the ones that speak specifically of the Christian duty of mortification, employ two different Greek verbs, thanatoo (θανατόω) in Romans 8:13, and nekroo (νεκρόω) in Colossians 3:5. The "deeds of the body" are put to death or mortified with thanatao, and the "members which are upon the earth" are mortified with nekroo. While there is doubtless a significant amount of overlap[34] in the semantic domain of the two verbs, it appears that the use of thanatoo indicates that the deeds of the body

---

[33] "The agency of the Spirit of God, is that operation of Divine power which either renews the sinner in the image of God, or afterwards produces in him divine conformity to that image. It is the effectual operations of God's spirit, of which we intend to treat, in distinction from that operation which attended Saul among the prophets, or Judas among the apostles. We speak of that powerful operation which renews the heart of the dead sinner, translates him out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son, and carries on the work begun by this change until it be consummated in glory. The person who is the subject of these effectual operations . . . [has his] stony heart . . . taken away, and a heart of flesh . . . given[.] [T]he captive soul is released, and a new song is put into his mouth, a new language flows from his lips, a new conduct appears in his life; — in a word all things are become new. . . . The agency of God's spirit carries on the salvation of the sinner from regeneration to glory; it is all of God. But the renewing and sanctifying influences are capable of a distinction; the former implant a principle of life; the latter invigorate the principle implanted. In the first, the spirit makes no use of the faculties of the soul; in the last, the rational faculties are used, and become subservient to the work. The subject of the sanctifying operations of the spirit, has every faculty of soul rendered attentive to the things of God. He "with open face beholds as in a glass the glory of the Lord, and is changed into the same image, from glory to glory, as by the spirit of the Lord." By these transforming discoveries, progressive conformity to God is carried on in his soul. While he sees in the glass of God's word, the REDEEMER'S beauty and his own frightful deformity, he abhors the one, and loves the other. He longs to be delivered from sin; he pants after God, the living God. Thus the whole work of sanctification is carried on by clear, and soul-effecting views of the beauty of holiness and the deformity of sin; whilst the Holy Ghost, hovering over the soul, creates in it that desire after the one, and aversion from the other, which leads a man to cleanse himself from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord" (Circular Letter of the Shaftsbury Baptist Association, 1794, on the "Agency of the Holy Spirit," by Isaac Webb, cited from pgs. 38-39, History of the Shaftsbury Baptist Association from 1781 to 1853, Stephen Wright. Elec. acc. Baptist History Collection, ver. 1. Paris, AK: Baptist Standard Bearer, 2005).

[34] For example, one notes that, despite the apparently valid distinction between the putting to death of "deeds" in Romans 8:13 and "members" in Colossians 3:5, a list of specific sinful acts follows the command to mortify members in Colossians 3:5.

are to be entirely eliminated, caused to cease, and put to death.[35] The earthly members are to become as good as dead (nekroo), that is, progressively weakened, although the earthly members are never totally extirpated in this life. Thanatoo appears[36] with relatively greater frequency than nekroo in the New Testament; the only texts containing nekroo besides Colossians 3:5 are Romans 4:19 and Hebrews 11:12.[37] Both Romans 4:19 and Hebrews 11:12 refer to a person who is still alive, but weak and "good as dead" because of his age. In light of the parallel texts, the command to the Christian to mortify his earthly members in Colossians 3:5 indicates that he is to progressively weaken them so that they are "as good as dead."[38] The Theological Dictionary of the New Testament[39] states concerning nekroo: "Among physicians it denotes the atrophy of a part of the body through sickness." Thayer's Greek Lexicon[40] gives as definition #3 for nekroo, "to deprive of power, destroy the strength of." Thus, Romans 8:13 and Colossians 3:5 indicate that the deeds of the sinful body are to be put to death, caused to cease, and eliminated, while the earthly members themselves are to be made as good as dead,[41]

---

35 Thus, BDAG lists as the second definition of thanatoo, "to cause total cessation of an activity, put to death, extirpate." This does not mean, of course, that the believer ever eliminates every single manifestation of sin from his life, but he does gain absolute victory over a course of continued sin and has the ability, by the Spirit, to entirely defeat the outward appearance of specific sins.

36 The complete list of references is Matthew 10:21; 26:59; 27:1; Mark 13:12; 14:55; Luke 21:16; Romans 7:4; 8:13, 36; 2 Corinthians 6:9; 1 Peter 3:18.

37 And being not weak in faith, he considered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sara's womb: καὶ μὴ ἀσθενήσας τῇ πίστει, οὐ κατενόησε τὸ ἑαυτοῦ σῶμα ἤδη νενεκρωμένον (ἑκατονταέτης που ὑπάρχων), καὶ τὴν νέκρωσιν τῆς μήτρας Σάρρας· (Romans 4:19); Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea shore innumerable. διὸ καὶ ἀφ᾽ ἑνὸς ἐγεννήθησαν, καὶ ταῦτα νενεκρωμένου, καθὼς τὰ ἄστρα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ τῷ πλήθει, καὶ ὡσεὶ ἄμμος ἡ παρὰ τὸ χεῖλος τῆς θαλάσσης ἡ ἀναρίθμητος (Hebrews 11:12).

38 Note also the use of the related noun νέκρωσις in Romans 4:19 for the "deadness" of Sarah's womb. Her womb was still extant, and that part of her body was still literally, but it was as good as dead, for (apart from the miraculous intervention of God) she was not going to bear any children. The only other use of the noun νέκρωσις in the New Testament (2 Corinthians 4:10) refers to the physical persecutions suffered by Paul on account of his identification with Christ, his being "troubled on every side . . . perplexed . . . persecuted . . . cast down [and being] alway delivered unto death for Jesus' sake" (2 Corinthians 4:8-11). This passage also illustrates the "death as process" (BDAG on νέκρωσις) idea for mortification with nekroo—Paul was not absolutely and in every way literally dead, but death was working in him (2 Corinthians 4:12). As Paul was experiencing nekrosis in his physical body on account of persecution, but he was not "distressed . . . perplexed . . . forsaken . . . [or] destroyed" (2 Corinthians 4:8-12), so while the Christian mortifies (nekroo) his earthly members (Colossians 3:5) they are not entirely destroyed and absolutely eliminated before progressive sanctification is consummated in glorification.

39 Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, ed. Gerhard Kittel. trans. & ed. Geoffrey W. Bromiley, vol. 4. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1967.

40 Thayer's Greek Lexicon, Henry Thayer. Elec. acc. Online Bible for Mac, Ken Hamel.

41 The idea of becoming as good as dead is illustrated in Josephus, Antiquties of the Jews 6:306 (6.13.8.306): When David had said this, he dismissed the woman. But when she came home and found her husband feasting with a great company, and oppressed with wine, she said nothing to him then about what although they will always remain present in this life. The believer is to progressively put to death the sin principle within him by the power of the Holy Spirit.[42] By the Spirit, he had happened; but on the next day, when he was sober, she told him all the particulars, and made his whole body to appear like that of a dead man by her words, and by that grief which arose from them; so Nabal survived ten days, and no more, and then died.

---

Ταῦτ᾽ εἰπὼν ἀπολύει τὴν γυναῖκα ἡ δ᾽ εἰς τὸν οἶκον ἐλθοῦσα καὶ καταλαβοῦσα τὸν ἄνδρα μετὰ πολλῶν εὐωχούμενον καὶ κεκαρωμένον ἤδη τότε μὲν οὐδὲν τῶν γεγενημένων διεσάφει τῇ δὲ ἐπιούσῃ νήφοντι ἅπαντα δηλώσασα παρεθῆναι καὶ πᾶν αὐτῷ νεκρωθῆναι τὸ σῶμα ὑπὸ τῶν λόγων καὶ τῆς ἐπ᾽ αὐτοῖς λύπης ἐποίησε καὶ δέκα οὐ πλείους ἐπιζήσας ἡμέρας τὸν βίον κατέστρεψεν ὁ Νάβαλος.

Another relevant illustration is in Philo, On The Eternity of the World 125:

But we must now proceed to consider the question which we postponed till the present time. What sort of a part of the earth is that, that we may begin from this, whether it is greater or less, that is not dissolved by time? Do not the very hardest and strongest stones become hard and decayed through the weakness of their conformation (and this conformation is a sort of course of a highly strained spirit, a bond not indissoluble, but only very difficult to unloose), in consequence of which they are broken up and made fluid, so that they are dissolved first of all into a thin dust, and afterwards are wholly wasted away and destroyed? Again, if the water were never agitated by the winds, but were left immoveable for ever, would it not from inaction and tranquillity become dead? at all events it is changed by such stagnation, and becomes very foetid and foul-smelling, like an animal deprived of life.

ὃ δ᾽ ὑπερεθέμεθα, νῦν ἐπισκεπτέον. ποῖον μέρος τῆς γῆς, ἵνα ἀπὸ ταύτης ἀρξώμεθα, μεῖζον ἢ ἔλαττον, οὐ χρόνῳ διαλύεται; λίθων οἱ κραταιότατοι ἆρ᾽ οὐ μυδῶσι καὶ σήπονται καὶ κατὰ τὴν ἕξεως ἀσθένειαν ἡ δ᾽ ἐστὶ πνευματικὸς τόνος, δεσμὸς οὐκ ἄρρηκτος ἀλλὰ μόνον δυσδιάλυτος θρυπτόμενοι καὶ ῥέοντες εἰς λεπτὴν τὸ πρῶτον ἀναλύονται κόνιν, εἶθ᾽ ὕστερον δαπανηθέντες ἐξαναλοῦνται; τί δ᾽, εἰ μὴ πρὸς ἀνέμων ῥιπίζοιτο τὸ ὕδωρ, ἀκίνητον ἐαθὲν οὐχ ὑφ᾽ ἡσυχίας νεκροῦται; μεταβάλλει γοῦν καὶ δυσωδέστατον γίνεται, οἷα ψυχὴν ἀφῃρημένον ζῷον.

[42] The truth that believers are to progressively mortify indwelling sin is clearly Scriptural, but 1 Corinthians 15:31, "I die daily," does not increase the exegetical support for this conclusion, as the death spoken of in the verse is physical; when the Apostle Paul stated that he died daily, he meant that that he was in constant danger of physical death because of his preaching the gospel. Any use of the text to support daily mortification must be, consequently, only a conclusion drawn from the fact that Paul's ability to serve in the light of the physical danger he was in would require special spiritual strength from Christ. 1 Corinthians 15:30-31 reads: "And why stand we in jeopardy every hour? I protest by your rejoicing which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord, I die daily," τί καὶ ἡμεῖς κινδυνεύομεν πᾶσαν ὥραν; καθ᾽ ἡμέραν ἀποθνῄσκω, νὴ τὴν ὑμετέραν καύχησιν, ἣν ἔχω ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν. Paul's daily death is clearly connected with his physical "jeopardy every hour," as even the conjunction of the phrases in the Greek text demonstrates (κινδυνεύομεν πᾶσαν ὥραν; καθ᾽ ἡμέραν ἀποθνῄσκω). The death of 1 Corinthians 15:31 is physical death, just like the reference to death in 1 Corinthians 15:32.

BDAG notes that the verb "to die," ἀποθνῄσκω, can mean:

> the prospect of death or realization of mortality be about to die, face death, be mortal (Phalaris, Ep. 52 ἀποθνῄσκοντες=be in danger of death; Philosoph. Max 495, 125 ὁ τῶν ἀσώτων βίος ὥσπερ καθ᾽ ἡμέραν ἀποθνῄσκων ἐκφέρεται; Athen. 12, 552b καθ᾽ ἑκάστην ἡμέραν ἀποθνῄσκειν; Seneca, Ep. 24, 20 (cotidie morimur); Philo, In Flacc. 175; PGiss 17, 9 ἀποθνῄσκομεν ὅτι οὐ βλέπομέν σε καθ᾽ ἡμέραν) καθ᾽ ἡμέραν ἀ. I face death every day 1 Cor 15:31 (cp. Ps 43:23). ὡς ἀποθνῄσκοντες καὶ ἰδοὺ ζῶμεν 2 Cor 6:9. ἀποθνῄσκοντες ἄνθρωποι mortal people Hb 7:8.

Indeed, ἀποθνῄσκω is employed for physical death, not spiritual mortification, in all of its uses in Paul's letters to the Corinthians (1 Corinthians 8:11; 9:15; 15:3, 22, 31–32, 36; 2 Corinthians 5:14–15; 6:9). Paul would "die daily" because he he was "in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft" (2 Corinthians 11:23); he and his companions could testify that they were "as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, [yet], behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed" (2 Corinthians 6:9). They could declare: "For [Christ's] sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter" (Romans 8:36). They endured tremendous "tribulation . . . sufferings . . . [and] afflict[ion]," so that on occasion the is to assault and weaken the strength of the body of sin within him by putting to death both the sinful deeds and the earthly members that are the manifestations of his indwelling sin.[43]

While the believer is commanded to mortify, it is essential to remember that he does so only "through the Spirit" (Romans 8:13). The entirety of sanctification, including both mortification and vivification, is a product of the supernatural working of the Holy Spirit within the Christian. As mortification is only "through the Spirit," likewise vivification comes from the Holy Ghost. Ephesians 3:16 (cf. Colossians 1:11)[44] indicates that God "grants . . . by his Spirit" that the believer's inner man is strengthened. All aspects of "sanctification" are "of the Spirit" (1 Peter 1:2; 1 Corinthians 6:11; 2 Thessalonians 2:13). The believer's holy affections and resultant holy actions are the "fruit of the Spirit" (Galatians 5:22; Ephesians 5:9), spiritual fruit produced by the Holy Spirit because of the union the Christian has with Christ (Romans 8:2; 1 Corinthians 1:30; Galatians 2:20; Ephesians 1:3), the Author of spiritual strength (Philippians 4:13) along with the Father (Hebrews 13:20-21; 1 Thessalonians 5:23) and the Holy Ghost. Apart from Christ, the believer can do nothing good (John 15:4). In sanctification, the believer is unquestionably active, but his holiness is nonetheless a Divine product.[45]

Apostle and his missionary team were "pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that we despaired even of life . . .[and] we had the sentence of death in ourselves" (2 Corinthians 1:3-11).

Nonetheless, while Paul's "I die daily" is certainly a reference to physical death, not spiritual mortification, because "we which live are alway delivered unto death for Jesus' sake," such physical persecution and danger resulted in the spiritual "life also of Jesus [being] made manifest in our mortal flesh" (2 Corinthians 4:11). The Apostle and his companions could testify that "as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ" (2 Corinthians 1:5).

[43] "Original sin is to be distinguished from indwelling sin. The latter is the remainder of original sin in the regenerate. Its workings are described in Romans 7:14-8:27. . . . It is not, like original sin, a dominant and increasing principle in the believer, but a subjugated and diminishing one. Indwelling sin is the minuendo movement of sin. "It hath a dying fall." Original sin is the crescendo movement. 'Original sin does not remain in the same manner after regeneration as it remained before; for there are two remarkable differences. In the unregenerate, it occupies all the faculties of the soul peaceably, and rules in their mind, will, and affections; but in the regenerate, it neither dwells peaceably, because grace from above is infused into them, which daily opposes this disease, and more and more expels it from every faculty of the soul; nor does it rule over them, because grace prevailing and predominating restrains it and sends it as it were under the yoke. The other difference is, that in the unregenerate it has the guilt of eternal death annexed to it; but in the regenerate it is absolved from this fruit, for the sake of Christ the mediator.' (Davenant: Justification, XV). . . . Indwelling sin is denominated 'the law in (not of) the members,' Romans 7:23; original sin is denominated 'the law of sin and death,' Romans 8:2" (pg. 33, Chapter 5, "Original Sin," Dogmatic Theology: Anthropology, William G. T. Shedd).

[44] God is the subject of the passive participle "strengthened" (δυναμούμενοι, 1:11a). He strengthens believers spiritually "according to his glorious power" (1:11b), with the result that they act differently (1:11c-12).

[45] "Some have the mistaken notion that sanctification consists merely in the drawing out of the new life, implanted in the soul by regeneration, in a persuasive way by presenting motives to the will. But this is not true. It consists fundamentally and primarily in a divine operation in the soul, whereby the holy

Christians can testify, therefore, in spiritual growth, as in the providential ordering of circumstances in their life, that "we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead" (2 Corinthians 1:9).

Arthur Pink comments well on the use of the word "body" in Romans 6:6, rather than what might be expected, "flesh":[46]

> But why "mortify the deeds of the body"? In view of the studied balancing of the several clauses in this antithetical sentence, we had expected it to read "mortify the flesh." In the seventh chapter and the opening verses of the eighth the apostle had treated of indwelling sin as the fount of all evil actions; and here he insists on the mortifying of both the root and the branches of corruption, referring to the duty under the name of the fruits it bears. The "deeds of the body" must not be restricted to mere outward works, but be understood as including also the springs from which they issue. As Owen rightly said, "The axe must be laid to the root of the tree." In our judgment "the body" here has a twofold reference.
>
> First, to the evil nature or indwelling sin, which in Romans 6:6, and 7:24, is likened unto a body, namely "the body of the sins of the flesh" (Colossians 2:11). It is a body of corruption which compasses the soul: hence we read of "your members which are upon the earth" (Colossians 3:5). The "deeds of the body" are the works which corrupt nature produces, namely our sins. Thus the "body" is here used objectively of "the flesh."
>
> Second, the "body" here includes the house in which the soul now dwells. It is specified to denote the degrading malignity which there is in sin, reducing its slaves to live as though they had no souls. It is mentioned to import the tendency of indwelling sin, namely to please and pamper the baser part of our being, the soul being made the drudge of the outward man. The body is here referred to for the purpose of informing us that though the soul be the original abode of "the flesh" the physical frame is the main instrument of its actions. Our corruptions are principally manifested in our external members: it is there that indwelling sin is chiefly found and felt. Sins are denominated "the deeds of the body" not only because they are what the lusts of the flesh tend to produce, but also because they are executed by the body (Romans 6:12). Our task then is not to transform and transmute "the flesh," but to slay it: to refuse its impulses, to deny its aspirations, to put to death its appetites.

---

disposition born in regeneration is strengthened and its holy exercises are increased. It is essentially a work of God, though in so far as He employs means, man can and is expected to cooperate by the proper use of these means. . . . It should never be represented as a merely natural process in the spiritual development of man, nor brought down to the level of a mere human achievement, as is done in a great deal of modern liberal theology. . . . When it is said that man takes part in the work of sanctification, this does not mean that man is an independent agent in the work, so as to make it partly the work of God and partly the work of man; but merely, that God effects the work in part through the instrumentality of man as a rational being, by requiring of him prayerful and intelligent cooperation with the Spirit. . . . [T]he believer must be diligent in the employment of the means at his command for the moral and spiritual improvement of his life, Micah 6:8; John 15:2, 8, 16; Romans 8:12, 13; 12:1-2,17; Galatians 6:7-8, 15. . . . [I]t is necessary to stress the fact over and over again that sanctification is the fruit of justification, that the former is simply impossible without the latter, and that both are the fruits of the grace of God in the redemption of sinners. Though man is privileged to cooperate with the Spirit of God, he can do this only in virtue of the strength which the Spirit imparts to him from day to day. The spiritual development of man is not a human achievement, but a work of divine grace. Man deserves no credit whatsoever for that which he contributes to it instrumentally. . . . [S]anctification takes place in the subconcious life . . . effected by the immediate operation of the Holy Spirit . . . [and] as a work in the concious life of believers it is wrought by several means, which the Holy Spirit employs." (pg. 532-535, Systematic Theology, Berkhof).

[46] Practical Christianity, chap. 7, pgs. 214-216. Elec. acc. AGES Digital Library, Christian Library Series vol. 8, Arthur Pink Collection. Rio, WI: 2006. Note that although Pink is specifically explaining Romans 8:13, ("if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live"), the ethically sinful flesh is the matter of discussion in both 8:13 and 6:6.

> But who is sufficient for such a task—a task which is not a work of nature but wholly a spiritual one? It is far beyond the unaided powers of the believer. Means and ordinances cannot of themselves effect it. It is beyond the province and ability of the preacher: omnipotence must have the main share in the work. "If ye through the Spirit do mortify," that is "the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Christ" of Romans 8:9—the Holy Spirit; for He is not only the Spirit of holiness in His nature, but in His operations too. He is the principal efficient cause of mortification. Let us marvel at and adore the Divine grace which has provided such a Helper for us! Let us recognize and realize that we are as truly indebted to and dependent upon the Spirit's operations as we are upon the Father's electing and the Son's redeeming us. Though grace be wrought in the hearts of the regenerate, yet it lies not in their power to act it. He who imparted the grace must renew, excite, and direct it.
>
> Believers may employ the aids of inward discipline and rigor, and practice outward moderation and abstinence, and while they may for a time check and suppress their evil habits, unless the Spirit puts forth His power in them there will be no true mortification. And how does He operate in this particular work? In many different ways. First, at the new birth He gives us a new nature. Then by nourishing and preserving that nature. In strengthening us with His might in the inner man. In granting fresh supplies of grace from day to day. By working in us a loathing of sin, a mourning over it, a turning from it. By pressing upon us the claims of Christ, making us willing to take up our cross and follow Him. By bringing some precept or warning to our mind. By sealing a promise upon the heart. By moving us to pray.
>
> Yet let it be carefully noted that our text does not say, "If the Spirit do mortify," or even "If the Spirit through you do mortify," but, instead, "If ye through the Spirit": the believer is not passive in this work, but active. It must not be supposed that the Spirit will help us without our concurrence, as well while we are asleep as waking, whether or not we maintain a close watch over our thoughts and works, and exercise nothing but a slight wish or sluggish prayer for the mortification of our sins. Believers are required to set themselves seriously to the task. If on the one hand we cannot discharge this duty without the Spirit's enablement, on the other hand He will not assist if we be too indolent to put forth earnest endeavors. Then let not the lazy Christian imagine he will ever get the victory over his lusts.

The old man, the body of sin, and the flesh all relate to remnants of sin within the believer that are legally dead at regeneration, progressively weakened in the Christian life through mortification, and utterly abolished at glorification. However, they emphasize different aspects of indwelling sin. The term old man refers to the entirety of the unconverted person, body, soul, and spirit. The body of sin is the body as dominated or controlled by sin, and the flesh in the ethically sinful sense is the seat of indwelling sin in the believer that controlled him in his unregenerate state.

D. The Nature And Means Of Vivification, The Positive Converse of Mortification

I. The Nature of Vivification

1.) Vivification as Quickening

As mortification involves the putting to death of the members of the old man and his deeds, so vivification is the work of God in the progressive strengthening and growth of the new man and his deeds, in an increase in the spiritual strength and power of the gracious nature and principles bestowed in regeneration.

The Old Testament psalmist, praising that Word which is the Spirit's instrument in sanctification (Psalm 119:50, 93; John 17:17),[47] prayed:

> My soul cleaveth unto the dust: quicken[48] thou me according to thy word. . . . Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity; and quicken thou me in thy way. . . . Behold, I have longed after thy precepts: quicken me in thy righteousness. . . . This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me. . . . Quicken me after thy lovingkindness; so shall I keep the testimony of thy mouth. . . . I will never forget thy precepts: for with them thou hast quickened me. . . . I am afflicted very much: quicken me, O LORD, according unto thy word. . . . Hear my voice according unto thy lovingkindness: O LORD, quicken me according to thy judgment. . . . Plead my cause, and deliver me: quicken me according to thy word. . . . Great are thy tender mercies, O LORD: quicken me according to thy judgments. . . . Consider how I love thy precepts: quicken me, O LORD, according to thy lovingkindness" (Psalm 119:25, 37, 40, 50, 88, 93, 107, 149, 154, 156, 159).

The Psalmist recognized Jehovah as the great Giver and Renewer of spiritual life, as He is of physical life (Deuteronomy 32:39; 1 Samuel 2:6; Job 33:4)—he did not quicken himself, but sought the Lord, praying, "quicken me." While Divinely bestowed spiritual life leads the saint to walk "in [God's] way" (Psalm 119:37), the believer himself is strengthened in spiritual life—the Psalmist's prayer is not concerning his actions only, but he prays that he himself would be vivified ("quicken me") with holy actions as a result. Other Old Testament texts likewise indicate that a work of God vivifying the believer himself is the cause of holy actions on his part: "quicken us, and we will call upon thy name. Turn us again, O LORD God of hosts" (Psalm 80:18-19). Outward holy 47 "Sanctification . . . is carried forward by the influence of the Holy Spirit and of Christian truth upon the hearts of believers. . . . [John 17:17] ascribes the work of sanctification to God acting by his Spirit, but recognizes the Word of God as the element in which the work is to be accomplished. Accordingly believers are sanctified, not by the Spirit dwelling alone in the soul, and cleansing by his simple energy the susceptibilities and affections, regarded as the springs of moral life, but by the Spirit dwelling in the soul, and disposing it to seek and welcome the truth as it is in Jesus, by the Spirit revealing through the Word the things of Christ to the mind and heart. . . . "The words which I have spoken to you, they are spirit and are life.' . . . [T]he work of the Spirit in sanctification . . . [involves] opening the heart to receive that truth, in helping it recall the part of that truth which is most needed at any given moment for the soul's good, in moving it to plead with God for holy impulse to do his will, and in giving by direct action and the power of suggested truth that impulse to service" (pgs. 133-135, Doctrine of the Higher Christian Life Compared With the Teaching of the Holy Scriptures, Alvah Hovey).

---

48 Each of the references in Psalm 119 to the word quicken involve the verb חיה in the Piel with a singular suffix ("me"). Compare the uses of the Qal and Piel in 2 Kings 7:4 for physical life: "If we say, We will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we shall die there: and if we sit still here, we die also. Now therefore come, and let us fall unto the host of the Syrians: if they save us alive, we shall live [אִם־יְחַיֵּנוּ נִחְיֶה]; and if they kill us, we shall but die."

actions are the product of the gracious inward renewal worked by God in His people. "Wilt thou not revive [same form as quicken—which contributes to a Biblical understanding of the nature of revival; cf. also Psalm 138:7; Hosea 14:7; Habakkuk 3:2] us again: that thy people may rejoice in thee?" (Psalm 85:6).

The New Testament employs the verb quicken (ζῳοποιέω) for the coming bodily resurrection from the dead (Romans 8:11; 1 Corinthians 15:22) and the related verb quicken with (συζωοποιέω) for the believer's current spiritual resurrection as a result of his union with Christ that is associated with his regeneration (Ephesians 2:5; Colossians 2:13), but does not specifically employ quickening terminology for the strengthening of the spiritual life of the saint in progressive sanctification; rather, the inspired Greek Testament expresses the progressive spriritual vivification of the believer with other terminology. Nevertheless, the fact that quickening terminology is employed in Scripture for the spiritual life bestowed in regeneration by means of union with Christ (Ephesians 2:5), the spiritual growth of the believer on earth (Psalm 119:25) and the glorification of the believer in the future at the time of his bodily resurrection (Romans 8:11) illustrates the continuity between regeneration, progressive vivification during the saint's lifetime, and the consummation of that process in eternity.

2.) Vivification as Growth

The New Testament expresses the development of the new nature within the believer with terminology of growth. 2 Peter 3:18 commands believers: "[G]row in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." (αὐξάνετε δὲ ἐν χάριτι καὶ γνώσει τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν καὶ σωτῆρος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.) Spiritual growth is progressive renewal into the moral image of God, into Christlikeness. Christ placed spiritual leaders in the church to bring about certain results:

> 11 And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; 12 For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: 13 Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: 14 That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; 15 But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: 16 From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love. (Ephesians 4:11-16)[49]

The saints are perfected and edified by Christ through church leadership (v. 11-12) with the result that they progress towards unity in the faith and experiential knowledge of or communion with the Son of God (v. 13) with the result that each believer becomes more like "a perfect man," that is, he becomes closer to "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (v. 13), no longer being a spiritual child that can easily waver (v. 14), but instead "grow[ing] up into [Christ] in all things" (v. 15) as the Lord Jesus, the head of His spiritual body, supplies grace and strength to each member of it (v. 16). Progressive sanctification renews the whole person into the image of the God-Man, Jesus Christ, a process culminated when in glorification the saint is perfectly like Him (1 John 3:2).[50] The believer's old man grows weaker and dies and his new man grows stronger and more powerful. The growth of the new man is compared to the physical growth[51] of an infant through childhood to a mature man (Ephesians 4:14-16; Hebrews 5:12-14; 1 Peter 2:2[52]).

---

[49] 11 καὶ αὐτός ἔδωκε τοὺς μὲν ἀποστόλους, τοὺς δὲ προφήτας, τοὺς δὲ εὐαγγελιστάς, τοὺς δὲ ποιμένας καὶ διδασκάλους 12 πρὸς τὸν καταρτισμὸν τῶν ἁγίων, εἰς ἔργον διακονίας, εἰς οἰκοδομήν τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ· 13 μέχρι καταντήσωμεν οἱ πάντες εἰς τὴν ἑνότητα τῆς πίστεως καὶ τῆς ἐπιγνώσεως τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ, εἰς ἄνδρα τέλειον, εἰς μέτρον ἡλικίας τοῦ πληρώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ· 14 ἵνα μηκέτι ὦμεν νήπιοι, κλυδωνιζόμενοι καὶ περιφερόμενοι παντὶ ἀνέμῳ τῆς διδασκαλίας, ἐν τῇ κυβείᾳ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἐν πανουργίᾳ, πρὸς τὴν μεθοδείαν τῆς πλάνης· 15 ἀληθεύοντες δὲ ἐν ἀγάπῃ αὐξήσωμεν εἰς αὐτὸν τὰ πάντα, ὅς ἐστιν ἡ κεφαλή, ὁ Χριστός, 16 ἐξ οὗ πᾶν τὸ σῶμα συναρμολογούμενον καὶ συμβιβαζόμενον διὰ πάσης ἁφῆς τῆς ἐπιχορηγίας, κατ᾽ ἐνέργειαν ἐν μέτρῳ ἑνὸς ἑκάστου μέρους, τὴν αὔξησιν τοῦ σώματος ποιειται εἰς οἰκοδομήν ἑαυτοῦ ἐν ἀγάπῃ.

[50] "All [the] loss [from the fall of Adam] is redemptively restored, and more than restored, in Christ, the true Image, in whom man's full stature is achieved and his eternal destiny secured, and to whose image the redeemed are being progressively conformed until at last they are brought to 'the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ,' which is the perfection of their humanity (Ephesians 4:12f.; 2 Corinthians 3:18; Jude 24; 1 John 3:2-3; 1 Peter 5:10)" (pg. 113, The True Image, Philip E. Hughes).

[51] The verb αὐξάνω is used for physical growth in Matthew 6:28 ("lilies of the field . . . grow"); 13:31-32 ("a grain of mustard seed . . . when it is grown . . . it . . . becometh a tree"; Luke 1:80 ("the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit"); 2:40 ("the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him."); 12:27 ("the lilies . . . grow"); 13:19 ("a grain of mustand seed . . . grew"). The verb is also used for population growth ("the people grew and multiplied in Egypt," Acts 7:17), for the spread of the Word of God as people are converted, Christians grow, and new churches are established and built up (Acts 6:7; 12:24); in these ways "the word of God gr[ows] and multiplie[s]" (Acts 12:24), and for the increase in Christ's ministry as John the Baptist's preparatory work faded into the background in comparison (John 3:30).

[52] 1 Peter 2:2 reads, "As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby" (ὡς ἀρτιγέννητα βρέφη, τὸ λογικὸν ἄδολον γάλα ἐπιποθήσατε, ἵνα ἐν αὐτῷ αὐξηθῆτε). While all believers, even very mature ones, are to desire the milk of the word in the same way that newborn babes desire milk, 1 Peter 2:2 nonetheless provides some support for the image of spiritual growth as development from infancy to mature adulthood, since many similar texts with ὡς in 1 Peter do not just make an analogy ("in the way infants desire milk, so desire the Word") but describe the actual nature of Peter's audience. Thus, note: "as obedient children [ὡς τέκνα ὑπακοῆς] . . . be ye holy" (1 Peter 1:14-15); "ye also, as lively stones, are built up" (καὶ αὐτοὶ ὡς λίθοι ζῶντες οἰκοδομεῖσθε οἶκος πνευματικός, 1 Peter 2:5); "Dearly beloved, I beseech you, as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from

As God renews His children in their entire new man into the image of Christ (Ephesians 4:13-15), they grow in the knowledge of God (Colossians 1:10) and of Christ (2 Peter 3:18), in grace (2 Peter 3:18; 2 Corinthians 9:14) and in faith (2 Corinthians 10:15), and, as a result, in every good work and fruit of righteousness (2 Corinthians 9:8-14).

The source of spiritual growth is God, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, who alone "giveth the increase" (1 Corinthians 3:5-7; cf. Ephesians 4:11-16) and gets the glory for it (1 Corinthians 3:7) both by giving the lost faith and regeneration (1 Corinthians 3:5) and producing spiritual growth in those He saves. The instrumentality of growth is the Word of God, by which sinners are born again and then grow into maturity (1 Peter 1:23; 2:2; Mark 4:8, 14). Both church leadership (Ephesians 4:11; 1 Corinthians 3:6-7) and every individual member of the church (Ephesians 4:16) use the Word as the human means God employs to produce growth His people. The growth and development of the new man constitutes a central aspect of the doctrine of vivification.

3.) Vivification as Building Up

Scripture employs the oikodomeo word group, which speaks of building or building up,[53] to describe progressive sanctification. The verb to build (οἰκοδομέω) refers to the literal building of houses (Matthew 7:24), towers (Matthew 21:33), tombs (Matthew 23:39), temples (Matthew 26:61), cities (Luke 4:29), synagogues (Luke 7:5), barns (Luke 12:18), and other items in general (Luke 17:28). Those who build are fleshly lusts" (Ἀγαπητοί, παρακαλῶ ὡς παροίκους καὶ παρεπιδήμους, ἀπέχεσθαι τῶν σαρκικῶν ἐπιθυμιῶν, 1 Peter 2:11); "ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men . . . as free, and . . . as the servants of God" (φιμοῦν τὴν τῶν ἀφρόνων ἀνθρώπων ἀγνωσίαν . . . ὡς ἐλεύθεροι . . . ὡς δοῦλοι Θεοῦ, 1 Peter 2:15-16). While every construction with ὡς does not function in this way in the epistle (e. g., 1 Peter 3:6-7), it is reasonable to conclude that those in Peter's audience who were newly born again (1 Peter 1:23) were to desire the Word because they were newborn babes (1 Peter 2:2) without excluding the fact that all believers are to desire Scripture in the same manner. (ὡς is found in 1 Peter in 1:14, 19, 24; 2:2, 5, 11-14, 16, 25; 3:6-7, 16; 4:10-12, 15-16, 19; 5:3, 8, 12).

---

Furthermore, 1 Peter 2:2 is correctly renders τὸ λογικὸν as the milk "of the word"; cf. the comment on the verse in 1 Peter, Hermeneia, P. J. Achtemeir & E. J. Epp.

[53] The relevant New Testament words are οἰκοδομή (Matthew 24:1; Mark 13:1–2; Romans 14:19; 15:2; 1 Corinthians 3:9; 14:3, 5, 12, 26; 2 Corinthians 5:1; 10:8; 12:19; 13:10; Ephesians 2:21; 4:12, 16, 29), οἰκοδομία (1 Timothy 1:4), οἰκοδομέω (Matthew 7:24, 26; 16:18; 21:33, 42; 23:29; 26:61; 27:40; Mark 12:1, 10; 14:58; 15:29; Luke 4:29; 6:48–49; 7:5; 11:47–48; 12:18; 14:28, 30; 17:28; 20:17; John 2:20; Acts 4:11; 7:47, 49; 9:31; Romans 15:20; 1 Corinthians 8:1, 10; 10:23; 14:4, 17; Galatians 2:18; 1 Thessalonians 5:11; 1 Peter 2:5, 7), ἀνοικοδομέω (Acts 15:16), ἐποικοδομέω (Acts 20:32; 1 Corinthians 3:10, 12, 14; Ephesians 2:20; Colossians 2:7; Jude 20), and συνοικοδομέω (Ephesians 2:22). The word οἰκοδόμος is in the critical Greek text in Acts 4:11, but it is not found in the preserved Word of God. The New Testament texts where this word group is employed in a manner that relates to spiritual building are: Matthew 16:18; Acts 9:31; 15:16; 20:32; Romans 14:19; 15:2, 20; 1 Corinthians 3:9–10, 12, 14; 8:1, 10; 10:23; 14:3–5, 12, 17, 26; 2 Corinthians 5:1; 10:8; 12:19; 13:10; Galatians 2:18; Ephesians 2:20–22; 4:12, 16, 29; Colossians 2:7; 1 Thessalonians 5:11; 1 Timothy 1:4; 1 Peter 2:5, 7; Jude 20.

builders (Matthew 21:42), and they build up (ἐποικοδομέω, 1 Corinthians 3:10-14, cf. συνοικοδομέω, Ephesians 2:22) buildings (οικοδομή, Matthew 24:1), and build up again or rebuild (ἀνοικοδομέω, Acts 15:16) ones that have fallen down or that need restoration. The literal construction of buildings underlies the Scriptural metaphor for progressive sanctification as building or building up.

As an edifice is a building, so, when spiritual building up is in view, oikodomeo is translated to edify (Acts 9:31; 1 Corinthians 10:23) as well as to build (1 Peter 2:5). A believer's gradual growth in holiness is compared to the construction of a building; construction begins at regeneration, laid upon the foundation of Christ, the chief cornerstone (1 Corinthians 3:11), and upon the foundational revelation of the Word of God given through the apostles and prophets (Ephesians 2:20; 3:5).[54] The metaphorical

---

[54] The foundation word group (θεμέλιος, θεμέλιον, θεμελιόω) supports the metaphor for sanctification as the construction of a building. A literal building had a literal foundation (θεμέλιος), as cities and walls, and even the earth, have foundations (Hebrews 11:10; Revelation 21:14, 19; Hebrews 1:10). The Lord Jesus Christ and His gospel are the enduring foundation upon which the believer's justification, sanctification, and glorification rest (Luke 6:48-49; Matthew 7:25), and the Lord Jesus is the foundation of the church as well (1 Corinthians 3:10-15; note also Romans 15:20). The foundation metaphor is also employed in Scripture in association with other spiritual truths upon which other subsequent or higher level superstructures are "built" (Luke 14:29; 1 Timothy 6:19; 2 Timothy 2:19; Hebrews 6:1; 11:10); the description of the apostles and prophets, the vehicle for the inspiration of the Scriptures, as a foundation fits within such a category of usage (Ephesians 2:20; Revelation 21:14, 19). Furthermore, sanctification leads the believer to be more firmly "founded" or established; his building, which was permanently settled upon its foundation at regeneration (note the perfect and pluperfect tenses for θεμέλιοω in Matthew 7:25; Luke 6:48; Ephesians 3:17; Colossians 1:23), is made progressively more stable and firm by God (1 Peter 5:10), so that both the Christian individually and the corporate assembly of the regenerate grows less liable to fall into sin or false doctrine (Ephesians 3:17; Colossians 1:23; 1 Peter 5:10).

The description of Christ as the "chief corner stone" (ἀκρογωνιαῖος, Ephesians 2:20; 1 Peter 2:6) and "head of the corner" (κεφαλὴ γωνίας, Matthew 21:42; Mark 12:10; Luke 20:17; Acts 4:11; 1 Peter 2:7; cf. Isaiah 28:16, "Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste," לָכֵן כֹּה אָמַר אֲדֹנָי יְהוִה הִנְנִי יִסַּד בְּצִיּוֹן אֶבֶן אֶבֶן בֹּחַן פִּנַּת יְקָרַת מוּסָד מוּסָּד הַמַּאֲמִין לֹא יָחִישׁ׃ διὰ τοῦτο οὕτως λέγει κύριος ἰδοὺ ἐγὼ ἐμβαλῶ εἰς τὰ θεμέλια Σιων λίθον πολυτελῆ ἐκλεκτὸν ἀκρογωνιαῖον ἔντιμον εἰς τὰ θεμέλια αὐτῆς καὶ ὁ πιστεύων ἐπ᾽ αὐτῷ οὐ μὴ καταισχυνθῇ.) also develops the "building" metaphor. The Son of God is the ultimate foundation without whom no spiritual building of Christian or congregation is possible, but founded upon Him, the believer will not be ashamed by having to flee in haste or alarm from God's coming judgment, but will be delivered as he waits in faith on God and the Messiah (Isaiah 8:17; 25:9; 26:8; 30:15, 18; 32:17; 33:2; cf. the Targum on Isaiah 28:16: וְאֵימְתָן אִתְקְפִינֵיה וְאַחסְנֵיה אְמַר נְבִיָא וְצַדִיקָיָא דְהֵימִינוּ בְאֵלִין בְמֵיתֵי עָקָא לָא יְזַדעְזעוּן׃ בְכֵין כִדנָן אְמַר יוי אֱלֹהִים הָאֲנָא מְמַנֵי בְצִיוֹן מַלַך מַלַך תַקִיף גִיבָר). Note also Genesis 49:24; Psalm 118:22; Daniel 2:45; Zechariah 3:9. Along these lines, Christ is the πέτρα, the Rock, the "bedrock or massive rock formatio[n]" (BDAG) upon which the individual believer and the church are founded (Matthew 7:24-25; 16:18; Luke 6:48; Romans 9:33; 1 Corinthians 10:4; 1 Peter 2:8; cf. the literal use for bedrock in Matthew 27:51, 60; Mark 15:46; Luke 8:6, 13; Revelation 6:15-16). The word πέτρα is specifically distinguished from πέτρος ὁ, a stone," so that "[t]here is no example, in good authors, of πέτρα in the sense of πέτρος, a stone" (cf. πέτρα & πέτρος, Liddell-Scott). The metaphor for Christ as the ἀκρογωνιαῖος alludes to the cornerstone in the Jewish Temple (cf. Louw-Nida, 7.44; the lexicon also correctly indicates that the ἀκρογωνιαῖος does not refer to a capstone, but a cornerstone), thus associating building of the believer proceeds throughout life at whatever rate he is growing spiritually, and is completed at glorification. The building metaphor is also used for the spiritual development of Christ's congregation; in the Lord Jesus "all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord . . . builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit" (Ephesians 2:21-22).

The Triune God is the ultimate cause of the believer being built up spiritually. The church and her individual members are "God's building" (1 Corinthians 3:9)[55] because He is the source and producer of spiritual growth and progressive sanctification,[56] as He is the one who will perfectly sanctify His saints and give them holy glorified bodies at their resurrection (2 Corinthians 5:1). Jehovah spiritually revives and rebuilds His people when they have fallen into spiritual ruin (Acts 15:16-17).[57] Believers are "rooted and built up in" Christ (Colossians 2:7), for Christ builds up the members of His churches individually and builds and multiplies His congregations corporately (Matthew 16:18; Acts 9:31). The church and her individual members are built up in Christ and by the Holy Spirit (Ephesians 2:19-22).[58] The saints, as living stones, "are built up a spiritual house" (1 Peter 2:5) through the power of God (1 Peter 1:5), including the election, regenerating decree, and calling of the Father (1 Peter 1:2-3, 15-17, 20), the

---

the building and foundation metaphors with the structure of the Jewish Temple, which therefore provides background for the temple building metaphor for the individual believer (1 Corinthians 6:15-20; 1 Peter 2:5) and for the church (1 Corinthians 3:11-15; 1 Timothy 3:15; cf. also 1 Kings 6:37; 7:12; 1 Chronicles 22:2; Ezra 3:9; Matthew 12:4; Hebrews 10:21; 1 Peter 4:17).

Associated with the foundation and building metaphors in sanctification is the root metaphor (note the connection in both texts with ῥιζόω; "being rooted and grounded in love," ἐν ἀγάπῃ ἐρριζωμένοι καὶ τεθεμελιωμένοι, Ephesians 3:17; "rooted and built up in him," ἐρριζωμένοι καὶ ἐποικοδομούμενοι ἐν αὐτῷ, Colossians 2:7. A proper root (ῥίζα)—Christ Himself, savingly received by repentant faith—is the essential prerequisite to sanctification, and all who possess this root produce spiritual fruit, while all those rooted in anything else (cf. 1 Timothy 6:10; Hebrews 12:15) will be damned (Matthew 3:10; 13:6, 21; Mark 4:6, 17; Luke 3:9, 8:13; Romans 11:16-18).

55 Θεοῦ οἰκοδομή ἐστε.

56 The source and production ideas in the Θεοῦ οἰκοδομή of 1 Corinthians 3:9 are clearly validated by the context of 3:5-15; "God . . . giveth the increase" (1 Corinthians 3:6-7, ὁ Θεὸς ηὔξανεν/ὁ αὐξάνων Θεός), and the congregation is God's field which He causes to grow (Θεοῦ γεώργιον), as the ultimate Worker of spiritual growth who uses human instruments as coworkers (Θεοῦ . . . συνεργοί).

57 The rebuilding discussed in Acts 15:16-17 will take place in the Millennial kingdom when the Lord rebuilds the institutions of the physical Jewish worship, Amos 9:11-12, yet in both the Old Testament and New Testament texts it is evident that the restoration is not merely physical, but also spiritual.

The verb ἀνορθόω, employed in Acts 15:16 for the setting up of the tabernacle of David, can also be used metaphorically in connection with Christian growth; cf. Hebrews 12:12 & the literal use, howbeit with spiritual implications, in Luke 13:13, and the spiritual use of ὀρθός in Hebrews 12:13, with a corresponding literal use with spiritual implications in Acts 14:10. Note also ὀρθῶς in Luke 20:21 (elsewhere in the NT in Mark 7:35; Luke 7:43; 10:28), ὀρθοποδέω in Galatians 2:14, and even ὀρθοτομέω in 2 Timothy 2:15.

58 Note, however, that both the relationship to the Son and to the Spirit use the same preposition; the church experiences ἐποικοδομέω both ἐν Κυρίῳ and ἐν Πνεύματι.

redemptive suffering, blood, death, resurrection, and mediatorial office of the Son (1 Peter 1:2-3, 11, 18-21), and the effectual application of regeneration and sanctification by the Holy Ghost (1 Peter 1:3, 12, 22), through the instrumentality of the Word of God (1 Peter 1:10-11, 23-25, 2:1-3).

While God is the ultimate source of spiritual edification, He uses His Word and His people as secondary instrumentalities in the building up of the saints. Thus, both "God" and "the word of His grace" "build . . . up" believers[59] and give them an inheritance among the sanctified (Acts 20:32). Furthermore, the Lord gives people the power to be secondary causes of edification as they minister to one another (2 Corinthians 13:10) using the Word; thus, "he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification" (1 Corinthians 14:3-5). The saints are commanded to "edify one another" (1 Thessalonians 5:11). Christ "maketh increase of the body," but He does so as He leads the "whole body" to be "fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part," so that it is appropriate to speak of the church body itself producing spiritual building, the "edifying of itself in love" (Ephesians 4:16). The ascended Savior gave spiritual leadership, that is, apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers to the church (Ephesians 4:11) so that through the corporate ministry of the Word and through individual exhortation the saints might be perfected and the body of Christ edified (Ephesians 4:12; 2 Corinthians 10:8; 13:10). As the Lord uses evangelists to start new churches, as people are converted and added to the church through baptism, those who evangelize add new Christians, spiritual stones built upon the foundation of Jesus Christ (Romans 15:20), to the church, the corporate assembly of regenerate and immersed believers. Others spiritual leaders use the Word to build up existing churches numerically and spiritually upon Christ, the foundation (1 Corinthians 3:5-15). Indeed, all the spiritual gifts the Lord gives His people are for the edification of the church (1 Corinthians 14:12), and are to be used "unto edifying" (1 Corinthians 14:26), as in general "all things" are to be done "for . . . edifying" (2 Corinthians 12:19). Individual saints must "edify . . . one . . . another" (Romans 14:19), and "please" each other "for . . . good to edification" (Romans 15:2). Even the ability to lead in corporate prayer must be used for edification (1 Corinthians 14:15-17). Saints also build each other up as they use their spiritual liberties (1 Corinthians 8:2-13) with charity (1 Corinthians 8:1), while by the misuse of liberty they can uncharitably (Romans 14:15) tear down weaker brothers, that is, build them up in sin

[59] Note the agreement in case, number, and gender in Acts 20:32's τῷ Θεῷ καὶ τῷ λόγῳ τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, τῷ δυναμένῳ ἐποικοδομῆσαι.

(1 Corinthians 8:10). Believers must, therefore, avoid even what is lawful if it will be unprofitable (1 Corinthians 6:12) and lead others to stumble instead of being built up (1 Corinthians 10:23). Individual believers must not rebuild the sin and spiritual bondage that was torn down at the moment of their regeneration (Galatians 2:18), but must seek their own and others edification in all that they do. They must keep themselves in the love of God by praying in the Holy Ghost and building themselves up on their most holy faith (Jude 20-21). Likewise, believers are not to heed false doctrine (1 Timothy 1:3) or "give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions," but rather to consider "godly edifying which is in faith" (1 Timothy 1:4). Godly speech is "good to the use of edifying" as it is the instrument through which God gives grace to those who hear it (Ephesians 4:29). The Father, Son, and Holy Spirit build up the saints individually and corporately through the power of sanctifying grace given instrumentally through the Word and other believers in the church.

4.) Vivification as Strengthening

Vivification is often expressed with Scriptural words designating strengthening.[60] Building to spiritual truth from instances where this group of words is employed in the [60] The following words are included in this group (related NT forms that are not employed in connection with progressive sanctification are excluded): στηρίζω (Luke 9:51; 16:26; 22:32; Romans 1:11; 16:25; 1 Thessalonians 3:2, 13; 2 Thessalonians 2:17; 3:3; James 5:8; 1 Peter 5:10; 2 Peter 1:12; Revelation 3:2); ἐπιστηρίζω (Acts 14:22; 15:32, 41; 18:23); στερεόω (Acts 3:7, 16; 16:5); στερεός (2 Timothy 2:19; Hebrews 5:12, 14; 1 Peter 5:9); στερέωμα (Colossians 2:5); στηριγμός (2 Peter 3:17); σθενόω (1 Peter 5:10); δυναμόω (Colossians 1:11); ἐνδυναμόω (Acts 9:22; Romans 4:20; Ephesians 6:10; Philippians 4:13; 1 Timothy 1:12; 2 Timothy 2:1; 4:17; Hebrews 11:34); βεβαιόω (Mark 16:20; Romans 15:8; 1 Corinthians 1:6, 8; 2 Corinthians 1:21; Colossians 2:7; Hebrews 2:3; 13:9).

---

The Old Testament provides some evidence for progressive sanctification as strengthening. Psalm 119:28 reads: "My soul melteth for heaviness: strengthen thou me (קַיְּמֵנִי; LXX βεβαίωσόν με) according unto thy word." While the text unquestionably alludes to physical strengthening, spiritual refreshing is not absent. However, no other texts with קום clearly speak of spiritual strengthening, although the sense of spiritual strengthening in Psalm 119:28 may be illuminated by the uses of קום in Deuteronomy 27:26; 28:9; 1 Kings 11:14, 23; Hosea 6:2; Job 4:4. The verb חזק is used for God strengthening His people to accomplish specific tasks for His glory and for being courageous for His sake and in His cause, as well as for the people of God strengthening one another for specific spiritual tasks (cf. Numbers 13:20; Deuteronomy 1:38; 3:28; 11:8; 31:6–7, 23; Joshua 1:6–7, 9, 18; 10:25; 23:6; Judges 20:22; 1 Samuel 23:16; 30:6; 1 Kings 2:2; Isaiah 35:3–4; Ezekiel 34:4, 16; Zechariah 8:9, 13; Psalm 27:14; 31:24; Job 4:3; Ezra 6:22; 7:28; 10:4; Nehemiah 2:18; 6:9; 10:29; 1 Chronicles 22:13; 28:10, 20; 29:12; 2 Chronicles 1:1; 15:7–8; 19:11; 31:4; 32:7; 35:2). The believer is made courageous and strong "to keep and to do all that is written in the book of the law of Moses . . . [and] turn not aside therefrom to the right hand or to the left" (Joshua 23:6). A few references refer to the believer himself being strengthened, rather than his possessing strength to perform a specific task: "And Jonathan Saul's son arose, and went to David into the wood, and strengthened [David's] hand in God" (1 Samuel 23:16). "And David was greatly distressed; for the people spake of stoning him, because the soul of all the people was grieved, every man for his sons physical world (e. g., Acts 3:7, 16; 16:5; Hebrews 5:12, 14; 1 Peter 5:9), strengthening texts illuminate important aspects of the work of God in sanctifying His people.

Progressive sanctification strengthens or establishes a believer's heart and soul (Acts 14:22) unblameable in holiness before God the Father, a process only completed at the coming of Christ (1 Thessalonians 3:13). God progressively perfects, establishes, strengthens, and settles believers until they become perfectly holy in eternal glory (1 Peter 5:10). As the Triune God, and especially the incarnate Son, strengthens believers (cf. Ephesians 6:10; Philippians 4:13;[61] 1 Timothy 1:12; 2 Timothy 4:7) according to His glorious power[62] and grace (2 Timothy 2:1), Christians are filled with spiritual knowledge and understanding as well as holy attitudes and actions (Colossians 1:9-12). They grow stronger in their knowledge of and ability to rightly teach the Word (Acts 9:22), grow stronger in faith (Romans 4:20), and grow in their ability to fight and win spiritual victories (2 Timothy 4:17; Hebrews 11:34). Believers are not only strengthened individually, but churches, assemblies of the saints, are likewise corporately strengthened (Acts 15:41; 16:5). Strengthening leads the saints to hold fast to the Word and to practice "every good word and work" (1 Thessalonians 2:15-17) as God keeps them from evil (1 Thessalonians 3:3) and the error of the wicked (2 Peter 3:17) and they are established in the truth (2 Peter 1:12). When the "heart [is] established [or strengthened] with grace," the saint is not "carried about with divers and strange doctrines" (Hebrews 13:9). As and for his daughters: but David encouraged himself [וַיִּתְחַזֵּק] in the LORD his God" (1 Samuel 30:6). See also Isaiah 35:4; Ezekiel 34:4, 6. The verb חזק is used in many other ways associated with strength but not with sanctification (e. g., Genesis 48:2). אמץ is also used at times in a way associated with sanctification (Deuteronomy 3:28; 31:6–7, 23; Joshua 1:6–7, 9, 18; 10:25; Isaiah 35:3; 41:10; Psalm 27:14; 31:25; Job 4:4; 1 Chronicles 22:13; 28:20; 2 Chronicles 32:7), and perhaps עֹז (Isaiah 45:24; Psalm 138:3), גְּבוּרָה (Micah 3:8; Daniel 2:23), and כֹּחַ (1 Chronicles 26:8; Isaiah 40:29, 31; 41:1; Micah 3:8) are so used as well.

---

61 "I can do all things (πάντα ἰσχύω). Old verb to have strength (ἰσχύς). In him that strengtheneth me (ἐν τῷ ἐνδυναμοῦντί με). Late and rare verb (in LXX) from adjective ἐνδύναμος (ἐν, δύναμις). Causative verb to empower, to pour power into one. See [the] same phrase in 1 Timothy 1:12 τῷ ἐνδυναμώσαντί με (aorist tense here). Paul has such strength so long as Jesus keeps on putting power (δύναμις) into him" (Robertson's Word Pictures, Philippians 4:13).

62 God's strengthening brings His power or ability for service and spiritual growth. This fact is verified in the ἰσχύω word group: ἰσχύω (Matthew 5:13; 8:28; 9:12; 26:40; Mark 2:17; 5:4; 9:18; 14:37; Luke 6:48; 8:43; 13:24; 14:6, 29–30; 16:3; 20:26; John 21:6; Acts 6:10; 15:10; 19:16, 20; 25:7; 27:16; Galatians 5:6; 6:15; Philippians 4:13; Hebrews 9:17; James 5:16; Revelation 12:8); ἐξισχύω (Ephesians 3:18); κατισχύω (Matthew 16:18; Luke 23:23); and ἰσχύς (Mark 12:30, 33; Luke 10:27; Ephesians 1:19; 6:10; 2 Thessalonians 1:9; 1 Peter 4:11; 2 Peter 2:11; Revelation 5:12; 7:12; 18:2). Texts that show the relationship between strengthening and power or ability include 1 Peter 4:11; Ephesians 1:19; 6:10; Galatians 5:6; Philippians 4:13; cf. Matthew 16:18. Similar truth is verified in the δύναμαι/δυνατός/ δύναμις word group; i. e., John 15:4-5; Ephesians 6:11; Jude 24 (δύναμαι); Romans 14:4; 2 Corinthians 9:8; 10:4; 2 Timothy 1:12 (δυνατός); Romans 15:13; 2 Corinthians 12:9; Ephesians 1:19; 3:16; Colossians 1:11; 1:29; 2 Peter 1:3 (δύναμις).

believers are strengthened or established, they become unmoved by trials and temptations (1 Thessalonians 3:2-5) as they stand fast in the Lord (1 Thessalonians 3:8) and in the faith (Acts 14:22; 16:5), as their faith grows stedfast (Colossians 2:5) firm (1 Peter 5:9; cf. 2 Timothy 2:19; Hebrews 5:12, 14), and established (Colossians 2:7). Spiritual strengthening leads believers to fulfill the Great Commission (Matthew 28:18-20; Acts 16:5). Believers strengthen one another as they themselves are strengthened by Christ (Luke 22:32). They are strengthened through spiritual gifts and the faith of other saints (Romans 1:11-12). As God strengthens believers through the gospel and the preaching of Jesus Christ (Romans 16:25; Acts 15:32), so likewise spiritual leaders strengthen and establish other believers (1 Thessalonians 3:2-3; Acts 18:23) through the instrumentality of the Word. God continues to strengthen, establish or confirm believers to the end, evidencing their eternal security and the certainty of their sanctification (1 Corinthians 1:8; 2 Corinthians 1:21).

In contrast, believers and churches that backslide grow weaker, and are called upon to be "watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die" (Revelation 3:2). Terms for spiritual weakening[63] or sickness are derived from terms for physical weakness or sickness (Matthew 8:17; Mark 6:56; John 6:2; 1 Timothy 5:23) in a manner that corresponds to the relationship between physical and spiritual strengthening. Spiritual weakness leads the believer to quickly fold under pressure from sin, while the stronger a Christian is the greater ability he has to withstand fiercer assaults by the world,

---

[63] Texts in the weakening word group are: ἀσθενέω (Matthew 10:8; 25:36; Mark 6:56; Luke 4:40; 7:10; 9:2; John 4:46; 5:3, 7; 6:2; 11:1–3, 6; Acts 9:37; 19:12; 20:35; Romans 4:19; 8:3; 14:1–2, 21; 1 Corinthians 8:9, 11–12; 2 Corinthians 11:21, 29; 12:10; 13:3–4, 9; Philippians 2:26–27; 2 Timothy 4:20; James 5:14); ἀσθενής (Matthew 25:39, 43–44; 26:41; Mark 14:38; Luke 10:9; Acts 4:9; 5:15–16; Romans 5:6; 1 Corinthians 1:25, 27; 4:10; 8:7, 10; 9:22; 11:30; 12:22; 2 Corinthians 10:10; Galatians 4:9; 1 Thessalonians 5:14; Hebrews 7:18; 1 Peter 3:7); ἀσθένημα (Romans 15:1); and ἀσθένεια (Matthew 8:17; Luke 5:15; 8:2; 13:11–12; John 5:5; 11:4; Acts 28:9; Romans 6:19; 8:26; 1 Corinthians 2:3; 15:43; 2 Corinthians 11:30; 12:5, 9–10; 13:4; Galatians 4:13; 1 Timothy 5:23; Hebrews 4:15; 5:2; 7:28; 11:34).

Believers can grow spiritually weaker and backslide, as they can decay from states of spiritual quickening or liveliness, transformation, and renewal, because the believer's indwelling sin remains within him a tendency to ever greater evil, as in the unregenerate their utter domination by the flesh leads them to ever greater iniquity and corruption of nature (cf. 2 Timothy 3:13). The supernatural power of sanctifying grace working within the saint by the Holy Spirit encounters this fleshly indwelling resistance to holiness that remains within all believers until glorification, and apart from the unceasing supply of spiritual strength given the saint by God, his spiritual life would decay and indeed even be lost, as the natural end result of both physical and spiritual sickness is death (cf. Revelation 3:2; Acts 9:37; 1 Corinthians 11:30; Philippians 2:26-27), in contrast to the natural end of spiritual strengthening, perfection (2 Corinthians 13:9). While spiritual weakness would, left to itself, lead to spritual death, the fact of the believer's eternal security and the effectual character of the High Priestly ministry of Christ (cf. John 17:8, 17, 24; Luke 22:32; Hebrews 4:15) guarantee that neither spiritual life during the Christian's earthly pilgrimage (John 10:27) nor life with God in the eternal state (John 10:28-30) are ever forfeited, as God's faithfulness prevents all of His people from ever losing the entirety of their sanctification or forfeiting a place in heaven.

the flesh, and the devil; weakness is opposed to strength or to power (Hebrews 11:34; 1 Corinthians 15:43; 2 Corinthians 13:4). While a believer is either growing spiritually stronger or weaker, so an all-or-nothing element is present in sanctification, both spiritual strength and weakness, like physical strength and weakness, have degrees.[64] Greater spiritual weakness is associated with greater spiritual inability to perform spiritual good, as the unregenerate are absolutely spiritually weak because of their total inability to please God (Romans 5:6), and physical weakness creates physical inability (Luke 13:11; John 5:3, 7; Acts 4:9; 3:1-8).[65] Believers can become weak in general (Romans 14:21), grow weak in faith (Romans 4:19; 14:1-2), and have a weak conscience (1 Corinthians 8:7, 12), that is, one that does not have the strength to withstand strong temptations (1 Corinthians 8:10). Stronger Christians and spiritual leaders are commanded to "support the weak" (Acts 20:35; 1 Thessalonians 5:14) because of their lack of spiritual strength. The strong must use spiritual liberty in such a way that the weak are not led to stumble (Romans 14:21; 1 Corinthians 8:9-13; 9:22). Paul commands: "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbour for his good to edification." (Romans 15:1-2).

Indeed, all believers short of heaven possess sinful "infirmities" (Romans 8:26; Hebrews 5:2, 7:27-28) that Christ their High Priest sympathizes with (Hebrews 4:15) and the Holy Spirit assists them to overcome (Romans 8:26). Despite the willingness and eagerness to obey of his renewed spirit, the believer must constantly watch and pray, because his flesh, his indwelling sin, is weak and ready to lead him into temptation (Matthew 26:41; Mark 14:38). As physical infirmity in the flesh hinders physical ability (Galatians 4:13), so does the spiritual infirmity of the flesh (Romans 6:19) hinder the believer's spiritual progress. Christians must recognize that apart from the grace and power given to them by God, they are spiritually weak; spiritual strength requires recognizing one's autonomous weakness and walking in the Spirit's power instead (2 Corinthians 11:30; 12:5, 9, 10; cf. Romans 8:3-4). As God strengthens them (1 Peter 5:10) and they strengthen what God has worked in them (Revelation 3:2), believers pass from weakness to ever greater degrees of strength, and grow in their ability to obey the Divine mandate to strengthen their brethren (Luke 22:32).

5.) Vivification as Transformation

---

64 One is consequentely not surprised by the existence and use of comparative forms of the adjective ἀσθενής, 1 Corinthians 12:22; 1 Peter 3:7.

65 Notice that in each of these pericopes the power of Christ proved greater than the human impotence. The Lord Jesus has the power to overcome all spiritual and physical inability.

The progressive restoration of the image of Christ that constitutes vivification in this life and which is consummated in glorification is powerfully set forth in the New Testament language of spiritual transformation with the morphoo (μορφόω) word group.[66] The verb morphoo[67] appears only in Galatians 4:19, where the word sets forth the progressive sanctification that takes place as "Christ [is] formed in" the believer (Galatians 4:19).[68] The related noun morphe (μορφή)[69] indicates that through the process of Galatians 4:19 God works in the regenerate a true likeness to Christ. The word appears in three verses in the New Testament. Mark 16:12[70] refers to the "form" of the resurrected and glorified body in which the Lord Jesus appeared to two disciples on the road to Emmaus (Luke 24:13-35). Philippians 2:6-7[71] teaches that Christ took the "form of a servant" in the incarnation, thus specifying His true humanity in the same way that His Deity is indicated by His existing (ὑπάρχων) in the "form of God" from all eternity. The Divine work of forming Christ in the believer thus involves the progressive transformation of his entire person into the likeness of the glorified Son of Man. Such transformation is certain for the believer, since God has "predestinate[d] [him] to be

---

66 The words in this group are μορφόω, μορφή, μόρφωσις, σύμμορφος, συμμορφόω, and μεταμορφόω. The noun μόρφωσις, which means "the state of being formally structured, embodiment, formulation, form," (BDAG), is not specifically used for progressive sanctification; it appears twice in the New Testament, once in reference to "the form of knowledge and of the truth in the law" and once to "a form of godliness" (παιδευτὴν ἀφρόνων, διδάσκαλον νηπίων, ἔχοντα τὴν μόρφωσιν τῆς γνώσεως καὶ τῆς ἀληθείας ἐν τῷ νόμῳ·, Romans 2:20; ἔχοντες μόρφωσιν εὐσεβείας, τὴν δὲ δύναμιν αὐτῆς ἠρνημένοι· καὶ τούτους ἀποτρέπου, 2 Timothy 3:5).

67 μορφόω (μορφή) 1 aor. ptc. μορφώσαντες (Just., A I, 9, 1). Pass.: aor. ἐμορφώθην; pf. ptc. μεμορφωμένος (Philo, Joseph.) (Aratus, Phaen. 375; Nilus: Anth. Pal. 1, 33, 1; Is 44:13 Q in margin and Aq.; Philo, Plant. 3; Ps.-Philo, De Mundo 13; SibOr 4, 182; Jos., Ant. 15, 329; Just., A I, 5, 4 τοῦ λόγου μορφωθέντος καὶ ἀνθρώπου γενομένου; Ath., R. 3 p. 51, 16) to form, shape act. PtK 2 p. 14, 13. Pass. take on form, be formed (Theophr., CP 5, 6, 7; Diod. S. 3, 51, 3) in imagery as in the formation of an embryo (Galen XIX p. 181 K. ἔμβρυα μεμορφωμένα; Philo, Spec. Leg. 3, 117) μέχρις οὗ μορφωθῇ Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν until Christ is formed in you Gal 4:19 (RHermann, TLZ 80, '55, 713–26).—DELG s.v. μορφή. M-M. TW. (BDAG)

68 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, τεκνία μου, οὓς πάλιν ὠδίνω, ἄχρις οὗ μορφωθῇ Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν. Note that "little children" (τεκνίον) is employed for younger Christians in 1 John 2:12-14.

69 μορφή, ῆς f: the nature or character of something, with emphasis upon both the internal and external form — 'nature, character.' ὃς ἐν μορφῇ θεοῦ ὑπάρχων 'he always had the very nature of God' Php 2:6; μορφὴν δούλου λαβών 'he took on the nature of a servant' Php 2:7. (Louw-Nida)

70 After that he appeared in another form unto two of them, as they walked, and went into the country. Μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα δυσὶν ἐξ αὐτῶν περιπατοῦσιν ἐφανερώθη ἐν ἑτέρᾳ μορφῇ, πορευομένοις εἰς ἀγρόν.

71 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men:
6 ὃς ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων, οὐχ ἁρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ, 7 ἀλλ᾽ ἑαυτὸν ἐκένωσε, μορφὴν δούλου λαβὼν, ἐν ὁμοιώματι ἀνθρώπων γενόμενος·

conformed [summorphos, σύμμορφος][72] to the image of his Son" (Romans 8:29). The believer becomes conformed to the holiness of Christ in his life as he is "being made conformable unto his death" (Philippians 3:10)[73] through physically suffering persecution and spiritually mortifying sin,[74] and is both morally and bodily conformed to Christ eschatologically (Philippians 3:21).[75]

The Greek verb metamorphoo (μεταμορφόω) provides further glorious truth about the nature of the progressive sanctification. The verb is used twice for the transfiguration of Christ (Matthew 17:2; Mark 9:2) and twice for the spiritual transformation of the believer in sanctification (Romans 12:2; 2 Corinthians 3:18).[76] Romans 12:2 commands, "be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind" (μὴ συσχηματίζεσθε τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, ἀλλὰ

---

72 σύμμορφος, ον ([Ps.-Lucian,] Amor. 39 al.) pert. to having a similar form, nature, or style, *similar in form τινός as or to someth. (σ. τοῦ θανάτου αὐτοῦ Orig., C. Cels. 2, 69, 16; B-D-F §182, 1; Rob. 504; 528) σύμμ. τῆς εἰκόνος τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ like his Son in form or appearance Ro 8:29 (JKürzinger, BZ 2, '58, 294–99). Also w. the dat. (Nicander [II BC], Ther. 321 ed. OSchneider [1856]; Heraclit. Sto. 77 p. 102, 12 σ. τρισὶ θεοῖς of Agamemnon; B-D-F §194, 2; Rob. 528) σύμμ. τῷ σώματι τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ Phil 3:21.—DELG s.v. μορφή. TW.
Compare also:
συμμορφίζω (only in Christian wr. but=συμμορφόω below) to cause to be similar in form or style to someth. else, *grant or invest w. the same form as, pass. συμμορφίζεσθαί τινι be conformed to, take on the same form as τῷ θανάτῳ αὐτοῦ=the style of Christ's death, i.e. to be like Christ in his death Phil 3:10 [a critical text variant—the Textus Receptus has συμμορφόω].—DELG s.v. μορφή. M-M. TW.
συμμορφόω 'to give the same form', pass. take on the same form (s. two prec. entries; Libanius, Descript. 30, 5 vol. VIII 542, 10 F.; Menand. Protector [VI AD]: HGM II p. 67, 8) Phil 3:10 [TR]—DELG s.v. μορφή. (BDAG)

73 That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; τοῦ γνῶναι αὐτόν, καὶ τὴν δύναμιν τῆς ἀναστάσεως αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὴν κοινωνίαν τῶν παθημάτων αὐτοῦ, συμμορφούμενος τῷ θανάτῳ αὐτοῦ. Note that συμμορφούμενος is a present participle which in this text indicates a progressive being made conformable to Christ's death, and that Philippians 3:10 records the only appearance of συμμορφόω in the New Testament.

74 Paul makes a close connection between enduring physical suffering for Christ's sake and spiritual growth. Note 2 Corinthians 4:10-11: "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body. For we which live are alway delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh" (πάντοτε τὴν νέκρωσιν τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματι περιφέροντες, ἵνα καὶ ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματι ἡμῶν φανερωθῇ. ἀεὶ γὰρ ἡμεῖς οἱ ζῶντες εἰς θάνατον παραδιδόμεθα διὰ Ἰησοῦν, ἵνα καὶ ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ φανερωθῇ ἐν τῇ θνητῇ σαρκὶ ἡμῶν.). One's soul and spirit become more like Christ as one becomes bodily like Him through enduring physical suffering for His name's sake.

75 Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself. ὃς μετασχηματίσει τὸ σῶμα τῆς ταπεινώσεως ἡμῶν, εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτὸ σύμμορφον τῷ σώματι τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ, κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τοῦ δύνασθαι αὐτὸν καὶ ὑποτάξαι ἑαυτῷ τὰ πάντα.

Philippians 3:21 and Romans 8:29 are the only New Testament references to the word σύμμορφος.

76 However, the references to Christ (Matthew 17:2; Mark 9:2) employ the aorist tense, since the transformation was instantaneous, while the references to the transformation of the believer (Romans 12:2; 2 Corinthians 3:18) employ the present tense, since their change is progressive.

μεταμορφοῦσθε τῇ ἀνακαινώσει τοῦ νοὸς ὑμῶν).[77] 2 Corinthians 3:18 states, "we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the

---

[77] Trench has some valuable comments on the distinction between συσχηματίζω and μεταμορφόω in Romans 12:2, and upon the μορφή group in general:

[The] words [μορφή & σχῆμα] are none of them of frequent recurrence in the N. T., μορφή occurring there only [thrice] (Mark xvi. 12; Phil. ii. [6-7]); but compare μόρφωσις (Rom. ii. 20; 2 Tim. iii. 5); σχῆμα not oftener (1 Cor. vii. 31; Phil. ii. 8)[.] . . . Μορφή is 'form,' 'forma,' 'gestalt'; σχῆμα is 'fashion,' 'habitus,' 'figur'; ἰδέα, 'appearance,' 'species,' 'erscheinung.' [These words], which, occur not unfrequently together (Plutarch, Symp. [Page 262] viii.2.3), are objective; for the 'form' and the 'fashion' of a thing would exist, were it alone in the universe, and whether there were any to behold it or no. . . .

We may best study the distinction between μορφή and σχῆμα, and at the same time estimate its importance, by aid of that great doctrinal passage (Phil. ii. 6-8), in which St. Paul speaks of the Eternal Word before his Incarnation as subsisting "in the form of God" (ἐν μορφῇ θεοῦ ὑπάρχων), as assuming at his Incarnation "the form of a servant" (μορφὴν δούλου λαβών), and after his Incarnation and during his walk upon earth as "being found in fashion as a man" (σχήματι εὑρεθεὶς ὡς ἄνθρωπος). The Fathers were wont to urge the first phrase, ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων, against the Arians (thus Hilary, De Trin. viii. 45; Ambrose, Ep. 46; Gregory of Nyssa, Con. Eunom. 4); and the Lutherans did the same against the Socinians, as a 'dictum probans' of the absolute divinity of the Son of God; that is, μορφή for them was here equivalent to οὐσία or φύσις. . . . Doubtless there does lie in the words a proof of the divinity of Christ, but this implicitly and not explicitly. Μορφή is not οὐσία: at the same time none could be ἐν μορφῇ θεοῦ who was not God; as is well put by Bengel: 'Forma Dei non est natura, divina, sed tamen is qui in forma, Dei extabat, Deus est;' and this because μορφή, like the Latin 'forma,' the German 'gestalt,' signifies the form as it is the utterance of the inner life; not 'being,' but 'mode of being,' or better, 'mode of existence'; and only God could have the mode of existence of God. But He who had thus been from eternity ἐν μορφῇ θεοῦ (John xvii. 5), took at his Incarnation μορφὴν δούλου. The verity of his Incarnation is herein implied; there was nothing docetic, nothing phantastic about it. His manner of existence was now that of a δοῦλος, that is, of a δοῦλος τοῦ θεοῦ: for in the midst of all our Lord's humiliations He was never a δοῦλος ἀνθρώπων. Their διάκονος He may have been, and from time to time eminently was (John xiii. 4, 5; Matt. xx. 28); this was part of his ταπείνωσις mentioned in the next verse; but their δοῦλος never; they, on the contrary, his. It was with respect of God He so emptied Himself of his glory, that, from that manner of existence in which He thought it not robbery to be equal with God, He became his servant.

The next clause, "and being found in fashion (σχήματι) as a man," is very instructive for the distinguishing of σχῆμα from μορφή. The verity of the Son's Incarnation was expressed, as we have seen, in the μορφὴν δούλου λαβών. These words which follow do but declare the outward facts which came under the knowledge of his fellow-men, with therefore an emphasis on εὑρεθείς: He was by men found in fashion as a man, the σχῆμα here signifying his whole outward presentation, as Bengel puts it well: 'σχῆμα, habitus, cultus, vestitus, victus, gestus, sermones et actiones.' In none of these did there appear any difference between Him and the other children of men. This superficial character of σχῆμα appears in its association with such words as χρῶμα (Plato, Gorg. 20; Theoetet. 163b) and ὑπογραφή (Legg. v. 737 d); as in the definition of it which Plutarch gives (De Plac. Phil. 14): ἐστὶν ἐπιφάνεια καὶ περιγραφὴ κιὰ πέρας σώματος. The two words are used in an instructive antithesis by Justin Martyr (1 Apol. 9).

The distinction between them comes out very clearly in the compound verbs μετασχηματίζειν and μεταμορφοῦν. Thus if I were to change a Dutch garden into an Italian, this would be μετασχηματισμός: but if I were to transform a garden into something wholly different; as into a city, this would be μεταμόρφωσις. It is possible for Satan μετασχηματίζειν himself into an angel of light (2 Cor. xi. 14); he can take the whole outward semblance of such. But to any such change of his it would be impossible to apply the μεταμορφοῦσθαι: for this would imply a change not external but internal, not of accidents but of essence, which lies quite beyond his power. How fine and subtle is the variation of words at Rom. xii. 2[.] . . . The Authorized Version is the first which uses 'transformed' here; Wiclif and the Rheims, both following closely the Vulgate, 'transfigured,' and the intermediate Reformed Versions, 'changed into the fashion of.' . . . 'Do not fall in,'says the Apostle, 'with the fleeting fashions of this world, nor be yourselves fashioned to them (μὴ συσχηματίζεσθε), but undergo a deep abiding change (ἀλλὰ μεταμορφοῦσθε) by the renewing of your mind, such as the Spirit of God alone can work in you' (cf. 2 Cor. iii. 18). Theodoret, commenting on this verse, calls particular attention to this variation of the word used, a variation which it would task the highest skill of the English scholar adequately to reproduce in his own language. Among much else which is interesting, he says: ἐδίδασκεν ὅσον πρὸς τὰ παρόντα τῆς ἀρετῆς τὸ διάφορον· ταῦτα γὰρ ἐκάλεσε σχῆμα, τὴν ἀρετὴν δὲ μορφήν· ἡ μορφὴδὲ ἀληθῶν πραγμάτων σημαντική, τὸ δὲ σχῆμα εὐδιάλυτον χρῆμα. . . . For the very different uses of one word and the other, see Plutarch, Quom. Adul. ab Amie. 7, where both occur.

At the resurrection Christ shall transfigure (μετασχηματίσει) the bodies of his saints (Phil. iii. 21; cf. 1 Cor. xv. 53); on which statement Calov remarks, 'Ille μετασχηματισμός non substantialem mutationem, sed accidentalem, non ratione quidditatis corporis nostri, sed ratione qualitatum, salva quidditatis, importat:' but the changes of heathen deities into wholly other shapes were μεταμορφώσεις. In the μετασχηματισμός there is transition, but no absolute solution of continuity. The butterfly, prophetic type of man's resurrection, is immeasurably more beautiful than the grub, yet has been duly unfolded from it; but when Proteus transforms himself into a flame, a wild beast, a running stream (Virgil, Georg. iv. 442), each of these disconnected with all that went before, there is here a change not of the σχῆμα merely, but of the μορφή (cf. Euripides, Hec. 1266; Plato, Locr. 104 e). When the Evangelist records that after the resurrection Christ appeared to his disciples ἐν ἑτέρᾳ μορφῇ (Mark xvi. 12), the words intimate to us how vast the mysterious change to which his body had been submitted, even as they are in keeping with the μετεμορφώθη of Matt. xvii. 2; Mark ix. 2; the transformation upon the Mount being a prophetic anticipation of that which hereafter should be; compare Dan. iv. 33, where Nebuchadnezzar says of himself, ἡ μορφήμου ἐπέστρεψεν εἰς ἐμέ.

The μορφή then, it may be assumed, is of the essence of a thing. We cannot conceive the thing as apart from this its formality, to use 'formality' in the old logical sense; the σχῆμα is its accident, having to do, not with the 'quidditas,' but the 'qualitas,' and, whatever changes it may undergo, leaving the 'quidditas' untouched, the thing itself essentially, or formally, the same as it was before; as one has said, μορφὴφύσεως σχῆμα ἕξεως. Thus σχῆμα βασιλικόν (Lucian, Pisc. 35; cf. Sophocles, Antig. 1148) is the whole outward array and adornment of a monarch—diadem, tiara, sceptre, robe (cf. Lucian, Hermot. 86)—all which he might lay aside, and remain king notwithstanding. It in no sort belongs or adheres to the man as a part of himself. Thus Menander (Meineke, Fragm. Com. p.985):

> πρᾶον κακοῦργός σχῆμ᾽ ὑπεισελθὼν ἀνὴρ
> κεκρυμμένη κεῖται παγὶς τοῖς πλησίον

Thus, too, the σχῆμα τοῦ κοσμοῦ passes away (1 Cor. vii. 31), the image being here probably drawn from the shifting scenes of a theatre, but the κόσμος itself abides; there is no τέλος τοῦ κοσμοῦ, but only τοῦ αἰώνος, or τῶν αἰώνων. For some valuable remarks on the distinction between μορφή and σχῆμα see The Journal of Classical and Sacred Philology, No. 7, pp. 113, 116, 121; and the same drawn out more fully by Bishop Lightfoot, their author, in his Commentary on the Philippians, pp. 125-131.

The use in Latin of 'forma' and 'figura,' so far corresponds with those severally of μορφή and σχῆμα, that while 'figura forme' occurs not rarely ('veterem formae servare figuram'; cf. Cicero, Nat. Deor. 32), 'forma figurae never (see Doderlein, Latein. Syn. vol. iii. p. 87). Contrast too in English 'deformed' and 'disfigured. ' A hunchback is 'deformed,' a man that has been beaten about the face may be 'disfigured'; the deformity is bound up in the very existence of the one; the disfigurement of the other may in a few days have quite passed away. In 'transformed' and 'transfigured' it is easy to recognize the same distinction.

As Trench mentions, the μορφή/σχῆμα distinction is well set forth in Apology of Justin 1:9, Justin Martyr:

Αλλ᾽ οὐδὲ θυσίαις πολλαῖς καὶ πλοκαῖς ἀνθῶν τιμῶμεν οὓς ἄνθρωποι μορφώσαντες, καὶ ἐν ναοῖς ἱδρύσαντες, θεοὺς προσωνόμασαν· ἐπεὶ ἄψυχα καὶ νεκρὰ ταῦτα γινώσκομεν, καὶ Θεοῦ μορφὴν μὴ ἔχοντα, (οὐ γὰρ τοιαύτην ἡγούμεθα τὸν Θεὸν ἔχειν τὴν μορφὴν ἥν φασί τινες εἰς τιμὴν μεμιμῆσθαι·) ἀλλ᾽ ἐκείνων τῶν φανέντων κακῶν δαιμόνων καὶ ὀνόματα καὶ σχήματα ἔχειν. Τί γὰρ δεῖ εἰδόσιν ὑμῖν λέγειν, ἃ τὴν ὕλην οἱ τεχνῖται διατιθέασι, ξέοντες καὶ τέμνοντες, καὶ χωνεύοντες καὶ τύπτοντες; καὶ ἐξ ἀτίμων πολλάκις σκευῶν διὰ τέχνης τὸ σχῆμα μόνον ἀλλάξαντες καὶ μορφοποιήσαντες, θεοὺς ἐπονομάζουσιν. Ὅπερ οὐ μόνον ἄλογον ἡγούμεθα, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐφ᾽ ὕβρει τοῦ Θεοῦ γίνεσθαι, ὃς ἄρρητον δόξαν καὶ μορφὴν ἔχων, ἐπὶ φθαρτοῖς καὶ δεομένοις θεραπείας πράγμασιν ἐπονομάζεται. Καὶ ὅτι οἱ τούτων τεχνῖται ἀσελγεῖς τε, καὶ πᾶσαν κακίαν, ἵνα μὴ καταριθμῶμεν, ἔχουσιν, ἀκριβῶς ἐπίστασθε· καὶ τὰς ἑαυτῶν παιδίσκας συνεργαζομένας φθείρουσιν. Ὦ τῆς ἐμβροντησίας, ἀνθρώπους ἀκολάστους, θεοὺς εἰς τὸ προσκυνεῖσθαι πλάσσειν λέγεσθαι, καὶ μεταποιεῖν· καὶ τῶν ἱερῶν, ἔνθα ἀνατίθενται, φύλακας τοιούτους καθιστάναι· μὴ συνορῶντας ἀθέμιτον καὶ τὸ νοεῖν ἢ λέγειν ἀνθρώπους θεῶν εἶναι φύλακας.

And neither do we honor with many sacrifices and garlands of flowers such deities as men have formed and set in shrines and called gods; since we see that these are soulless and dead, and have not the form [morphe] of God (for we do not consider that God has such a form [morphe] as some say that they imitate to His honor), but have the names and forms [schema] of those wicked demons which have appeared. For why need we tell you who already know, into what forms the craftsmen, carving and cutting, casting and hammering, fashion the materials? And often out of vessels of dishonor, by merely changing the form, and making an image of the requisite shape, they make what they call a god; which we consider not only senseless, but to be even insulting to God, who, having ineffable glory and form [morphe], thus gets His name attached to things that are corruptible, and require constant service. And that the artificers of these are both intemperate, and, not to enter into particulars, are practised in every vice, you very well know; even their own girls who work along with them they corrupt What infatuation! That dissolute men should be said to fashion and make gods for your worship, and that you should appoint such men the guardians of the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (ἡμεῖς . . . πάντες, ἀνακεκαλυμμένῳ προσώπῳ τὴν δόξαν Κυρίου κατοπτριζόμενοι, τὴν αὐτήν εἰκόνα μεταμορφούμεθα ἀπὸ δόξης εἰς δόξαν, καθάπερ ἀπὸ Κυρίου Πνεύματος). All believers ("we all," 2 Corinthians 3:18), are progressively transformed into the image of Christ by the Holy Spirit.[78] They pass "from glory to glory" in this life, becoming more like Christ as the old in them is eliminated and the new grows stronger and stronger, until the transformation is complete when they are "like him . . . [and] see him as he is" (1 John 3:2). As they behold and meditate upon the glory of God revealed in the mirror of the Word[79] their nature is transformed into the likeness of Jesus Christ. The renewal (anakainosis, ἀνακαίνωσις) begun by the Spirit in regeneration (Titus 3:5) is carried on by Him in believers now (Romans 12:2) until it is perfected in eternal glory. The inward transformation wrought by the Holy Spirit results in a believer being different and therefore acting differently.[80]

6.) Vivification as Perfecting

The katardizo word group[81] is used in connection with God's vivifying work in "perfecting" His people. In Hebrews 13:20-21, Paul writes: "Now the God of peace, that temples where they are enshrined; not recognizing that it is unlawful even to think or say that men are the guardians of gods.

---

[78] The believer "is progressing 'from glory to glory' as increasingly he is 'transformed into the same image,' that is to say, as his Christianity advances (2 Corinthians 3:18); for the glory of the Son is the glory of the [true] Image [of God]. The bond of union between [Christ as the] Glory [cf. James 2:1] and the Image is plainly set forth also in Hebrews 1:3, where the Son is in the same breath designated ['the brightness of [God's] glory' and 'the express image of his person]" (pg. 45, The True Image, Hughes).

[79] The verb κατοπτρίζω in 2 Corinthians 3:18 means to "look at something as in a mirror, contemplate something . . . the noun κάτοπτρον is the most common term in the papyri for [a] mirror" (BDAG). The New Testament employs the related noun ἔσοπτρον exclusively for the mirror of the Word (1 Corinthians 13:12; James 1:23).

[80] Notice that proving "what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God" (Romans 12:2) is a result of the inward transformation wrought by the Spirit (μεταμορφοῦσθε . . . εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν ὑμᾶς τί τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ τὸ ἀγαθὸν καὶ εὐάρεστον καὶ τέλειον).

[81] Specifically, the verb καταρτίζω and the nouns κατάρτισις and καταρτισμός. Consider the definitions of the three words in BDAG:

καταρτίζω fut. καταρτίσω; 1 aor. κατήρτισα, mid. κατηρτισάμην, 2 sg. κατηρτίσω. Pass.: aor. κατηρτίσθην LXX; pf. pass. κατήρτισμαι (ἀρτίζω, 'get ready, prepare', s. next entry; Hdt. et al.; ins, pap, LXX; TestSol 5:12 H).

1. to cause to be in a condition to function well, put in order, restore.

a. restore to a former condition, put to rights (since Hdt. 5, 28; 106; Dionys. Hal. 3, 10) τὶ someth. nets (by cleaning, mending, folding together) Mt 4:21; Mk 1:19 (cp. GWynne, Exp. 7th ser., 8, 1909, 282–85). Fig. κ. τινά restore someone ἐν πνεύματι πραΰτητος in a spirit of gentleness, i.e. in a gentle manner Gal 6:1. Pass. καταρτίζεσθε mend your ways 2 Cor 13:11.

b. put into proper condition (cp. Epict. 3, 20, 10 of a trainer who adjusts parts of the body), adjust, complete, make complete τὶ someth. καταρτίσαι τὰ ὑστερήματα τ. πίστεως ὑμῶν to fix up any deficiencies in your faith or to complete what is lacking in your faith 1 Th 3:10. τινά someone: ὑμᾶς ἐν παντὶ ἀγαθῷ make you complete in brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is wellpleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen." The text indicates that God, by "working in" believers "that which is wellpleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ" and "through the blood of the everlasting covenant," in such a manner "make[s] [them] perfect"[82] with the Divine purpose and result[83] that believers "do His will" and do "every good work." Similarly, Paul tells the Corinthians, "this also we wish, even your perfection" (2 Corinthians 13:9)[84] and exhorts: "Be perfect" (2 Corinthians 13:11).[85] Christ gives the church pastors and teachers "for the perfecting of the saints" (Ephesians 4:12).[86] The "perfection" in view is the restoration of Christlikeness in the believer which results in obedience. Progressive sanctification begins the process, completed only in glorification, whereby although "the disciple is not above his master," nonetheless "every one that is every good thing Hb 13:21. κατηρτισμένοι ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ νοὶ καὶ ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ γνώμῃ adjusted / made complete in the same mind and the same conviction 1 Cor 1:10. ἐν μιᾷ ὑποταγῇ IEph 2:2. ἐν ἀκινήτῳ πίστει ISm 1:1. Abs. 1 Pt 5:10. κατηρτισμένος (fully) trained, practiced (Polyb. 5, 2, 11 τ. εἰρεσίαις κατηρτισμένοι) κ. πᾶς (μαθητὴς) ἔσται ὡς ὁ διδάσκαλος αὐτοῦ when fully trained, the pupil will be like the teacher Lk 6:40. S. Betz, Gal. 297 n. 43.

---

2. to prepare for a purpose, prepare, make, create, outfit.

a. act. and pass., of God (w. ποιεῖν) B 16:6. (W. κτίζειν) τὰ πάντα Hm 1:1. Pass. ὁ κόσμος κατηρτίσθη Hv 2, 4, 1; also οἱ αἰῶνες (s. αἰών 3) ῥήματι θεοῦ Hb 11:3. κατηρτισμένος εἴς τι made, created for someth.: σκεύη ὀργῆς κατηρτισμένα εἰς ἀπώλειαν vessels of wrath, designed for destruction Ro 9:22. ἄνθρωπος εἰς ἕνωσιν κατηρτισμένος a man set on (lit. made for) unity IPhld 8:1.

b. mid. (PGM 4, 1147) καταρτίζεσθαί τί τινι prepare someth. for someone σῶμα Hb 10:5 (Ps 39:7 codd.: BSA). W. reflexive mng.: for oneself κατηρτίσω αἶνον you prepared praise for yourself Mt 21:16 (Ps 8:3).—DELG s.v. ἀραρίσκω. M-M. TW. Spicq.

κατάρτισις, εως, ἡ (s. prec. entry; Plut., Alex. 667 [7, 1] 'training'; cp. idem, κατάρτυσις Them. 112 [2, 7] w. παιδεία) the process of perfecting, *maturation εὐχόμεθα τὴν ὑμῶν κ. we pray for your maturation (for the perfecting of your characters Goodsp.) 2 Cor 13:9.—DELG s.v. ἀραρίσκω. TW.

καταρτισμός, οῦ, ὁ (s. prec. two entries; as medical term [Soranus 150, 8]: 'setting of a bone', etc. But more gener. PTebt 33, 12 [112 BC] 'preparation' αὐλῆς; cp. CMRDM 1, 121 s. New Docs 3, 70, no. 42; PRyl 127, 28; Sym. Is 38:12 'restoration') ext. fig. sense (not found in ins or pap) equipment, equipping εἴς τι for someth. πρὸς τὸν κ. τῶν ἁγίων εἰς ἔργον διακονίας to equip God's people (lit. 'the holy ones') for service Eph 4:12, though training, discipline (L-S-J-M) deserve consideration as glosses for κ.—DELG s.v. ἀραρίσκω. M-M. TW.

82 Note that the text does not affirm that their works are made "perfect," but that the believers themselves are made perfect ("make you perfect," καταρτίσαι ὑμᾶς). The person is made perfect "in every good work."

83 εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι τὸ θέλημα αὐτοῦ. The structure of εἰς τὸ + infinitive gives the result, for even if the structure is classified as indicating purpose, the Divine purpose is accomplished with the result of doing God's will.

84 τοῦτο δὲ καὶ εὐχόμεθα, τὴν ὑμῶν κατάρτισιν.

85 καταρτίζεσθε. Thee present imperative appears to be customary, like the ones that follow in the verse (παρακαλεῖσθε, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖτε, εἰρηνεύετε).

86 πρὸς τὸν καταρτισμὸν τῶν ἁγίων.

perfect shall be as his master" (Luke 6:40).[87] A believer who is "overtaken in a fault" must be "restore[d]" (katartidzo) from his status of being buffeted and led into sin (Galatians 6:1).[88] Peter's prayer that God would "make . . . perfect" his audience is explained as the saints being established, strengthened, and settled (1 Peter 5:10).[89] On the other hand, the death-grip of sin upon the unconverted makes them into "vessels of wrath fitted [katartidzo] to destruction" (Romans 9:22).[90] In contexts not closely related to progressive sanctification, the verb katartidzo is used for nets being mended (Matthew 4:21; Mark 1:19), for praise being perfected (Matthew 21:16), and for Christ's body (Hebrews 10:5) and the universe (Hebrews 11:3) being framed and perfectly fitted together. As believers are perfected in their persons, "that which is lacking in [their] faith" is likewise "perfect[ed]" (1 Thessalonians 3:10). Similarly, saints in the church are brought into unity, becoming "perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment" with "no divisions" among them (1 Corinthians 1:10).

As a saint is perfected (katartismos, Ephesians 4:12), he grows towards becoming a "perfect (teleios) man," having "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Ephesians 4:13). The teleios word-group[91] provides important data about the work of God in "perfecting" the saints. Trench[92] provides helpful information on the significance of teleios as "perfect," as specifically compared to "perfection" as holokleros and artios:

---

87 οὐκ ἐστι μαθητὴς ὑπὲρ τὸν διδάσκαλον αὐτου· κατηρτισμένος δὲ πᾶς ἔσται ὡς ὁ διδάσκαλος αὐτοῦ. Note the perfect passive participle.

88 Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Αδελφοί, ἐὰν καὶ προληφθῇ ἄνθρωπος ἔν τινι παραπτώματι, ὑμεῖς οἱ πνευματικοὶ καταρτίζετε τὸν τοιοῦτον ἐν πνεύματι πραότητος, σκοπῶν σεαυτὸν μὴ καὶ σὺ πειρασθῇς. Note the use of the present, not the aorist, imperative—not the beginning point of restoration alone is in view, but also the status of the person restored after those who are spiritual bring him back from sin.

89 But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you. ὁ δὲ Θεὸς πάσης χάριτος, ὁ καλέσας ἡμᾶς εἰς τὴν αἰώνιον αὐτοῦ δόξαν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ὀλίγον παθόντας αὐτὸς καταρτίσαι ὑμᾶς, στηρίξαι, σθενώσαι, θεμελιώσαι.

90 σκεύη ὀργῆς κατηρτισμένα εἰς ἀπώλειαν. Note that God is not expressed as the agent in the fitting of the lost to destruction, as He is in the perfecting and preparation of the saints, both in the context of Romans 9:22-23 and in other καταρτίζω texts in the New Testament.

91 τέλειος, τελειόω, τελείωσις, τελειότης, τελείως, τελειωτής. The words found with some frequency in the New Testament, τέλειος and τελειόω, are discussed below in their own paragraphs. The noun τελείωσις is found only in Luke 1:45 and Hebrews 7:11, the latter text being the only one dealing with progressive sanctification. Similary, τελειότης appears in only two verses (Colossians 3:14; Hebrews 6:1), both of which deal with sanctification. The adverb τελείως appears only in 1 Peter 1:13, while the noun τελειωτής only in Hebrews 12:2. The conclusions reached from the more common τέλειος and τελειόω, and affirmed by the study of Trench (cf. the following footnote), are supported by the less common words in the group.

92 § xxii. ὁλόκληρος, τέλειος, ἄρτιος. Synonyms of the New Testament, Richard Chenevix Trench. Elec. acc. Accordance Bible Software.

Ὁλόκληρος and τέλειος occur together, though their order is reversed, at Jam. i. 4, — "perfect and entire" (cf. Philo, De Sac. Ab. e Cain. 33: ἔμπλεα καὶ ὁλόκληρα καὶτέλεια: Dio Chrysostom, Oral. 12, p. 203); ἔμπλεα καὶ ὁλόκληρα καὶ τέλεια· besides in the N. T. (1 Thess. v. 23); ὁλόκληρία, also, but in a physical or an ethical sense, once (Acts iii. 16; cf. Isai. i. 6). Ὁλόκληρος signifies first, as its etymology declares, that which retains all which was allotted to it at the first (Ezek xv. 5), being thus whole and entire in all its parts (ὁλόκληρος καὶ παντελής, Philo, De Mere. Meret. 1); with nothing necessary for its completeness wanting. Thus Darius would have been well pleased not to have taken Babylon if only Zopyrus, who had maimed himself to carry out the stratagem by which it fell, were ὁλόκληρος still (Plutarch, Reg. et Imper. Apoph.). Again, unhewn stones, as having lost nothing in the process of shaping and polishing, are ὁλόκληροι (Dent. xxvii. 6; 1Macc. iv. 47); perfect weeks are ἑβδομάδες ὁλόκληροι (Lev. xxiii. 15); and a man ἐν ὁλοκλήρῳ δέρματι, is 'in a whole skin' (Lucian, Philops. 8). We next find ὁλόκληρος expressing that integrity of body, with nothing redundant, nothing deficient (cf. Lev. xxi. 17-23), which was required of the Levitical priests as a condition of their ministering at the altar, which also might not be wanting in the sacrifices they offered. In both these senses Josephus uses it (Ant. iii. 12:2); as does Philo continually. It is with him the standing word for this integrity of the priests and of the sacrifice, to the necessity of which he often recurs, seeing in it, and rightly, a mystical significance, and that these are ὁλόκληροι θυσίαι ὁλοκλήρῳ θεῷ (De Vict. 2; De Vict. Off. I, ὁλόκληρον καὶ παντελῶς μέμων ἀμέτοχον: De Agricul. 29; De Cherub. 28; cf. Plato, Legg. vi. 759 c). Τέλεις is used by Homer (Il. 1. 66) in the same sense.

It is not long before ὁλόκληρος and ὁλοκληρία, like the Latin 'integer' and 'integritas,' are transferred from bodily to mental and moral entireness (Suetonius, Claud. 4). The only approach to this in the Apocrypha is Wisd. xv. 3, ὁλόκληρα δικαιοσύνη: but in an interesting and important passage in the Phaedrus of Plato (250 c; cf. Tim. c), ὁλόκληρος expresses the perfection of man before the Fall; I mean, of course, the Fall as Plato contemplated it; when to men, as yet ὁλόκληροι καὶ ἀπαθεῖς κακῶν, were vouchsafed ὁλόκληρος φάσματα, as contrasted with those weak partial glimpses of the Eternal Beauty, which are all that to most men are now vouchsafed. That person then or thing is ὁλόκληρος, which is 'omnibus numeris absolutus,' or ἐν μηδενὶ λειπόμενος, as St. James himself (i.4) explains the word.

The various applications of τέλειος are all referable to the τέλος, which is its ground. In a natural sense the τέλειοι are the adult, who, having attained the full limits of stature, strength, and mental power within their reach, have in these respects attained their τέλος, as distinguished from the νέοι or παῖδες, young men or boys (Plato, Legg. xi.929 c; Xenophon, Cyr. viii. 7. 6; Polybius, v. 29. 2). This image of full completed growth, as contrasted with infancy and childhood, underlies the ethical use of τέλειοι by St. Paul, he setting these over against the νήπιοι ἐν Χριστῷ (1 Cor. ii. 6; xiv. 20; Ephes. iv. 13, 14; Phil. iii. 15; Heb. v. 14; cf. Philo, De Agricul. 2); they correspond in fact to the πατέρες of 1 John ii. 13, 14, as distinct from the νεανίσκοι and παιδία. Nor is this ethical use of τέλειος confined to Scripture. The Stoics distinguished the τέλειος in philosophy from the προκόπτων, just as at 1 Chron. xxv. 8 the τέλειοι are set over against the μανθάνοντες. With the heathen, those also were τέλειοι who had been initiated into the mysteries; for just as the Lord's Supper was called τὸ τέλειον (Bingham, Christ. Antiquities, i. 4. 3), because there was nothing beyond it, no privilege into which the Christian has not entered, so these τέλειοι of heathen initiation obtained their name as having been now introduced into the latest and crowning mysteries of all.

It will be seen that there is a certain ambiguity in our word 'perfect,' which, indeed, it shares with τέλειος itself; this, namely, that they are both employed now in a relative, now in an absolute sense; for only so could our Lord have said, "Be ye therefore perfect (τέλειοι), as your Heavenly Father is perfect" (τέλειος), Matt. v. 48; cf. xix. 21. The Christian shall be 'perfect,' yet not in the sense in which some of the sects preach the doctrine of perfection, who, as soon as their words are looked into, are found either to mean nothing which they could not have expressed by a word less liable to misunderstanding; or to mean something which no man in this life shall attain, and which he who affirms he has attained is deceiving himself, or others, or both. The faithful man shall be 'perfect,' that is, aiming by the grace of God to be fully furnished and firmly established in the knowledge and practice of the things of God (Jam. iii. 2; Col. iv. 12: τέλειος καὶ πεπληροφορημένος); not a babe in Christ to the end, 'not always employed in the elements, and infant proposition and practices of religion, but doing noble actions, well skilled in the deepest mysteries of faith and holiness.'[93] In this sense St. Paul claimed to be τέλειος, even while almost in the same breath he disclaimed the being τετελειωμένος (Phil. iii. 12, 15).

The distinction then is plain. The ὁλόκληρος is one who has preserved, or who, having once lost, as now regained, his completeness: the τέλειος is one who has attained his moral end, that for which he was intended, namely, to be a man in Christ; however it may be true that, having reached this, other and higher ends will open out before him, to have Christ formed in him more and more.[94] In the ὁλόκληρος no grace which ought to be in a Christian man is deficient; in the τέλειος no grace is merely in its weak imperfect beginnings, but all have reached a certain ripeness and maturity. Ὁλοτελής, occurring once in the N. T. (1 Thess. v. 23; cf. Plutarch, De Plac. Phil. v. 21), forms a connecting link between the two, holding on to ὁλόκληρος in its first half, to τέλειος in it second.

Ἄρτιος, occurring only once in the N. T. (2 Tim. iii. 17), and there presently explained more fully as ἐξηρτισμένος, approximates in meaning more closely to ὁλόκληρος, with which we find it joined by Philo (De Plant. 29), than to τέλειος. It is explained by Calvin, 'in quo nihil est mutilum,' —see further the quotation from Theodoret in Suicer, s.v., —and is found opposed to χωλός (Chrysostom), to κολοβός (Olympiodorus), to ἀνάπηρος (Theodoret). Vulcan in Lucian (Sacrif. 6) is οὐκ ἄρτιος τὼ πόδε. If we ask ourselves under what special aspects completeness is contemplated in ἄρτιος, it would be safe to answer that it is not as the presence only of all the parts which are necessary for that completeness, but involves further the adaptation and aptitude of these parts for the ends which they were designed to serve. The man of God, St. Paul would say (2Tim. iii. 17), should be furnished and accomplished with all which is necessary for the carrying out of the work to which he is appointed.

The conclusions of Trench are validated by an examination of the specific words in the teleios group.

The verb teleioo (τελειόω)[95] is employed in Christ's High Priestly prayer for Christ being perfectly formed within the believer (John 17:23, ἐγὼ ἐν αὐτοῖς, καὶ σὺ ἐν ἐμοί, ἵνα ὦσι τετελειωμένοι εἰς ἕν). Christ indwells the saint at the moment of 93 On the sense in which 'perfection' is demanded of the Christian, there is a discussion at large by Jeremy Taylor, Doctrine and Practice of Repentance i.3. 40-56, from which this quotation is drawn.

---

94 Seneca (Ep. 120) says of one, 'Habebat perfectum animum, ad summam sui adductus.'

95 The complete list of refences in the New Testament is: Luke 2:43; 13:32; John 4:34; 5:36; 17:4, 23; 19:28; Acts 20:24; 2 Corinthians 12:9; Philippians 3:12; Hebrews 2:10; 5:9; 7:19, 28; 9:9; 10:1, 14; 11:40; 12:23; James 2:22; 1 John 2:5; 4:12, 17-18. An examination of these texts supports the views set forth by Trench.

his conversion and regeneration, and through progressive sanctification the "Christ in you" (Colossians 1:27) relation develops and deepens until the moral image of God is fully restored in the believer's complete Christlikeness at glorification (John 17:17-24). On the basis of Christ's High Priestly mediation, the Father sanctifies believers through the Word and the Spirit (John 16:13; 17:17) and Christ declares to them the name of the Father, that is, reveals to them His Person and nature (John 17:26) resulting in a deepening unity[96] of the believer with, likeness to, and love for his Triune Sanctifier,[97] which brings with it a greater unity of the saint with and love for all the rest of those the Father has chosen out of the world and given to His beloved Son from the foundation of the world (John 17:21-23). This progressive perfection of the elect on earth in love and [96] A number of texts demonstrate that the indwelling of God in the saint is not static, but deepens as he is sanctified. In addition to the context of John 17:17-23, John's gospel presents this truth in 14:23, where the abode of the Father and the Son in the believer is associated with keeping God's Words and growth in love by those who are already saved (14:22; cf. also 14:21, where the manifestation of God to the already justified is likewise associated with love and commandment keeping). Deeper abiding of the Son in the saint takes place as he eats Christ's flesh and drinks His blood by faith (6:56; cf. 6:63). All believers already have the Trinity in them (Romans 8:8-10). Nevertheless, Paul wrote to the already regenerate members of the church at Ephesus: "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ . . . that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith [κατοικῆσαι τὸν Χριστὸν διὰ τῆς πίστεως ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν] . . . that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God [ἵνα πληρωθῆτε εἰς πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ]" (Ephesians 3:14-19).

---

In considering the development or growth of the Divine indwelling in the believer, one must keep a number of facts in mind. The Trinity is already omnipresent, so the fact of indwelling refers to the special presence of God in the Christian, in a manner similar to the fact that "Our Father which art in heaven" (Matthew 6:9) establishes the special presence of God in heaven, without in any way denying His omnipresence (or His special presence in the Old Testament tabernacle and temple, in the New Testament church, etc.). All believers have the special presence of the Father (John 14:23), Son (Colossians 1:27), and Holy Spirit (Romans 8:9) in them. A development or deepening of indwelling would thus involve a greater degree of special presence, as God's special presence is in heaven in a greater degree than it is in the meetings of the church on earth, although His special presence in the congregation is clearly Scriptural (cf. 1 Corinthians 3:16-19; Ephesians 1:23; Revelation 1:13). This greater degree of special presence would also be associated with a control of the believer's inner being that is greater in both extent and degree, leading to greater obedience. The difference can be illustrated by the different levels of control and obedience in a natural man who is merely under the sovereign control of God and thus does His will, in a babe in Christ who is freed from the dominion of sin and thus does God's will in a greater way than can any unbeliever, in a mature Christian whose obedience is greater in extent and degree than it was when he was newly regenerate, and in a saint in heaven who obedience in extent and degree is perfect, as he is as conformed to God to the absolute maximum level possible for a creature.

[97] Certain writers on sanctification affirm that the indwelling of God in the believer refers only to the Holy Spirit. However, the Bible is very clear that the entire Trinity (which is, in any case, necessarily undivided in essence) dwells within the believer. In John 14:23 the Son, speaking concerning Himself and the Person of the Father, states, "we will come unto [the believer], and make our abode with him." There is no reason to change statements such as "Christ liveth in me" (Galatians 2:20) into affirmations about the Holy Spirit living within believers (as He certainly does as well, Romans 8:9). In some texts (e. g., John 17:23, "I in them," in the context of John 17—Christ alone, not the Father or the Holy Ghost, is the High Priest for the elect) switching the Son's indwelling to that of the Spirit is impossible. Indeed, some statements that have been made that confound the indwelling of the Holy Ghost with that of the Son have been dangerously modalistic (e. g., Watchman Nee—see Excursus V).

holiness manifests to the world that Jesus Christ is the truth (17:21-23). The perfecting of the believer on the basis of Christ's revelation of the Father to him (17:26) by the Word and Spirit, which begins at regeneration and continues throughout the saint's time on earth, is completed when all the positionally and practically sanctified are with Christ in the eternal state and behold His glory (17:24). Therefore Paul affirmed that he was not yet perfect as he would be when he saw Christ in glory (Philippians 3:12, "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect," οὐχ ὅτι ἤδη ἔλαβον, ἢ ἤδη τετελείωμαι). Nonetheless, he was no longer a baby Christian, but was spiritually mature and already "perfect" (teleios, τέλειος, Philippians 3:15) in that sense. Christ in the gospel perfects (teleioo, τελειόω) His people in a way the Law was powerless to do in the Old Testament (Hebrews 7:19). By His one offering He positionally perfects His people forever (Hebrews 10:14; cf. 10:1), He perfects them in their conscience during their lifetime (Hebrews 9:9), and He presents them to Himself absolutely perfect in the New Jerusalem (Hebrews 12:23; cf. also 11:40). Also, the faith and love of believers is perfected as they produce obedience (James 2:22; 1 John 2:5), Christlikeness and fearless separation from the world (1 John 4:17-18) and love for the brethren (1 John 4:12). The verb teleioo sets forth these glorious truths concerning the believer's current and coming "perfection."

The adjective teleios (τέλειος)[98] is used for the absolutely perfect holiness of God Himself (Matthew 5:48b), which He requires of all men in His law (Matthew 5:48a; cf. 19:21), and which is completely legally imputed to the believer in justification (Matthew 6:33) but not completely inwardly imparted until glorification. It is likewise used for the absolute perfection of God's will (Romans 12:2) and gifts (James 1:17), of the inspired text of (James 1:25) and complete canon of Scripture (1 Corinthians 13:10),[99] and of the believer in glory whose complete Christlikeness is the completion of his progressive sanctification (Ephesians 4:13; Colossians 1:28; 4:12; James 3:2). The word is also used for the relative perfection of Christian maturity, specifically contrasting an immature Christian understanding with a mature, adult Christian understanding (1 Corinthians 14:20). Some Christians are "perfect" (teleios) in this sense, while others are not (Philippians 3:15; 1 Corinthians 2:6; Colossians 4:12). Christians who are teleioi "are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil" (Hebrews 5:14). A new born infant (cf. 1 Peter 2:2) has a soul and a [98] The complete list of NT references is: Matthew 5:48; 19:21; Romans 12:2; 1 Corinthians 2:6; 13:10; 14:20; Eph 4:13; Phil 3:15; Col 1:28; 4:12; Heb 5:14; 9:11; James 1:4, 17, 25; 3:2; 1John 4:18.

---

[99] Compare 1 Corinthians 13:8-13 and the Cessation of Miraculous Gifts," R. Bruce Compton. Detroit Baptist Seminary Journal 9 (2004) 97-144.

body, and all its human members, but he is still far from bodily maturity; likewise the regenerate have been made new in their entire being, but are not yet perfect in the degree of their holiness. Through trials, Christians become "perfect [teleios] and entire, wanting nothing" as they allow "patience [to have] her perfect [teleios] work" (James 3:1). Since this perfection can be relative, it is not surprising that a comparative form of the adjective teleios, "more perfect" (Hebrews 9:14),[100] is found in the New Testament. Believers have already "received" the truth about how they "ought to walk and to please God," and consequently they are to "abound more and more" (1 Thessalonians 4:1). Furthermore, since the absolute sinlessness of glorification is the culmination of the inward renewal already taking place in the believer on earth, numbers of texts contain within them the transition of teleios from the believer's current relative and maturing perfection to his coming absolute perfection (cf. Ephesians 4:13; Colossians 1:28; 4:12; James 3:2; 1 John 4:18).

The teleios word group demonstrates that Christians can attain a relative perfection of mature growth during this life and a complete perfection of sinless Christlikeness in glory. With that absolute perfection as their goal, they are to strive, by God's grace, to reach as closely as possible on earth to that full and perfect perfection they will all attain when they enter the presence of their Lord.

Several less common words closely connected to the teleios group deserve examination. As explained above by Trench, the Christian is holokleros (ὁλόκληρος)[101] who is complete in all his parts, with nothing missing. The idea of completeness in all parts is supported by the related noun holokleria (ὁλόκληρία), a hapax legomenon found only in Acts 3:16[102] and referring to the complete bodily wholeness of the man who had 100 Χριστὸς δὲ παραγενόμενος ἀρχιερεὺς τῶν μελλόντων ἀγαθῶν, διὰ τῆς μείζονος καὶ τελειοτέρας σκηνῆς, οὐ χειροποιήτου, τοῦτ᾽ ἔστιν, οὐ ταύτης τῆς κτίσεως. Of course, in this passage the word refers to "a greater and more perfect tabernacle," not to the Christian's progress in sanctification. Nevertheless, it provides a definite exegetical basis for the existence of degrees of the τέλειος sort of perfection.

---

101 ὁλόκληρος, ον (ὅλος, κλῆρος; Pla.; Polyb. 18, 45, 9; Ps.-Lucian, Macrob. 2; Epict. 3, 26, 7; 25; 4, 1, 66; 151; OGI 519, 14; SIG 1009, 10; 1012, 9 al., s. New Docs 4, 161f; PLond III, 935, 7 p. 30 [216/17 AD]; POxy 57, 13; LXX; Philo, Abr. 47, Spec. Leg. 1, 283; Jos., Ant. 3, 228; 278; 14, 366; Just., D. 69, 7) pert. to being complete and meeting all expectations, with integrity, whole, complete, undamaged, intact, blameless πίστις undiminished faith Hm 5, 2, 3; GJs 16:2. In an ethical sense: ὁλ. ὑμῶν τὸ πνεῦμα . . . τηρηθείη may your spirit . . . be preserved complete or sound 1 Th 5:23 (PGM 7, 590 {p. 704} διαφύλασσέ μου τὸ σῶμα, τὴν ψυχὴν ὁλόκληρον.—PvanStempvoort, NTS 7, '60/61, 262–65: connects πνεῦμα and ἁγιάσαι in 1 Th 5:23). W. τέλειος Js 1:4.—B. 919. DELG s.v. ὅλο. M-M. TW. Spicq. Sv. (BDAG)

102 And his name through faith in his name hath made this man strong, whom ye see and know: yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all. καὶ ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει τοῦ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ, τοῦτον ὃν θεωρεῖτε καὶ οἴδατε ἐστερέωσε τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἡ πίστις ἡ δι᾽ αὐτοῦ ἔδωκεν αὐτῷ τὴν ὁλοκληρίαν ταύτην ἀπέναντι πάντων ὑμῶν. BDAG been lame from birth but was healed by Peter. When believers "let patience have her perfect [teleios] work," they become "perfect [teleios] and entire [holokleros], wanting nothing" (James 1:4). Because of the faithfulness of God, every Christian is being sanctified in his entire (holokleros) being, spirit and soul and body: "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole [holokleros] spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless[103] unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it" (1 Thessalonians 5:23-24).[104] No part of the Christian is left unchanged by the renewal, the vivification, of progressive sanctification, although no part of the Christian attains absolute perfection in this life.[105] Trench likewise noted that the word holoteles (ὁλοτελής), a New Testament hapax legomenon found in 1 Thessalonians 5:23a ("sanctify you wholly"), "forms a connecting link between the two [words holokleros and teleios], holding on to [the former] in its first states that the word refers to a "state of soundness or well-being in all parts, wholeness, completeness" and that it occurs as a variant reading in the LXX of Isaiah 1:6 ("From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores: they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment.").

---

103 The word "blameless" (ἀμέμπτως) in 1 Thessalonians 5:23 does not indicate absolute sinlessness, as its only other appearance in the New Testament, 1 Thessalonians 2:10, indicates: "Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily and justly and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe" (ὑμεῖς μάρτυρες καὶ ὁ Θεός ὡς ὁσίως καὶ δικαίως καὶ ἀμέμπτως ὑμῖν τοῖς πιστεύουσιν ἐγενήθημεν). Certainly the apostle Paul and his associates behaved themselves in a holy, unblameable or blameless (ἀμέμπτως) manner, but not a one of them were sinlessly perfect. The New Testament usage is consistent with that found in 1 Clement for church leaders "who have ministered to the flock of Christ blamelessly [ἀμέμπτως], humbly, peaceably, and unselfishly, and for a long time have been well-spoken of by all" (44:3; cf. 44:4, 6; also 63:3, "trustworthy and prudent men who from youth to old age have lived blameless lives among us, ἄνδρας πιστοὺς καὶ σώφρονας ἀπὸ νεότητος ἀναστραφέντας ἕως γήρους ἀμέμπτως ἐν ἡμῖν). BDAG indicates that ἀμέμπτως was used "used especially in the Greco-Roman. world of people of extraordinary civic consciousness," thus meaning "blamelessly (with ὁσίως and δικαίως)." The fact that God's faithfulness (1 Thessalonians 5:24) leads to all earthly saints being "blameless" (1 Thessalonians 5:23) does not mean that even one of them will be sinlessly perfect—but it does mean that they will all grow to be evidently, genuinely, and markedly different, both on the inside and on the outside (spirit, soul, and body). Of course, the completion of this sanctification takes place only at the moment of glorification, and not all believers attain to the same level of holiness.

104 Αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης ἁγιάσαι ὑμᾶς ὁλοτελεῖς· καὶ ὁλόκληρον ὑμῶν τὸ πνεῦμα καὶ ἡ ψυχὴ καὶ τὸ σῶμα ἀμέμπτως ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τηρηθείη. πιστὸς ὁ καλῶν ὑμᾶς, ὃς καὶ ποιήσει.

105 "[M]any [verses] contemplate the perfect holiness . . . of believers in common[.] . . . The work is begun here, and carried on, under different circumstances, as well as with various degrees of rapidity. Ere long it will be completed [in heaven]. . . . [P]rayers for perfection in holiness are scriptural and proper. . . . [A]ll such prayers, if offered in sincerity[,] will be answered. . . . [God] has begun to answer them, [although] the set time for answering them fully, has not yet arrived. . . . [On earth, Christian] desires [for perfect holiness] are fulfilled in part. The work has been commenced and is going forward. The period of the fulfillment is in progress . . . [believers] are enabled, by the grace of God, more and more to die unto sin and live unto righteousness. And, ere long, their triumph over sin and its influences will be complete . . . [at] the termination of the present life" (pgs. 56-62, The Scripture Doctrine of Sanctification, W. D. Snodgrass).

half, to [the latter] in it second." Progressive sanctification affects all parts of the believer, leaving nothing missing—it is holokleros. It grows toward the end or goal (telos, τέλος) of a relative perfection (teleios) in this life and to absolute perfection (teleios) in the life to come. Finally, Trench's analysis of artios (ἄρτιος),[106] the word perfect in 2 Timothy 3:17,[107] is accurate and well-stated. The verse explains the perfection in question as being "throughly furnished" or completely equipped (ἐξαρτίζω)[108] "unto all good works." As Trench affirms, the man of God is artios, "perfect," when he has "not . . . the presence only of all the parts which are necessary for that completeness, but . . . [also the] adaptation and aptitude of these parts for the ends which they were designed to serve. The man of God, St. Paul would say (2Tim. iii. 17), [is artios when he is] furnished and accomplished with all which is necessary for the carrying out of the work to which he is appointed."

The vivification of the believer appears in the words employed in the New Testament for the Christian's progress toward perfection. The katardizo word group demonstrates that God perfects believers in their nature as He restores Christlikeness in them, resulting in their greater love, faith, and obedience. Their persons become more like Christ's sinless humanity, and their actions become more like His perfectly holy actions. Similarly, the teleios word group illuminates the developing relative perfection of the believer as he grows more and more spiritually mature, until at length his relative perfection passes into the absolute perfection of the future glorified state. The Christian is spiritually renewed, vivified, and perfected as he communes with the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost as they are revealed to him through the Word of God and by the Spirit of

---

[106] ἄρτιος, ία, ον (Hom.+; Epict. 1, 28, 3; IG XIV, 889, 7 ἄ. εἴς τι; TestAbr A 8 p. 85, 12 [Stone p. 18]; Ath., R. 77, 4 ἀρτίως; Philo) pert. to being well fitted for some function, complete, capable, proficient=able to meet all demands 2 Ti 3:17.—DELG s.v. ἄρτι. M-M. TW. (BDAG)

[107] All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: 17 That the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works. πᾶσα γραφὴ θεόπνευστος καὶ ὠφέλιμος πρὸς διδασκαλίαν, πρὸς ἔλεγχον, πρὸς ἐπανόρθωσιν, πρὸς παιδείαν τὴν ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ· 17 ἵνα ἄρτιος ᾖ ὁ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄνθρωπος, πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἐξηρτισμένος. (2 Timothy 3:16-17)

[108] ἐξαρτίζω (s. ἄρτιος) 1 aor. ἐξήρτισα; pf. pass. ptc. ἐξηρτισμένος (late; Ex 28:7 v.l.).

1. to bring someth. to an end, finish, complete (IG XII/2, 538; POxy 296, 7 [I AD] of documents; Jos., Ant. 3, 139) ἐ. ἡμᾶς τ. ἡμέρας our time was up Ac 21:5 (cp. Hippocr., Epid. 2, 180 ἀπαρτίζειν τὴν ὀκτάμηνον).

2. to make ready for service, equip, furnish (Diod. S. 14, 19, 5 Vogel v.l.; Lucian; Arrian; Jos., Ant. 3, 43 v.l.; CIG II, 420, 13; Mitt-Wilck. I/2, 176, 10 [I AD]; pap, e.g. PAmh 93, 8; PTebt 342, 17) πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἐξηρτισμένος for every good deed 2 Ti 3:17 (with ἐξηρτισμένος πρός τι cp. Diod. S. 19, 77, 3 ναῦς ἐξηρτισμένας πρὸς τὸν πόλεμον πρὸς τὴν τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἐλευθέρωσιν).—DELG s.v. ἀραρίσκω, s. also ἄρτι. M-M. TW. Spicq. (BDAG)

The word is derived from ἀρτίζω, "to get ready, prepare" (Lidell-Scott). The meaning of 2 Timothy 3:16 is listed in the Louw-Nida lexicon as "to make someone completely adequate or sufficient for something — 'to make adequate, to furnish completely, to cause to be fully qualified, adequacy.'

God. He is sanctified in every part of his being (holokleros), grows toward being perfectly equipped (artios) to practice all good works, and progresses toward being wholly sanctified (holoteles). God makes the believer gradually "more perfect" as He leads him toward the holy end (telos) of the greatest possible earthly perfection and Christian maturity, and His faithfulness makes certain the believer's attainment of the absolute perfection of the world to come.

7.) Vivification as Renewal Sourced in Regeneration

Titus 3:4-7 indicates that salvation involves both the washing of regeneration (παλιγγενεσία) and the renewal (ἀνακαίνωσις)[109] of the Holy Ghost. The noun renewal appears, outside of Titus 3:5, only in Romans 12:2, where spiritual transformation[110] takes place by means of[111] "the renewing of [the saint's] mind," both for the purpose of and with the result that[112] the believer "may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God." The related verb for renewal, ἀνακαινόω,[113] appears in 2 Corinthians 4:16[114] and Colossians 3:10.[115] These texts indicate that God, the Creator of the new[116] spiritual principle within the believer[117] and Author and Source of 109 ἀνακαίνωσις, εως, ἡ ἀνακαινόω s. also ἀνακαινίζω; not found outside Christian lit.; Nägeli 52.—καίνωσις Jos., Ant. 18, 230, renewal; of a person's spiritual rebirth μεταμορφοῦσθαι τῇ ἀ. τοῦ νοός be changed by the renewal of your minds Ro 12:2. λουτρὸν ἀ. πνεύματος ἁγίου washing of renewal through the Holy Spirit (w. παλιγγενεσία) Tit 3:5. ἀ. τῶν πνευμάτων ὑμῶν the renewal of your spirit of the imparting of a new spirit Hv 3, 8, 9.—TW.

---

110 See the section "Vivification as Transformation" above.

111 τῇ ἀνακαινώσει is an instrumental dative of means.

112 εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν. ""Boyer . . . suggests, as [Daniel Wallace has] for the corresponding ἵνα-clause, that the [εἰς το + inf. structure] might do double duty [as purpose and result] at times. . . . [with] infinitives after prepositions, many . . . can go either way [as purpose or result]" (Daniel Wallace, Greek Grammar Beyond the Basics, pgs. 592-593).

113 ἀνακαινόω (καινόω 'make new'; act. Orig., C. Cels. 4, 20; mid. Heliod. Philos., In EN 221, 13) renew only in Paul, in pass., and fig. of the spiritual rebirth of the Christian (opp. διαφθείρειν) ὁ ἔσω ἡμῶν (ἄνθρωπος) ἀνακαινοῦται our inner (spiritual) person is being renewed 2 Cor 4:16. ἀ. εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν renew for full knowledge Col 3:10.—DELG s.v. καινός. M-M. TW.

114 For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. Διὸ οὐκ ἐκκακοῦμεν· ἀλλ᾽ εἰ καὶ ὁ ἔξω ἡμῶν ἄνθρωπος διαφθείρεται, ἀλλ᾽ ὁ ἔσωθεν ἀνακαινοῦται ἡμέρᾳ καὶ ἡμέρᾳ.

115 And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him. καὶ ἐνδυσάμενοι τὸν νέον, τὸν ἀνακαινούμενον εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν κατ᾽ εἰκόνα τοῦ κτίσαντος αὐτόν.

116 Both the νεόω and καινόω word families are employed to designate the newness of the people of God. Note the νέος of Colossians 3:10; the ἀνανεόω of Ephesians 4:23; the καινός of Ephesians 2:15; 4:24; the καινότης of Romans 6:4; 7:6; and the ἀνακαίνωσις or ἀνακαινόω in Romans 12:2; Titus 3:5; 2 Corinthians 4:16; Colossians 3:10.

all spiritual growth, progressively and daily renews the believer's inward man[118] into His image.[119] Scripture emphasizes the mind (νοῦς, Romans 12:2) and knowledge (ἐπίγνωσις, Colossians 3:10) in the believer's renewal. Thus, the command "be renewed [ἀνανεοῦσθαι][120] in the spirit of your mind" (Ephesians 4:23)[121] closely 117 God is τοῦ κτίσαντος αὐτόν . . . τὸν νέον, the Creator of the new man, Colossians 3:10. Psalm 51:10 ("Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me"; נָכוֹן חַדֵּשׁ בְּקִרְבִּי׃ לֵב טָהוֹר בְּרָא־לִי אֱלֹהִים וְרוּחַ) connects the Divine work of creation of holiness within the believer with spiritual renewal (cf. Psalm 104:30; 2 Chronicles 24:12) in those already children of God—creative power is not limited to the impartation of new life at the moment of regeneration. Note that "בָּרָא in the Kal is always used only of the divine production. The heart is the central organ of the whole religious moral life[.] . . . Steadfast (נכון) the spirit is called so far as it does not hesitate between good and evil" (pg. 443, "On The Biblical Notion of Renewal," Warfield, citing Baethgen). Both the Old and the New Testaments indicate that inner spiritual renewal, a product of the creative power of the Almighty Jehovah, is part of God's work of sanctifying His people, of progressively delivering them from the power of sin.

---

118 "In Titus 3:5, Paul asserts . . . [that] 'renewing' signifies a gradual, protracted work of sanctification, ending only with life . . . a process by which . . . regeneration . . . is completed. . . . [T]his interpretation of [Paul's] words to Titus is favored by [2] Corinthians 4:16, which [refers to] . . . a process of renewal . . . the process of sanctification . . . a growth 'day by day,' month by month, year by year, till the body is laid aside by death. This, too, [is taught in 2 Corinthians] 3:18 . . . [believers are] inwardly transformed from one degree of glory, or likeness to Christ, to another; and this progressive sanctification, through the truth of the gospel, [is] wrought by the Lord, the Spirit. . . . In obvious agreement with these passages is the language of Paul in Colossians 3:9-10 . . . the 'renewal' [is] conceived of by the apostle as continuous, progressive, and therefore incomplete in all those whom he was addressing" (pgs. 21-25, The Doctrine of the Higher Christian Life Compared With The Teaching of the Holy Scriptures, Alvah Hovey).

119 Both the verb ἀνακαινοῦται in 2 Corinthians 4:16 and the participle ἀνακαινούμενον in Colossians 3:10 are passive—the believer does not renew Himself, but God renews the believer's inward man. Both the verb and the participle are present tense, because God renews His people inwardly "day by day." BDAG notes that "ἡμέρα . . . [i]n the dative [is] answering the question, when? . . . The Hebrew has also furnished the expression ἡμέρᾳ καὶ ἡμέρᾳ day after day (Esther 3:4 יוֹם וְיוֹם=LXX καθ᾽ ἑκάστην ἡμέραν; יוֹם יוֹם Psalm 68:20=LXX 67:20 ἡμέραν καθ᾽ ἡμέραν) 2 Corinthians 4:16; Gospel of James 6:1." The Lord renews His people daily in the same way that Jehovah, God of salvation, daily loads His people with benefits (Psalm 68:19, 68:20, Heb.) and the same way that Mordecai was harassed daily about his refusal to bow to Haman (Esther 3:4). The Koiné parallel to a child growing physically stronger day by day (Gospel of James 6:1, Ἡμέρᾳ δὲ καὶ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκραταιοῦτο ἡ παῖς) is also noteworthy.

120 ἀνανεόω fut. 3 sg. ἀνανεώσει Job 33:24; 1 aor. ἀνενέωσα, mid. ἀνενεωσάμην LXX; aor. pass. ptc. gen. pl. ἀνανεωθέντων Ath., R. 58, 20 (ἀνα-, νέος, s. ἀνανέωσις; trag. et al.; ins [e.g. OGI 90, 35 (II BC); ÖJh 64, 1995, p. 72 (III AD)]; pap, LXX; TestBenj 9:1; Apc4Esdr fgm. d [mid.]; Jos., Ant. 12, 321; Ath., R. 58, 20).

1. trans. renew. The act. is not found very oft. w. this mng. (in a dedication to Aristonous of Corinth [III BC] fgm. 2b Diehl2 [AnthLG II, 6 p. 139] Δελφοὶ ἀνενέωσαν τὰν πάτριον προξενίαν; M. Ant. 4, 3, 3 σεαυτόν; 6, 15, 1; Herm. Wr. 9, 6; ins; pap; Job 33:24; 1 Macc 12:1; Iren., 3, 3, 3 [Harv. II 11, 1]) ἀ. τὴν ζωήν (of the angel of repentance) restore life Hs 9, 14, 3. Much more freq. (since Thu. 7, 33, 4) is the mid. (Diod. S. 33, 28a, 3 Dind.; 37, 15, 2; Chion, Ep. 16, 8; Appian, Maced. 11 §6; SIG 721, 13; 475, 10; 554, 6; 591, 53, cp. index; OGI 90, 35; Esth 3:13b; 1 Macc 12:3, 10, 16 al.; Jos., Bell. 1, 283, Ant. 1, 290), which seems not to have the reflexive sense 'renew oneself'. Hence ἀνανεοῦσθαι τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ νοός is better taken as a pass. be renewed=(let yourselves) be renewed in the spirit of your minds Eph 4:23 (on the figure Cornutus 33 p. 70, 10 ἀνανεάζειν ἐκ τῶν νόσων καὶ ἐκδύεσθαι τὸ γῆρας). ἀνανεοῦται τὸ πνεῦμα his spirit is renewed Hv 3, 12, 2; 3, 13, 2, cp. 3, 12, 3.

2. intr. become young again μηκέτι ἔχοντες ἐλπίδα τοῦ ἀνανεῶσαι Hv 3, 11, 3.—New Docs 3, 61f. DELG s.v. νέος. M-M. TW. Sv. (BDAG) parallels Romans 12:2's "be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." God progressively renews[122] the believer's mind[123] in association with the old man being put off and the new being put on (Ephesians 4:22-24). While regeneration is the work of an instant, renewal begins with regeneration (Titus 3:5; Hebrews 6:6[124]) but continues throughout life until it is completed at glorification.[125] [121] ἀνανεοῦσθαι δὲ τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ νοὸς ὑμῶν.

---

[122] Thus, the imperative ἀνανεοῦσθαι in Ephesians 4:23 is present passive—the renewal is progressive and God is the agent of it.

[123] In the New Testament, ἀνανεόω is also a hapax legomenon, and the emphasis upon the mind is validated by parallel texts such as Romans 12:2, by the etymology of the word, and, obviously, from the specific addition of τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ νοὸς. However, the LXX demonstrates that the verb ἀνανεόω on its own was not limited to mental renewal (Esther 13:2; 1 Maccabees 12:1, 3, 10, 16; 14:18, 22; 15:17; 4 Maccabees 18:4; Job 33:24—peace, friendship, brotherhood, and even the body is renewed with ἀνανεόω). The Shepherd of Hermas employs the verb for God renewing the spirit when it employs the passive voice, but employs the active for the restoration of youth or life (19:3; 20:2–3; 21:2; 91:3). Somewhat later Irenaeus employs the active of ἀνανεόω for faith being renewed (Against Heresies, 3:3:3) and the passive for the renewal of man to incorruptibility in association with the the new heavens and earth (5:36:1), while Athenagoras uses the passsive for the renewal of human bodies in the resurrection (On the Resurrection 10).

[124] Hebrews 6:6 employs the related verb, ἀνακαινίζω for renew, speaking of the work of the Holy Spirit that brings an unconverted individual to repentance and salvation. Specifically, the verse indicates that a lost man who deliberately turns from the truth after coming to the place of maximum revelation and Spirit-produced conviction (cf. John 16:8-11) spoken of in Hebrews 6:4-8 will never thereafter be brought by God the Holy Ghost to the point where he can repent and be saved. Thus, Hebrews 6:6 adds to the evidence of Titus 3:5 that renewal begins at the same temporal instance as repentance, faith, regeneration, and justification. The fact that ἀνακαινίζειν in Hebrews 6:6 is a present infinitive seems to indicate that the verb includes the convicting and drawing working of the Spirit that leads a lost man to seek Christ (cf. Luke 13:24; Matthew 7:13-14; John 7:17) and temporally precedes the Spirit's giving the responding sinner repentance and faith. Compare Lamentations 5:21, LXX: ἐπίστρεψον ἡμᾶς κύριε πρὸς σέ καὶ ἐπιστραφησόμεθα καὶ ἀνακαίνισον ἡμέρας ἡμῶν καθὼς ἔμπροσθεν, Turn us, O Lord, to thee, and we shall be turned; and renew our days as before.

[125] "[R]egeneration . . . differs from sanctification as the beginning of a thing differs from its continuance. And the relation of one to the other is clearly set forth by an apostle, when he says, 'He which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ' [Philippians 1:6]. The author of the work is the same in all its parts. He who begins it is the same agent who carries it on; and we have no reason to suppose that the influence which is exerted in its progress is different from that which operates at the commencement. It is one work, and the efficient power which is concerned in producing it is one, but it consists of different stages or degrees. It is not perfect at once, but passes from an [incomplete] state to one which is more perfect. It is not instantaneous, but progressive" (pgs. 11-12, The Scripture Doctrine of Sanctification, W. D. Snodgrass). In the words of Arthur Pink (pgs. 75-76, Doctrine of Sanctification):

> [I]n one sense, the relation between regeneration and sanctification is that of the infant to the adult. . . . In likening the connection between regeneration and sanctification to the relation between an infant and an adult, it should be pointed out that we have in mind our practical and progressive sanctification, and not our objective and absolute sanctification. Our absolute sanctification, so far as our state before God is concerned, is simultaneous with our regeneration. The essential thing in our regeneration is the Spirit's quickening of us into newness of life; the essential thing in our sanctification is that thenceforth we are an habitation of God, through the indwelling of the Spirit, and from that standpoint all the subsequent progressive advances in the spiritual life are but the effects, fruits, and manifestations of that initial consecration or anointing. The consecration of the tabernacle, and later of the temple, was a single act, done once and for all; after, there were many evidences of its continuance or perpetuity. But it is with the experimental aspect we would here treat.

B. B. Warfield comments helpfully on the nature of Biblical renewal:

The terms "renew," "renewing," are not of frequent occurrence in our English Bible. In the New Testament they do not occur at all in the Gospels, but only in the Epistles [of Paul], where they stand, respectively, for the Greek terms ἀνακαινόω (2 Corinthians 4:16; Colossians 3:10) with its cognates, ἀνακαινίζω (Hebrews 6:6) and ἀνανεόομαι (Ephesians 4:23), and ἀνακαίνωσις (Romans 12:2; Titus 3:5). . . . [A] definite theological conception is embodied in these terms. This conception is that salvation in Christ involves a radical and complete transformation wrought in the soul (Romans 12:2; Ephesians 4:23) by God the Holy Spirit (Titus 3:5; Ephesians 4:24), by virtue of which we become "new men" (Ephesians 4:24; Colossians 3:10), no longer conformed to this world (Romans 12:2; Ephesians 4:22; Colossians 3:9), but in knowledge and holiness of the truth created after the image of God (Ephesians 4:24; Colossians 3:10; Romans 12:2). The conception, it will be seen, is a wide one, inclusive of all that is comprehended in what we now technically speak of as regeneration, renovation and sanctification. It embraces, in fact, the entire subjective side of salvation, which it represents as a work of God, issuing in a wholly new creation (2 Corinthians 5:17; Galatians 6:15; Ephesians 2:10). . . .

[W]e observe two groups of terms standing over against one another, describing, respectively, from the manward and from the Godward side, the great change experienced by him who is translated from the power of darkness into the kingdom of the Son of God's love (Colossians 1:13). And within the limits of each of these groups, we observe also certain distinctions in the usage of the several terms which make it up. In the one group are such terms as μετανοεῖν with its substantive μετάνοια, and its cognate μεταμέλεσθαι, and ἐπιστρέφειν and its substantive ἐπιστροφή. These tell us what part man takes in the change. The other group includes such terms as γεννηθῆναι ἄνωθεν or ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ or ἐκ τοῦ πνεύματος, παλινγενεσία, ἀναγεννᾶν, ἀποκυεῖσθαι, ανανεοῦσθαι, ἀνακαινοῦσθαι, ἀνακαίνωσις. These tell what part God takes in the change. Man repents, makes amendment, and turns to God. But it is by God that men are renewed, brought forth, born again into newness of life. The

---

At regeneration a principle of holiness is communicated to us; practical sanctification is the exercise of that principle in living to God. In regeneration the Spirit imparts saving grace; in His work of sanctification, He strengthens and develops the same. As "original sin" or that indwelling corruption which is in us at our natural birth, contains within it the seeds of all sin, so that grace which is imparted to us at the new birth contains within it the seeds of all spiritual graces; and as the one develops and manifests itself as we grow, so it is with the other.

"Sanctification is a constant, progressive renewing of the whole man, whereby the new creature doth daily more and more die unto sin and live unto God. Regeneration is the birth, sanctification is the growth of this babe in grace. In regeneration, the sun of holiness rises; in sanctification it keepeth its course, and shineth brighter and brighter unto the perfect day (Proverbs 4:18). The former is a specifical change from nature to grace (Ephesians 5:8); the latter is a gradual change from one degree of grace to another (Psalm 84:7), whereby the Christian goeth from strength to strength till he appear before God in Zion" (George Swinnock, 1660).

Thus, the foundation of sanctification is laid in regeneration, in that a holy principle is then first formed in us. That holy principle evidences itself in conversion, which is a turning away from sin to holiness, from Satan to Christ, from the world to God. It continues to evidence itself under the constant work of mortification and vivification, or the practical putting off of the old man and the putting on of the new; and is completed at glorification. The great difference then between regeneration and experimental and practical sanctification is that the former is a Divine act, done once and for all; while the latter is a Divine work of God's grace, wherein He sustains and develops, continues and perfects the work He then began. The one is a birth, the other a growth. The making of us practically holy is the design which God has in view when He quickens us: it is the necessary means to this end, for sanctification is the crown of the whole process of salvation.

One of the chief defects of modern teaching on this subject has been in regarding the new birth as the summum bonum of the spiritual life of the believer. Instead of being the end, it is . . . a means to the end. Regeneration must be supplemented by sanctification, or otherwise the soul would remain at a standstill—if such a thing were possible: for it seems to be an unchanging law in every realm that where there is no progression, there must be retrogression. That spiritual growth which is so essential lies in progressive sanctification, wherein all the faculties of the soul are more and more brought under the purifying and regulating influence of the principle of holiness which is implanted at the new birth, for thus alone do we grow up into Him in all things, which is the Head, even Christ" (Ephesians 4:15).

> transformation which to human vision manifests itself as a change of life (ἐπιστροφή) resting upon a radical change of mind (μετάνοια), to Him who searches the heart and understands all the movements of the human soul is known to be a creation (κτίζειν) of God, beginning in a new birth from the Spirit (γεννηθῆναι ἄνωθεν ἐκ τοῦ Πνεύματος) and issuing in a new divine product (ποίημα), created in Christ Jesus, into good works prepared by God beforehand that they may be walked in (Ephesians 2:10).
>
> There is certainly synergism here; but it is a synergism of such character that not only is the initiative taken by God (for "all things are of God," 2 Corinthians 5:18, cf. Hebrews 6:6), but the Divine action is in the exceeding greatness of God's power, according to the working of the strength of His might which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead (Ephesians 1:19). The "new man" which is the result of this change is therefore one who can be described no otherwise than as "created" κτισθέντα) in righteousness and holiness of truth (Ephesians 4:24), after the image of God significantly described as "He who created him" (τοῦ κτίσαντος αὐτόν, Colossians 3:10), — that is not He who made him a man, but He who has made him by an equally creative efflux of power this new man which he has become. The exhortation that we shall "put on" this new man (Ephesians 4:24; cf. 3:9, 10), therefore does not imply that either the initiation or the completion of the process by which the "new creation" (καινὴ κτίσις; 2 Corinthians 5:17; Galatians 6:15) is wrought lies in our own power; but only urges us to that diligent cooperation with God in the work of our salvation, to which He calls us in all departments of life (1 Corinthians 3:9), and the classical expression of which in this particular department is found in the great exhortation of Philippians 2:12, 13 where we are encouraged to work out our own salvation thoroughly to the end, with fear and trembling, on the express ground that it is God who works in us both the willing and doing for His good pleasure. The express inclusion of "renewal" in the exhortation (Ephesians 4:23 ἀνανεοῦσθαι; Romans 12: μεταμορφοῦσθε τῇ ἀνακαινώσει) is indication enough that this "renewal" is a process wide enough to include in itself the whole synergistic "working out" of salvation (κατεργάζεσθε, Philippians 2:12). But it has no tendency to throw doubt upon the underlying fact that this "working out" is both set in motion (τὸ θέλειν) and given effect (τὸ ἐνεργεῖν), only by the energizing of God (ὁ ἐνεργῶν ἐν ὑμῖν), so that all (τὰ πάντα) is from God (ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, 2 Corinthians 5:18). . . . [T]he essence of the New Testament representation certainly is that the renewal which is wrought upon him who is by faith in Christ, is the work of the Spirit of Christ, who dwells within His children as a power not themselves making for righteousness, and gradually but surely transforms after the image of God, not the stream of their activities merely, but themselves in the very centre of their being. . . . [S]alvation consists in its substance of a radical subjective change wrought by the Holy Spirit, by virtue of which the native tendencies to evil are progressively eradicated and holy dispositions are implanted, nourished and perfected.[126]

As believers' minds and persons are renewed by the Spirit through the Word, they become more Christlike and more separate from sin in their natures, actions, and attitudes, the moral image of God being restored in them.[127]

---

[126] Pgs. 439, 450-452, 459-460, "On The Biblical Notion of Renewal," Benjamin B. Warfield, in Biblical Doctrines, vol. 2 of Works of Benjamin B. Warfield. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Books, 2003; reprint of 1932 Oxford ed. Article orig. pub. The Princeton Theological Review, v. ix, 1911, pgs. 242-267.

[127] Philip E. Hughes (pgs. 27-28, The True Image: The Origin and Destiny of Man in Christ. Eugene, OR: Wipf & Stock, 2001) wrote: "[I]n Christ . . . [t]he image marred by our fallenness is renewed in him who is the Image of God in which we were first formed. From the beginning he has been the key and the guarantee to a destiny more glorious than the beginning. The renewal of our humanity after the image of its Creator is already complete in the triumphant and glorious exaltation of the incarnate Son who is the Lord our Righteousness (Jeremiah 23:6; 1 Corinthians 1:30), and during the course of this earthly pilgrimage it is progressively taking place within us as with the Holy Spirit's aid we increase in Christlikeness (2 Corinthians 3:18; Ephesians 4:12, 16)."

As already indicated, renewal begins with the Divine work of regeneration (παλιγγενεσία, Titus 3:5). Regeneration, the instantaneous impartation of spiritual life and a new nature, is also described as being "born again" or "born from above" (γεννηθῆναι ἄνωθεν,[128] John 3:3),[129] begotten by God's will (βουληθεὶς ἀποκεῖσθαι,[130] James 1:18)[131] and born or begotten again (ἀναγεννᾶν,[132] 1 Peter 1:3, 23). The Holy Spirit imparts the new birth through the instrumentality of both "the word of God" (1 Peter 1:23)[133] which is "the word of truth" (James 1:18) and the sinner's faith

---

128 ἄνωθεν adv. of place . . . 1. in extension from a source that is above, *from above . . . Esp. from heaven . . . 4. at a subsequent point of time involving repetition, *again, anew . . . ἀ. γεννηθῆναι be born again J 3:3, 7 (ἄ. γεννᾶσθαι in the physical sense Artem. 1, 13) is designedly ambiguous and suggests also a transcendent experience born from above. (BDAG)

129 As noted by a variety of writers (e. g., Buchsel, Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, 1:671; gen. ed. G. Kittel & G Friedrich, 10 vol. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1976), in John γεννηθῆναι is always used with a reference to the point of origin. Note ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ and ἐξ αὐτοῦ (1 John 2:29; 3:9; 4:7; 5:1, 4, 18; John 1:13); ἐκ Πνεύματος (John 3:5, 6, 8); ἐξ ὕδατος (3:5); ἐκ τῆς σαρκός (3:6); ἐκ θελήματος (ἀνδρός/Θεοῦ 1:13); ἄνωθεν (3:3, 7).

130 ἀποκυέω 1 aor. ἀπεκύησα (because the aor. is found in this form [not ἀπέκυσα] Js 1:18, W-H. Vog. M. in 1:15 accent ἀποκυεῖ; s. W-S. §15 p. 129); aor. pass. ἀπεκυήθη (Just., A I, 32, 14; 46, 5). (κυέω or κύω 'to be pregnant'; Aristot., fgm. 76 Rose; Dionys. Hal. 1, 70 [interpol.]; Plut., Sull. 475 [37, 7]; Lucian, D. Mar. 10, 1; Aelian, VH 5, 4 et al.; Herm. Wr. 1, 16; BGU 665 II, 19 [I AD]; APF 3, 1906, 370 II, 4; Sb 6611, 15; PFamTebt 20, 15; 20; 22; 4 Macc 15:17; Philo, Ebr. 30 al.) give birth to

a. of delivery of that with which one has been pregnant, w. ἀπό retaining its force give birth to, ὃς ἐ[κ]υοφορήθη|[. . .. . .]. ὑπ᾽ αὐτῆς ὡς ἀποκυῆσε (=ἕως ἀποκυῆσαι) αὐτήν, καὶ γεννῆσαι [Ἰησοῦν] τὸν Χριστόν who was carried (in the womb) by her (Mary) until she gave birth and bore [Jesus] the Messiah AcPl Ha 8, 27f.

b. otherwise in our lit. only fig., ἡ ἁμαρτία ἀ. θάνατον sin gives birth to (i.e. brings forth) death Js 1:15. But the term is not confined to the human female faculty (cp. Herm. Wr. 1, 9); of God (s. γεννάω) ἀπεκύησεν ἡμᾶς λόγῳ ἀληθείας gave birth to us (brought us into being) through the word of truth Js 1:18.—C-MEdsman, Schöpferwille u. Geburt Jk 1:18: ZNW 38, '39, 11–44.—DELG s.v. κυέω I. M-M. TW. Spicq. (BDAG)

131 James draws a striking contrast with ἀποκυέω—in those who are not begotten of God (ἀπεκύησεν, 1:18), sin is bringing forth death (ἀποκύει, 1:15).

132 ἀναγεννάω 1 aor. ἀνεγέννησα; pass. ἀνεγεννήθην (Just., Tat.); pf. pass. ptc. ἀναγεγεννημένος (Philod., Ira p. 18 W.; Sir Prol. ln. 28 v.l.) beget again, cause to be born again fig. of the spiritual rebirth of Christians.—Of God ὁ ἀναγεννήσας ἡμᾶς εἰς ἐλπίδα ζῶσαν who has given us a new birth for a living hope 1 Pt 1:3. ἀναγεγεννημένοι οὐκ ἐκ σπορᾶς φθαρτῆς born again not of perishable seed vs. 23 (in Herm. Wr. 13, 1 Sc. ἀγνοῶ, ὦ τρισμέγιστε, ἐξ οἵας μήτρας ἄνθρωπος ἀναγεννηθείη ἄν, σπορᾶς δὲ ποίας the rdg. ἀναγ. is not certain, but Sallust. 4 p. 8, 24=FPhGr III, 33, col. 2, 6 uses the word in describing mysteries γάλακτος τροφή, ὥσπερ ἀναγεννωμένων).—Cp. RPerdelwitz, D. Mysterienreligion u. d. Problem des 1 Pt 1911, 37ff; HWindisch, Hdb. Exc. on 1 Pt 2:2 and the entry παλιγγενεσία.—DELG s.v. γίγνομαι 222. M-M. TW. Sv. (BDAG)

133 The fact that both the new birth (James 1:18) and spiritual growth (John 17:17; 1 Peter 2:2) take place through the instrumentality of the incorruptible Word of God (1 Peter 1:23) means that those who employ corrupt Bible versions that are based on Hebrew and Greek texts other than the Old and New Testament Textus Receptus, literally and accurately translated (as they are in the King James Version), will have more difficulty both being converted and growing spiritually. The power of God, a product of the breath of God (θεόπνευστος) that remains upon the Word both accurately copied and (in a derivative sense) translated (cf. "Are Accurate Copies and Translations of Scripture Inspired? A Study of 2 Timothy in Christ (John 3:3, 14-18), itself a product of the Spirit and the Word (1 Peter 1:22-23; Romans 10:17). Matthew 19:28,[134] the only text other than Titus 3:5 which employs the word regeneration, provides striking illumination on the nature of the new birth.[135] The cosmic regeneration spoken of by the Lord in Matthew 19 parallels the individual regeneration under consideration in Titus 3:5.[136] In individual regeneration, as in the 3:16, by Thomas Ross; faithsaves.net/Bibliology) without which both regeneration and sanctification are impossible, will be absent from a Bible version to whatever extent it is corrupt.

---

134 And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν ὅτι ὑμεῖς οἱ ἀκολουθήσαντές μοι, ἐν τῇ παλιγγενεσίᾳ ὅταν καθίσῃ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐπὶ θρόνου δόξης αὐτοῦ, καθήσεσθε καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐπὶ δώδεκα θρόνους, κρίνοντες τὰς δώδεκα φυλὰς τοῦ Ἰσραήλ.

135 Compare the parallel drawn between cosmic and individual redemption in Romans 8:19-23.

136 Philip Hughes powerfully develops the relationship between individual and cosmic regeneration, and their mutual connection to the Lord Jesus Christ:

> It is important to understand that what happened to the incarnate Son happened to our human nature. . . . His resurrection and his exaltation demonstrate to us that death has been swallowed up in victory, his victory, and assure us that God gives us this same victory through our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Corinthians 15:54-57).
>
> In him, moreover, our human nature is exalted and brought to perfection. . . . Thus what Psalm 8 affirms about man generically is attained specifically in Christ Jesus. . . . The point that must not be missed is this, that Jesus is in absolute reality the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end, of all God's purposes for mankind and for creation (cf. Revelation 1:8; 21:6; 22:13). What God started in creation he not only started in the Son, who is the Image after whom man is formed, but he also completed in the Son, who is the Image to whom all the redeemed are being conformed (Romans 8:29; 2 Corinthians 3:18). . . . So real is this exaltation of our redeemed human nature in Christ, so complete is the reconciling and glorifying work performed for us, so genuine is the union of the believer with the incarnate Lord on high, that there is an authentic identity between the Redeemer and the redeemed. . . . The key expression in the communication of this truth is that which defines the existence of the believer as being in Christ, with its corollary that he is therefore with Christ—revitalized with Christ, raised with Christ, enthroned with Christ. Christ has always been the concentration point of God's age-old purposes, before creation, at creation, and in the restoration of all things. . . .
>
> In the teaching of the apostles the resurrection of Jesus is strikingly proclaimed as signalizing the rebirth of our humanity. It is in him, the conqueror of death and Satan, that the new creation comes into being. . . . The resurrection of Jesus, then, is the sign to the world (cf. Matthew 12:38-40) that declares the reality of the new beginning of the human race in Christ. The regeneration it proclaims is of such significance that it [leads to] the new heavens and the new earth (2 Peter 3:13; Revelation 21:1), which is the restoration of all things (Acts 3:21). As with the original creation, this is the work of God, who in Christ makes all things new (Revelation 21:5; cf. Genesis 1:1). It is the dynamic internalization of the creation principle, for God, who in the original creation said, "Let light shine out of darkness," now dispels the darkness of ungodliness by causing the light of the knowledge of his glory revealed in Christ to shine in the believing heart (2 Corinthians 4:6). Hence the description of the person who is in Christ as a new creation (2 Corinthians 5:17), and the instruction that those who are thus reborn are "God's workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared beforehand, that we should walk in them" (Ephesians 2:10). In this the continuity that relates the new to the original creation is evident, as also in the assertion that "the new man" or "the new humanity" put on by the Christian "is being renewed in knowledge after the image of its Creator" (Colossians 3:10), which betokens the recovery of the first principle of man's creation, namely, his formation after the image of God, which, again, is after Christ who is the Image of God. Likeness to Christ, Christiformity, is the whole sum and purpose of man's creation.
>
> The reconciliation of man to God achieves also the reconciliation of all things, the reconciliation not only of man to God but also of man to man and of all creation. Through Christ, St. Paul says, God reconciles to himself "all things, whether on earth or in heaven, having made peace by the blood of his cross" (Colossians 1:20). In the crucified, risen, and glorified Savior there is the healing of all enmity and incompatibility, personal, racial, and indeed of every kind; for Christ "is our peace, who . . . has broken down the dividing wall of hostility . . . that he might create in himself one new man [i. e., one new reborn

Millennial earth, a radical difference takes place that mightily alters previous conditions. Satan is the ruler of this present world-system (2 Corinthians 4:4) and the unregenerate individual (Ephesians 2:1-3), but Christ will rule the Millennial earth and He currently rules both the individual regenerate man and the corporate body of the saints, the church. Nevertheless, neither in the saint, the church on earth, or the Millennial kingdom is sin absolutely and finally abolished—the final complete victory for the individual does not take place until his glorification, and the final victory over sin in the universe does not take place until the eternal state, the cosmic parallel to individual glorification.[137] Sin is not yet absolutely abolished in either individual or cosmic regeneration, but the shattered dominion of evil and predominant rule of Christ in the regenerate individual and earth are a foretaste and harbinger of certain ultimate victory in both spheres. Matthew 19:28 further demonstrates that cosmic regeneration transforms the entire creation—no portion of the universe is exempt from the radically different conditions (Isaiah 11; 65:20-25, etc.) that will exist during Christ's thousand-year reign. So individual regeneration affects the entire person, spirit, soul, and body.[138] Nevertheless, the entire Millennial cosmos, although changed in all its parts, still evidences the existence and deleterious > humanity] . . . in one body through the cross, thereby bringing hostility to an end" (Ephesians 2:13-16). The restoration of harmony between man and God and between man and man inevitably effects the recovery of the harmony of all things. While the focus of the regeneration accomplished through the redeeming work of the incarnate Son is upon man as the head of the created order, the scope of this regeneration is in the end creation-wide. This expectation is altogether logical. Man's fall, apart from its disasterous results for himself, has subjected the creation as a whole to futility—not, however, without hope; for, St. Paul explains, "the creation waits with eager longing for the revealing of the sons of God," when, at the return of the Son himself in glory, "the creation itself will be set free from its bondage to decay and obtain the glorious liberty of the children of God" (Romans 8:19ff.). Man's rebellion, in Adam, against his Creator led to his rebellious abuse and perversion of the dominion with which he had been entrusted over the earth; but the renewal of man, in Christ, leads to the renewal of the cosmos, and the glorification of man brings with it the glorification of that order of which he is the chief part. The actuality of rebirth which flows from the resurrection of the Crucified One from the dead therefore exerts a regenerative power that is cosmic as well as human in its comprehensiveness, as in Christ, through whom all things were created, the divine purpose in the creation of man and the world is brought to its glorious fulfilment. (pgs. 380-385, The True Image)

---

137 A confusion of categories would be involved in the conclusion, reasoning from the parallel between cosmic and individual regeneration, that progressive sanctification does not involve the Spirit eradicating indwelling sinfulness and imparting inward holiness because in the Millennium all those who enter the earthly kingdom are regenerate but by the end of the thousand year reign the many unconverted people who will have been born will rebel against Christ, so that greater human holiness is not present at the conclusion of the Millennial reign (Revelation 20:1-10). Even apart from the fact that there doubtless will be a vast number of glorious spiritual achievements and wonderful progress made in innumerable areas during the thousand years of Christ's reign from Jerusalem, Matthew 19:28 and Titus 3:5 do not present a parallel with individual renewal, but with individual regeneration. The contrast between the present age under Satan's rule and the Millennial kingdom under Christ's rule teaches much about the nature of individual regeneration, but nothing about the nature of progressive renewal during the Christian life. No text of the Bible draws an explicit parallel between the unfolding events of Christ's future earthly kingdom and the unfolding events of individual renewal in progressive personal sanctification.

138 See "Excursus V: Regeneration and Sanctification Are Connected with the Renewal of the Whole Person, Body, Soul, and Spirit—Not, as Watchman Nee Affirmed, with the Human Spirit Alone," below. This excursus has been changed.

affects of sin in every portion; so no part of the regenerate individual is yet entirely free from sin.[139] Furthermore, entrance into both the personally regenerate state and the coming Millennial state is based upon union with the Lord Jesus Christ. Matthew 19:28 illustrates the truth that individual regeneration is an instanteous and supernatural work that makes a man new in all parts, although not completely new in any part; it is the impartation of a new nature that grows and develops through the renewal of progressive sanctification until God eradicates the final remnants of indwelling sin at glorification.[140]

---

139 Regeneration affects all the faculties of the soul; that is, intellect, will, and affections, as well as all the members of the body which are appointed to be instruments of righteousness. "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new" (2 Cor 5:17). Everything is changed. The change is such that it is as if a dead person became alive and arose from the dead, as if a blind person received vision, as if a deaf person received hearing, and as if a crippled person walked. Nothing is changed perfectly, however, for the old nature remains, together with its motions and operations. This results in a battle between the flesh and the Spirit (cf. Gal 5:17; Rom 7:23).

Question: How is it to be understood that within one person there can simultaneously be an old and a new nature, light and darkness, life and death? Does each occupy or consist of a different portion of this man? Does each protect this part as its own and strive to evict the other from its part?

Answer: They do not each function independently, but are completely intertwined, as is true of light and darkness during dusk, or of cold and heat in lukewarm water. . . . Such is likewise the case here. Two things which are opposite to each other cannot exist equally to the highest degree within one subject. This is possible, however, when each party is in a mediate position. This will not be a peaceful coexistence, however, for the one will seek to drive out the other. One must thus not deduce his regeneration from the degree of perfection of this new life, nor from the measure in which it manifests itself, but rather from its genuineness. If genuine spiritual life, light, and faith are present, then one is regenerate. Let the old man be as strong as it may be, where there is life it will remain; and wherever there is inner life, it will manifest itself in these and similar fruits. (pgs. 250-251, The Christian's Reasonable Service, vol. 2, Wilhelmus á Brakel)

140 "The spiritual life implanted in regeneration is similar to the natural life in that it must be nourished and strengthened for it to expand and grow. In other ways there is a great difference between them, of course, inasmuch as the spiritual life originates in God as Savior, is acquired by the resurrection of Christ, and is eternal life that can neither sin nor die. Nevertheless regenerate persons continually need to be 'strengthened in their inner being with power through God's Spirit' (cf. Eph. 3:16). This strengthening of the spiritual life, like its beginning, originates with God and the riches of his grace. The life of spiritual persons, also after its origination, cannot for a moment be separated from God and his fellowship; in the same strict and particular sense in which this life is from God, it also is through and for him. It is he who nourishes and maintains it, never abandons it, prompts it to engage in certain activities, and not only bestows the capacity but also the willing and the working according to his good pleasure (Phil. 2:13; 2 Cor. 3:5). It is a life in communion with Christ. . . . [B]elievers are united with Christ, both in his death and in his resurrection (Rom. 6:5). They are in Christ, and Christ lives in them (2 Cor. 13:5; Gal. 2:20). They cannot do anything if they do not remain in him as branches in the vine (John 15:4–5). They can only become strong in the Lord and in the strength of his might (Eph. 6:10) by the Spirit of Christ and in communion with him (Rom. 8:13, 26; 2 Cor. 13:13; Eph. 3:16). But in the case of the regenerate, that Spirit works from the center of their being to the circumference. This is both possible and proper since the 'new person' is not immediately perfected in 'degrees' but in 'parts.' In regeneration the whole person is, in principle, re-created. A person's self dies and lives again in and by the power of Christ (Gal. 2:20). From the very start it is a new human (καινὸς ἄνθρωπος, kainos anthrōpos) who is created in Christ (Eph. 4:24; Col. 3:10), a creation that, though small and delicate, is nevertheless complete in all its parts. The Holy Spirit, accordingly, works at various aspects to make the new person grow evenly and proportionately in all one's parts. He works as the Spirit of wisdom, holiness, and glory, and adorns believers with an array of

The cosmic parallel to the process beginning at regeneration whereby God makes the individual believer holy is explicitly extended through glorification in Isaiah 65:17 and 66:22, where God indicates that His creation of new heavens and a new earth takes place in connection with the Millennium,[141] while 2 Peter 3:13 and Revelation 21:1 (cf. Revelation 20:11; 21:5) identify the new heaven and new earth as the ultimate consummation of the eternal state, after the thousand-year reign of Christ. The Millennial kingdom is a new cosmos, a new heaven and earth—it is new in all its parts, but not new to the uttermost extent—total newness and absolute freedom from sin awaits the eternal state.

Trench commented with insight on the distinction between regeneration (παλιγγενεσία) and renewal (ἀνακαίνωσις):

> [F]irst[,] it is worth observing that while the word παλιγγενεσία is drawn from the realm of nature, ἀνακαίνωσις derives from that of art. A word peculiar to the Greek of the N. T., it occurs there only twice—once in connexion with παλιγγενεσία (Tit. iii. 5), and again at Rom. xii. 2; but we have the verb ἀνακαινόω, which also is exclusively a N. T. form, at 2 Cor. iv. 16; Col. iii. 10; and the more classical ἀνακαινίζω, Heb. vi. 6, from which the nouns, frequent in the Greek [theologians], ἀνακαινισμός and ἀνακαίνισις are more immediately drawn; we have also ἀνανεόω at Ephes. iv. 23; all in similar uses. . . . Our Collect . . . expresses excellently well the relation in which the παλιγγενεσία and the ἀνακαίνωσις stand to each other; we there pray, 'that we being regenerate,' in other words, having been already made the subjects of the παλιγγενεσία, 'may daily be renewed by the Holy Spirit,' may continually know the ἀνακαίνωσις Πνεύματος Ἁγίου. In this Collect, uttering, as do so many, profound theological truth in forms at once the simplest and the most accurate, the new-birth is contemplated as already past, as having found place once for all, while the 'renewal' or 'renovation' is daily proceeding—being as it is that gradual restoration of the Divine image, which is ever going forward in him who, through the new-birth, has come under the transforming powers of the world to come. It is called 'the renewal of the Holy Ghost,' inasmuch as He is the efficient cause, by whom alone this putting on of the new man, and putting off the old, is brought about.
>
> These two then are bound by closest ties to one another; the second the following up, the consequence, the consummation of the first. The παλιγγενεσία is that free act of God's mercy and Power, whereby He causes the sinner to pass out of the kingdom of darkness into that of light, out of death into life; it is the ἄνωθεν γεννηθῆναι, of John iii. 3; the γεννηθῆναι ἐκ θεοῦ of 1 John v. 4; the θεογενεσία of Dionysius the Areopagite and other Greek theologians; the γεννηθῆναι ἐκ σπορᾶς ἀφθάρτου of 1 Pet. i. 23; in it that glorious word begins to be fulfilled, ἰδοὺ καινὰ [πάντα ποιῶ] (Rev. xxi. 5). In it—not in the preparations for it, but in the act itself—the subject of it is passive, even as the child has nothing to do with its own birth. With the ἀνακαίνωσις, it is otherwise. This is the gradual conforming of the man more and more to that powers and gifts and virtues (Rom. 15:13; 1 Cor. 12:3ff.; Gal. 5:2–3)" (pg. 98, Reformed Dogmatics, vol. 4, Herman Bavinck).

---

[141] Note the use of participles for God's work of the creation of the new heaven and earth in both Isaiah 65:17-18 (הִנְנִי בוֹרֵא שָׁמַיִם חֲדָשִׁים וָאָרֶץ חֲדָשָׁה . . . אֲנִי בוֹרֵא) and 66:22 (כִּי כַּאֲשֶׁר הַשָּׁמַיִם הַחֲדָשִׁים וְהָאָרֶץ הַחֲדָשָׁה אֲשֶׁר אֲנִי עֹשֶׂה)—both texts thus employ forms expected for an action involving a process rather than one completed at a single instant in time (cf. Isaiah 66:22 (LXX), ὁ οὐρανὸς καινὸς καὶ ἡ γῆ καινή ἃ ἐγὼ ποιῶ, and 65:18, ἐγὼ ποιῶ). Note that Isaiah 66:22 also connects the certainty that the people of God will not be cast away with the certainty that the renewed cosmos will not be cast away. From the moment God's renewing power enables a sinner to take the water of life freely until the ultimate consummation in the New Jerusalem, the Triune Jehovah can truly testify, Ἰδού, καινὰ πάντα ποιῶ, "Behold, I make all things new" (Revelation 21:5; cf. 21:1-7).

new spiritual world into which he has been introduced, and in which he now lives and moves; the restoration of the Divine image; and in all this, so far from being passive, he must be a fellow-worker with God. That was 'regeneratio,' this is 'renovatio;' which two must not be separated, but as little may be confounded, as Gerhard (Locc. Theoll. xxi. 7. 113) has well declared: 'Renovatio, licet a regeneratione proprie et specialiter accepta distinguatur, individuo tamen et perpetuo nexu cum ea est conjuncta.' What infinite perplexities, conflicts, scandals, obscurations of God's truth on this side and on that, have arisen now from the confusing, and now from the separating, of these two![142]

Commenting on the same distinction between regeneration and renewal, B. B. Warfield wrote:

> [I]t seems tolerably clear that over against the broader "renewal" expressed by ἀνακαινοῦσθαι and its cognates . . . ἀναγεννᾶν (1 Peter 1:23) and with it, its synonym ἀποκεῖσθαι (James 1:18) are of narrower connotation. We have, says Peter, in God's great mercy been rebegotten, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by means of the Word of the living and abiding God. It is in accordance with His own determination, says James, that we have been brought forth by the Father of Lights, from whom every good gift and every perfect boon comes, by means of the Word of truth. We have here an effect, the efficient agent in working which is God in His unbounded mercy, while the instrument by means of which it is wrought is "the word of good-tidings which has been preached" to us, that is to say, briefly, the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The issue is, equally briefly, just salvation. This salvation is characteristically described by Peter as awaiting its consummation in the future, while yet it is entered upon here and now not only [1 Peter 1:4ff.] as a "living hope" which shall not be put to shame (because it is reserved in heaven for us, and we meanwhile are guarded through faith for it by the power of God), but also in an accordant life of purity as children of obedience who would fain be like their Father and as He is holy be also ourselves holy in all manner of living. James intimates that those who have been thus brought forth by the will of God may justly be called "first fruits of His creatures," where the reference assuredly is not to the first but to the second creation, that is to say, they who have already been brought forth by the word of truth are themselves the product of God's creative energy and are the promise of the completed new creation when all that is shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God (Romans 8:19*sq*., Matthew 19:28).
>
> The new birth thus brought before us is related to the broader idea of "renewal" (ἀνακαίνωσις) as the initial stage to the whole process. . . . The notion of the new birth is confined even more closely still to its initial step in our Lord's discourse to Nicodemus, recorded in the opening verses of the third chapter of John's Gospel. Here the whole emphasis is thrown upon the necessity of the new birth and its provision by the Holy Spirit. No one can see the Kingdom of God unless he be born again; and this new birth is wrought by the Spirit. . . . The new birth appears to be brought before us in this discussion in the purity of its conception; and we are made to perceive that at the root of the whole process of "renewal" there lies an immediate act of God the Holy Spirit upon the soul by virtue of which it is that the renewed man bears the great name of son of God. Begotten not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God (John 1:13), his new life will necessarily bear the lineaments of his new parentage (1 John 3:9, 10; 5:4, 18): kept by Him who was in an even higher sense still begotten of God, he overcomes the world by faith, defies the evil one (who cannot touch him), and manifests in his righteousness and love the heritage which is his (1 John 2:29, 4:7, 5:1). Undoubtedly the Spirit is active throughout the whole process of "renewal"; but it is doubtless the peculiarly immediate and radical nature of his operation at this initial point which gives to the product of His renewing activities its best right to be called a new creation (2 Corinthians 5:17; Galatians 6:15), a quickening (John 5:21; Ephesians 2:5), a making alive from the dead (Galatians 3:21). . . . At the basis of all there lies an enabling act from God, by virtue of which alone the spiritual activities of man are liberated for their work (Romans 6:22, 8:2). From that moment of the first divine contact the work of the Spirit never ceases: while man is changing his mind and reforming his life, it is > ever God who is renewing him in true righteousness. . . . It is the entirety of this process, viewed as the work of God on the soul, which the Scriptures designate "renewal."[143]

142 Synonyms of the New Testament, Richard Chenevix Trench. Section xviii, pgs. 64-66.

Spiritual renewal thus encompasses both the initial bestowal of a new nature by God in regeneration and the believer's growth in Christlikeness and holiness through the mortification of indwelling sin and vivification of Divinely imparted new life. God progressively renews His people into the image of Christ throughout the entirety of their earthly Christian pilgrimage until their indwelling sin is finally utterly extirpated through their glorification.

Applicatons.

To lost sinners:

1.) Have you been regenerated? Are you different the way the Millennial earth is different from this earth? When did it happen? This is what the new birth is—and without the new birth, you will never enter heaven.

2.) You must want to be different the way that the Millennial earth is different. You must want Jesus Christ to be your Lord, to have a new heart, to be holy. It is not enough that you don't want hell. When you receive Christ, you are united to Him and get all that He is, and you must want this.

3.) You cannot just wait to be saved until whenever you want. GOD renews you unto repentance. You are saved when God permits, Hebrews 6:3. If you put off repentance and faith, you are in severe danger of being cast off forever by God and never being renewed unto repentance.

4.) Why will you cling to this fading world, instead of having all that we discussed in this message?

To saints:

1.) Ephesians 1:18-19: The eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, And what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power,

2.) Renewal, as regeneration, is a supernatural work of God. Do not think that you renew yourself, or take any glory to yourself in this work; ascribe it all to God.

3.) Expect God to renew you completely, body, soul, and spirit, as you cooperate with Him. Low views of what God does in you will hinder your sanctification. If you think

---

143 "On The Biblical Notion of Renewal," Benjamin B. Warfield, pgs. 454-457.

God does not actually make you any more holy, but leaves you unchanged from the time you are saved until glory, you are not going to be renewed as you ought. Expect God to renew you and cooperate with Him by using the means of sanctification.

2.) Understand, treasure, and glory in the greatness of Jesus Christ, the One who brings all this to pass. See how all of the created universe, all redeemed humanity, this creation, the new creation, all, all centers in Him. How do you treat Jesus Christ? Are you brazen enough to not keep His commandments, but hold on to sin? Will you not love and serve this One, Jesus Christ?

3.) Has He brought you into union with Himself, bringing you into this glorious redemption that is centered in Him in such a great way? Will you not then fulfill His purposes for you?

4.) Will you choose this world and sin over Him? Will you choose to not further this work of renewal in you in the greatest possible way? Why will you choose dust that will perish over renewal by Jesus Christ?

II. The Prerequisites for Vivification

Scripture presents certain prerequsites for effective progress[144] in mortification and vivification. While God never ceases to work in a variety of ways in the lives of His people, the Christian's fulfillment of certain conditions prepares the way for much greater progress in holiness than they would otherwise experience. Effective use of the means of mortification and vivification require that the Christian is, first, right with God.

1.) Be Right With God

In important conjunction with the progressive and incomplete ethical eradication of indwelling sinfulness in the believer through progressive sanctification is the clear Biblical distinction between the believer who is right with God and the one who is [144] Since, as is demonstrated in the section "The Certainty of Practical Sanctification For All The Regenerate," God has ordained that He will sanctify all the justified, even in this life, all believers experience some degree of progress in the mortification of sin and growth in holiness. Since God ordains both His intended ends and the means to His ends (Ephesians 1:11), all Christians will, to some extent, embrace the prerequisites and means to vivification explicated in the following sections of this treatise.

backslidden. Progressive sanctification contains both an aspect of a continuum of growth and an aspect that is either entirely present or not. No believer on earth has reached the endpoint of the entire elimination of indwelling sin and perfect renewal of the image of Christ within him; the saints on earth are all at various stages of growth, having within them differing ethical elements of light and darkness. However, Scripture likewise teaches a clear distinction between those believers who are right with God and those who are not.

> Every Christian . . . has a "pure" heart in [that he is regenerate and has the new heart that is the possession of all who enter heaven, Psalm 24:3-4; Matthew 5:8; Hebrews 8:8-12]. But every Christian does not have a "clean" heart (Psalm 51:10) [in another sense].[145] That which pollutes the heart of a Christian is unjudged sin. Whenever sin is allowed by us, communion with God is broken, and pollution can only be removed, and communion restored, by genuine repentance—a condemning of ourselves, a mourning over the sin, and unsparing confession of the same, accompanied by a fervent desire and sincere resolution not to be overtaken by it again. The willing allowance and indulgence of any known sin cannot exist with a clean heart. [Such] . . . repentance . . . is as necessary [to] the continuance of spiritual life, as faith itself[.] After the repentance and confession, there must be a fresh (and constant) recourse unto that Fountain which has been "opened for sin and for uncleanness," a fresh application by faith of the cleansing blood of Christ: pleading its merits and efficacy before God.[146]

The Biblical description of sanctification as "building up"[147] illustrates both the aspects of continunity and of total possession or absence in spiritual life. A building that is progressively being built is not an all-or-nothing proposition—the edifice grows gradually. However, buildings may be built at a faster or slower rate, or even begin to decay or be actively dismantled. The believer who is right with God is being built up as a spiritual building—a growth that can happen at different rates—but the backslider, the believer who is not right with God, is contributing to the decay of his building through 145 The distinction Pink affirms, that some believers are right with God and others are not, while all believers are righteous before the Lord in another sense, is certainly valid—however, an absolute distinction between the ue of the English words "clean" and "pure" with reference to the heart is not consistently maintained in Scripture. Thus, the "clean heart" (לֵב טָהוֹר) of only the repentant believer (Psalm 51:10) is also called "pureness of heart" (טְהוֹר־לֵב, Proverbs 22:11).

---

146 Pg. 54, Doctrine of Sanctification, Arthur W. Pink. Pink helpfully further explicated the "right with God" distinction as follows:

> It is not every man, nor even every Christian, who obtains definite answers to his prayers. Far from it! A "righteous man" [in one sense of the term] is one who is right with God in a practical way: one whose conduct is pleasing in His sight, one who keeps his garments unspotted from the world, who is in separation from religious evil . . . Such a one has the ear of Heaven, for there is no moral barrier between his soul and a sin hating God. (Life of Elijah, Chapter 3, "The Brook Cherith.")
>
> When we have sinned away our peace there is a strangeness and distance between the soul and the Holy One. When our inward monitor convicts and condemns us, the heart grows shy of God, so that we cannot so comfortably look Him in the face. It is only when everything is made right with God, by contrite confession and faith's appropriation of the cleansing blood of Christ, that we can approach the throne of grace with boldness. (Exposition of Hebrews, vol. 3, Arthur Pink, Chapter 122, "Praying for Ministers.") neglect or is actively taking his building down. Rather than achieving ever greater progress, he is sliding backwards, progressively falling away from God. While the completion of a building is a process, any particular structure is either in the process of being built up or being taken down—building, in this sense, is an all-or-nothing proposition. In this sense, particular believers are either making spiritual progress or they are in decline; they are either right with God or are backsliding. Either their new nature or their indwelling sin is growing stronger; they either have a clear conscience or they do not have one; they are either wilfully holding on to sin or they are not doing so. Progress in sanctification requires that the believer be right with God.

147 See "Vivification as Building Up" above.

The distinction between the clean or pure-hearted[148] Christian and the backslider is clear throughout the canon. The history of Israel demonstrates that the question "Is thine heart right[?]" could be put to the godly, with the appropriate answer being "It is" (2 Kings 10:15).[149] A right or upright heart,[150] which is a gift of grace given by God (1 Chronicles 29:19), was manifested in "zeal for the LORD" (2 Kings 10:16) and His worship and institutions (cf. 2 Kings 10:15-16, 27-28, 30; Psalm 111:1), and a heart that was conformed to God's heart (10:30). The "upright in heart . . . follow . . . righteousness" (Psalm 94:15; cf. 97:11). Their "words [are of] the uprightness of [their] heart: and [their] lips . . . utter knowledge" (Job 33:3), as their "uprightness of heart" is a product of "hav[ing] learned [God's] righteous judgments," the content of Scripture (Psalm 119:7). Their worship is also in the "uprightness of [their] heart" as they "willingly offe[r]" to the Lord (1 Chronicles 29:17). "David, who kept [God's] commandments, and who followed [Him] with all his heart, to do that only which was right in [His] eyes" (1 Kings 14:8), had such an upright heart. While David was no sinless man, but one who prayed: "Who can understand his errors? cleanse thou me from secret faults" (Psalm 19:12), nonetheless he did not willfully and deliberately turn away from God to iniquity, except in his adultery with Uriah's wife Bathsheba and the events associated with it—hence Scripture states: "David did that which was right in the eyes of the LORD, and turned not aside from any thing that he commanded him all the days of his life, save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite" (1 Kings 15:5). Thus, with the 148 טָהוֹר, Psalm 51:10; Proverbs 22:11.

---

149 יֵשׁ . . . הֲיֵשׁ אֶת־לְבָבְךָ יָשָׁר The legitimacy of the question is not undermined by the fact that Jehu's heart was not actually right when he spoke to Jonadab; Jonadab's zeal or holy jealousy for Jehovah (קַנְאָה לַיהוָה 2 Kings 10:16) and hatred of the idolatrous Baal worship Jehu was extirpating was genuine—Jonadab's heart was truly right, and he truly had the zeal that Jehu merely professed. Note that the Lord blessed Jonadab's zeal for the Lord, rejection of worldliness, and abstinence from wine with a godly seed (Jeremiah 35).

150 לֵבָב/לֵב יָשָׁר/יֹשֶׁר (cf. יָשַׁר

exception of "the matter of Uriah the Hittite," the heart of "David . . . was . . . perfect[151] with the LORD his God" (1 Kings 15:3). Having a right heart was not a matter of absolute sinlessness, but of "uprightness" (1 Kings 9:4), of not wilfully holding on to any sin—the right-hearted determine to follow God's ways rather than willfully turning aside after iniquity, but it would still be appropriate for them to say, in every prayer they make, "forgive us our sins" (Luke 11:4; Matthew 6:12). The believer who is right with God can state: "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me: But verily God hath heard me; he hath attended to the voice of my prayer" (Psalm 66:18-19). A necessary condition to the answer of prayer is being right with God, not regarding iniquity in one's heart, that is, not seeing iniqutity with pleasure, or aiming at, designing, or having iniquity in one's eye[152]—nonetheless, the saint who is right with God still receives answers to prayer only because of "mercy" (Psalm 66:20), not merit. In contrast to David's determination in every inward and outward area to obey God, one could do "that which was right in the sight of the LORD" in an outward way, "but not with a perfect heart" (2 Chronicles 25:2), and certain people could be "more upright in heart to sanctify themselves"[153] (2 Chronicles 29:34) than others. Although they are not free from indwelling sin (cf. Deuteronomy 9:5), those who are "upright in heart" (Psalm 11:2; 32:11; 36:10; 64:10) are "good" (Psalm 125:4) in that they are walking uprightly and with a godly understanding (Proverbs 15:21), not willfully clinging to sin. They trust in the Lord and have no "iniquity in [their] hands," so they can pray: "judge me, O LORD, according to my righteousness, and according to mine integrity that is in me" (Psalm 7:10, 1, 3-4, 8; cf. Psalm 26:1).

---

151 שָׁלֵם, a word discussed in more depth in the next paragraph—the reference is placed here because of the insight to the nature of an upright or perfect heart manifested by David's life. A right heart is upright, honest, and straight rather than crooked (יָשָׁר), and is also well-rounded, complete, and under God's authority in every area of life (שָׁלֵם).

152 The condition in Psalm 66:18 is: אָוֶן אִם־רָאִיתִי בְלִבִּי לֹא יִשְׁמַע׀ אֲדֹנָי׃. Compare the sense of רָאָה in Psalm 37:37, "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace," שְׁמֹר־תָּם וּרְאֵה יָשָׁר כִּי־אַחֲרִית לְאִישׁ שָׁלוֹם׃, and Genesis 20:10, מָה רָאִיתָ, and ἀδικίαν εἰ ἐθεώρουν ἐν καρδίᾳ μου μὴ εἰσακουσάτω κύριος, Iniquitatem si aspexi in corde meo, non exaudiet Dominus (LXX & Vulgate). Declarations similar in idea to Psalm 66:18 occur in Psalm 17:1-7; 18:20-27; 26:1–7. John Gill commented: "There was iniquity in [David's] heart, as there is in every good man's heart, and a great deal too; it is full of it; and it should be regarded in some sense, so as to guard against it, and pray to be kept from it, that it may not break forth into action; and so as to loath it, abhor it, and be humbled for it; but not so as to nourish and cherish it, to take delight and pleasure in it: [thus, the passage could be rendered] 'if I look upon it' . . . that is, with approbation of it, and satisfaction in it, and ordered his conversation according to it; or acted the deceitful and hypocritical part in prayer; or had any evil intention in his petitions, to consume on his lusts what he asked for[.]"

153 The situation of the Levites rather than the priests in the text—לֵבָב לְהִתְקַדֵּשׁ מֵהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלְוִיִּם יִשְׁרֵי.

Similarly, those with a "perfect heart"[154] "walk in [the LORD's] statutes, and . . . keep his commandments" (1 Kings 8:61). "Asa's heart was perfect with the LORD all his days" (1 Kings 15:14), in that his life was characterized by well-rounded[155] and sincere obedience,[156] although he certainly sinned, indeed, on particular occasions seriously (2 Chronicles 16). Hezekiah could honestly pray: "I beseech thee, O LORD, remember now how I have walked[157] before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight" (2 Kings 20:3; Isaiah 38:3). The service of a "perfect heart and . . . a willing mind"[158] (1 Chronicles 28:9) were associated, for a "perfect heart" was one of sincerity—thus, when the "men of war . . . came with a perfect heart to Hebron, to make David king over all Israel" (1 Chronicles 12:38), they were not sinless, but they were free from duplicity in their intention to set up David as king. Worship with "a perfect heart" is associated with "offer[ing] willingly"[159] (1 Chronicles 29:9). A believer can have a perfect heart during one period of his life but not in another; "Solomon loved the LORD, walking in the statutes of David his father" (1 Kings 3:3) in the early part of his reign, walking humbly (1 Kings 3:6-10; 8:22-66) before Jehovah his God (1 Kings 5:4-5), so that the Lord gave him "wise and an understanding heart" (3:12; cf. 4:29-34; 10:23-24) above all other men and used the king to inspire portions of the canon (Proverbs, Ecclesiastes); however, "when Solomon was old . . . his wives turned away his heart after other gods: and his heart was not perfect with the LORD his God, as was the heart of David his father. And Solomon did evil in the sight of the LORD, and went not fully after the LORD, as did David his father. . . . And the LORD was angry with Solomon, because his heart was turned from the LORD God of Israel . . . [and he no 155 Compare the idea of שָׁלֵם as completeness or intactness (KB).

---

154 לֵבָב/לֵב שָׁלֵם

156 Note that the "high places" of 1 Kings 15:14a refer to unauthorized altars to Jehovah, not to places where false gods were worshipped; cf. 1 Kings 22:43 (Heb. 22:44); 2 Kings 12:3; 14:4; 15:4, 35; 2 Chronicles 15:17; 20:33. Asa did destroy the places where idols were worshipped (2 Chronicles 14:3-5; cf. 17:6).

157 הָלַךְ in the Hithpael, the conjugation regularly employed for believers who walk with God, and indicating that they walked about, went to and fro, with Him in an iterative way (cf. Genesis 13:17; Exodus 21:19; Joshua 18:4, 8; Judges 21:24; 1 Samuel 12:2; 23:13; 30:31; 2 Samuel 11:2; 1 Chronicles 16:20; 21:4; Esther 2:11; Job 1:7; 2:2; 18:8; 22:14; 38:16; Psalm 12:8; 35:14; 39:6; 43:2; 58:7; 68:21; 77:17; 82:5; 101:2; 105:13; 119:45; Proverbs 6:22; 20:7; 23:31; 24:34 Ezekiel 1:13; 19:6; 28:14; Zechariah 1:10, 11; 6:7; 10:12), that is, they communed with Him and fellowshipped with Him (Genesis 3:8; 5:22, 24; 6:9; 17:1; 24:40; 48:15; Leviticus 26:12; Deuteronomy 23:15; 1 Samuel 2:30, 35; 2 Samuel 7:6–7; 2 Kings 20:3; 1 Chronicles 17:6; Psalm 56:14; 116:9; Isaiah 38:3; also see KB & BDB, and the references to human fellowship in 1 Samuel 25:15, 27; also see Psalm 26:3).

158 נֶפֶשׁ חֶפְצָה; service with willingness and desire (cf. 1 Kings 13:33; 21:6; 1 Chronicles 28:9; Nehemiah 1:11; Micah 7:18; Malachi 3:1; Psalm 5:5; 34:13; 35:27; 40:15; 70:3; 111:2) from the soul.

159 The Hithpael of נָדַב; "to make a voluntary decision . . . a voluntary contribution" (KB).

longer] kept [the LORD's] covenant and . . . statutes" (1 Kings 11:4-11).[160] Instead of his heart being "incline[d]"[161] to the LORD (1 Kings 8:58), his heart was now "turned away" (1 Kings 11:2, 4) after other supreme loves and thus "his heart was turned from the LORD God of Israel" (1 Kings 11:9), to do evil (1 Kings 11:6-7) and no longer go fully after Him (1 Kings 11:6). Thus, while sometimes the upright or perfect in heart are all those who "trust . . . in the LORD" and are "righteous" by the imputation of Christ's righteousness as their legal standing and the impartation of inward holiness, and as such are contrasted with the "wicked" who will dwell eternally in "fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest" (Psalm 11; cf. Psalm 32:11, 1-10; 36:10; 125:1-5), and so in one sense all the people of God have upright hearts, in another sense believers can fall into sin and lose their upright hearts.[162]

Job was by no means sinless and perfect like God his Father was (Job 40:4; 42:6), yet he was "perfect" in that he was "upright, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil" (Job 1:1; cf. 1:8-9),[163] one who in spite of exceedingly difficult trials "sinned not, nor charged God foolishly" (1:22) but, as concerning His tribulations, "did not . . . sin with his lips" (2:10), but instead "retain[ed] [his] integrity" (2:9).[164] His relationship to God, his heart, and his life were characterized by completeness, soundness, and wholeness towards holiness and the Holy One, by sincerity, integrity, and honesty, by freedom from sinful blemishes[165] in heart towards Him[166]—Job was not intentionally acting in wilful disobedience in any area. Consequently, Job's prayers and worship were acceptable to God (42:9-10), and the Lord blessed him (42:12). Had Job given in to temptation, he 160 Note that the warning that marriages to pagan women "will turn away your heart after their gods" (2 Kings 11:2) refers to the Deuteronomic warning "they will turn away thy son from following me, that they may serve other gods" (Deuteronomy 7:4), closely connecting the direction of the heart and the act of following.

---

161 נָטָה in the Hiphil, as is "turn away" in 1 Kings 11:2, 4; 11:9 contains the Qal.

162 In certain texts it is not immediately obvious whether the upright in heart are saints who are walking in integrity or the entire body of the saints; nonetheless, the Scriptural evidence for both sorts of uprightness is clear. Texts that are less immediately clear, as well as verses that clearly speak of the one sort of uprightness of heart or the other, nonetheless can illuminate characteristics of the uprightness both of all the elect and of those believers who are not holding on to known sin.

163 The LXX states that Ιωβ . . . ἦν ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἐκεῖνος ἀληθινός ἄμεμπτος δίκαιος θεοσεβής ἀπεχόμενος ἀπὸ παντὸς πονηροῦ πράγματος (1:1; "Job . . . was true, blameless, righteous, and godly, abstaining from everything evil."). The Targum states that Job was ועדי מן בישׁ׃ שׁלים ותריץ דחיל מן־קדם ייי.

For the idea in the description of sinful earthly saints as "perfect," see the section "Vivification as Perfecting" above.

164 מַחֲזִיק בְּתֻמָּתֶךָ; Job kept hold of, seized, or grasped his perfectness.

165 Compare the use of תְּמִים for blemish-free sacrifical animals, Exodus 12:5; 29:1; etc.

166 Thus, by תְּמִים/תֻּמָּה/תֹּם/תָּם/תמם.

would have fallen from his state of uprightness and integrity to no longer be right with God. He who has a right or "perfect" heart is "undefiled" (Song 5:2), walks in "integrity of heart, and in uprightness" (1 Kings 9:4; Psalm 78:72), in "the integrity of [his] heart and innocency of [his] hands" (Genesis 20:5-6), free from intentional and wilful sin, although not sinless (Genesis 20:3-9). He behaves wisely, desires communion with Jehovah, and maintains purity in his household so he can maintain a perfect heart there (Psalm 101:2). He sets or deliberately places before him no wicked thing, but hates wickedness and the wicked and is determined that they will be separated from him (101:3-5, 7-8), especially in what pertains to the worship of the Lord (101:8), choosing rather as his companions the faithful who walk "in a perfect way" (101:6). His heart is not froward, crooked, or twisted, but he is upright in his way (Proverbs 11:20). His "heart [is] sound in [God's] statutes" (Psalm 119:80). His walk is upright, his heart is truthful, and his actions righteous (Psalm 15:2; cf. 15:3-5). His all-around sincerity and desire for the literal perfection of the holy character of God is his submissive response to the command: "Thou shalt be perfect with the LORD thy God" (Deuteronomy 15:13).

The heart that is right with God is also "prepare[d] . . . unto the LORD" (1 Samuel 7:3).[167] Sinning believers must turn from whatever they idolatrously regard as more important than God, "return unto the LORD with all [their] hearts . . . prepare [their] hearts unto the LORD, and serve him only" (1 Samuel 7:3). Job 11:13-14 describes repentance as preparing of the heart: "If thou prepare thine heart, and stretch out thine hands toward [God]; if iniquity be in thine hand, put it far away, and let not wickedness dwell in thy tabernacles." Such a preparation or establishment of the heart is a gift of Divine grace; thus, the desire and prayer of the humble is that Jehovah would prepare and perfect their heart and the heart of others (1 Chronicles 29:18-19; Psalm 10:17), for a "clean heart" and a "right spirit," prepared for fellowship with the Lord, are the product of a supernatural creative act[168] of God in His people (Psalm 51:10).[169] If God does not [167] כון and לֵבָב/לֵב. A distinction is present between כון in the Niphal and Hiphil; the heart is established or steadfast and caused to be established or steadfast, that is, prepared or fixed. Also, as with other combinations of words for the right with God, the "prepared heart" is both spoken of as the possesion of the believer who is in fellowship with the Lord and, at times, as a description of all the people of God in general as distinguished from the wicked and hell-bound and in settings where those who were heaven-bound but backslidden and those who were still hell-bound are grouped together (cf. Psalm 11:2; 78:8, 37), although in general the "prepared heart" is descriptive of the progressing believer in contrast with one who is regressing.

---

[168] Thus, Psalm 51:10 employs בָּרָא.

[169] Psalm 51 is a model for the type of prayer of repentance that is appropriate for a backslidden saint who wishes to again be right with God. Note that David knew that he did not lose his salvation as a result of his sin; his prayer in 51:11b, "take not thy holy spirit from me," refers to his desire not to lose the theocratic enduement with the Holy Spirit that he had received as the king over Israel, an empowerment he sustain His people by His grace, their indwelling sin will lead them to fall (2 Chronicles 32:31), with terrible consequences (2 Chronicles 32:25-26; 2 Kings 20:12-18). The "fixed" or established heart "will sing and give praise" (Psalm 57:7; 108:1). One who "is stablished . . . cannot be moved" easily into rebellion and sin (cf. Psalm 93:1; 112:6-8); "his heart is fixed, trusting in the LORD" (Psalm 112:7). He can have God powerfully working in his life and ministry, as Ezra had "the good hand of his God upon him[,] [f]or [he] had prepared his heart to seek the law of the LORD, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments" (Ezra 7:9-10; cf. 2 Chronicles 19:13). Indeed, while outward nonconformity to Divine standards are sinful and in need of pardon (2 Chronicles 30:18-20), the Lord is merciful to "every one that prepareth his heart to seek God, the LORD God of his fathers, though he be not cleansed" outwardly as he ought (2 Chronicles 30:19), indicating that one can have a heart that is right with God and sincere before Him while he yet lacks a great deal of knowledge of Biblical precepts and is not outwardly obedient because of a lack of instruction. On the other hand, a man will do "evil, because he prepare[s] not his heart to seek the LORD" (2 Chronicles 12:14), and righteous deeds are hindered (2 Chronicles 20:33a) because "people ha[ve] not prepared their hearts unto the God of their fathers" (2 Chronicles 20:33b). Those who do not establish their hearts, who "set not their heart aright, and whose spirit [is] not stedfast with God," are "stubborn and rebellious," and "their heart [is] not right with [God]" (Psalm 78:8, 37). The Lord blesses[170] those among His people who have upright, clean, and prepared hearts for Him, and withholds His full blessing from those of His own who do not.

Those among the people of God who are not right with God are "backsliding"[171] (Hosea 4:16)—they are in wilful and deliberate sin, stubbornly and rebelliously[172] had received upon being anointed to his office (1 Samuel 16:13), as Saul had received it upon his anointing (1 Samuel 10:1-11). Saul had lost this theocratic enduement when he was rejected as king for his disobedience and David was anointed (1 Samuel 16:1-14). This sort of theocratic rejection was what David prayed to be spared from in Psalm 51:11.

---

170 A phrase used for Jehovah's blessing in Ezra and Nehemiah is to have God's hand upon one who belongs to Him or to have His good hand upon a believer or group of His people for good (Ezra 7:6, 9, 28; 8:18, 22, 31; Nehemiah 2:8, 18; note that God is specified in these texts as "my" God, "our" God, or "his" God, the God of the person or group who have His hand upon him or them, and the phrase is often employed in association with the covenant name Jehovah). Only those believers who are right with God can have His hand upon them for good in the way Ezra and Nehemiah did.

171 סָרַר.

172 Thus, the verb סָרַר, which is the "backsliding" of Hosea 4:16, means "to be stubborn" (KB), a way the verb is translated in Deuteronomy 21:18, 20; Psalm 78:8; Proverbs 7:11. The verb is rendered as "rebellious" in Psalm 66:7; 68:6, 19; Isaiah 1:23; 30:1; 65:2, and as "revolting," in a state of revolt, in Jeremiah 5:23; 6:28; Hosea 9:15. It "lays stress on attitude, whereas the synonymous mārad emphasizes rebellious actions" (TWOT, סָרַר).

holding on to iniquity, and consequently those who "set not their heart aright" (Psalm 78:8),[173] and are spiritually decaying and becoming weaker. Backsliding[174] is refusing to hearken to God as He speaks in His Word, instead acting like a stubborn ox that will not allow a yoke on its neck and obey its master (Nehemiah 9:29; Hosea 4:16; Zechariah 7:11). Since such rebellion against God is characteristic of the unconverted, the "backsliding" are regularly lost people (Isaiah 65:2),[175] those who "believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation" (Psalm 78:8, 22) and are in need of saving conversion (Psalm 78:7a) even if they are outwardly identified with the Lord (Psalm 78:35).[176] However, as Scripture both speaks of all the saints as those who are right with God, and identifies only those who are walking uprightly among His own as right with God in another sense, so while the backsliding or rebellious are regularly the unsaved, at times those who are truly converted are spoken of as backsliding.[177] Thus, while the unsaved

---

[173] Thus, those who are backsliding, a דּוֹר סוֹרֵר וּמֹרֶה דּוֹר, are those who are not upright in heart, לֹא־הֵכִין לִבּוֹ.

[174] The complete list of references to the English "backsliding" are: Proverbs 14:14; Jeremiah 2:19; 3:6, 8, 11–12, 14, 22; 5:6; 8:5; 14:7; 31:22; 49:4; Hosea 4:16; 11:7; 14:4; the Hebrew words involved are: סרר, סוג, מְשׁוּבָה, and שׁוֹבָב.

[175] Thus, Isaiah 65:2 does not just contextually refer to idolatrous and unconverted Israelites (65:2-7), but is employed by Paul of the unregenerate Jews who reject the gospel (Romans 10:21), in contrast with those Gentiles who believe it (Isaiah 65:1; Romans 10:20). Note that it is clearly erroneous to assume that because Israel was, in a national sense, the people of God, that therefore every passage in which the Lord addresses His chosen nation refers to those who truly belong to Him, and that consequently texts warning sinning Israel must refer to the saved who are not living as they ought instead of to the unconverted (cf. Romans 9). Many of the texts employing the verb for "backsliding" in Hosea 4:16 refer to the lost (note the complete list of texts: Deuteronomy 21:18, 20; Nehemiah 9:29; Psalm 66:7; 68:7, 19; 78:8; Proverbs 7:11; Isaiah 1:23; 30:1; 65:2; Jeremiah 5:23; 6:28; Hosea 4:16; 9:15; Zechariah 7:11); indeed, none of the passages with סָרַר clearly and definitively refer to a disobedient saved person, although a reference to both the lost and disobedient saved is possible in several references.

[176] Compare the Psalm 78 texts and the status of Israel in the wilderness to "Excursus IV: Hebrews 3-4 As An Alleged Evidence For Perpetually Sinning Christians" below.

[177] The description of those who "seek" (בקשׁ) Jehovah is comparable. In addition to seeking the Lord in relation to specific requests (2 Samuel l2:16; 21:1; Ezra 8:21-23; Daniel 8:15; 9:3), some texts indicate that all believers seek Him (Zephaniah 1:4-6; Psalm 83:16—cf. the specific seeking after the Messiah, Malachi 3:1), other texts identify believers who are right with God, rather than backslidden believers, as those who seek Him (2 Chronicles 7:14; 15:2-4), and in many instances both the conversion of unsaved individuals and the restoration of those who already are the spiritual people of God can be in view (cf. the complete list of relevant verses: Exodus 10:11; 33:7; Deuteronomy 4:29; 2 Samuel 12:16; 21:1; 1 Chronicles 16:10–11; 2 Chronicles 7:14; 15:4, 15; 20:4; 22:9; Ezra 8:21–23; Psalm 27:8; 40:16; 69:6; 83:16; 105:3–4; Proverbs 2:4; 14:6; 15:14; 28:5; Isaiah 45:19; 51:1; 65:1; Jeremiah 29:13; 50:4; Daniel 8:15; 9:3; Hosea 3:5; 5:6, 15; 7:10; Zephaniah 1:6; 2:3; Zechariah 8:21–22; Malachi 3:1).

While a higher percentage of texts where people "seek" (דרשׁ) Jehovah refer to specific tasks (Genesis 25:22; Exodus 18:15, etc.) than do the references with the verb בקשׁ, with דרשׁ also certain texts indicate that all those who are saved seek God (Psalm 10:4; 14:2; 53:2; Isaiah 55:6; 65:1, 10; note also saved Gentiles seeking the Messiah, Isaiah 11:10), while others demonstrate that not all the redeemed seek after the Lord as they ought to (1 Chronicles 15:13; 2 Chronicles 16:12; 26:5). Note the complete list of relevant texts: Genesis 25:22; Exodus 18:15; Deuteronomy 4:29; 12:5; 1 Kings 22:5, 7–8; 2 Kings 1:3, 6, will backslide or "go back" from God (Psalm 53:3; Zephaniah 1:6),[178] and will reap the evil eternal consequences of their sin, since "the backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways" (Proverbs 14:14),[179] nonetheless believers can likewise backslide (Psalm 80:18).[180] Indeed, the saints, because of their indwelling sin, would certainly be turned back[181] were they not the recipients of sustaining grace from Jehovah; their flesh is bent to backsliding (Hosea 11:7; Isaiah 57:17), so they appropriately pray, "quicken us, and we will call upon thy name. Turn us again, O LORD God of hosts, cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved" (Psalm 80:18b-19). Because God quickens them, turns them, and causes His face to shine upon them, they can say, "so will not we go back from thee" (Psalm 80:18a). Further, all of the supernatural power of God exerted upon His people to keep them from backsliding is only bestowed upon the saints for Christ's sake—thus, they pray: "Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand, upon the son of man[182] whom thou madest strong for thyself. So will not we go back from thee" (Psalm

---

16; 3:11; 8:8; 22:13, 18; 1 Chronicles 10:14; 13:3; 15:13; 16:11; 21:30; 22:19; 28:8–9; 2 Chronicles 1:5; 12:14; 14:4, 7; 15:2, 12–13; 16:12; 17:3–4; 18:4, 6–7; 19:3; 20:3; 22:9; 30:19; 31:21; 32:31; 34:3, 21, 26; Ezra 4:2; 6:21; 7:10; Job 5:8; Psalm 9:10; 10:4; 14:2; 22:26; 34:4, 10; 53:2; 69:32; 77:2; 78:34; 105:4; 119:2, 10; Is 8:19; 9:13; 11:10; 31:1; 55:6; 58:2; 65:1, 10; Jerermiah 10:21; 21:2; 29:13; 37:7; Lamentations 3:25; Ezekiel 14:3, 7, 10; 20:1, 3, 31; 36:37; Hosea 10:12; Amos 5:4–6, 14; Zephaniah 1:6. Note also the verses that employ both בקשׁ and דרשׁ, often in parallelism: Deuteronomy 4:29; Judges 6:29; 1 Samuel 28:7; Isaiah 65:1; Jerermiah 29:13; Ezekiel 34:6; Zephaniah 1:6; Psalm 24:6; 38:13; 105:4; Job 10:6; Proverbs 11:27; 1 Chronicles 16:11; 2 Chronicles 22:9.

[178] The verb סוג is employed. The immediate context of both Psalm 53:3 and Zephaniah 1:6 make it clear that the backslider is unconverted in these passages (cf. also Romans 3:12). The complete list of סוג texts is: Deuteronomy 19:14; 27:17; 2 Samuel 1:22; Psalm 35:4; 40:14; 44:18; 53:3; 70:2; 78:57; 80:18; 129:5; Proverbs 14:14; 22:28; 23:10; Isaiah 42:17; 50:5; 59:13–14; Jeremiah 38:22; 46:5; Hosea 5:10; Micah 2:6; 6:14; Zephaniah 1:6. The verb is related to סִיג, "dross" (Psalm 119:119; Proverbs 25:4; 26:23; Isaiah 1:22, 25; Ezekiel 22:18–19), as dross is that which is turned away or cast aside in the process of refining metal; cf. כִּי־שִׁיג לֹו, 1 Kings 18:27.

[179] מִדְּרָכָיו יִשְׂבַּע סוֹג לֵב וּמֵעָלָיו אִישׁ טוֹב׃

[180] The verb סוג is also employed here; it is in the Qal both in Psalm 80:18 and in Psalm 53:3. The Qal also appears in Proverbs 14:14, where the passive participle סוג is translated "the backslider." In the Hiphil the verb means "to cause something to go back" or "to remove" (Deuteronomy 19:14; 27:27; Proverbs 22:28; 23:10; Hosea 5:10; Micah 6:14); compare the Hophal in Isaiah 59:14.

[181] Compare סוג in the Niphal in 2 Samuel 1:22; Psalm 35:4; 40:14; 44:18; 70:2; 78:57; 129:5; Isaiah 42:17; 59:13; Jeremiah 38:22; 46:5; Micah 2:6; Zephaniah 1:6. Note that in Jeremiah 38:22; 46:5 a literal turning back is in view (cf. also Psalm 35:4; 40:14; 70:2; 78:57; 129:5).

[182] The mediatorial Son of Man (בֶּן־אָדָם) of Psalm 80:17 is God's Anointed, His Messiah, the מְשִׁיחוֹ of Psalm 20:6, who is the "man of Thy right hand" (אִישׁ יְמִינֶךָ) in Psalm 80:17 in that He is the One who sits at Jehovah's right hand as Prophet, Priest, and King (cf. Psalm 110:1), and He is that Son of Man, the בֶּן־אָדָם, the second Adam through whom the dominion of man over the earth will be restored according to Psalm 8:4 (cf. Hebrews 2:6-9), and the One foreseen in Daniel 7:13: "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man [כְּבַר אֱנָשׁ] came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him."

80:17-18a). As God quickens His own for the sake of Christ, they also can follow the example of the incarnate Messiah, who said: "The Lord GOD hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back" (Isaiah 50:5).[183] Strengthened by God to remain right with Him, His obedient people consequently say: "[W]e [have] not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant. Our heart is not turned back,[184] neither have our steps declined from thy way" (Psalm 44:17-18).

Those without spiritual strength backslide[185] (Proverbs 1:32). Backsliding can increase (Jeremiah 5:6) in degree, becoming worse and worse (Jeremiah 14:7) as one slides backwards further and further, until it is "perpetual" as one continually "refuse[s] to return" (Jeremiah 8:5). Israel's backsliding was "wickedness . . . an evil thing and bitter," a result of having "forsaken the LORD thy God" and of not having His "fear . . . in thee" (Jeremiah 2:19). It is a rejection of God's call and a refusal to exalt Him (Hosea 11:7), holding fast to deceit instead of to the Lord (Jeremiah 8:5). Backsliding is spiritual infidelity (Jeremiah 3:6) that leads to the commission of outward wickedness. It contains within itself the seeds of judgment and evil for the one or the group that engages in it (Jeremiah 2:19). The backslidden saint will lose his closeness and communion with his God, the backsliding professor without Christ is in danger of having his rejection of grace eternally confirmed to him, and the backsliding church is in danger of ceasing to be the place of the special presence of God (Revelation 2:5), as the northern kingdom of Israel and the southern kingdom of Judah were rejected by God, and finally, in connection with the inaguration of the dispensation of grace, Israel as a whole was rejected for the church (Jeremiah 3:8-11; Romans 11). Backsliding brings the unstable believer chastisement and the lost destruction (Proverbs 1:32).

The backsliding of the nation of Israel presents a pattern for the nature of backsliding and restoration into a state of being right with God.[186] Backsliding requires that one fall from a previously present condition of some sort of unity with Jehovah,

---

183 אֲדֹנָי יְהוִה פָּתַח־לִי אֹזֶן וְאָנֹכִי לֹא מָרִיתִי אָחוֹר לֹא נָסוֹגְתִּי׃. Jehovah is the Speaker in v. 5 (cf. Isaiah 50:1), yet He is sent by a distinct Person who is also Jehovah (v. 4-5) and becomes incarnate to suffer the scorn of men and bring them salvation (v. 6-9) as the servant of Jehovah (v. 10; cf. Isaiah 52:13-53:12).

184 לֹא־נָסוֹג אָחוֹר לִבֵּנוּ

185 The texts examined below generally speak of backsliding with the word מְשׁוּבָה (Proverbs 1:32; Jeremiah 2:19; 3:6, 8, 11–12, 22; 5:6; 8:5; 14:7; Hosea 11:7; 14:5).

186 Texts speaking of the backsliding of Israel also illustrate that not individuals alone, but also the entirety of God's institution of public worship may be backslidden (cf. Jeremiah 2:19); thus, one can appropriately speak of the entire nation of Israel as backslidden at various times in the Old Testament and as right with God at other times (cf. Judges 10:6-16, etc.); likewise one can appropriately refer to a church in the dispensation of grace as right with God (Revelation 2:8-11; 3:7-13) or as backslidden (Revelation 2:1-7).

whether from the state of genuine fellowship with the Lord possessed by the justified who are right with God, or from the state of outward or civil union with God that the unconverted but formally obedient Israelite possessed through his circumcision and formal conformity to his national covenant, or from some other state of connection with God that is renounced.[187] Israel was restored from a backslidden condition by the repentance of the true people of God within the nation and the evangelical conversion or at least the restored civil conformity to the Law by the unsaved in Israel. Restoration from a backslidden state is a gift of God's grace, given to the people of God for His name's sake, not because they deserve restoration (Jeremiah 14:7). God determines, "I will heal their backsliding," not because of their merit, but because "I will love them freely" (Hosea 14:4). He "heals their backsliding" because His "anger is turned away" (Hosea 14:4) from them—free love and a removal of Divine anger is the cause of the gracious work of the Lord to heal the backsliding of His own. Jehovah says, "I will not execute the fierceness of mine anger . . . for I am God, and not man; the Holy One in the midst of thee," and therefore He says of His own, "They shall walk after the LORD" (Hosea 11:9-10; cf. Jeremiah 3:19). The saints do not first return to God, and then have Him love them, but their return is the result of sovereign and free love that draws them to repentance while they are yet in their rebellious and backslidden state. They hear the Lord call to them: "[T]hou hast played the harlot with many lovers; yet return again to me, saith the LORD" (Jeremiah 3:1). They recognize the magnitude of their sin and the justice of their God's chastisement of them (Jeremiah 3:2-3, 6ff.). They turn to God, not "feignedly," but "with [their] whole heart" (Jeremiah 3:10); the fact of God's continuing love for and goodness towards them while in their sin overwhelms them with shame at their iniquity and draws them to return to Him, in accordance with God's supernaturally working within them to lead them to freely and wholeheartedly turn to Him. Jehovah calls, "Turn, O backsliding[188] children . . . for I am married unto you. . . . Return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings," and they respond, "Behold, we come unto thee; for thou art the LORD our God" (Jeremiah 3:14, 22).

The New Testament maintains the distinction between the believer who is right with God and the one who is backsliding[189] that is taught in the Old Testament, while also following the Old Testament in affirming that, in another sense, all believers are 187 Psalm 53:3 is an instance in which all men, by virtue of their fall in Adam, have backslidden (סוג) from their former state of rectitude in the loins of their progenitor, racial representative, and federal head.

---

188 שׁוֹבָב; בָּנִים שׁוֹבָבִים is also employed for backsliding in Jeremiah 3:22; 50:6; Isaiah 57:17.

189 Compare, for a New Testament doctrine of backsliding, the discussion of terms relating to spiritual weakness in the section "Vivification as Strengthening" above.

right with God, while those who are not right are unconverted. Peter warned Simon the sorceror, "thy heart is not right in the sight of God,"[190] and consequently Simon was going to "perish . . . in the bond of iniquity" unless he repented and was truly converted (Acts 8:20-23). Simon, and all the unregenerate, are warned that they are not right with God and are set in contrast to all who are born again. On the other hand, all believers are "washed" and "clean every whit," but they still need to wash their feet (John 13:10). All believers are pure in heart[191] and will see God (Matthew 5:8; Titus 1:15) and all have "good"[192] hearts because they are "good men" (Matthew 12:35; Luke 6:45), for God purified their hearts at the moment of their faith and regeneration (Acts 15:9).[193] Nevertheless, not all, in another sense, have a pure heart (1 Timothy 1:5; cf. 1 Peter 1:22[194]). A believer's heart can be "hardened," hindering his spiritual understanding 190 ἡ γὰρ καρδία σου οὐκ ἔστιν εὐθεῖα ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ; Simon's heart was not "straight, direct . . . in moral sense, straightforward . . . opp[osite] σκολιός" (LSJ), that is, his heart was not "proper, right" but "morally bent or twisted" (BDAG, εὐθύς, σκολιός). The εὐθύς/σκολιός contrast is only employed in the New Testament of the contrast between the regenerate and the unregenerate (cf. Acts 13:10; 2 Peter 2:15 with Acts 2:40; Philippians 2:15; 1 Peter 2:18; the literal references to the words appear in Matthew 3:3; Mark 1:3; Luke 3:4–5 (εὐθύς) and Luke 3:5, σκολιός). Compare also εὐθύνω (John 1:23; James 3:4). On the other hand, not all believers faithfully make "straight paths" for their feet (τροχιὰς ὀρθὰς, Hebrews 12:13; cf. Acts 14:10 for the only other use of ὀρθός).

---

191 καθαρός.

192 ἀγαθός.

193 Acts 15:7-9 reads: And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe. And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us; and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith. πολλῆς δὲ συζητήσεως γενομένης ἀναστὰς Πέτρος εἶπε πρὸς αὐτούς, Ἄνδρες ἀδελφοί, ὑμεῖς ἐπίστασθε ὅτι ἀφ' ἡμερῶν ἀρχαίων ὁ Θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν ἐξελέξατο, διὰ τοῦ στόματός μου ἀκοῦσαι τὰ ἔθνη τὸν λόγον τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, καὶ πιστεῦσαι. καὶ ὁ καρδιογνώστης Θεὸς ἐμαρτύρησεν αὐτοῖς, δοὺς αὐτοῖς τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ Ἅγιον, καθὼς καὶ ἡμῖν· καὶ οὐδὲν διέκρινε μεταξὺ ἡμῶν τε καὶ αὐτῶν, τῇ πίστει καθαρίσας τὰς καρδίας αὐτῶν. The passage clearly refers in context to the definitive cleansing that takes place at the moment of faith and regeneration, not to progressive sanctification (as erroneously affirmed, among others, by Robert Pearsall Smith; see, e. g., pg. 92, "The Brighton Convention and Its Opponents." London Quarterly Review, October 1875; also, pg. 71, The Keswick Convention: Its Message, its Method, and its Men, ed. Charles Harford: "Faith in sanctification . . . is precisely the same faculty as that exercised in receiving remission, and its exercise is quite as simple as then; but it now takes another direction. And this direction figures very largely in the Scriptures in the matter of the Christian's victory over sin, or deliverance from it . . . see e.g. Acts xv. 9[.]"). At the same moment, the Gentiles heard (ἀκοῦσαι), believed (πιστεῦσαι), were witnessed to or attested to by God (ἐμαρτύρησεν) by being given (δοὺς) the Holy Ghost, had no difference put (διέκρινε) between them and the Jews, and had their hearts purified (καθαρίσας), namely, at the moment of faith, the faith whereby they came to trust in Christ, not faith wherein they were to live their Christian lives. Note the aorist tense of all the verbs. The Gentiles received an inward evangelical purification at the time of their conversion, a purification which the Old Testament ceremony of circumcision could only symbolize and point towards.

194 One could paraphrase the verse: "Since you have purified your soul by being born again, love with a pure heart." τὰς ψυχὰς ὑμῶν ἡγνικότες ἐν τῇ ὑπακοῇ τῆς ἀληθείας διὰ Πνεύματος εἰς φιλαδελφίαν ἀνυπόκριτον, ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδίας ἀλλήλους ἀγαπήσατε ἐκτενῶς·

(Mark 6:52; 8:17),[195] so that he is "slow of heart" to believe and receive truth (Luke 24:25),[196] but a strong believer can be a man after God's own heart (Acts 13:22), one who has greatly set apart or sanctified the Lord in his heart (1 Peter 3:15). The believer's heart can either convict him as guilty or not condemn him (1 John 3:20-21),[197] based on his manifestation of inward and outward Christlikeness (1 John 3:18-22). Double-minded and sinning believers are consequently commanded to cleanse their hands and purify their hearts (James 4:8), and walk in the light in order to experience continued cleansing from the blood of Christ (1 John 1:7).[198] Some believers are filled with the Spirit, others are not (Ephesians 5:18). The Old Testament doctrine that backsliders may be either unconverted persons or sinning believers appears in the New Testament fact that he who is placed under church discipline is treated as a heathen man and a publican (Matthew 18:15-20), that is, he is treated like an unregenerate person, although he may

---

[195] πωρόω is employed both for the hardness of the believer's heart as a result of his remaining indwelling sin and for the unchangeably dominant (although it can grow stronger through more active rebellion to God) inclination of the unregenerate man's heart; note the complete list of New Testament texts: Mark 6:52; 8:17; John 12:40; Romans 11:7; 2 Corinthians 3:14. In contrast, the verb σκληρύνω is employed only of the hard-heartedness of the unregenerate in the New Testament (Acts 19:9; Romans 9:18; Hebrews 3:8, 13, 15; 4:7; however, note the uses of σκληροκαρδία, Matthew 19:8; Mark 10:5; 16:14).

[196] While a definite right with God/not right with God distinction is taught in many passages that speak about the heart (καρδία), there are likewise many texts that associate the "heart" with the progressive aspect of sanctification; for example, while Christ is already in all believer's hearts (Romans 8:10; 2 Corinthians 13:5), progressive sanctification results in an increase in His special presence in the heart (Ephesians 3:17), just as it results in a greater measure of grace in the heart (Colossians 3:16) and progressive establishment of the believer's heart in unblameable holiness (1 Thessalonians 3:13; cf. Hebrews 13:9).

[197] ὅτι ἐὰν καταγινώσκῃ ἡμῶν ἡ καρδία, ὅτι μείζων ἐστὶν ὁ Θεὸς τῆς καρδίας ἡμῶν, καὶ γινώσκει πάντα. ἀγαπητοί, ἐὰν ἡ καρδία ἡμῶν μὴ καταγινώσκῃ ἡμῶν, παρρησίαν ἔχομεν πρὸς τὸν Θεόν. The verb καταγινώσκω, to "lay a charge against, convict, condemn" (see LSJ), is employed only in 1 John 3:20-21 and Galatians 2:11, where κατεγνωσμένος ἦν is translated "he was to be blamed."

[198] Note the distinction between the present tense of καθαρίζω for the cleansing that accompanies a continued walk in the light in 1 John 1:7 (καθαρίζει) and the aorist tense of in 1 John 1:9 (καθαρίσῃ) for the cleansing of sins that are in particular confessed. But note also: "[W]e would advert to a flagrant misapplication of a text in [1 John], which occurs in almost every [of the Keswick and Higher Life] books before us: "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." We have often of late been pained to hear this precious text misquoted and misapplied by a different class of men from those with whom we are now dealing. The contextual condition being overlooked, and the all-important personal pronoun us being omitted, the text is frequently used by evangelists as if it taught the immediate pardon of all the sins of the sinner, on his acceptance fo Christ as his Saviour. This is a wrong use of the text, but still a use of it in support of a great truth of which the Bible is full. But the [Higher Life] writers . . . pervert it utterly when they make it refer to their perfection of sanctification, or to sanctification at all. It does not teach the justification of the sinner, neither does it teach the sanctification of the believer, but it teaches the continuous acceptance of the saint, notwithstanding the imperfection of his holiness. Instead of teaching the [Keswick] doctrine in support of which it is so often quoted, it so distinctly implies the opposite, that it would have no meaning if that doctrine were true, unless, indeed, there be meaning in cleansing the clean" (pg. 274, "Means and Measure of Holiness," Thomas Smith. The British and Foreign Evangelical Review (April 1876) 251-280).

not in fact be unconverted, so that repentance and restoration can restore a disciplined member to the church body without a second call to new birth (1 Corinthians 5:1-13; 2 Corinthians 2:5-8). Some believers can fail to be right with God, partake of the Lord's Supper "unworthily"[199] (1 Corinthians 11:27, 29) and so bring judgment and chastisement upon themselves (1 Corinthians 11:29-32), having failed to properly examine[200] themselves (1 Corinthians 11:28) and act upon what they were enabled to discover, while other believers, those who are right with God, are, through Divine grace, worthy partakers. Some believers are counted worthy[201] (2 Thessalonians 1:11) in certain areas of spiritual life, and others are not. Not all the saints "walk worthy"[202] of their heavenly vocation to the same degree (Ephesians 4:1; Colossians 1:10; 1 Thessalonians 2:12), or conduct their lifestyle in a worthy way (Philippians 1:27) even though God has foreordained that all believers have a holy walk (Ephesians 2:10), so some degree of the worthiness that is appropriate to the saints of God (Romans 16:2; 3 John 6) will appear in the lives of all the elect. Believers who are wilfully allowing inward or outward sin[203] to fester do not have the "true heart" that is required for acceptable worship (Hebrews 10:22),[204] unlike believers who are upright and sincere before God in all areas of life and strive after the universal mortification of their sin. Furthermore, as in the Old Testament restoration from backsliding is a fruit of supernatural, preceding, sovereign grace, not a mere self-creation of the human will, so in the New Testament the restoration of saints from a backsliding condition, as their wider preservation and perseverence, is a fruit of the preceding, unmerited, free love and grace of Jesus Christ, their High Priest and effectual Mediator (John 17; Luke 22:32[205]).

---

199 ἀναξίως. Compare 1 Corinthians 6:2, ἀνάξιος.

200 δοκιμάζω. Such examination should be done with reference to an upright Christian walk, and being right with God in such a sense (1 Corinthians 11:28), and with reference to one's particular works as a believer (Galatians 6:4; Ephesians 5:10; 1 Thessalonians 5:21). Examination should also be undertaken with reference to one's state as regenerate or unregenerate, and thus to being right with God as opposed to being an object of His wrath (2 Corinthians 13:5), and to the claims of spiritual leaders (1 John 4:1).

201 ἀξιόω. Compare the other references to the verb in the NT in Luke 7:7; Acts 15:38; 28:22; 1 Timothy 5:17; Hebrews 3:3; 10:29. All believers, in a different sense, are worthy (καταξιόω); see Luke 20:35; 21:36; this sense also likely appears in Acts 5:41; 2 Thessalonians 1:5.

202 ἀξίως, here with περιπατέω, as in Ephesians 2:10. Exhortations with περιπατέω (4:1, 17; 5:2, 8, 15) form the divisions of the half of Ephesians devoted to application, chapters 4-6, and they build from the statement in 2:10, which itself is placed in contrast with the περιπατέω of the unregenerate in 2:2. Compare Colossians 1:10; 2:6; 3:7; 4:5.

203 That is, in terms of Hebrews 10:22, when their hearts are not sprinkled from an evil concscience, and their bodies washed in pure water.

204 Cf. Exposition of Hebrews, John Owen, on Hebrews 10:22.

205 In Luke 22:31-32, Christ says: "Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren" (Σίμων, Σίμων, ἰδού, ὁ Σατανᾶς ἐξῃτήσατο ὑμᾶς, τοῦ σινιάσαι ὡς τὸν

While all unregenerate men have a defiled conscience[206] (Titus 1:15), they can nonetheless either be condemned (John 8:9) or acquitted by their conscience (Acts 23:1; Romans 2:15; 2 Timothy 1:3) as they either meet or fall short of its standard, something they can do to the point that they cauterize their conscience (1 Timothy 4:2). Comparably, while believers cannot sear their consciences, and they all have a conscience that has been cleansed by Christ (Titus 1:15), they can nonetheless either have a clear (Acts 23:1; 24:16; Romans 9:1; 2 Timothy 1:3) or a condemning conscience (1 Corinthians 8:7-12;[207] Romans 14:20-23) for either specific acts (Romans 9:1; 13:5; 1 Corinthians 8:7-12; 10:25-29; 1 Peter 2:19) or for their overall state (Acts 24:16) as being upright before God or backsliding. Thus, all believers have a "good" or "pure" conscience in the same sense that all believers are right with God, but all the saints do not all have a "good" or "pure" conscience in that some believers are growing and others are backsliding (1 Timothy 1:5, 19; 3:9; 2 Timothy 1:3; Hebrews 13:18; 1 Peter 3:16, 21). A pure conscience marks all believers who are right with God; all upright Christians, all who seek for a universal, unexceptioned mortification of their sin, possess such a clean conscience, while all who are willfully holding on to or permitting sin in their lives have lost their clear conscience and have fallen from the state of being right with God. Believers who are right with God, and therefore have a clear conscience, can "rejoic[e] [in] . . . the testimony of [their] conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, [they] have had [their] conversation in the world, and more abundantly" towards other believers (2 Corinthians 1:12). In that they are not consciously and wilfully holding on to sin, they have "no more conscience of sins" as none come to their "remembrance"; their conscience is "clean"[208] rather than being an "evil conscience" (Hebrews 9:9, 14; 10:2-3; 22).[209]

σῖτον· ἐγὼ δὲ ἐδεήθην περὶ σοῦ, ἵνα μὴ ἐκλείπῃ ἡ πίστις σου· καὶ σύ ποτε ἐπιστρέψας στήριξον τοὺς ἀδελφούς σου.). The fact that Peter's faith would not fail was due to the intercession of Christ, and his turning again from a backslidden state was not an "if," but a "when," also as a result of the intercession of his Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous (1 John 2:1). Compare Christ's intercession for those who literally placed Him on the cross (Luke 23:34) and their coming to faith (Luke 23:47; Matthew 27:54; Mark 15:39).

206 συνείδησις; see John 8:9; Acts 23:1; 24:16; Romans 2:15; 9:1; 13:5; 1 Corinthians 8:7, 10, 12; 10:25, 27–29; 2 Corinthians 1:12; 4:2; 5:11; 1 Timothy 1:5, 19; 3:9; 4:2; 2 Timothy 1:3; Titus 1:15; Hebrews 9:9, 14; 10:2, 22; 13:18; 1 Peter 2:19; 3:16, 21.

207 The "brother" of 1 Corinthians 8:7-12 could either be a genuine Christian or a mere professing "brother" (cf. Acts 1:16; 2:29, 37; 3:17; 13:26; Hebrews 3:12, etc. for "brethren" referring to fellow Jews, or mere professors, rather than specifically to true believers), as evidenced by 8:11.

208 καθαρίζω, Hebrews 9:14; cf. 1 John 1:7, 9.

209 While Hebrews 9-10 specifically contrasts the conscience of those in the Mosaic dispensation with those in the dispensation of grace, so that the repeated animal sacrifices constantly brought sin to remembrance for those in the Old Testament, unlike those who have their sin removed once and for all

Baptists have historically accepted the existence of both the Biblical distinction between believers who are right with God and those who are not and the distinction between those who, as God's people, are eternally right with God, in contrast to the unregenerate, who abide in death.[210] In the recognition that only believers who are free through the sacrifice of Christ, the point about the individual conscience of the New Testament saint who is right with God being clean, free from the remembrance of sin, is still valid, although one could well say that all believers in the New Testament have had their conscience purged by the blood of Christ in the sense that they have all been justified, positionally sanctified, and legally "perfected forever" (Hebrews 10:10-14).

---

[210] For example, Jesse Mercer, in an 1806 Circular for the Georgia Baptist Association, spoke of "[t]hat restraint which a Christian[,] when right with God, places on the passions and propensities of the carnal heart, by which he subdues and maintains the victory over them; and secondly, that government which he exercises over the members of his body, by which he sanctifies them for, and employs them[,] in the service of God." (History of the Georgia Baptist Association, by Jesse Mercer, Part 3, "Circular Letters," Circular #10. Elec. acc. Baptist History Collection CD). In the seventeeth century, Baptist preacher Thomas Patient prayed that his fellow Christian (Oliver Cromwell here in particular) would continue in a state of uprightness or rightness before God:

> My constant prayers are at the throne of grace for you, that you may be kept upright with God, and in nothing left to sin and dishonour God; his name being so much concerned in it. Therefore, as God hath formerly given you the experience of the benefit of a humble walking with God, I beseech you in the bowels of Christ, still keep a close watch over your own heart, and labour to walk under the sense of that body of death and your daily infirmities, and to see a need of godly repentance daily, and humiliation, and fresh strength from Christ by faith, by which you may be kept and preserved in a fresh, sweet, and comfortable communion with God; for his presence will be all your happiness. Be sure to prize God's holy word, and all the rest of God's holy ordinances, and in so much as may be, neglect not to practise them, that you by your constant godly example may provoke others to holiness and to the fear of the Lord. And remember that the apostle bids, "Exhort one another daily, lest any be hardened through the deceitfullness of sin." Though you have ancient acquaintance with God and with your own heart, yet, say as David saith; Lord, leave me not when I am old and grey headed. Rest not in grace received, nor too much on former experiences, so as to neglect your future growth and progress in the ways of God. Apply that promise in Job 17; where God saith; The righteous shall grow stronger and stronger, and he that hath clean hands shall hold on his way. And know, it must be a special power of God that must keep you up to the will of God, to his honour and your comfort. And this, in the simplicity of my very heart, I desire may be in my own heart, and yours, and all that love God in sincerity and truth. ("Thomas Patient to his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Chief General if the Parliament's forces in Scotland, From Kilkenny, April 15, 1650, in Confessions of Faith and Other Public Documents, Underhill, Elec. acc. Baptist History Collection CD; cf. J. M. Cramp, Baptist History, Chapter 4, "The Troublous Period," (1567-1688).)

John Bunyan, in his 1675 Catechism, wrote: "Is there any other whose prayer God refuseth?-A. Yes; 'If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me' (Psa 66:18)" (pg. 687, Instructions for the Ignorant, John Bunyan, vol. 2) to which Bunyan's editor correctly noted, "That our prayers may be heard, the heart should be right with God, and our souls at peace with him through the Son of his love" (footnote #18, ibid).

Baptists likewise employed "right with God" terminology to contrast the regenerate and the unregenerate, a different sort of distinction from that between the upright and backslidden believer, but certainly a legitimate one. For instance, the famous nineteenth century Baptist pastor Charles Spurgeon preached: "Get right with God; confess thy sin; believe in Jesus Christ, the appointed Savior; be reconciled to God by the death of his Son; then all will be right between thee and the Father in heaven. We cannot bring men to this, apart from the Spirit of God" ("Is God In The Camp?" Sermon #2239, delivered at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington, April 9, 1891). While Spurgeon usually spoke of being right with God as a result of conversion, he also declared: "Brethren, let us look well to our own steadfastness in the faith, our own holy walking with God. . . . [A] sane and practical love of others . . . leads us to be mindful of our own spiritual state. Desiring to do its level best, and to use its own self in the highest degree to God's glory, the true heart seeks to be in all things right with God" (An All-Around Ministry: Addresses to Ministers and Students, section "What Would We Be?" elec. acc. Charles Spurgeon Collection CD Library, AGES Digital Software).

from allowed and willful sin are, in one sense, right with God, they are generally followed[211] by advocates of Keswick theology and certain other Higher Life theologies of sanctification,[212] whose proponents typically emphasize the Scriptural fact of the difference between believers who are walking in fellowship with the Lord and those who are not, as well as the necessity of calling the backsliding to a crisis of repentance and restoration of conscious and close fellowship with God. Unfortunately, Higher Life advocates tend to emphasize the contrast between the believer who is right with God and the one who is not but minimize the progressive transformation of the entire person of the Christian through progressive sanctification. In contrast, many proponents of Reformed theology, especially paedobaptists, tend to emphasize the progressive transformation involved in sanctification but restrict the term "right with God" to a contrast between the saved and the lost,[213] neglecting the clearly Biblical distinction between the upright and backslidden believer and thus seriously hindering spiritual growth. Sound Baptist theology has recognized the Biblical fact emphasized by the Reformed that all the justified are legally and perfectly right with God because of the imputed righteousness of Christ, while all are at different stages in the progressive transformation of their entire person into the moral likeness of Christ. Baptists have also recognized the Biblical fact that, as emphasized by Keswick and some other Higher Life theology, in another sense

---

211 The language itself is employed historically all the way back to the Ante-Nicene period, so that, for example, in the early third century, Hippolytus could write: "He who knows the wisdom of God, receives from Him also instruction, and learns by it the mysteries of the Word; and they who know the true heavenly wisdom will easily understand the words of these mysteries . . . for things spoken in strange language by the Holy Spirit become intelligible to those who have their hearts right with God" (On Proverbs, in Ante-Nicene Fathers, vol. 5, ed. Schaff).

212 For example, Lewis Sperry Chafer wrote: "Spirituality is not a future ideal; it is to be experienced now. The vital question is, 'Am I walking in the Spirit now?' . . . Much of everyone's life will be lived in the uneventful commonplace; but even there the believer should have conviction that he is right with God and in His unbroken fellowship" (Systematic Theology, vol. 6, pg. 295).

213 For example, the Heidelberg Catechism, Q/A 21, states: "True faith is not only a knowledge and conviction that everything God reveals in his Word is true. It is also a deep-rooted assurance, created in me by the Holy Spirit through the gospel, that, out of sheer grace, earned for us by Christ, not only others, but I too have had my sins forgiven, have been made forever right with God, and have been granted salvation." At the moment of regeneration, the Catechism affirms that the believer is made "forever right with God." A reference to this catechectical statement is the only reference to being "right with God" in a theology such as Herman Bavinck's massive Reformed Dogmatics (see vol. 4, Holy Spirit, Church, and New Creation, pg. 114, footnote #45). Andrew Naselli, in his doctoral dissertation Keswick Theology: A Historical and Theological Survey and Analysis of the Doctrine of Sanctification in the Early Keswick Movement, 1875-1920 (Bob Jones University, 1996), attacking the Keswick theology from within a Reformed theological trajectory, never affirms the existence of the "right with God" distinction, and even goes so far as to claim that Keswick "errs primarily by emphasizing a crisis of consecration and Spirit-filling" (pg. 240, ibid), when the fact that not all believers are filled with the Spirit and backslidden believers need to consecrate themselves anew to God are clearly Scriptural, and Naselli errs when he claims that the preaching of consecration and of Spirit-filling requires "a theologically errant premise that chronologically separates justification and sanctification" (pg. 240, ibid).

only some believers are right with God, walking before Him in uprightness and free from presumptuous and wilful disobedience.

However, the Biblical and Baptist doctrine of being right with God differs from the Keswick doctrine of full surrender, for both the requirement for and the results promised for those right with God in Scripture differ from those affirmed by the Keswick theology.[214] The Biblical requirement for being right with God is a sincere, universal, unexceptioned seeking after the mortification of all sin, so that the believer is not deliberately allowing or holding on to sin in his life. The results of being right with God are the Spirit's work of continued progress in the eradication of indwelling sin and strengthening of inner holiness, resulting in progressively greater closeness to, fellowship with, and likeness to the Lord. Nonetheless, within the believer who is right with God, the flesh still continually lusts after the Spirit, as the Spirit does against the flesh, and the believer recognizes that he has not yet reached the perfect and absolute holiness that he desires and is seeking after (Galatians 5:17; Romans 7:14-25). He humbly recognizes that even his best and most holy actions and desires are defiled by his remaining indwelling sin and require cleansing by the great High Priest who bears the iniquity of even the holy things of His people (Exodus 28:38). He maintains a continued watchfulness against his indwelling sin, humbles himself for it, and strives ever the more to put it to death (Romans 8:13; Colossians 3:5). The Keswick doctrine affirms that after a full surrender, one enters into a higher life that has moved beyond the state described by the Apostle Paul of his Christian life in Romans 7:14-25, so that all struggle with sin is over. Indeed, striving against sin is spiritually dangerous. Being right with God, in the Higher Life theology, brings with it a complete counteraction of the motions of indwelling sin. One must no longer be conscious of any sin within his heart[215]—indeed, one who still feels an inward struggle with sin has not fully surrendered or entered into the blessing of the victorious life. While king David said, "my sin is ever before me" (Psalm 51:3), the Higher Life doctrine frowns upon and seeks to deny the existence of the struggle against indwelling sin that, Scripturally, one grows the more aware of the more

---

214 See "Excursus VIII: An Analysis of Keswick Theology as Set Forth In So Great Salvation: The History and Message of the Keswick Convention, by Steven Barabas" below.

215 E. g., for the Keswick leader Evan Hopkins, "what Scripture denominates the perfect heart [is] the heart entirely loyal, so far as it understands itself and apprehends the requirements of the Lord" (pg. 70, Evan Harry Hopkins: A Memoir, Alexander Smellie). "The Smiths [Hannah W. & Robert P.] . . . hold that every Christian who takes Christ as his sanctification is kept from all consciousness of sin" (pg. 269, "Means and Measure of Holiness," Thomas Smith. The British and Foreign Evangelical Review (April 1876) 251-280; see pgs. 39-40, 65-66 of Holiness by Faith by Robert P. Smith, and Thomas Smith's critique on pgs. 269-274 of "Means and Measure of Holiness.").

like the Lord he grows.[216] The faith-based, Christ-dependent strife against sin which characterizes the believer who is Biblically right with od is replaced with a eudaemonistic "perfect rest"[217] that, by discouraging active mortification and striving against sin, seriously harms spiritual progress in the saints by ignoring the activity of the indwelling enemy within and makes their spiritual life shallow. Furthermore, it contributes to spiritual confusion. The believer who adopts the Higher Life doctrine, yet recognizes that Galatians 5:17 is still characteristic of his state after his sincere surrender to the Lord, is made to think that he is not really right with God, forcing him into a morbid introspection to see what he has not truly surrendered. Since he never will, in this life, enter a state when Romans 7:14-25 and Galatians 5:17 become things of the past, he is in great danger of growing spiritually frustrated and hopeless as his repeated attempts at "full surrender" never bring him into the promised state of freedom from all the workings of indwelling sin. On the other hand, a believer who convinces himself that he has truly entered into a state where indwelling sin is entirely counteracted must ignore the reality and effects of his sinful flesh, which continue to lust against the Spirit despite his erroneous affirmation to the contrary, which both gives the flesh greater opportunity to work and lends itself to a sinful pride. Thankfully, the believer who has met the Biblical requirements can have confidence that he is indeed right with God, rejoice in the Biblical promise of progressive victory over indwelling corruption and all its manifestations, and not trouble himself about the chimera of the Higher Life. The Bible-believing Baptist should reject both the Reformed and Higher Life errors on being right with God, and wholeheartedly embrace the Biblical truth that the upright and sincere Christian, one who is not willfully allowing and tolerating sin, is right with God and can make tremendous progress spiritually as the Holy Spirit supernaturally produces spiritual growth within him as he walks with the Lord and strives against sin.

Application of the Doctrine of Being Right with God

---

216 John Owen, speaking of communion with Christ, properly noted:

> [Believers must] continually keep alive upon their hearts a sense of the guilt and evil of sin; even then when they are under some comfortable persuasions of their personal acceptance with God. Sense of pardon takes away the horror and fear, but not a due sense of the guilt of sin. It is the daily exercise of the saints of God, to consider the great provocation that is in sin,—their sins, the sin of their nature and lives; to render themselves vile in their own hearts and thoughts on that account; to compare it with the terror of the Lord; and to judge themselves continually. This they do in general. "My sin is ever before me," says David. They set sin before them, not to terrify and affright their souls with it, but that a due sense of the evil of it may be kept alive upon their hearts. ("How the saints hold communion with Christ as to their acceptation with God," Chapter 8 in Of Communion with God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, John Owen)

217 E. g., "[H]e abides in utter unconcern and perfect rest . . . perfect abandonment of ease and comfort . . . the Higher Christian Life" (Chapter 3, The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life, Hannah W. Smith).

The question, then, arises: are you right with God? "[T]hus saith the LORD of hosts; Consider your ways" (Haggai 1:5, 7).[218] Consider closely your way in general. Are you allowing sin to flourish in your life? Consider your particular courses of action. Do you live an upright Christian life at home, at work, at church, in your family, and in all other relations? Would those who know you best say you are right with God, or not? Have you chosen sin over righteousness, the way of the devil instead of the way of God? Is sin a pleasant thing to you, or do you love and desire pureness of heart?

If you are not right with God, but are backsliding, why do you persist in such vile rebellion? Why will you allow sin to fester and grow in your life? Will you deliberately set your affection upon that which is the greatest evil in the world, sin, rather than upon what is the greatest good in the universe, God, and what is of the greatest value to you, holiness? Will you prefer the image of the devil to the image of God? What sort of idolatry is this? Will you be doubleminded, and halt between two opinions, about whether you prefer to grow in wickedness or Christlikeness? Do you not see how vile and abominable is anything less than wholehearted, devoted, entire consecration to God? Why will you hesitate?

Consider some of the evils that will come on you for your refusal to be right with God.

1.) Such rebellion brings upon you severe chastisement. Physical scourging is a very painful and awful experience; will you, then, bring upon yourself a terrible scourging by the Omnipotent Holy One (Hebrews 12:6)?

2.) Sin has its own awful consequences built into it. Its pleasures are but for a short season, while the sorrow and regret it brings are eternal.

3.) Allowing sin to control your life is utterly foolish. People do many things that evidence a serious lack of intelligence. Tolerating and choosing sin, however, makes you a greater fool than all the people who manifest their lack of intelligence in the affairs of this life. Esau was a fool when he traded the blessings of the Abrahamic covenant for a bowl of soup (Genesis 25:29-34), a fact he recognized later with bitter tears, to no avail (Hebrews 12:17). When you choose to forsake eternal, ineffably great blessings from the God of heaven to hold onto your sin, you place yourself among the greatest of all fools.

4.) Your toleration of sin brings you into a terrible blindness, as you do not recognize what awful evil and terrible defilement you are bringing yourself into.

---

[218] That is, "Set your heart on your ways" (KJV margin; שִׂימוּ לְבַבְכֶם עַל־דַּרְכֵיכֶם׃).

5.) Your rejection of being right with God eliminates your fellowship with God and your ability to pray and have your prayers answered. God wishes to give you more good things than you can ask or think in answer to prayer, but you will refuse all of your Father's good gifts, considering, instead, your sin the greater value. "For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones" (Isaiah 57:15). Will you persist in your pride and ungodliness, or humble yourself and return to fellowship with that Holy One who has placed a love for and desire to seek for Himself within you?

6.) Your backsliding harms others as well. You are not able to minister to others spiritually. You will be accountable at Christ's judgment seat for the blood of the souls you did not win because you were not right with God. You will be accountable for the spiritual shipwreck in the lives of many of God's dear children who were influenced by your hypocricy and bad example. You should expect an ungodly seed, since you cannot, like Jonadab, trust the Lord for a godly seed that will be a joy to you in later years (2 Kings 10:15; Jeremiah 35:19; Proverbs 22:6).

7.) In summary, your backsliding brings upon you everything that is evil, and withholds from you everything that is good.

It is unnatural for a believer not to be right with God; that is the natural state of the enemies of God, and those who fall back are to be treated like unconverted persons. God has established a covenant with you, to give you a new heart and a new spirit. He has chosen you out of the world that you might be like His Son. Why should an heir of heaven act like an heir of hell? If you abide for some time in this state, you should fear your Father's chastisement. If you can persistently abide in a state of rebellion, unchastised, you are an empty professor, not one of the Father's children. Fear, then, fear greatly, the avenging Justice of God, who will destroy both your soul and your body in hell. The worst for you, worst by far, is yet to come, for the smoke of your torment will ascend for ever and ever, and you will have no rest day or night, but experience the full weight of the fierceness and fury of your Almighty enemy. Repent, and believe the gospel! Do not delay, for you do not have inherent ability to respond favorably to the Lord. Yes, you will only come to Christ if God permits (Hebrews 6:3).

Indeed, just as an unregenerate person can only come to Christ if the Father draws him (John 6:44), so for the backsliding believer the restoration of a right heart is a supernatural product of God's Almighty grace (Psalm 51:10). Therefore, the time for you to get right with God is now, not later. Do not presume upon the grace of God, for ability to get right is from Him, comes from His supernatural energy working in you. If

He leaves you to yourself, you will fall, 2 Chronicles 32:31. If even a righteous man like Hezekiah, when not right with God, had as his punishment that his sons would be eunuchs and all that he and his fathers had stored up would be taken away, what will happen to you if you are not right with God?

Learn also from Hezekiah's example, oh Christian who is right with God, how much you must beware of pride when God especially manifests His grace to you or uses you, for Hezekiah's pride and fall took place after an astonishing Divine miracle in response to his prayer, where not only was marvelously healed from a deadly sickness, but the day itself was lengthened. "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation" (Matthew 26:41), especially when God has in a particular way manifested Himself to you. Do not let pride well up within your heart. Remember that it is a law that, when you would in particular seek to do good, then evil is present with you (Romans 7:21).[219]

Most importantly, oh backsliding Christian, meditate upon the fact that not having a right heart greatly dishonors your Redeemer. The Father has had your holiness on His heart from eternity, predestinating you to it; He sent His Son to die for you; He has given you His Spirit to sanctify you. Why will you resist Him? Will you sin, and thus identify yourself with those who crucified Christ, since sin is the reason for His death? When the Father has been so gracious as to adopt you into His family; when Christ has condescended to such an extent that He would leave His everlasting glory and unite His Divine Person to a human nature identical to yours, sin only excepted, and then drink to the dregs the cup of wrath that you had earned at the hand of Divine Justice; when the Holy Spirit has made you, a poor wretched sinner, into His holy temple, so that your body is as the holy inner sanctum of the Old Testament tabernacle, how can you permit sin to grow unresisted in your members? What wretched ingratitude is this! Will not the goodness of God move you to repentance? Will you not humble yourself greatly before God, and in tears turn from your backsliding? Consider that your Father, from whom you are running, loves you with an infinite, eternal, unchangeable, love still—yes, that He loves you, unholy as you are, as He loves His spotlessly holy incarnate Son (John 17:23).[220] Rather than casting you off for your crimes—infinite crimes, the least of which merits ineffably awful wrath in the eyes of the Holy One—Jehovah calls to you, "Turn, O backsliding children, saith the LORD; for I am married unto you. . . . Return, ye [219] See The Nature, Power, Deceit, and Prevalency of the Remainders of Indwelling Sin in Believers, John Owen.

---

[220] The love of John 17:23 is specifically for Christ as the Theanthropos, rather than for the eternal Son considered simply as the eternally begotten One in the Godhead. The Father loves the elect as He does that truly human Mediator to whom they have been gloriously united.

backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings." (Jeremiah 3:14, 22a). Respond, then, and say, "Behold, we come unto thee; for thou art the LORD our God" (Jeremiah 3:22b). Consider Christ's high priestly ministry—at that very time when you reject Him and sin, He intercedes for you, acts as your Advocate before the Father, and points to His infinitely valuable work on the cross—a cross that you are at that moment justifying—not for your condemnation, but for your pardon (1 John 2:1). You have in Christ One who is infinitely tender, sympathetic to your weaknesses, ready and able to succor you. Oh, what love is this! Will you not come to Him, resolving never to stray any more?

Furthermore, believer who is right with God, magnify the mercy and goodness of Christ, your Redeemer, for only because of the grace He purchased for you at the cost of His life's blood, and because of continual sustainance from Him, can you be right with God. All your strength, support, and ability to walk with God and have an upright heart before Him is only yours for Christ's sake. "Not unto us, O LORD, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake" (Psalm 115:1). Be on guard against the sin which can so easily beset you. Strive to grow faster than you are already growing. You are in fellowship with God—so seek Him all the more. Out of love for His appearing, purify yourself, even as He is pure (1 John 3:3), yet do not rest in your progress, but keep your eye fixed on Christ, the Author and Finisher of your faith, and fight the good fight of faith, depending on Him alone, until the day comes when, at either His coming for all His saints or the end of your own personal race, your battle will be over, and you can sing, forever freed from sin, with the redeemed, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing. . . . Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen" (Revelation 5:12; 7:12).

II. The Means of Vivification

1.) Vivification By "Exercise"

God vivifies His people in conjunction with their exercise of spiritual graces; as the believer, enabled by the Holy Spirit, exercises faith, hope, love, and all spiritual virtues, as he flees vice, as he practices spiritual discipline and puts in practice all the inward and outward attitudes and actions that characterize the Son of Man, the second Adam, and rejects all the evils of attitude and action that characterize the fallen first Adam, he grows in holiness. The old man is progressively put to death, and the new man grows in strength by means of exercise. By practicing holiness the Christian becomes more holy; by fighting and mortifying sin he becomes less sinful. This truth is evidenced by an abundance of Biblical terminology.

1.) Vivification by "Exercise"

First, Scripture specifically states that exercise[221] produces godliness. Paul commanded Timothy to "refuse" evil and "exercise [himself] rather unto godliness" (1 Timothy 4:7).[222] Growth in godliness by means of disciplined spiritual exercise is compared to growth in physical strength by means of physical exercise (1 Timothy 4:8).[223] One develops from being a spiritual baby to one of "full age,"[224] of Christian maturity, "by reason of use[225] . . . [by] exercis[ing] . . . [the] senses . . . to discern both good and evil" (Hebrews 5:11-14).[226] Those who are disciplined or "exercised"[227] by "chastening" see it "yiel[d] the peaceable fruit of righteousness" (Hebrews 12:11). The godly can have their hearts strengthened in righteousness, like the ungodly can grow in their wickedness by means of a "heart . . . exercised with covetous practices" (2 Peter 2:14).[228] "[E]very holy work, of hand, or head, or heart, is a contribution to the formation of holy habits, very much as physical exercises develop the muscles which perform them.

---

[221] The words involved are γυμνάζω (1 Timothy 4:7; Hebrews 5:14; 12:11; 2 Peter 2:14), γυμνασία (1 Timothy 4:8), [222] τοὺς δὲ βεβήλους καὶ γραώδεις μύθους παραιτοῦ. γύμναζε δὲ σεαυτὸν πρὸς εὐσέβειαν· ἡ γὰρ σωματικὴ γυμνασία πρὸς ὀλίγον ἐστὶν ὠφέλιμος· ἡ δὲ εὐσέβεια πρὸς πάντα ὠφέλιμος ἐστιν, ἐπαγγελίαν ἔχουσα ζωῆς τῆς νῦν καὶ τῆς μελλούσης. (1 Timothy 4:7-8).

[223] Thus, γυμνάζω is "to experience vigorous training and control, with the implication of increased physical and/or moral strength — 'to train, to undergo discipline'" or "to control oneself by thorough discipline — 'to discipline oneself, to keep oneself disciplined'" (Louw-Nida, γυμνάζω, 36.11; 88.88).

[224] τέλειος, "pertaining to being mature, full-grown, mature, adult . . . pertaining to being fully developed in a moral sense" (BDAG, def. #2, 4).

[225] ἕξις in Hebrews 5:14 indicates an "acquired habit . . . trained habit, skill" (Liddell-Scott, def. #3), "a repeated activity — 'practice, doing again and again, doing repeatedly'" (Louw-Nida).

[226] The passage specifically states that the mature have their "senses exercised to discern both good and evil . . . by reason of use," in contrast with the immature, without specifically and directly stating that the transition takes place by means of the exercise, but the fact is nonetheless indubitably implied.

[227] The perfect participle γεγυμνασμένοις in Hebrews 12:11 indicates that the resultant state of possessing a spiritually exercised or spiritually strengthened state resulted from the externally presented action of a correct response to chastening.

[228] καρδίαν γεγυμνασμένην πλεονεξίαις ἔχοντες. The perfect participle indicates the state of a more wicked heart that resulted from the exercise of evil. Such exercise in evil can lead to the unregenerate being all the more unable to "cease from sin" (ἀκαταπαύστους ἁμαρτίας, 2 Peter 2:14), while the opposite sort of exercise by the righteous leads them to progressively greater difficulty sinning and greater ease and higher degrees of obedience.

To such an extent as this there is action and reaction, a holy heart prompting to holy acts, and these again reflecting an influence back upon the heart."[229]

Since holiness is increased by means of spiritual exercise, how necessary it is for the Christian to exercise himself unto godliness! Spiritual laziness will not produce growth, but weakness. Failure to engage in such exercise will certainly hinder your growth in godliness, and as neglect of exercise in the physical realm will certainly weaken you physically, neglect of spiritual exercise will certainly make you spiritually weak. Furthermore, your failure to exercise yourself unto godliness is itself indulgence in sin, and such indulgence will lead to ever-greater spiritual weakness. On the contrary, diligently pursue godliness, engage in right decisions, exercise your spiritual senses to discern good and evil, and patiently, regularly, yea, continuouly exercise and employ the means through which the Holy Spirit strengthens your inner man. View seasons of trial and tribulation as occasions in which you can, in a particular way, strengthen your spiritual life as your heavenly Father puts you under special strain so that you might come out all the stronger. For as through physical exercise God will certainly strengthen your physical body, so through diligent spiritual exercise God will certainly strengthen your inner man spiritually and renew you ever the more into the image of Christ.

2.) Vivification By "Striving"

Growth in holiness and progressive weakening of indwelling sin takes place as the believer strives against and fights sin, depending upon his sanctifying God for victory. Spiritual life increases as the believer continually[230] "striveth for the mastery" (1 Corinthians 9:25), running spiritually with the perseverence and extreme effort, diligence, and labor of one who wins a competitive athletic race (9:24) or a boxing match (9:26),[231] keeping under (9:27) his indwelling sin and striving against it so that it is weakened and, 229 Pg. 267, "Means and Measure of Holiness," Thomas Smith. The British and Foreign Evangelical Review (April 1876) 251-280.

---

230 That is, he is ὁ ἀγωνιζόμενος, the present tense conveying the continual action. The "striving" connected with spiritual life in the New Testament is regulary connected with the present tense and conveys continual action (1 Corinthians 9:25; Colossians 1:29; 4:12; 1 Timothy 6:12). A definite difference between ἀγωνίζομαι in the present and in the aorist is apparent in the Koiné; compare, in the LXX, the aorists in 1 Maccabees 7:21; 2 Maccabees 8:16; 13:14; Sirach 4:28 with the present in 2 Maccabees 15:27, or the aorists in 1 Clement 35:4; 2 Clement 7:1–3 and the present tenses in 2 Clement 7:4 & Barnabas 4:11 among the apostolic patristics.

231 Note πυκτεύω, "to fight with fists, box" (BDAG), to "box, spar" (Liddell-Scott); cf. Testament of Job 4:10, καὶ ἔσῃ ὡς ἀθλητὴς πυκτεύων καὶ καρτερῶν πόνους καὶ ἐκδεχόμενος τὸν στέφανον, "For you will be like a sparring athlete, enduring pain and receiving the crown," or Philo, On the Preliminary Studies 48.

as it were, boxed and pummeled down,[232] given a black eye,[233] and brought into slavish subjection.[234] Strenuous strife, agonizing[235] to defeat sin, must not be self-dependent or independent moralism, but be "labour" that is "striving according to [God's] working," as God "worketh . . . in [the believer] mightily" (Colossians 1:29)—God supernaturally energizes[236] the believer's effort to mortify sin and exercise virtue and thus remains the sole ultimate Agent for all increase in spiritual life and eradiction of sinful tendencies, but the believer must nonetheless "labou[r] fervently" (Colossians 4:12),[237] and "fight" (1 Timothy 6:12; 2 Timothy 4:7). He must fight spiritual battles clothed in spiritual armor (Ephesians 6:10-17) with the sword of the Word of God (Ephesians 6:17; Hebrews 4:12).[238] He must run like one who is determined to win his spiritual race (1 Corinthians 9:24, 26), removing every obstacle that could hinder him (Hebrews 12:1; 2 Thessalonians 3:1; cf. Galatians 2:2; 5:7; Philippians 2:16).[239] He must "resis[t][240] unto blood, 232 οὕτω πυκτεύω, ὡς οὐκ ἀέρα δέρων· ἀλλ᾽ ὑπωπιάζω μου τὸ σῶμα καὶ δουλαγωγῶ, 1 Corinthians 9:26-27.

---

233 The verb ὑπωπιάζω, found in 1 Corinthians 9:27 and Luke 18:5 and translated "keep under" and "weary" in those texts, means "to blacken an eye, give a black eye, strike in the face," and by extension "to bring someone to submission by constant annoyance, wear down" or "to put under strict discipline, punish, treat roughly, torment" (BDAG; cf. Liddell-Scott).

234 Paul brings his body into subjection (1 Corinthians 9:27) with the verb δουλαγωγέω, meaning "enslave, subjugate . . . mak[e] a slave out of" (BDAG), "make a slave, treat as such" (Liddell-Scott), for so vice would not enslave him as it did the unregenerate (Apology of Justin Martyr 2:11). One subdues (δουλαγωγέω) men by beheading them, crucifying them, throwing them to wild beasts, and with chains, fire, and all other kinds of torture (Justin's Dialogue with Trypho 110).

235 The English verb to agonize is related etymologically to the Greek verb under discussion, agonidzomai (ἀγωνίζομαι).

236 Thus, note the use of ἐνέργεια and ἐνεργέω in Colossians 1:29 for God's supernaturally energizing and working in the believer to will and exert energy to do His good pleasure (Philippians 2:13, ὁ Θεὸς γάρ ἐστιν ὁ ἐνεργῶν ἐν ὑμῖν καὶ τὸ θέλειν καὶ τὸ ἐνεργεῖν ὑπὲρ τῆς εὐδοκίας). Compare the other texts that refer to the energizing and working of the Father (1 Corinthians 12:6; Ephesians 1:3, 19-20, 3:20; Colossians 1:29), the Son (Ephesians 4:16; Philippians 3:21), the Holy Spirit (1 Corinthians 12:11), and the undifferentiated Trinity (Galatians 2:8; Ephesians 3:7; Colossians 2:12) in believers, and the association of this working with the Word (1 Thessalonians 2:13). The Head of the body, the church, energizes the members of His body to work, and as they work, because of His working in them, individual growth and corporate growth in the congregation takes place (Ephesians 4:15-16).

237 Of course, Colossians 4:12 speaks of Epaphras' fervent labor in prayer for others, not his own labor to grow in grace, but the text nevertheless illustrates the nature of the verb ἀγωνίζομαι, which in other texts is more directly related to one's personal mortification of sin and vivification.

238 The sword (μάχαιρα) of the Word is the Christian's only offensive fighting weapon. It is noteworthy how the abundance of athletic struggle imagery in sanctification contrasts with the paucity of imagery of physical warfare—while the μάχαιρα of the Word appears in Ephesians 6:17; Hebrews 4:12, words like πολεμέω, πόλεμος, μάχομαι, μάχη, or διαμάχομαι, although all present in the New Testament, are not employed of the believer's holy struggle with sin. It appears that the wholesome and profitable nature of bodily exercise (1 Timothy 4:8) made its terms more fit to describe sanctification than terms for the wretched evil of the butchery of men in the warfare of nations.

239 The imagery of "running" (τρέχω) for the Christian life is thus employed in 1 Corinthians 9:24, 26; Galatians 2:2; 5:7; Philippians 2:16; 2 Thessalonians 3:1; Hebrews 12:1.

striving[241] against sin" (Hebrews 12:4) and exert intense effort or "contend"[242] (Jude 3) for the truth. The Christian life is a "fight" or "conflict"[243] like a gladiatorial contest (cf. 1 Corinthians 15:32[244]), a wrestling match (Ephesians 6:12),[245] or a grueling athletic race (Hebrews 12:1) or struggle in other athletic contests.[246] The believer must exert the most intense efforts to defeat his old man and utterly vanquish indwelling sin, and as he does so, God gives him victory and he grows more holy.

By exercise in this manner the Christian is progressively vivified. Do you so exercise yourself to gain mastery over sin? Consider that God admonishes you to exercise yourself like one who is to win a race (1 Corinthians 9:24); thus, you should strive to be the most holy person possible. Mediocrity is not acceptable. You are not to strive to be like the average man of the world, who is yet on his way to eternal damnation (Matthew 7:13-14). You are not to be like the average professor of Christianity, and be satisifed with yourself, rest content and put yourself at ease, if you think you have arrived to equality with them, or with the spiritual level you see in your godly friends and acquaintances. You are not to commend yourself by comparing yourself favorably with others (2 Corinthians 10:12)—indeed, the further along you go, and the more 240 ἀντικαθίστημι, "to resist by actively opposing pressure or power" (Louw-Nida).

---

241 ἀνταγωνίζομαι, "struggle against" (BDAG; Liddell-Scott). The present participle indicates continual striving. The believing Hebrews were already striving against sin, and Paul exhorted them to do so even up to the point of violent death and the shedding of their own blood. They were not to "faint" in this struggle (Hebrews 12:5).

242 ἐπαγωνίζομαι, "to extert intense effort on behalf of something, contend. [The verb is] used in athletic imagery[.] . . . The primary semantic component in the use of this verb in Jude 3 is the effort expended by the subject in a noble cause; as such it is the counterpart of the author's πᾶσαν σπουδὴν ποιούμενος and a manifestation of ἀρετή" (BDAG). Philo employs the verb of one who "still strives on, in no way remitting his intense anxiety, but without admitting any excuse, or any hesitation, or vacillation; using all the means in his power to gain his object" (On the Posterity and Exile of Cain 13: ὅμως ἐπαγωνιεῖται μηδὲν συντόνου σπουδῆς ἀνιείς, ἀλλὰ πᾶσι τοῖς παρ᾽ ἑαυτοῦ εἰς τὸ τυχεῖν ἀπροφασίστως καὶ ἀόκνως συγχρώμενος).

243 ἀγών, "contest, race . . . a struggle against opposition, struggle, fight" (BDAG). See Philippians 1:30; Colossians 2:1; 1 Thessalonians 2:2; 1 Timothy 6:12; 2 Timothy 4:7; Hebrews 12:1.

244 θηριομαχέω; compare Josephus, Antiquities 16:137 (ἦν οὖν εὐθὺς ἐν καθιερώσει μείζονες ἑορταὶ καὶ παρασκευαὶ πολυτελέσταται κατηγγέλκει μὲν γὰρ ἀγῶνα μουσικῆς καὶ γυμνικῶν ἀθλημάτων παρεσκευάκει δὲ πολὺ πλῆθος μονομάχων καὶ θηρίων ἵππων τε δρόμον καὶ τὰ πολυτελέστερα τῶν ἔν τε τῇ Ῥώμῃ καὶ παρ᾽ ἄλλοις τισὶν ἐπιτηδευμάτων; There was accordingly a great festival, and most sumptuous preparations made presently, in order to its dedication; for he had appointed a contention in music, and games to be performed naked; he had also gotten ready a great number of those that fight single combats, and of beasts for the like purpose; horse races also, and the most chargeable of such sports and shows as used to be exhibited at Rome, and in other places.).

245 πάλη, Liddell-Scott. Compare the uses in Justin Martyr, Dialogue with Trypho 125 and Philo, Allegorical Interpretation 3:190 for Jacob's wrestling (πάλη) with God in Genesis 32, and, Philo alleges, against his passions and for virtue (On Sobriety 65; On the Change of Names 14).

246 cf. ἀγών, Liddell-Scott; cf. Wisdom 4:2; 2 Maccabees 4:18; 2 Clement 7:1-5.

Christlikeness you have come to, the more lowly you will be in your own eyes,[247] and the higher you will esteem others in comparison with yourself—but to set before you the standard of the perfect holiness of the Man Christ Jesus, and set your face as a flint after that goal, striving, agonizing, after it, pummeling and beating down your indwelling sin, and refraining from resting in this agonzing spiritual battle for even a moment until you reach perfect deliverance at the end of your earthly sojourn. You are also to be "temperate in all things" (1 Corinthians 9:25). Such temperance will affect your spiritual discipline, as you spend focused time in prayer and reading, study, memorization, and meditation on the Scriptures. Short times of prayer and Bible study are hardly evidence of striving—while the Bible never specifies an exact amount of time to spend in spiritual exercises, as such will vary depending upon an innumerable number of circumstances, surely it is far more common for believers to spend too little time than too much. How many hours does a marathon runner spend daily in his training? How many are you spending seeking to win Christlikeness and a heavenly crown? Do you carefully listen to preaching and seek to apply it to yourself the way an Olympic athelete listens to coaching about how to defeat his competition and win the gold medal? Furthermore, are you temperate in your interaction with others in the church and in the world? A haughty spirit that is unwilling to heed rebuke and hardens itself against instruction will never win the prize. Do you run with focused, continuing, passionate diligence, or "as uncertainly," being faithful one day and careless the next? How long would a boxer last in his match if every second round he let down his guard? Do you let down your guard and let sin knock you around, falling, perhaps, for the same wiles time and time again? Beware, for in so doing you are set to be a "castaway" (1 Corinthians 9:27), a spritual loser. Will you, in shame, come in the last place in the only race with eternal value? Can you strive for vanities such as money or approval—or even for necessary things such as the care of your family, but fail to strive in the most important contest of all? You have the constant work of a lifetime ahead of you—strive after that perfect holiness that is the unchangeable and eternal standard of the Holy One and your Redeemer, so that you can say truthfully the words of Paul: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day" (2 Timothy 4:7-8).

---

247 While one can hardly say that these diminutives are exclusive, so that by employing a lesser one Paul would have, if asked, denied the greater, it is noteworthy that, comparing Paul's earlier to his later epistles, as the great saint grows in holiness and thus humility, he designates himself first as "least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle" (1 Corinthians 15:9), then later "less than the least of all saints" (Ephesians 3:8), and finally "chief . . . [of] sinners" (1 Timothy 1:15).

"The just shall live by faith"—
Faith and Salvation in All Its Apects

Faith is associated in Scripture with the receipt of salvation in all its aspects—justification, progressive sanctification, and ultimate glorification are connected to faith. The specific character of the connection between faith and salvific blessings is of tremendous value to the understanding of both the character of Christian conversion and Christian growth in grace.

The first reference to belief in the Old Testament—which is also the first reference to reckoning, crediting, or imputation, and the first reference to the adjective righteousness,[248] is Genesis 15:6, the paradigmatic statement concerning the father of faith, Abraham: "And he believed in the LORD; and he counted it to him for righteousness."[249] Genesis 15, in which the gospel was preached to Abraham (Galatians 3:8), records the patriarch's faith[250] in that God[251] who promised the Seed of the [248] That is, to צְדָקָה; however, in continuity with the example of Abraham, Noah is mentioned as a "just man" (אִישׁ צַדִּיק) because Jehovah could say, "for thee have I seen righteous before me" (צַדִּיק לְפָנַי אֹתְךָ רָאִיתִי) earlier (Genesis 6:9; 7:1) in the first references to the צדק word group in the canon, where Noah was the recipient of undeserved and free grace (Genesis 6:8), was accounted a righteous man on that basis, and therefore became a holy man (Genesis 6:9).

---

[249] וְהֶאֱמִן בַּיהוָה וַיַּחְשְׁבֶהָ לּוֹ צְדָקָה׃

καὶ ἐπίστευσεν Αβραμ τῷ θεῷ καὶ ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικαιοσύνην "And Abram believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness" (LXX).

Credidit Abram Deo, et reputatum est illi ad justitiam. "Abram believed God, and it was reputed to him unto justice." (Vulgate)

וְהֵימִין בְּמֵימְרָא דַיוי וְחַשְׁבַהּ לֵיה לְזָכוּ׃ "Then he believed in the Word of the Lord, and he reckoned it to him for merit." (Targum Onkelos)

והיימן אברם בשם ממרא דייי ואתחשבת ליה לזכו׃ "Then Abram believed in the name of the Word of the Lord, and it was reckoned to him for merit." (Targum Neofiti)

והוות ליה הימנותא במימרא דייי וחשבה ליה לזכו דלא אטח לקמיה במילין "Then he had faith in the Word of the Lord, and he reckoned it to him for merit, because he did not speak rebellion before him with words." (Targum Pseudo-Jonathan)

[250] "[T]he believing of which Moses speaks, is not to be restricted to a single clause of the promise here referred to, but embraces the whole; secondly that Abram did not form his estimate of the promised seed from this oracle alone, but also from others, where a special benediction is added. Whence we infer that he did not expect some common or undefined seed, but that in which the world was to be blessed. . . . [T]his promise was not taken by him separately from others. . . . God does not promise to his servant this or the other thing only, as he sometimes grants special benefits to unbelievers, who are without the taste of his paternal love; but he declares, that He will be propitious to him, and confirms him in the confidence of safety, by relying upon His protection and His grace. For he who has God for his inheritance does not exult in fading joy; but, as one already elevated towards heaven, enjoys the solid happiness of eternal life. It is, indeed, to be maintained as an axiom, that all the promises of God, made to the faithful, flow from the free mercy of God, and are evidences of that paternal love, and of that gratuitous adoption, on which their salvation is founded. Therefore, we do not say that Abram was justified because he laid hold on a single Abrahamic covenant (Genesis 15:2-5), the Christ.[252] Although Abraham failed to perfectly keep the law, as is evident in the rest of Genesis, he was nonetheless accounted righteous because of the work of the Messiah. Genesis 15:6 thus sets a pattern that by faith alone in God and His Messiah sinful men are counted righteous by Jehovah, whether at the moment of initial conversion as those without any inward righteousness at all, as Abram was when an ungodly idolator in Ur of the Chaldees,[253] or at the highest point of sanctification possible to the people of God on earth.[254] While Abraham's word, respecting the offspring to be brought forth, but because he embraced God as his Father" (Calvin, Commentary on Genesis 15:6).

---

[251] Consider that the One communicating with Abraham was Jehovah the Son, for He is the One who revealed the Father (John 1:18) in all the Old Testament theophanies.

[252] John 8:56. Galatians 3:16 is very clear that Abraham's faith had respect to the Christ, who was not only the representative, but the embodiment of the promised race—for this cause the people of Israel typified Christ (cf. Matthew 2:15; Hosea 11:1).

[253] Romans 4:3-5 (Abram was "ungodly" until his conversion by faith in the land of Ur); Joshua 24:2-4; Genesis 15:7; Hebrews 11:8-10; Acts 7:2-4.

[254] Calvin, in his Commentary on Genesis, fitly notes:

> Abram was justified by faith many years after he had been called by God; after he had left his country a voluntary exile, rendering himself a remarkable example of patience and of continence; after he had entirely dedicated himself to sanctity and after he had, by exercising himself in the spiritual and external service of God, aspired to a life almost angelical. It therefore follows, that even to the end of life, we are led towards the eternal kingdom of God by the righteousness of faith. On which point many are too grossly deceived. For they grant, indeed, that the righteousness which is freely bestowed upon sinners and offered to the unworthy is received by faith alone; but they restrict this to a moment of time, so that he who at the first obtained justification by faith, may afterwards be justified by good works. By this method, faith is nothing else than the beginning of righteousness, whereas righteousness itself consists in a continual course of works. But they who thus trifle must be altogether insane. For if the angelical uprightness of Abram faithfully cultivated through so many years, in one uniform course, did not prevent him from fleeing to faith, for the sake of obtaining righteousness; where upon earth besides will such perfection be found, as may stand in God's sight? Therefore, by a consideration of the time in which this was said to Abram, we certainly gather, that the righteousness of works is not to be substituted for the righteousness of faith, in any such way, that one should perfect what the other has begun; but that holy men are only justified by faith, as long as they live in the world. If any one object, that Abram previously believed God, when he followed Him at His call, and committed himself to His direction and guardianship, the solution is ready; that we are not here told when Abram first began to be justified, or to believe in God; but that in this one place it is declared, or related, how he had been justified through his whole life. For if Moses had spoken thus immediately on Abram's first vocation, the cavil of which I have spoken would have been more specious; namely, that the righteousness of faith was only initial (so to speak) and not perpetual. But now since after such great progress, he is still said to be justified by faith, it thence easily appears that the saints are justified freely even unto death. I confess, indeed, that after the faithful are born again by the Spirit of God, the method of justifying differs, in some respect, from the former. For God reconciles to himself those who are born only of the flesh, and who are destitute of all good; and since he finds nothing in them except a dreadful mass of evils, he counts them just, by imputation. But those to whom he has imparted the Spirit of holiness and righteousness, he embraces with his gifts. Nevertheless, in order that their good works may please God, it is necessary that these works themselves should be justified by gratuitous imputation; [since] some evil is always [naturally] inherent in them. Meanwhile, however, this is a settled point, that men are justified before God by believing not by working; while they obtain grace by faith, because they are unable to deserve a reward by works. Paul also, in hence contending, that Abram did not merit by works the righteousness which he had received before his circumcision, does not impugn the above doctrine. The argument of Paul is of this kind: The circumcision of Abram was posterior to his justification in the order of time, and therefore could not be its cause, for of necessity the cause precedes its effect. . . . Both arguments are therefore of force; first, that the righteousness of Abram cannot be ascribed to the covenant of the law, because it preceded his circumcision; and, secondly, that the righteousness even of the most perfect characters perpetually consists in faith; since Abram, with all the excellency of his virtues, after his daily and even remarkable service of God, was, nevertheless, justified earthly pilgrimage evidenced that true faith results in a life characterized by faithfulness and obedience, nonetheless the patriarch was judicially righteous before God only through imputed righteousness received by faith alone. The verb employed, to believe,[255]

> by faith. For this also is, in the last place, worthy of observation, that what is here related concerning one man, is applicable to all the sons of God. For since he was called the father of the faithful, not without reason; and since further, there is but one method of obtaining salvation; Paul properly teaches, that a real [imputed] and not personal righteousness is in this place described. (Commentary on Genesis, 15:6)

As, throughout life, justification is by faith alone, and Genesis 15:6 is an instance of this continuing faith in the patriarch's life as the perpetual and sole instrumentality for his receipt of legal righteousness, something present in him by Divine grace from the point of his initial conversion in Ur of the Chaldees (cf. Hebrews 11:8-11), so one notes that the Hebrew structure of Genesis 15:6 validates that Abraham's faith in Jehovah, as expressed in the verse, was not one that arose afresh at that moment, but had been in exercise in the past, from the moment of his conversion, up to that point in time. The waw + perfect form that begins the verse, וְהֶאֱמִן, has an "aspect of . . . repeated or durative action," as opposed to the simple perfect or qatal form, which has an "aspect . . . of a single and instantaneous action" (pg. 375, 119x, A Grammar of Biblical Hebrew, Paul Joüon & Takamitsu Muraoka, rev. English ed. Leiden: Netherlands Institute of Near Eastern Studies, 2005), so that a "longer or constant continuance in a past state is . . . represented by the perfect with וְ (as a variety of the frequentative perfect with וְ), in Gn 15:6, 34:5, Nu 21:20, Jos 9:12; 22:3*b*, Is 22:14, Jer 3:9" (GKC, 112ss). Continuing belief, arising out of a moment where belief began in the past, is in view in the וְהֶאֱמִן of Genesis 15:6, as the same sort of aspectual force is conveyed in the "held his peace" (וְהֶחֱרִשׁ) of Genesis 34:5, the "which looketh" (וְנִשְׁקָפָה) of Numbers 21:20, the "is mouldy" (נִקְדִים וְהָיָה) of Joshua 9:12, the "have kept" (וּשְׁמַרְתֶּם) of Joshua 22:3, the "was revealed" (וְנִגְלָה) of Isaiah 22:14, and the "came to pass" (וְהָיָה) of Jeremiah 3:9; compare also the "did eat" (וְאָכְלוּ) of Genesis 47:22. Furthermore, since the and he counted it of Genesis 15:6 (וַיַּחְשְׁבֶהָ) continues with waw consecutive the sequence started by the and he believed (וְהֶאֱמִן), and thus continues the aspectual force of the waw + perfect of and he believed, the continued reckoning of the patriarch as righteous from the past point of his conversion until the time of Genesis 15:6, simply through the instrumentality of faith, is also expressed in the verse (compare the continuing defilement and adultery in the וַתִּנְאַף . . . וַתֶּחֱנַף . . . וְהָיָה of Jeremiah 3:9).

[255] אמן. The complete list of texts with the verb is: Genesis 15:6; 42:20; 45:26; Exodus 4:1, 5, 8–9, 31; 14:31; 19:9; Numbers 12:7; 14:11; 20:12; Deuteronomy 1:32; 7:9; 9:23; 28:59, 66; Judges 11:20; 1 Samuel 2:35; 3:20; 22:14; 25:28; 27:12; 2 Samuel 7:16; 1 Kings 8:26; 10:7; 11:38; 2 Kings 17:14; 1 Chronicles 17:23–24; 2 Chronicles 1:9; 6:17; 9:6; 20:20; 32:15; Nehemiah 9:8; 13:13; Psalms 19:8; 27:13; 78:8, 22, 32, 37; 89:29, 38; 93:5; 101:6; 106:12, 24; 111:7; 116:10; 119:66; Job 4:18; 9:16; 12:20; 15:15, 22, 31; 24:22; 29:24; 39:12, 24; Proverbs 11:13; 14:15; 25:13; 26:25; 27:6; Isaiah 1:21, 26; 7:9; 8:2; 22:23, 25; 28:16; 33:16; 43:10; 49:7; 53:1; 55:3; Jeremiah 12:6; 15:18; 40:14; 42:5; Lamentations 4:12; Hosea 5:9; 12:1; Jonah 3:5; Micah 7:5; Habakkuk 1:5. Commenting on a part of the meaning of אמן that relates to Genesis 15:6, the Theological Dictionary of the New Testament notes:

> [T]he concept of אמן embraces a twofold relation: recognition and acknowledgment of the relation of claim and reality, and the relation of the validity of this claim for him who says Amen to all its practical consequences. . . . This leads us to the simplest definition of the hiphil הֶאֱמִן ("to believe"), which the LXX renders 45 times by πιστεύειν, 5 by ἐμμιστεύειν, and once each by καταπιστεύειν and πείθεσθαι. It means "to say Amen with all the consequences for both obj. and subj." . . . [T]he use of הֶאֱמִן toward men gives prominence to the total basic attitude along the lines of "to trust." . . . A further point is that the OT uses הֶאֱמִן only for the personal relation, for behind the word which is believed is the man whom one trusts. The hiphil finds an analogous use as an expression for man's relation to God. Here, too, it has declarative rather than causative significance. It means "to declare God נֶאֱמָן," "to say Amen to God." But this does not embrace the whole meaning . . . the mutual relation between God and man is of the very essence of faith . . . God is the true author of the relation between God and man. . . . [T]he setting and origin of the religious use of the stem אמן in the OT tradition is to be sought in the sacral covenant with [Jehovah]. . . . In the relation denoted by הֶאֱמִן the OT saw the special religious attitude of the people of God to [Jehovah]. (pgs. 186-188, 191, Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, vol. 6, Kittel) signifies to trust in, to believe in in the Hebrew form employed in Genesis 15:6,[256] and signifies to be firm, trustworthy in its foundational idea and to prove to be firm, reliable,

---

[256] The Hiphil + ב. אמן + ב is found in Genesis 15:6; Exodus 14:31; Numbers 14:11; 20:12; Deuteronomy 1:32; 28:66; 1 Samuel 27:12; 2 Kings 17:14; 2 Chronicles 20:20; Job 15:31; 24:22; 39:12; Psalm 27:13; 78:22, 32, 37; 89:38; 106:12; 119:66; Proverbs 26:25; Jeremiah 12:6; Jonah 3:5; Micah 7:5. The definite majority of these texts refer to belief in Jehovah. In all these texts, except Psalm 78:37; 89:28; and one of the three instances of אמן in 2 Chronicles 20:20, where the verb is in the Niphal, אמן is always in the Hiphil. Warfield comments on the Hiphil of אמן:

> Obviously it is a subjective causative, and expresses the acquisition or exhibition of the firmness, security, relability, faithfulness which lies in the root-meaning of the verb, in or with respect to its object. The מַאֲמִין is therefore one whose state of mind is free from faintheartedness (Isaiah 7:9) and anxious haste (Isaiah 28:16), and who stays himself upon the object of his contemplation with confidence and trust. The implication seems to be, not so much that of a passive dependence as of a vigorous active commitment. He who, in the Hebrew sense, exercises faith, is secure, assured, confident (Deuteronomy 28:66; Job 24:22; Psalm 27:13), and lays hold of the object of his confidence with firm trust.
>
> The most common construction of הֶאֱמִין, is with the preposition ב, and in this construction its fundamental meaning seems to be most fully expressed. It is probably never safe to represent this phrase by the simple "believe"; the preposition rather introduces the person or thing in which one believes, or on which one believingly rests as on firm ground. This is true even when the object of the affection is a thing, whether divine words, commandments, or works (Psalm 106:12; 119:66; 78:32), or some earthly force or good (Job 39:12; 15:31; 24:22; Deuteronomy 28:66), It is no less true when the object is a person, human (1 Samuel 27:12; Proverbs 26:25; Jeremiah 12:6; Micah 7:5) or superhuman (Job 4:18; 15:15), or the representative of God, in whom therefore men should place their confidence (Exodus 19:9; 2 Chronicles 20:20). It is above all true, however, when the object of the affection is God Himself, and that indifferently whether or not the special exercise of faith adverted to is rooted in a specific occasion (Genesis 15:6; Exodus 14:31; Numbers 14:11; 20:12; Deuteronomy 1:32; 2 Kings 17:14; 2 Chronicles 20:20; Psalm 78:22; Jonah 3:5). The weaker conception of "believing" seems, on the other hand, to lie in the construction with the preposition ל, which appears to introduce the person or thing, not on which one confidingly rests, but to the testimony of which one assentingly turns. This credence may be given by the simple to every untested word (Proverbs 14:15); it may be withheld until seeing takes the place of believing (1 Kings 10:7; 2 Chronicles 9:6); it is due to words of the Lord and of His messengers, as well as to the signs wrought by them (Psalm 106:24; Isaiah 53:1; Exodus 4:8, 9). It may also be withheld from any human speaker (Genesis 45:26; Exodus 4:1, 8; Jeremiah 40:14; 2 Chronicles 32:15), but is the right of God when He bears witness to His majesty or makes promises to His people (Isaiah 43:10; Deuteronomy 9:23). In this weakened sense of the word the proposition believed is sometimes attached to it by the conjunction כִּי (Exodus 4:5; Job 9:16; Lamentations 4:12). In its construction with the infinitive, however, its deeper meaning comes out more strongly (Judges 11:20; Job 15:22; Psalm 27:13), and the same is true when the verb is used absolutely (Exodus 4:31; Isaiah 7:9; 28:16; Psalm 116:10; Job 29:24; Habakkuk 1:5). In these constructions faith is evidently the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen. . . .
>
> God Himself is the object to which [Old Testament saints] believingly turn, or on whom they rest in assured trust, in some eleven cases. In two of these it is to Him as a faithful witness that faith believingly turns (Deuteronomy 9:23; Isaiah 43:10). In the remainder of them it is upon His very person that faith rests in assured confidence (Genesis 15:6; Exodus 14:31; Numbers 14:11; 20:12; Deuteronomy 1:32; 2 Kings 17:14; 2 Chronicles 20:20; Psalm 78:22; Jonah 3:5). It is in these instances, in which the construction is with ב, together with those in which the word is used absolutely (Exodus 4:31; Isaiah 7:9; 28:16; Psalm 116:10), to which may be added Psalm 27:13 where it is construed with the infinitive, that the conception of religious believing comes to its rights. The typical instance is, of course, the great word of Genesis 15:6, 'And Abram believed in the LORD, and he counted it to him for righteousness'; in which all subsequent believers, Jewish and Christian alike, have found the primary example of faith. The object of Abram's faith, as here set forth, was not the promise which appears as the occasion of its exercise; what it rested on was God Himself, and that not merely as the giver of the promise here recorded, but as His servant's shield and exceeding great reward (xv.1). It is therefore not the assentive but the fiducial element of faith which is here emphasized; in a word, the faith which Abram gave Jehovah when he 'put his trust in God' (ἐπίστευσεν τῷ θεῷ, LXX), was the same faith which later He sought in vain at the hands of His people (Numbers 14:11; cf. Deuteronomy 1:32; 2 Kings 17:14), and the notion of which the Psalmist explains in the parallel, 'They believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation' (Psalm 78:22). To believe in God, in the Old Testament sense, is thus not merely to assent to His word, but with firm and unwavering confidence to rest in security and trustfulness faithful, trustworthy in a different, frequently passive verb form.[257] Faithfulness and trustworthiness arise from faith, and are impossible without it, so that faith, through the initial exercise of which justification was received, may, by continued acts of faith that are a product of a believing new nature,[258] evidence the saint's inward faith and faithfulness in outward fidelity. Thus, the Old Testament teaches that one who believes in God,[259] another person,[260] an event,[261] or a thing,[262] reckons the thing in question, or the person, as one who will continue or endure the same,[263] as trustworthy[264] or upon Him. . . . In the Greek of the Septuagint πιστεύειν takes its place as the regular rendering of הֶאֱמִין, and is very rarely set aside in favour of another word expressing trust (Proverbs 26:25 πείθεσθαι). . . . It was by being thus made the vehicle for expressing the high rfeligous faith of the Old Testament that the word was prepared for its New Testament use ("The Biblical Doctrine of Faith," Warfield, in Biblical Doctrines, vol. 2 of Works).

---

257 The Niphal. Note the lexicon:

אמן basic mng. to be firm, trustworthy, safe; MHb., Ph. n.m. אלאמן; Syr. etpe. to occupy oneself constantly with; Hb. hif. > Arm. הֵימִין, Syr. haimen → BArm., DISO 17, to believe, > Arb. haymana to say Amen :: Arb. ʾamina to be safe, ʾamuna to be faithful, IV to believe, Soq. to speak the truth, OSArb. ʾmn(t) security; Eth. Tigr. ʾam(a)na to believe (Leslau 11, Wb. 356a); Eg. mn to be firm. . . . nif: . . . 1. to prove to be firm, reliable, faithful Gn 4220 1K 826 Jr 1518 Ps 788 (אֶת־אֵל to God, of רוּחַ,) 37 8929 (לוֹ concerning him, of בְּרִית) 935 1016 1117 1C 1723f 2C 19 617 2020, to remain faithful to (עִם) Hos 121 (:: Sept.); pt. trustworthy, faithful 1S 235 2214 1K 1138 Is 121.26 82 2223.25 3316 Jr 425 Ps 198 8938 Jb 1220 Pr 2513 Neh 98 1313; (of God) Dt 79 Is 497; —to be permanent, to endure: people Is 79, dynasty 1S 2528 2S 716, tokens of mercy Is 553, God's name 1C 1723f, water Is 3316, illness Dt 2859; נֶאֱמָנָה that which is trustworthy Hos 59, נֶאֱמַן־רוּחַ be faithful Pr 1113, נֶאֱמָן intended to be faithful Pr 276; —3. בְּ נֶאֱמָן entrusted with (alt. proved to be reliable) Nu 127, with לְ appointed 1S 320. . . . hif: . . . causative —1. to believe = to think (:: 3 !) with inf., that Jb 1522, with כִּי Ps 11610 Jb 916 La 412; with לְ and inf., to be convinced that Ps 2713; —2. to regard something as trustworthy, to believe in: a thing Hab 15, a word Ex 48f 1K 107 Is 531 Ps 10624 Pr 1415 2C 96; with בְּ, to (have) trust in Nu 2012 1S 2712 Mi 75 Sir 36 [33]31; with לְ Gn 4526 Ex 41.8 Jr 4014; abs. Ex 45 Jb 2924 (dl. לֹא, alt. as 4); —3. to have trust in, to believe in, God: with בְּ Gn 156 Ex 1431 (and in Moses) Nu 1411 2012 Dt 132 2K 1714 Jon 35 Ps 7822 2C 2020; with לְ Dt 923 Is 4310; abs. to believe Ex 431 Is 79 2816; → TWNT 6:182ff; RGG 2:1588f; Eichrodt 2:190ff; Pfeiffer ZAW 71:151ff, relation between πίστις and πιστεύειν Ebeling ZThK 55:70ff; —Ju 1120 (trad. to entrust, Sir 4513 hif. or hof.) rd. וַיָּמֵאן; Is 3021 תֵּימִינוּ (: ימן hif); cj. Jb 3924 (usu. keep still) (וְלֹא יַשְׁמִאִיל) יֵימִין (Duhm Hiob, Hölscher Hiob). (KB)

258 While the New Testament teaches more explicitly and apparently the growth of faith in the believer, the Old Testament suggests the possibility of strengthening and development in אמן, rather than a simply static notion, through the uses in 2 Kings 10:1, 5 & Esther 2:7 for supporting, nourishing, or bringing up as related to confirming or strengthening (see BDB; cf. τιθηνός in 2 Kings 10:1, 5, LXX & θρεπτός in Esther 2:7).

259 Exodus 14:31; Number 14:11; 20:12; Deuteronomy 1:32; 9:23; 2 Kings 17:14; 2 Chronicles 20:20; Nehemiah 9:8; Psalm 78:8, 22, 32; Isaiah 7:9; 28:16; 43:10; Jonah 3:5. In a text such as Isaiah 7:9 belief in Jehovah and in the message of His prophet are indivisibly connected; cf. Isaiah 53:1.

260 Genesis 45:26; Exodus 4:1, 8, 31; 14:31; 19:9; 1 Samuel 27:12; 2 Chronicles 20:20; 32:15; Proverbs 26:25; Jeremiah 12:6; 40:14; Micah 7:5.

261 Exodus 4:5; Job 15:22; 29:24; 39:24; Psalm 27:13; Lamentations 4:12; Habakkuk 1:5.

262 Exodus 4:9, 31; 1 Kings 10:7; 2 Chronicles 9:6; Job 9:6; 39:12; Psalm 78:37; 106:12, 24; 116:10; 119:66; Proverbs 14:15; Isaiah 7:9; 53:1.

263 Deuteronomy 28:59; Jeremiah 15:18.

264 Genesis 42:20; Judges 11:20; Job 4:18; 12:20; 15:15, 31; Micah 7:5.

faithful,[265] or sure,[266] or confirmed or established,[267] and therefore worthy of assured confidence.[268] Those descendents of Jacob who believe in Jehovah, those who believe and consequently become the faithful, of whom Abraham is the paradigm,[269] are those

---

265 Numbers 12:7; Deuteronomy 7:9; 1 Samuel 2:35; 22:14; Nehemiah 9:8; 13:13; Psalm 101:6; Proverbs 11:13; 25:13; 27:6; Isaiah 1:21, 26; 8:2; 49:7; Jeremiah 42:5; Hosea 11:12.

266 1 Samuel 2:35; 25:28; 1 Kings 11:38; Job 24:22; Psalm 19:7; 93:5; 111:7; Isaiah 22:23, 25; 33:16; 55:3; Hosea 5:9.

267 1 Samuel 3:20; 2 Samuel 7:16; 1 Kings 8:26; 1 Chronicles 17:23-24; 2 Chronicles 1:9; 6:17; 20:20; Psalm 89:28, 37.

268 Deuteronomy 28:66.

269 Genesis 15:6; Nehemiah 9:8. Note that Nehemiah 9:8's נֶאֱמָן לְפָנֶיךָ, with its Niphal of 'aman with lamed following, is different from Genesis 15:6's use of the Hiphil + beth in וְהֶאֱמִן בַּיהוָה. Faithfulness in the heart is a result of coming to initial faith in Jehovah. Kaiser explains the relationship between faith and faithfulness or obedience in the receipt of the promises by Abraham and his seed:

> The third and climactic element in the promise [of the Abrahamic covenant] was that Abraham and each of the successive sons of promise were to be the source of genuine blessing; indeed, they were to be the touchstone of blessing to all other peoples on the earth. All nations of the world would be blessed by them, for each was the mediator of life to the nations (of Abraham—12:3; 18:18; 22:17–18; of Isaac—26:3–4; and of Jacob—28:13–14).
>
> The apostle Paul would later point to this phrase ("all the peoples on earth will be blessed through you," Ge 12:3), and declare that it was the same "gospel" he preached (Gal 3:8). Simply put, the good news was that "in [the promised seed] all the nations of the earth shall be blessed" (Gal 3:8). Thus the embryo of God's good news could be reduced to the linchpin word "blessing." The one who was blessed was now to be the conduit of blessing of universal proportions to the whole world. In contrast to the nations who sought a "name" merely for themselves, God made Abraham a great name so that he might be the means of blessing all the nations on earth.
>
> But, it might be asked, how were the nations to receive this blessing mediated by Abraham or any of his successive sons? The method must be the same as it was for Abraham. It would be by faith: "Abram believed the LORD, and he credited it to him as righteousness" (Ge 15:6).
>
> The literal rendering of Genesis 15:6 is simply he believed in [Jehovah] (he'emîn ba YHWH). This, of course, was more than a vague intellectual assent to a supreme deity in which he decided merely to become a theist. The object of his faith was to be found in the content of the total promise. As such, priority may be given to the oldest, most ancient, and most central part of that promise: the person or the man of promise signified by that male descendant who was to come from the seed (3:15). Indeed, when God first met Abraham, the issue of progeny was not specifically included but only inferred (12:1–3), for the first clause promised to make Abraham into a great nation. His trust, then, was in the Lord—but particularly in the Lord who had promised. . . .
>
> Since the verb "to believe" in Genesis 15:6 is the Hebrew hiphil form (the causative stem) of the verb 'āman (cf. English "amen"), Geerhardus Vos pointed to the "causative-productive sense" of the verb and to the preposition. Both, in his judgment, showed that faith had its source and its object in the personal [Jehovah]. For Abraham, it meant he had to renounce all his human efforts to secure the promise (as witnessed by his attempting at first to legally adopt Eliezer as his son and the inheritor of his estate, Ge 15:2), and he had to depend on the same divine person who had spoken of the future to work in the present as well as the future, to accomplish what he said he would do. Thus, Abraham possessed the promises of God, as yet unrealized, when he possessed the God of the promises and his trustworthy word, even though he never got to enjoy the reality of the content of the promise—the land itself—during his lifetime. . . .
>
> In Genesis 22:16–18 Abraham was told, "Because (kî ya'an ʾašer) you have done this and have not withheld your son, your only son, I will surely bless you . . . because ('ēqeb ʾašer) you have obeyed me." In Genesis 26:5 the blessing is repeated to Isaac "because ('ēqeb ʾašer) Abraham obeyed me and did everything I required of him, keeping my commands, my decrees and my instructions." In my judgment, the conditionality was not attached to the promise, but only to the participants who would benefit from these abiding promises. If the condition of faith was not evident, then the patriarch would become a mere transmitter of the blessing without personally inheriting any of its gifts directly. Such faith must be evident also in an obedience that sprang from faith. Certainly, the promise was not initiated in either chapter 22 or 26; that had long since been settled. But each chapter did have a sensitive moment of testing or transition. Furthermore, the election of God had been with a purpose not only of blessing Abraham and the nation who are redeemed and counted as righteous[270] and will in the last days receive the Promised Land,[271] along with believing Gentiles (Jonah 3:5, 10) who will similarly inherit the Millennial earth and the eternal kingdom. Because of Abraham's faith in the Christ set forth in the Abrahamic covenant, as expressed in Genesis 15:6, God formally ratified that covenant with the patriarch (Genesis 15:7-22) and promised him that his seed would inherit the land. Life in the Promised Land (Genesis 15:18-22) is specified as given, by grace and for Christ's sake,[272] to both Abraham personally and to his seed for ever, and ultimately to Christ as head over them all, as Abraham and his corporate and Messianic seed[273] will possess the Land in the resurrection during the Millennial kingdom

---

(18:18) but also of charging him and his household to "keep the way of the LORD by doing what is right and just, so that (l^{e}ma'an) the LORD will bring about for Abraham what he has promised him" (v. 19).

The connection is undeniable. The duty of obedience (law, if you wish) was intimately tied up with promise as a desired sequel. Therefore, the transition to the coming time of Mosaic law should not be all that difficult for any who had really adequately listened to the full revelation of the promise in the patriarchal era. But in no way was the promise-plan itself dependent on anyone's obedience; it only insured their participation in the benefits of the promise but not on its maintenance. (pgs. 59-61, The Promise-Plan of God: A Biblical Theology of the Old and New Testaments, Walter Kaiser. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 2008)

270 Genesis 15:6; Isaiah 1:21-27. The "redeemed" (פדה) believing remnant in Zion in Isaiah 1:21-27 result in Jerusalem being the "city of righteousness, the faithful city" (עִיר הַצֶּדֶק קִרְיָה נֶאֱמָנָה).

271 Genesis 15:7. Note that the Lord does not merely promise Abraham's descendants the land of Canaan, but indicates that the patriarch himself will inherit the land (Genesis 13:15, 17; 15:7)—something that will take place after the resurrection in the Millennial kingdom when Abraham will dwell in Canaan with true Israel. Such a resurrection, and the eternal felicity associated with it, is also involved in the fact that Jehovah is truly a God to Abraham (Genesis 17:7; 28:13; Exodus 3:6; Matthew 22:32; Mark 12:26). Abraham's faith led him to look both for the promised kingdom and "for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God" (Hebrews 11:8-10), the New Jerusalem.

272 As eternal salvation is an undeserved gift of grace, so neither Abraham nor any of his fallen physical descendents possessed the Land in their lifetime, or will possess the Land in the eschaton, because of their inherent worthiness—the inheritance is solely procured by grace, Deuteronomy 9:4-6; cf. Romans 10:8 & Deuteronomy 30.

273 Walter Kaiser notes:

When [Jehovah] appeared to Abraham, after the patriarch had arrived at Shechem, that ancient word about a "seed" (3:15) was again revived. Now, however, it was directed to Abraham (Ge 12:7). From there on, the importance of this gift of a child who would inherit the promises and blessings became one of the dominant themes in the patriarchal narrative, appearing, all told, some twenty-eight times. [Genesis 12:7; 13:15, 16 (2C); 15:13, 18; 16:10; 17:7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 16, 19; 21:12; 22:17 (2×), 18; 24:7; 26:3, 4 (3×), 24; 28:13, 14 (2×); 32:12; 35:12; 48:3, 4.] Eve had been promised both a "seed" and a male individual—apparently from that "seed." Now in the progress of revelation, with much greater specification added, the concept was elaborated both on the corporate (all who believed) and representative (Man of promise/"Seed") aspects of this promised heir. It was to encompass so great a number that, in hyperbolic fashion, they would rival the stars of heaven and the sands on the seashore. But this "seed" would also be another "son"—born at first to Abraham, when all hope of his ever having children was lost, and then continued in the one born to his son Isaac, and later to the one born to Isaac's son Jacob. A line of successive representative sons of the patriarchs who were regarded as one with the whole group they represented matched the seminal idea already advocated in Genesis 3:15. Furthermore, in the concept of "seed" were the two aspects: (1) the seed as a future benefit and (2) the seed as the present beneficiaries of God's temporal and spiritual gifts. Consequently, "seed" was always a collective singular noun; few times did it have the meaning of a plural noun (as in "descendants"). Thereby the "seed" was marked as a unit, yet with a flexibility of reference: now referring to the one person, now to the many descendants of that family. This interchange of reference with its implied "corporate solidarity" was more than a cultural phenomena or an accident of careless editing; it was an integral part of its doctrinal intention. . . . Thus, we refer to the "one" and the "many" when we refer to the "seed," or and eternal state.[274] This promise of life was given to Abraham because he believed in Jehovah, not because of any works that he did, setting a pattern for all those who are of Abraham—for Abraham is the father of believing Jews and Gentiles—to also receive life in the kingdom, spiritual life now and eschatological life, through faith, through which they are accouted righteous (Romans 4). Thus, believers are those who receive salvation,[275] those who are established and prosper, both in having Jehovah bless them and protect them in the Land and in general by having all things work together for good to them (2 Chronicles 20:20). They believe in Jehovah alone and reject any confidence in other gods (Isaiah 43:10). They will be secure and protected by the virgin-born yet Divine Messiah from the temporal and eternal judgments that fall on the wicked.[276] They are the faithful who are saints or holy ones (Hosea 11:12), having been converted and having in this manner become the righteous (Hosea 14:1-9). On the other hand, those who do not believe are those who are the objects of God's wrath and judgment, those who do not inherit the Promised Land[277] but are killed by plagues or the sword, or suffer exile from it as they turn to idolatry and are the objects of the Lord's great anger.[278] They are those who are removed from the Land in their lifetime (cf. Psalm 78) and will not inherit it in the Millennium or the eternal state, but are eternally cut off from true

---

"offspring," but the use of the translation "descendants" limited the reference only to the whole group who believed but did not include the representative of the whole group, the coming Messiah himself. (pgs. 56-57, The Promise-Plan of God: A Biblical Theology of the Old and New Testaments, Walter Kaiser. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 2008)

The recognition of both the individual and corporate aspect of the "seed" continues in the New Testament (cf. Galatians 3:16, 29).

274 Genesis 13:15; 17:8; 28:13.

275 Exodus 14:31-15:2. While the entire nation of Israel received salvation in that they were delivered from slavery in Egypt and from Pharaoh's army, although the entire nation did not believe in an eternally saving fashion, nonetheless Exodus 14:31-15:2 does connect belief and salvation, and both the belief and the salvation received and sung about pass beyond the merely physical and temporal for the Israel of God (Romans 9:6) to encompass all that is involved, both temporally and eternally, in the affirmation "Jehovah . . . is become my salvation: he is my God."

276 Isaiah 28:16; 8:14-15; 7:14; 9:6; Romans 9:33; 10:11.

277 Numbers 14:11-35; 20:12; Deuteronomy 1:32-40; 9:23-24. Numbers 14:11-35 speaks, at least in general, of those who do not believe in Jehovah at all, while Numbers 20:12 speaks of a lack of faith in the Lord in a particular situation by those who are true sons of Israel, namely, Moses and Aaron. The language employed concerning those who do not believe in the Lord at all in Numbers 14:11-35 is much harsher than that in Numbers 20:12, although entrance into the Promised Land is taken from both groups. It is noteworthy that Deuteronomy 1:32-40 indicates that the Lord was angry with Moses because of the larger unbelieving multitude that he led and represented (as, typologically, there is no problem with the Law itself, but because of sin, man is unable to receive eternal life through the Law), those who were rebellious all the time that Moses knew them and consequently did not believe nor hearken to the Lord (Deuteronomy 9:23-24).

278 2 Kings 17:7-23; Deuteronomy 27-28. Contrast the unbelief of 2 Kings 17:14 with Hezekiah's "trust" in 18:5 and the temporal prosperity that was consequent upon it.

Israel,[279] having not set their hope[280] in God, but rejected His covenant, and been rebellious and faithless.[281] They are those who are not established in time or in eternity in the Land because they do not believe in Jehovah and Immanuel, the Posessor and Protector of the promised country,[282] the Stone and sure foundation of Israel,[283] the Servant who would justify many by the offering of Himself.[284] There are no texts where true believers are lost or cast off because of a lack of circumcision, obedience to various commandments, or anything else; in continuity with the New Testament, the Old Testament teaches that all believers receive salvation and all unbelievers receive condemnation.[285] Thus, following the pattern set in Genesis 15:6, believers are those who receive salvation in its temporal and eternal aspects, and unbelievers are those who receive temporal and eternal judgment.

Habakkuk 2:4, the heart of the entire book of Habakkuk, referring back to the statement of Genesis 15:6,[286] and in light of other Old Testament texts that promise salvation to believers,[287] states: "Behold, his soul which is lifted up is not upright in him: but the just shall live by his faith."[288] The great fact that the just shall live by faith was to 279 Exodus 30:33, 38; 31:14; Leviticus 7:20, 21, 25, 27; 17:4, 9; 18:29; 19:8; 20:17, 18; 23:39; Numbers 9:13; 15:30; Deuteronomy 10:16, 30:6; Psalm 125:5; Isaiah 53:8; Jeremiah 4:4; Daniel 9:26; Zechariah 14:2.

---

280 כֶּסֶל, Psalm 78:7; cf. Job 8:14; 31:24; Proverbs 3:26.

281 Psalm 78; cf. v. 7, 22, 32, 37.

282 Isaiah 53:1; 7:9-14; 8:8; 9:6; Hebrews 11:14.

283 Isaiah 28:16; 8:14; Genesis 49:24; Psalm 118:22; Romans 9:33; 10:11; 1 Peter 2:4-8).

284 Isaiah 52:13-53:12.

285 An affirmation that all true believers receive salvation in the Old Testament, as in the New, does not eliminate the possibility that one could, in Old Testament times, possess a type of spurious "faith" that fell short of the kind of true faith associated with real conversion, just as such spurious "faith" is mentioned in the New Testament (John 2:23-25) while salvation is still set forth as by means of faith alone (John 3:1-21). The Old Testament indicates that one could assent, for example, to the fact that the Word from the Lord was true without having anything more than the "faith" of a hypocrite (Psalm 106:12ff.), while at the same time repeatedly stressing the salvation of all believers (Genesis 15:6).

286 Compare Nehemiah 9:8 also.

287 A goodly number of texts of this sort are found in the Old Testament that do not specifically contain the word believe; cf. Deuteronomy 10:16; 30:6-10; Isaiah 55:1-3; Jeremiah 3:22; 4:4; Hosea 14:2, etc. Such an employment of other terms for saving faith and conversion appears in the New Testament also, of course (Matthew 7:13; John 6:37, 57; 10:9; Revelation 22:17, etc.).

288 הִנֵּה עֻפְּלָה לֹא־יָשְׁרָה נַפְשׁוֹ בּוֹ וְצַדִּיק בֶּאֱמוּנָתוֹ יִחְיֶה׃ ἐὰν ὑποστείληται οὐκ εὐδοκεῖ ἡ ψυχή μου ἐν αὐτῷ ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεώς μου ζήσεται (LXX; note that 2:4a is not at all literally translated)
Ecce qui incredulus est, non erit recta anima ejus in semetipso; justus autem in fide sua vivet. "Behold, he that is unbelieving, his soul shall not be right in himself: but the just shall live in his faith." (Vulgate)
הָא רַשִׁיעָא בְלִבְהוֹן אָמְרִין לֵית כָּל אִלֵּין וְצַדִּיקָא עַל קוּשְׁטְהוֹן יִתְקַיְמוּן׃ (Targum Jonathan) be engraven plainly upon tablets.[289] The ungodly, whether unbelieving Israelites[290] or idolatrous Babylonians,[291] are proud, their souls lifted up; in contrast, the people of God, those who are just, shall live by faith.[292] Habakkuk sets before Israel the example of Abraham—the patriarch was justified by faith alone, and his faith, because of its saving character, produced a life of persevering obedience (cf. Genesis 22). In such a manner, Habakkuk affirms, the people in his day needed to experience true conversion by faith and evidence the reality of that conversion in a life of faithfulness. A life of open rebellion was unacceptable, but one of mere outward rigorism or moralism would also not suffice, for without a root of faith and a renewed heart, all religious and moral actings were vain (Isaiah 1:10-15; Hebrews 11:6). The word faith[293] in the verse, a noun related to the verb believe in Genesis 15:6, means in Habakkuk 2:4 a steadfast trust which results in faithfulness,[294] combining the ideas of faith and of the faithfulness that flows from it.[295]

---

289 Habakkuk 2:2. The word לוּחַ, employed in Habbakuk 2:2 of the tables upon which the message that the just shall live by faith was to be engraved, was also employed of the tables of the ten commandments (Exodus 24:12).

290 Habakkuk 1:5; Acts 13:39-41.

291 Habakkuk 1:6ff.

292 In Habakkuk 2:4b, the accentuation of וְצַדִּיק בֶּאֱמוּנָתוֹ יִחְיֶה׃ indicates that the affirmation of Habakkuk is: "the just, by his faith shall live" or "the righteous shall live-by-his-faith," rather than "the just by his faith, shall live" or "the righteous-by-his-faith shall live." That is, the Hebrew accents support the translation of the Authorized Version: "the just shall live by his faith."

293 אֱמוּנָה.

294 Strong evidence that אֱמוּנָה in Habakkuk 2:4 is properly rendered faith, and that faithfulness is a result of faith, is provided in the comment on Habakkuk 2:4 in The Books of Nahum, Habakkuk and Zephaniah, O. P. Robertson, NICOT; note also that אֱמוּנָה is translated in the LXX by pistis with some frequency. "The context . . . justifies πίστις, even in the sense 'trust' . . . and it was so translated by Symmachus, Aquila, and Theodotion, and in the other Greek versions" (Lightfoot, Galatians, on 3:11). Furthermore, the meaning "'belief, trust' . . . [for] אֱמוּנָה . . . seems decidedly to have [been] adopted . . . in the rabbinical Hebrew" (Lightfoot, Commentary on Galatians, sec. "The Words Denoting 'Faith'"). Warfield comments:

> The notions of "faith" and "faithfulness" lie close to one another, and are not uncommonly expressed by a single term (so πίστις, fides, faith). . . . "[F]aith," in its active sense . . . occurs in the Authorized Version of the Old Testament [in] Deuteronomy 32:20 where it represents the Hebrew אֱמֶן, and Habakkuk 2:4 where it stands for the Hebrew אֱמוּנָה; and it . . . [is] really demanded in . . . Habakkuk 2:4. The very point of this passage . . . is the sharp contrast which is drawn between arrogant self-sufficiency and faithful dependence on God. The purpose of the verse is to give a reply to the prophet's inquiry as to God's righteous dealings with the Chaldæans. Since it is by faith that the righteous man lives, the arrogant Chaldæan, whose soul is puffed up and not straight within him, cannot but be destined to destruction. The whole drift of the broader context bears out this meaning; for throughout this prophecy the Chaldæan is ever exhibited as the type of insolent self-assertion (Habakkuk 1:7, 11, 16), in contrast with which the righteous appear, certainly not as men of integrity and steadfast faithfulness, but as men who look in faith to God and trustingly depend upon His arm. The obvious reminiscence of Genesis 15:6 throws its weight into the same scale, to which may be added the consent of the Jewish expositors of the passage. Here we have, therefore, thrown into a clear light the contrasting characteristics of the wicked, typified by the Chaldæan, and of the righteous: of the one the fundamental trait is self-sufficiency; of the other, faith. This faith, which forms the distinctive feature of the righteous man, and by which he obtains life, is obviously no mere assent. It is a profound and abiding disposition, an ingrained attitude of mind and heart towards God which affects and gives character to all the

It is used for stedfastness and steadiness,[296] God's truthful faithfulness,[297] human faith, truthfulness, and faithfulness,[298] and what is true and faithful in itself.[299] Other words in the 'aman word group, that of belief/faith/faithfulness,[300] mean faithfulness,[301] verily, truly, indeed,[302] trusting, faithfulness,[303] faith, support,[304] constant,[305] and firmness, activities. Here . . . the term . . . in the Old Testament . . . rises to the full height of its most pregnant meaning. ("The Biblical Doctrine of Faith," Warfield, in Biblical Doctrines, vol. 2 of Works).

---

In both the Old and New Testament, "[t]he trusting man (מַאֲמִין = πιστεύων) is also the faithful man (נֶאֱמָן = πιστός" (pg. 198, Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, vol. 6, Kittel).

295 "אֱמוּנָה . . . from 'âman, to be firm, to last[,] [denotes] firmness (Ex. 17:12); then, as an attribute of God, trustworthiness, unchangeable fidelity in the fulfilment of His promises (Deut. 32:4; Ps. 33:4; 89:34); and, as a personal attribute of man, fidelity in word and deed (Jer. 7:28; 9:2; Ps. 37:3); and, in his relation to God, firm attachment to God, an undisturbed confidence in the divine promises of grace, firma fiducia and fides, so that in 'ĕmūnâh the primary meanings of ne'ĕmân and he'ĕmīn are combined. This is also apparent from the fact that Abraham is called ne'ĕmân in Neh. 9:8, with reference to the fact that it is affirmed of him in Gen. 15:6 that וְהֶאֱמִן בַּיהוָה, "he trusted, or believed, the Lord;" and still more indisputably from the passage before us, since it is impossible to mistake the reference in בֶּאֱמוּנָתוֹ יִחְיֶה וְצַדִּיק to Gen. 15:6, "he believed (he'ĕmīn) in Jehovah, and He reckoned it to him lits^{e}dâqâh." It is also indisputably evident from the context that our passage treats of the relation between man and God, since the words themselves speak of a waiting (chikkâh) for the fulfilment of a promising oracle, which is to be preceded by a period of severe suffering. 'What is more natural than that life or deliverance from destruction should be promised to that faith which adheres faithfully to God, holds fast by the word of promise, and confidently waits for its fulfilment in the midst of tribulation? It is not the sincerity, trustworthiness, or integrity of the righteous man, regarded as being virtues in themselves, which are in danger of being shaken and giving way in such times of tribulation, but, as we may see in the case of the prophet himself, his faith. To this, therefore, there is appended the great promise expressed in the one word יִחְיֶה' (Delitzsch). And in addition to this, 'ĕmūnâh is opposed to the pride of the Chaldaean, to his exaltation of himself above God; and for that very reason it cannot denote integrity in itself, but simply some quality which has for its leading feature humble submission to God, that is to say, faith, or firm reliance upon God. The Jewish expositors, therefore, have unanimously retained this meaning here, and the LXX have rendered the word quite correctly πίστις. . . . The deep meaning of these words has been first fully brought out by the Apostle Paul (Rom. 1:17; Gal. 3:11: see also Heb. 10:38), who . . . makes the declaration ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται the basis of the New Testament doctrine of justification by faith" (Comment on Habakkuk 2:4, Commentary, Keil & Delitzsch). That is, "in Habakkuk 2:4, faith was simply an unwavering trust in God's word. In contrast to the overbearing disposition of the wicked, the believer, like Abraham in Genesis 15:6 and Isaiah in Isaiah 28:16; 30:15, put an immovable confidence in the God who had promised his salvation and the coming Man of promise. It was a steadfast, undivided surrender to [Jehovah], a childlike, humble and sincere trust in the credibility of the divine message of salvation" (pg. 196, The Promise-Plan of God, Kaiser).

296 Exodus 17:12; Isaiah 33:6.

297 Deuteronomy 32:4; Psalm 33:4; 36:6; 40:10; 88:11; 89:1, 2, 5, 8, 24, 33, 49; 92:2; 96:13; 98:3; 100:5; 119:75, 90; 143:1; Isaiah 25:1; Lamentations 3:23; Hosea 2:20.

298 1 Samuel 26:23; 2 Kings 12:15; 22:7; 2 Chronicles 19:9; 31:12; 34:12; Proverbs 12:22; 28:20; Isaiah 11:5 (the faithfulness of the incarnate Messiah); 59:4; Jeremiah 5:1, 3; 7:28; 9:3; Habakkuk 2:4. Note also 1 Chronicles 9:22, 26, 31; 2 Chronicles 31:15, 18 where those put in office were to be trustworthy or faithful and act in fidelity (cf. KJV margin).

299 Psalm 37:3; 119:30, 86, 138; Proverbs 12:17.

300 See BDB for the definitions.

301 אֹמֶן, Isaiah 25:1.

302 אָמֵן, Numbers 5:22; Deuteronomy 27:15–26; 1 Kings 1:36; 1 Chronicles 16:36; Nehemiah 5:13; 8:6; Psalm 41:13; 72:19; 89:52; 106:48; Isaiah 65:16; Jeremiah 11:5; 28:6. Also אָמְנָה, Genesis 20:12; faithfulness, truth.[306] Thus, as Genesis 15:6 indicates that believers are righteous, Habakkuk 2:4 indicates that those who are just are those who live by faith—and faithfulness is impossible without faith, for those who have, through the instrumentality of faith, embraced Jehovah as their own God and trusted in His promise of redemption through the Seed, will also characteristically trust in God and live their lives as the people of God out of the faith that is the fundamental or radical root of their spiritual life. Righteousness, life, and faith, in both their earthly "already" and their eschatological "not yet," are indissoluably connected.

Those who came to believe in Jehovah and His Messiah, and consequently lived by faith in Him, were those who "trusted[307] in the LORD God of Israel"[308] and in His Word (Psalm 119:42). Such a trust manifested itself in obedience to His Law in the trials of this life,[309] and brought both temporal[310] and eternal deliverance (Psalm 125:1). Trust also led to an acknowledgment of Jehovah in one's practical life (Proverbs 3:5-6). All

---

Joshua 7:20. Also אֱמֶנֶם, Genesis 18:13; Numbers 22:37; 1 Kings 8:27; 2 Chronicles 6:18; Psalm 58:1. Also אָמְנָם, Ruth 3:12; 2 Kings 19:17; Job 9:2; 12:2; 19:4–5; 34:12; 36:4; Isaiah 37:18.

303 אֹמֶן, Deuteronomy 32:20 (unconverted Israelites as "children in whom is no faith"); Proverbs 13:17; 14:5; 20:6; Isaiah 26:2.

304 אֲמָנָה, Nehemiah 9:38; 11:23.

305 אֲמָנָה, Song 4:8; 2 Kings 5:12; the likely significance of the name of the river and of the region from which it flows.

306 אֱמֶת, used of God's faithful truth (Genesis 24:27; 32:10; Exodus 34:6; 2 Chronicles 15:3; Nehemiah 9:33; Psalm 25:5, 10; 26:3; 30:9; 31:5; 40:10, 11; 43:3; 54:5; 57:3, 10; 61:7; 69:13; 71:22; 85:10–11; 86:11, 15; 89:14; 91:4; 108:4; 111:7–8; 115:1; 117:2; 119:43, 142, 151, 160; 132:11; 138:2; 146:6; Isaiah 38:18, 19; 61:8; Jeremiah 4:2; 10:10; 42:5; Daniel 9:13; Zechariah 8:8), of true, faithful, and right things (Genesis 24:48; Deuteronomy 13:14; 17:4; 22:20; Joshua 2:12; 2 Samuel 7:28; 15:20; 1 Kings 10:6; 22:16; 2 Kings 20:19; 2 Chronicles 9:5; 18:15; 31:20; 32:1; Nehemiah 9:13; Esther 9:30; Psalm 19:9; 45:4; 51:6; Proverbs 3:3; 8:7; 11:18; 14:22; 16:6; 20:28; 22:21; 23:23; Ecclesiastes 12:10; Isaiah 39:8; 42:3, 9; 59:14, 15; Jeremiah 14:13; 26:15; Daniel 8:12, 26; 10:1, 21; 11:2; Hosea 4:1; Zechariah 7:9; 8:19; Malachi 2:6), acts (Genesis 24:49; 47:29; Joshua 2:14; 24:14; Judges 9:15, 16, 19; 1 Samuel 12:24; 2 Samuel 2:6; 1 Kings 2:4; 3:6; 17:24; 20:3; Psalm 15:2; 145:18; Proverbs 14:25; 29:14; Isaiah 10:20; 16:5; 38:3; Isaiah 48:1; Jeremiah 9:5; 23:28; 28:9; 32:41; 33:6; Ezekiel 18:8, 9; Micah 7:20; Zechariah 8:16), and individuals or groups of individuals (Genesis 42:16; Exodus 18:21; Nehemiah 7:2; Proverbs 12:19; Jeremiah 2:21; Zechariah 8:3).

307 בטח. The complete list of references in the Old Testament is: Deuteronomy 28:52; Judges 9:26; 18:7, 10, 27; 20:36; 2 Kings 18:5, 19–22, 24, 30; 19:10; 1 Chronicles 5:20; 2 Chronicles 32:10; Job 6:20; 11:18; 39:11; 40:23; Psalm 4:5; 9:10; 13:5; 21:7; 22:4–5, 9; 25:2; 26:1; 27:3; 28:7; 31:6, 14; 32:10; 33:21; 37:3, 5; 40:3; 41:9; 44:6; 49:6; 52:7–8; 55:23; 56:3–4, 11; 62:8, 10; 78:22; 84:12; 86:2; 91:2; 112:7; 115:8–11; 118:8–9; 119:42; 125:1; 135:18; 143:8; 146:3; Proverbs 3:5; 11:15, 28; 14:16; 16:20; 28:1, 25–26; 29:25; 31:11; Isaiah 12:2; 26:3–4; 30:12; 31:1; 32:9–11; 36:4–7, 9, 15; 37:10; 42:17; 47:10; 50:10; 59:4; Jeremiah 5:17; 7:4, 8, 14; 9:4; 12:5; 13:25; 17:5, 7; 28:15; 29:31; 39:18; 46:25; 48:7; 49:4, 11; Ezekiel 16:15; 33:13; Hosea 10:13; Amos 6:1; Micah 7:5; Habakkuk 2:18; Zephaniah 3:2. Note that in Psalm 78:22 בטח and הֶאֱמִין are in synonymous parallelism; compare also 2 Kings 17:14; 18:5.

308 2 Kings 18:5, 22, 30; 19:10; 2 Chronicles 32:10; Isaiah 36:7, 15; 37:10.

309 Psalm 62:8, 10.

310 1 Chronicles 5:20; Jeremiah 39:18.

the nation was called to such a trust (Psalm 115:8-11). The Lord saves and preserves those who trust in Him (Psalm 86:2), so that true Israel can say: "Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid: for the LORD JEHOVAH is my strength and my song; he also is become my salvation,"[311] while the ungodly trust in evil deeds or plans,[312] men,[313] false gods (Isaiah 42:17), external ritual (Jeremiah 7:4), or their own righteousness (Ezekiel 33:13) instead of in Jehovah only (Zephaniah 3:2). Those that truly know the Lord trust in Him, and He will not forsake them,[314] nor allow them to be confounded, but deliver them,[315] and surround them with mercies (Psalm 32:10), since they trust in His mercy[316] for ever and ever (Psalm 52:8), and they will dwell in the Land (Psalm 37:3, 5). The Bible contrasts those who trust in Jehovah with those who "believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation . . . a stubborn and rebellious generation; a generation that set not their heart aright, and whose spirit was not stedfast with God . . . [that] kept not the covenant of God, and refused to walk in his law . . . [that] sinned still, and believed not for his wondrous works. For their heart was not right with him, neither were they stedfast in his covenant."[317] In short, trust in the Lord marked the true Israelite,[318] he who was blessed[319] with temporal and eternal salvation.

Other Hebrew forms related to the verb trust[320] similarly indicate that temporal and eternal salvation was received by those who trust in Jehovah. Those would be "saved" who placed their "confidence" in Him.[321] Those who "hope" in the Lord rather than placing their "confidence" in any other source are blessed, without any limitation to either this life or that to come.[322] The Old Testament consequently declares: "Blessed is that man that maketh the LORD his trust" (Psalm 40:4), for He is the only fit object of "confidence" (Psalm 65:5) or "trust" (Psalm 71:5)—all other objects of "trust" are like a

---

311 Isaiah 12:2; 26:3-4; 50:10.

312 Isaiah 30:12; 47:10.

313 Psalm 56:3, 4, 11; 118:8-9; Proverbs 29:25; Isaiah 31:1; Jeremiah 17:5-7.

314 Psalm 9:10; cf. 4:5.

315 Psalm 22:4-5; cf. 25:2; 26:1; 28:7; 31:6, 14; 33:21; 40:3.

316 חֶסֶד.

317 Psalm 78:22, 8, 10, 32, 37.

318 Psalm 112:7; 143:8.

319 Proverbs 16:20; 28:25, 26.

320 That is, the rest of the בטח word group.

321 בִּטָּחָה in Isaiah 30:15; בִּטָּחוֹן in Isaiah 36:4; 2 Kings 18:19; also Ecclesiastes 9:4.

322 Jeremiah 17:7; 2:37; 48:17; Ezekiel 29:16. מִבְטָח, "trust, reliance" (KB), "confidence . . . 1. the act of confiding Pr 21:22, 22:19, 25:19. 2. the object of confidence Jb 8:14, 18:14, 31:24, Psalm 40:5, 65:6, 71:5, Je 2:37, 17:7, 48:13, Ez 29:16. 3. the state of confidence, security Pr 14:26, Is 32:18" (BDB).

"spider's web."[323] "Confidence in an unfaithful man in time of trouble is like a broken tooth, and a foot out of joint,"[324] while those whose "trust" is "in the LORD" find in Him "strong confidence" and a "place of refuge."[325]

Thus, Jehovah is Himself the salvation for the "righteous," those who take refuge or trust[326] in Him (Psalm 64:10). Believers can say: "God . . . in him will I trust: he is my shield, and the horn of my salvation, my high tower, and my refuge, my saviour."[327] To "all them that trust in him" He is a shield and place of safety.[328] "[A]ll those that put their trust in [Him] rejoice . . . because [He] defend[s] them" (Psalm 5:11). They are blessed, now and forever (Psalm 34:8), receiving of the great goodness He has stored up for them (Psalm 31:19). The believer, one who forsakes confidence in men to trust in Jehovah only (Psalm 118:8-9),[329] can say: "O LORD my God, in thee do I put my trust: save me,"[330] while those who trust in false gods (Deuteronomy 32:37), evil men (Judges 9:15), or pagan nations (Isaiah 30:2) are destroyed. Because of His "lovingkindness," believers will "never be ashamed" or "desolate" or "destitute" or "put to confusion" because they "trust in" Him, being rather "deliver[ed]" in His "righteousness" and having their souls "redeemed."[331] The "LORD . . . knoweth them that trust in him" (Nahum 1:7), so those "afflicted and poor people" who "shall trust in the name of the LORD" (Zephaniah 3:12) receive His promise: "he that putteth his trust in me shall possess the land, and shall inherit my holy mountain" (Isaiah 57:13). They will "abide" in His presence "for ever" (Psalm 61:4), and have a refuge and sure hope in death (Proverbs 14:32). Those who "come to trust . . . the LORD God of Israel" will receive a "full reward" (Ruth 2:12), for He will "save them, because they put their trust in him" (Psalm 37:40). Trust in Jehovah is connected with trust in His Son (Proverbs 30:4), the Messiah; all those who repent and trust in the Son of God receive temporal and eternal blessing, 323 Job 8:14; 18:14; 31:24.

---

324 Proverbs 25:19; cf. 21:22.

325 Proverbs 22:19; 14:26; contra 25:19; 21:22.

326 חסה; Cf. in English, Psalm 57:1: "Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto me: for my soul trusteth [Qal perfect חסה] in thee: yea, in the shadow of thy wings will I make my refuge [Qal imperfect חסה], until these calamities be overpast." The complete list of references for the verb is: Deuteronomy 32:37; Judges 9:15; Ruth 2:12; 2 Samuel 22:3, 31; Psalm 2:12; 5:11; 7:1; 11:1; 16:1; 17:7; 18:2, 30; 25:20; 31:1, 19; 34:8, 22; 36:7; 37:40; 57:1; 61:4; 64:10; 71:1; 91:4; 118:8–9; 141:8; 144:2; Proverbs 14:32; 30:5; Isaiah 14:32; 30:2; 57:13; Nahum 1:7; Zephaniah 3:12.

327 2 Samuel 22:3; Psalm 144:2.

328 2 Samuel 22:31; cf. Isaiah 14:32; Psalm 61:4; 94:4.

329 Psalm 118:8 is the middle verse in the Bible.

330 Psalm 7:1; 11:1; 16:1; 17:7; 18:2, 30.

331 Psalm 25:20; 31:1; 34:22; 36:7; 71:1; 141:8.

while those who do not will perish under Messianic wrath: "Kiss[332] the Son,[333] lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him" (Psalm 2:12).[334]

In Genesis 15:6, Abraham was counted righteous. The verb employed[335] specifies that the patriarch was accounted or reckoned as righteous; the imputation of righteousness, rather than an infusion of righteousness, is in view. Many texts with the word clearly speak of imputation or accounting,[336] in many others the idea of making, 332 נשׁק, also translated "be ruled" in Genesis 41:40.

---

333 Note the use of the Aramaic form בַּר, elsewhere found in the Hebrew Old Testament only in Proverbs 31:2; the Son of God is set forth in Psalm 2:12 as the Object of faith for the nations.

334 Warfield notes:

> [A]long with an ever more richly expressed corporate hope, there is found also [in the Old Testament] an ever more richly expressed individual trust, which finds natural utterance through an ample body of synonyms bringing out severally the various sides of that perfect commitment to God that constitutes the essence of faith. Thus we read much of trusting in, on, to God, or in His word, His name, His mercy, His salvation (בָּטַח), of seeking and finding refuge in God or in the shadow of His wings (חָסָה), of committing ourselves to God (גָּלַל), setting confidence (כָּסַל) in Him, looking to Him (נִסְמַךְ) relying upon Him (נִשְׁעַן), staying upon Him (נִסְמַךְ), setting or fixing the heart upon Him (חֵכִין לֵב), binding our love on Him (חָשַׁק), cleaving to Him (דָּבַק). So, on the hopeful side of faith, we read much of hoping in God (קָוָה), waiting on God (יָחַל), of longing for Him (חִכָּה), patiently waiting for Him (הִתְחוֹלֵל), and the like.
>
> By the aid of such expressions, it becomes possible to form a somewhat clear notion of the attitude towards Him which was required by Jehovah of His believing people, and which is summed up in the term "faith." It is a reverential (Exodus 14:31; Numbers 14:11, 20:12) and loving faith, which rests on the strong basis of firm and unshaken conviction of the might and grace of the covenant God and of the trustworthiness of all His words, and exhibits itself in confident trust in Jehovah and unwavering expectation of the fulfilment of, no doubt, all His promises, but more especially of His promise of salvation, and in consequent faithful and exclusive adherence to Him. In one word, it consists in an utter commitment of oneself to Jehovah, with confident trust in Him as guide and saviour, and assured expectation of His promised salvation. It therefore stands in contrast, on the one hand, with trust in self or other human help, and on the other with doubt and unbelief, despondency and unfaithfulness. From Jehovah alone is salvation to be looked for, and it comes from His free grace alone (Deuteronomy 7:7, 8:18; 9:5; Amos 3:2; Hosea 13:5; Ezekiel 20:6; Jeremiah 39:18; Malachi 1:2), and to those only who look solely to Him for it (Isaiah 31:1; 57:13; 28:16; 30:15; Jeremiah 17:5; 39:18; Psalm 118:8; 146:3; 20:7; 1 Samuel 17:45; Job 31:24; Psalm 52:9). The reference of faith is accordingly in the Old Testament always distinctly soteriological; its end the Messianic salvation; and its essence a trusting, or rather an entrusting of oneself to the God of salvation, with full assurance of the fulfilment of His gracious purposes and the ultimate realization of His promise of salvation for the people and the individual. Such an attitude towards the God of salvation is identical with the faith of the New Testament, and is not essentially changed by the fuller revelation of God the Redeemer in the person of the promised Messiah. (pgs. 488-490, "The Biblical Doctrine of Faith," Warfield, in Biblical Doctrines, vol. 2 of Works)

335 חשׁב. The complete list of references in the Old Testament is: Genesis 15:6; 31:15; 38:15; 50:20; Exodus 31:4; 35:32; Leviticus 7:18; 17:4; 25:27, 31, 50, 52; 27:18, 23; Numbers 18:27, 30; 23:9; Deuteronomy 2:11, 20; Joshua 13:3; Esther 8:3; 9:24–25; 1 Samuel 1:13; 18:25; 2 Samuel 4:2; 14:13–14; 19:19; 1 Kings 10:21; 2 Kings 12:15; 22:7; 2 Chronicles 2:14; 9:20; Nehemiah 6:2, 6; 13:13; Job 6:26; 13:24; 18:3; 19:11, 15; 33:10; 35:2; 41:27, 29, 32; Psalm 10:2; 21:11; 32:2; 35:4, 20; 36:4; 40:17; 41:7; 44:22; 52:2; 73:16; 77:5; 88:4; 106:31; 119:59; 140:2, 4; 144:3; Proverbs 16:9, 30; 17:28; 24:8; 27:14; Isaiah 2:22; 5:28; 10:7; 13:17; 29:16–17; 32:15; 33:8; 40:15, 17; 53:3–4; Jeremiah 11:19; 18:8, 11, 18; 23:27; 26:3; 29:11; 36:3; 48:2; 49:20, 30; 50:45; Lamentations 2:8; 4:2; Ezekiel 11:2; 38:10; Daniel 11:24–25; Hosea 7:15; 8:12; Amos 6:5; Jonah 1:4; Micah 2:1, 3; Nahum 1:9, 11; Zechariah 7:10; 8:17; Malachi 3:16.

336 Genesis 31:15; Leviticus 7:18; 17:4; Numbers 18:27, 30; Numbers 23:9; 2 Samuel 19:19; 2 Kings 12:15; 22:7; Job 13:24; 18:3; 19:11, 15; 33:10; Psalm 32:2; 106:31; Proverbs 17:28; Isaiah 29:16-17; 32:15; 40:15, 17; Lamentations 4:2.

transforming, or infusing is evidently impossible,[337] and no passages with the verb in question clearly speak of any kind of infusion. When Phinehas' stand for Jehovah and against Baalpeor was reckoned to him as righteousness (Psalm 106:31),[338] the Divine act was certainly an accounting of Phinehas' act as righteous, rather than infusing goodness into or transforming his act into a good one. Likewise, when Nehemiah made men treasurers because they were "counted faithful" (Nehemiah 13:13),[339] the accounting did not make the men faithful or infuse faithfulness into them, but was an accounting that they were indeed faithful men. Thus, Genesis 15:6 speaks of the legal[340] reckoning of Abraham as righteous. He was reckoned righteous at the judgment bar of God, rather than in the eyes of men, or in some other way, for Jehovah was the One who accounted the patriarch righteous. The opposite of a man having righteousness accounted to him, as in Genesis 15:6, is to have iniquity imputed (2 Samuel 19:19). One who has blood imputed to him is reckoned as being guilty of shedding blood (Leviticus 17:4), while the 337 Genesis 38:15; Leviticus 25:27; Deuteronomy 2:11, 20; 1 Samuel 1:13; 18:25; 1 Kings 10:21; 2 Chronicles 9:20; Nehemiah 13:13; Job 13:24; 18:3; 19:11, 15; 33:10; 41:27, 29; Psalm 77:5; 88:4; Proverbs 17:28; Isaiah 13:17; 53:4; Jeremiah 36:3; Hosea 8:12; Zechariah 7:10; 8:17;

---

338 The syntax of Psalm 106:31 is very similar to that of Genesis 15:6 in its account of reckoning; compare וַתֵּחָשֶׁב לוֹ לִצְדָקָה לְדֹר וָדֹר עַד־עוֹלָם׃ with וְהֶאֱמַן בַּיהוָה וַיַּחְשְׁבֶהָ לוֹ צְדָקָה׃. Concerning Psalm 106:31, John Gill notes:

> And that was counted unto him for righteousness, &c. Not for his justifying righteousness before God; for all the works of righteousness done by the best of men cannot justify them before him, much less a single action: but his executing judgment in the manner he did, or slaying the above two persons, was esteemed a righteous action by the Lord himself; who upon it caused the plague to cease, and likewise gave to Phinehas the covenant of an everlasting priesthood, and to his posterity; whereby the action had eternal honour put upon it, and was sufficiently secured from the calumny of men; who might condemn it as a rash action done by a private person, assuming the office of a public magistrate; and as being a cruel one, not giving the criminals time for repentance. But all this is set aside by the testimony of God himself, approving of it; and so it continues to be esteemed, as it is said it should, unto all generations for evermore: whenever it is spoken of, it is spoken of with commendation, as a righteous action, as expressive of true zeal for the Lord of hosts.

Likewise, Keil & Delitzsch note:

> This act of zeal for [Jehovah], which compensated for Israel's unfaithfulness, was accounted unto [Phinehas] for righteousness, by his being rewarded for it with the priesthood unto everlasting ages, Num. 25:10–13. This accounting of a work for righteousness is only apparently contradictory to Gen. 15:5f.: it was indeed an act which sprang from a constancy in faith [cf. Psalm 106:24], and one which obtained for him the acceptation of a righteous man for the sake of this upon which it was based, by proving him to be such.

Concerning Psalm 106:31 "we should compare for the expression Genesis 15:6, the only passage where it occurs, and for the subject, Deuteronomy 6:25; 24:13 . . . Psalm 24:5. The language does not refer to the first justification, but to the second, to the good works of one already in a state of grace, by which he obtains from God, who recompenses every one according to his works, a reward of grace, as Phinehas obtained on the present occasion the priesthood for his family, comp. Numbers 25:13" (Comment on Psalm 106:31, Commentary on the Psalms, vol. 3., E. W. Hengstenberg). That is, Phinehas' act could only be accounted as righteous because Phinehas' person had already been accounted righteous through Jehovah's gratuitous justification; Phinehas had Christ as his Mediator, as one who sanctified the iniquity that otherwise would corrupt even the holiest actions of believers and prevent them from being acceptable in the sight of Jehovah (Exodus 28:38).

339 נֶאֱמָנִים נֶחְשָׁבוּ. Note the use of אמן and חשׁב.

340 cf. Leviticus 7:18; 17:4; 25:31; Numbers 18:27, 30; Joshua 13:3; 2 Samuel 4:2; 2 Samuel 19:19; Psalm 32:2; benefit of sacrificial offering in expiation is imputed when received in the proper manner, but not otherwise (Leviticus 7:18); by imputation one is reckoned as and treated as the possessor of whatever is imputed. Thus, when Abraham was reckoned as righteous in Genesis 15:6, his being accounted righteous, rather than his personal acquisition of inward holiness, is in view. Abraham, and all the righteous from the time of the first announcement of the gospel in Genesis 3:15, acknowledged their need for gratuiously imputed righteousness, and the Divine provision of such in the Messiah, through their offering of animal sacrifices, as ordained by God from the beginning (Genesis 3:20-21; 4:4); the blessed substitution that merited the imputation of an alien righteousness, historically accomplished on the cross, not salvation by personal merit, was manifestly set forth in the sacrifical types. Similarly, David records: "Blessed is the man unto whom the LORD imputeth not iniquity,"[341] the man to whom, although sinful in himself, righteousness instead of iniquity is Divinely imputed, whose "transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered." This man is he who has received David's call to all nations to faith in God's "Son," for "blessed are all they that put their trust in him" (Psalm 2:12), even as all are blessed who hope (Psalm 146:5) or trust in Jehovah.[342] Thus, "faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness" (Romans 4:9)[343] in a legal or judicial sense. Genesis 15:6 refers solely to an imputed righteousness. The outward righteousness of those imputed righteous, the outward evidential just character manifested in them, is a consequent that follows from the receipt of imputed righteousness, and faith, not as a meritorious instrument, but because it embraces God and receives all freely from Him, is the root of spiritual life in all the people of God.

Abraham had faith accounted to him for righteousness.[344] Jehovah testifies concerning the "servants of the LORD" that "their righteousness is of me,"[345] for, rather 341 Psalm 32:2; Romans 4:1-8.

---

342 Psalm 34:8; 84:12.

343 Ἐλογίσθη τῷ Ἀβραὰμ ἡ πίστις εἰς δικαιοσύνην.

344 צְדָקָה. The complete list of references is: Genesis 15:6; 18:19; 30:33; Deuteronomy 6:25; 9:4–6; 24:13; 33:21; Judges 5:11; 1 Samuel 12:7; 26:23; 2 Samuel 8:15; 19:28; 22:21, 25; 1 Kings 3:6; 8:32; 10:9; 1 Chronicles 18:14; 2 Chronicles 6:23; 9:8; Nehemiah 2:20; Job 27:6; 33:26; 35:8; 37:23; Psalm 5:8; 11:7; 22:31; 24:5; 31:1; 33:5; 36:6, 10; 40:10; 51:14; 69:27; 71:2, 15–16, 19, 24; 72:1, 3; 88:12; 89:16; 98:2; 99:4; 103:6, 17; 106:3, 31; 111:3; 112:3, 9; 119:40, 142; 143:1, 11; 145:7; Proverbs 8:18, 20; 10:2; 11:4–6, 18–19; 12:28; 13:6; 14:34; 15:9; 16:8, 12, 31; 21:3, 21; Isaiah 1:27; 5:7, 16, 23; 9:7; 10:22; 28:17; 32:16–17; 33:5, 15; 45:8, 23–24; 46:12–13; 48:1, 18; 51:6, 8; 54:14, 17; 56:1; 57:12; 58:2; 59:9, 14, 16–17; 60:17; 61:10–11; 63:1; 64:6; Jeremiah 4:2; 9:24; 22:3, 15; 23:5; 33:15; 51:10; Ezekiel 3:20; 14:14, 20; 18:5, 19–22, 24, 26–27; 33:12–14, 16, 18–19; 45:9; Daniel 9:7, 16, 18; Hosea 10:12; Joel 2:23; Amos 5:7, 24; 6:12; Micah 6:5; 7:9; Zechariah 8:8; Malachi 3:3; 4:2. צֶדֶק appears in: Leviticus 19:15, 36; Deuteronomy 1:16; 16:18, 20; 25:15; 33:19; Job 6:29; 8:3, 6; 29:14; 31:6; 35:2; 36:3; Psalm 4:1, 5; 7:8, 17; 9:4, 8; 15:2; 17:1, 15; 18:20, 24; 23:3; 35:24, 27–28; 37:6; 40:9; 45:4, 7; 48:10; 50:6; 51:19; 52:3; 58:1; 65:5; 72:2; 85:10–11, 13; 89:14; 94:15; 96:13; 97:2, 6; 98:9; 118:19; 119:7, 62, 75, 106, 121, 123, 138, 142, 144, 160, 164, 172;

than having as their judicial standing the filthy rags of their own righteousness (Isaiah 64:6), they can testify: "I will greatly rejoice in the LORD, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness,[346] as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels" (Isaiah 61:10). With Abraham, believing Israel can testify that the Messiah, the "king" who is the "righteous Branch" from "David," is "THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS,"[347] by whom they are "saved" (Jeremiah 23:5-6), for this righteousness of the Messiah who is both Jehovah and the truly human Son of David is imputed to them (Jeremiah 33:16), and they are justified, legally declared righteous, not through their own deeds, or on the ground of faith, faith being only the instrument for the receipt of Divine righteousness,[348] but rather on the ground or basis of the imputation

---

132:9; Proverbs 1:3; 2:9; 8:8, 15; 12:17; 16:13; 25:5; 31:9; Ecclesiastes 3:16; 5:8; 7:15; Isaiah 1:21, 26; 11:4–5; 16:5; 26:9–10; 32:1; 41:2, 10; 42:6, 21; 45:8, 13, 19; 51:1, 5, 7; 58:2, 8; 59:4; 61:3; 62:1–2; 64:5; Jeremiah 11:20; 22:13; 23:6; 31:23; 33:16; 50:7; Ezekiel 3:20; 45:10; Daniel 9:24; Hosea 2:19; 10:12; Zephaniah 2:3. צַדִּיק appears in: Genesis 6:9; 7:1; 18:23–26, 28; 20:4; Exodus 9:27; 23:7–8; Deuteronomy 4:8; 16:19; 25:1; 32:4; 1 Samuel 24:17; 2 Samuel 4:11; 23:3; 1 Kings 2:32; 8:32; 2 Kings 10:9; 2 Chronicles 6:23; 12:6; Ezra 9:15; Neh 9:8, 33; Job 12:4; 17:9; 22:19; 27:17; 32:1; 34:17; 36:7; Psalm 1:5–6; 5:12; 7:9, 11; 11:3, 5, 7; 14:5; 31:18; 32:11–33:1; 34:15, 19, 21; 37:12, 16–17, 21, 25, 29–30, 32, 39; 52:6; 55:22; 58:10–11; 64:10; 68:3; 69:28; 72:7; 75:10; 92:12; 94:21; 97:11–12; 112:4, 6; 116:5; 118:15, 20; 119:137; 125:3; 129:4; 140:13; 141:5; 142:7; 145:17; 146:8; Proverbs 2:20; 3:33; 4:18; 9:9; 10:3, 6–7, 11, 16, 20–21, 24–25, 28, 30–32; 11:8–10, 21, 23, 28, 30–31; 12:3, 5, 7, 10, 12–13, 21, 26; 13:5, 9, 21–22, 25; 14:19, 32; 15:6, 28–29; 17:15, 26; 18:5, 10, 17; 20:7; 21:12, 15, 18, 26; 23:24; 24:15–16, 24; 25:26; 28:1, 12, 28; 29:2, 6–7, 16, 27; Ecclesiastes 3:17; 7:15–16, 20; 8:14; 9:1–2; Isaiah 3:10; 5:23; 24:16; 26:2, 7; 29:21; 41:26; 45:21; 49:24; 53:11; 57:1; 60:21; Jeremiah 12:1; 20:12; 23:5; Lamentations 1:18; 4:13; Ezekiel 3:20–21; 13:22; 18:5, 9, 20, 24, 26; 21:3–4; 23:45; 33:12–13, 18; Daniel 9:14; Hosea 14:9; Amos 2:6; 5:12; Habbakuk 1:4, 13; 2:4; Zephaniah 3:5; Zechariah 9:9; Malachi 3:18. The verb צָדַק appears in: Genesis 38:26; 44:16; Exodus 23:7; Deuteronomy 25:1; 2 Samuel 15:4; 1 Kings 8:32; 2 Chronicles 6:23; Job 4:17; 9:2, 15, 20; 10:15; 11:2; 13:18; 15:14; 22:3; 25:4; 27:5; 32:2; 33:12, 32; 34:5; 35:7; 40:8; Psalm 19:9; 51:4; 82:3; 143:2; Proverbs 17:15; Isaiah 5:23; 43:9, 26; 45:25; 50:8; 53:11; Jeremiah 3:11; Ezekiel 16:51–52; Daniel 8:14; 12:3.

345 Isaiah 54:17: זֹאת נַחֲלַת עַבְדֵי יְהוָה וְצִדְקָתָם מֵאִתִּי נְאֻם־יְהוָה׃

346 שׂוֹשׂ אָשִׂישׂ בַּיהוָה תָּגֵל נַפְשִׁי בֵּאלֹהַי כִּי הִלְבִּישַׁנִי בִּגְדֵי־יֶשַׁע מְעִיל צְדָקָה יְעָטָנִי

347 יְהוָה | צִדְקֵנוּ.

348 Commenting on Genesis 15:6, Calvin notes:

> And truly faith does not justify us for any other reason, than that it reconciles us unto God; and that it does so, not by its own merit; but because we receive the grace offered to us in the promises, and have no doubt of eternal life, being fully persuaded that we are loved by God as sons. Therefore, Paul reasons from contraries, that he to whom faith is imputed for righteousness, has not been justified by works (Romans 4:4). For whosoever obtains righteousness by works, his merits come into the account before God. But we apprehend righteousness by faith, when God freely reconciles us to himself. Whence it follows, that the merit of works ceases when righteousness is sought by faith; for it is necessary that this righteousness should be freely given by God, and offered in his word, in order that any one may possess it by faith. To render this more intelligible, when Moses says that faith was imputed to Abram for righteousness, he does not mean that faith was that first cause of righteousness which is called the efficient, but only the formal cause; as if he had said, that Abram was therefore justified, because, relying on the paternal loving-kindness of God, he trusted to His mere goodness, and not to himself, nor to his own merits. For it is especially to be observed, that faith borrows a righteousness elsewhere, of which we, in ourselves, are destitute; otherwise it would be in vain for Paul to set faith in opposition to works, when speaking of the mode of obtaining righteousness. Besides, the of the righteousness of the Messiah alone. Every animal sacrificed by the people of God in the Old Testament, in its foreshadowing of the shedding of Messianic blood (Isaiah 52:15), testified to the fact that neither personal merit, including any alleged merit in the act of faith itself, could be a satisfactory ground for the acceptance of the saint; rather, "it is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul" (Leviticus 17:11), for "without shedding of blood is no remission" (Hebrews 9:22). Thus, "in the LORD shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory" (Isaiah 45:25), as they look to Him and are saved (Isaiah 45:22) through the merit of Jehovah's "righteous servant" who will "justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities."[349] While it is certain that the people of God in the Old Testament were inwardly transformed because of their relationship to Jehovah (Psalm 1),[350] nonetheless the foundational reason why they were frequently denominated as "just" or "righteous"[351] was imputed righteousness, based on the substitutionary sacrifice of the Messiah they anticipated in expectation, as typified and exhibited in the sacrificial system.

Those who are in this manner[352] the just—those who have been received imputed Messianic righteousness as the sole judicial and legal basis for their justification, and at the same moment also been given a principle of holiness that results in obedience in life—receive the promise in Habakkuk 2:4 that they shall not die (Habakkuk 1:12), but live.[353] The verb to live is used[354] most commonly of life in this world,[355] but it is also mutual relation between the free promise and faith, leaves no doubt upon the subject. (Commentary on Genesis 15:6)

---

Genesis 15:6's statement וַיַּחְשְׁבֶהָ לּוֹ צְדָקָה could be translated, "and He reckoned it to him, [namely], righteousness." The "it" (הָ) is an anticipatory suffix (cf. GKC 131m), indicating that what was reckoned was "righteousness" (צְדָקָה)—substituting the feminine noun צְדָקָה for the feminine verbal suffix to which it refers, the sentence would be translated, "and He reckoned righteousness to him." The specific noun righteousness, not faith itself or the previous clause וְהֶאֱמִן בַּיהוָה, is the referent of the "it," as in Ezekiel 3:21 the verbal suffix וֹ in הִזְהַרְתּוֹ צַדִּיק "if thou warnest him, the righteous" anticipates the noun צַדִּיק, or in Ecclesiastes 2:21 the וֹ anticipates חֶלְקּוֹ in יִתְּנֶנּוּ חֶלְקּוֹ, "he shall give it, his portion."

349 Isaiah 53:11; cf. 52:13-53:12.

350 This fact is evidenced in the context of vast numbers of passages that speak of the righteous. Affirmations equivalent to 1 Corinthians 6:9-11 or Galatians 5:19-21 fill the Old Testament.

351 Genesis 6:9; 7:1; Habakkuk 2:4, etc.

352 Life, both in the land during this age and in the eschaton, is also promised to those who are the just by perfect inherent personal righteousness, Leviticus 18:5; Nehemiah 9:29; Ezekiel 20:11, 21; however, only the sinless and virgin-born Servant of the Lord has ever fulfilled the Law by His perfect obedience and so merited life in this manner, while His perfect obedience is imputed to the believing sinner freely through Immanuel's substitutionary death (Isaiah 7:14; 53:12; 55:1-3).

353 חיה. Genesis 3:22; 5:3, 5–7, 9–10, 12–13, 15–16, 18–19, 21, 25–26, 28, 30; 6:19–20; 7:3; 9:28; 11:11–26; 12:12–13; 17:18; 19:19–20, 32, 34; 20:7; 25:7; 27:40; 31:32; 42:2, 18; 43:8; 45:7, 27; 47:19, 25, 28; 50:20, 22; Exodus 1:16–18, 22; 19:13; 22:18; 33:20; Leviticus 18:5; 25:35–36; Numbers 4:19; 14:38; 21:8–9; 22:33; 24:23; 31:15, 18; Deuteronomy 4:1, 33, 42; 5:24, 26, 33; 6:24; 8:1, 3; 16:20; 19:4–5; 20:16; 30:16, 19; 32:39; 33:6; Joshua 2:13; 5:8; 6:17, 25; 9:15, 20–21; 14:10; Judges 8:19; 15:19; 21:14; 1 Samuel used of living forever,[356] of life through the future resurrection (Isaiah 26:19), and of spiritual life in the walk of the people of God in their current earthly pilgrimage (Deuteronomy 8:3). The noun for life[357] possesses a similar range of usage, referring to physical life,[358] spiritual life (Deuteronomy 30:6), resurrected life (Daniel 12:2), and eternal life (Genesis 2:9; 3:22). All these senses of life are, in any case, related,[359] as spiritual, physical, and eschatological death are related.[360] Those who will receive life in the resurrection of the just, and will inherit the Millennial kingdom and the new heavens and earth, are those who receive the spiritual blessing of eternal life (Ezekiel 37). Those only of the descendants of Jacob who will rise in the resurrection of the just, enjoy life in the Promised Land in the Millennium, and eternal life forever, are those who are true Israel, those who are united to the ultimate Prince of God, the Messiah who rose to new life on the third day.[361] Those who seek Jehovah rather than idols live[362] long in the land

---

2:6; 10:24; 20:31; 27:9, 11; 2 Samuel 1:10; 8:2; 12:3, 22; 16:16; 1 Kings 1:25, 31, 34, 39; 17:22; 18:5; 20:31–32; 2 Kings 1:2; 4:7; 5:7; 7:4; 8:1, 5, 8–10, 14; 10:19; 11:12; 13:21; 14:17; 18:32; 20:1, 7; 1 Chronicles 11:8; 2 Chronicles 23:11; 25:25; Nehemiah 2:3; 4:2; 5:2; 6:11; 9:6, 29; Esther 4:11; Job 7:16; 14:14; 19:25; 21:7; 33:4; 36:6; 42:16; Psalm 22:26, 29; 30:3; 33:19; 41:2; 49:9; 69:32; 71:20; 72:15; 80:18; 85:6; 89:48; 118:17; 119:17, 25, 37, 40, 50, 77, 88, 93, 107, 116, 144, 149, 154, 156, 159, 175; 138:7; 143:11; Proverbs 4:4; 7:2; 9:6; 15:27; Ecclesiastes 6:3, 6; 7:12; 11:8; Isaiah 7:21; 26:14, 19; 38:1, 9, 16, 21; 55:3; 57:15; Jeremiah 21:9; 27:12, 17; 35:7; 38:2, 17, 20; 49:11; Lamentations 4:20; Ezekiel 3:18, 21; 13:18–19, 22; 16:6; 18:9, 13, 17, 19, 21–24, 27–28, 32; 20:11, 13, 21, 25; 33:10–13, 15–16, 19; 37:3, 5–6, 9–10, 14; 47:9; Hosea 6:2; 14:7; Amos 5:4, 6, 14; Habakkuk 2:4; 3:2; Zechariah 1:5; 10:9; 13:3.

354 The division below is not meant to be comprehensive.

355 Genesis 5, 11; 12:13; 19:19; 20:7.

356 Genesis 3:22; Psalm 22:26.

357 חַי. Genesis 2:7, 9; 3:14, 17, 22, 24; 6:17; 7:11, 15, 22; 9:3; 23:1; 25:7, 17; 27:46; 42:15–16; 47:8–9, 28; Exodus 1:14; 6:16, 18, 20; Leviticus 18:18; Numbers 14:21, 28; 16:30, 33; Deuteronomy 4:4, 9–10; 5:3; 6:2; 12:1; 16:3; 17:19; 28:66; 30:6, 15, 19–20; 31:13; 32:40, 47; Joshua 1:5; 4:14; Judges 8:19; 16:30; Ruth 3:13; 1 Samuel 1:11, 26; 7:15; 14:39, 45; 17:55; 19:6; 20:3, 21; 25:26, 29, 34; 26:10, 16; 28:10; 29:6; 2 Samuel 1:23; 2:27; 4:9; 11:11; 12:5, 21; 14:11, 19; 15:21; 18:18; 19:7, 35; 22:47; 1 Kings 1:29; 2:24; 3:22–23, 25–27; 5:1; 8:40; 11:34; 12:6; 15:5–6; 17:1, 12, 23; 18:10, 15; 21:15; 22:14; 2 Kings 2:2, 4, 6; 3:14; 4:30; 5:16, 20; 25:29–30; 2 Chronicles 6:31; 10:6; 18:13; Psalms 7:6; 16:11; 17:14; 18:47; 21:5; 23:6; 26:9; 27:1, 4; 30:6; 31:11; 34:13; 36:10; 38:20; 49:19; 55:16; 56:14; 63:4–5; 64:2; 66:9; 69:29; 88:4; 103:4; 104:33; 116:9; 124:3; 128:5; 133:3; 146:2; Job 3:20; 7:7; 9:21; 10:1, 12; 24:22; 27:2; 33:30; Proverbs 1:12; 2:19; 3:2, 18, 22; 4:10, 13, 22–23; 5:6; 6:23; 8:35; 9:11; 10:11, 16–17; 11:19, 30; 12:28; 13:12, 14; 14:27, 30; 15:4, 24, 31; 16:15, 22; 18:21; 19:23; 21:21; 22:4; 27:27; 31:12; Ecclesiastes 2:3, 17; 3:12; 4:15; 5:17, 19; 6:12; 7:2; 8:15; 9:3–4, 9; 10:19; Isaiah 4:3; 38:12, 16, 20; 49:18; Jeremiah 4:2; 5:2; 8:3; 12:16; 16:14–15; 21:8; 22:24; 23:7–8; 38:16; 44:26; 46:18; 52:33–34; Lamentations 3:53, 58; Ezekiel 5:11; 7:13; 14:16, 18, 20; 16:48; 17:16, 19; 18:3; 20:3, 31, 33; 33:11, 15, 27; 34:8; 35:6, 11; Daniel 12:2, 7; Hosea 4:15; Amos 8:14; Jonah 2:7; 4:3, 8; Zephaniah 2:9; Malachi 2:5.

358 Genesis 2:7; 7:15; Deuteronomy 12:1.

359 Cf. Deuteronomy 30:6, 15, 19-20; Ezekiel 3:18, 21; 18:17-32; 20:11. Compare also Numbers 21:8-9 & John 3:14-16; also Joshua 6:17 & James 2:25; Hebrews 11:31.

360 Cf. Genesis 2:9, 17.

361 Hosea 6:2; 1 Corinthians 15:4; cf. Job 19:25-27.

362 Amos 5:4, 6, 14.

and receive eschatological life, rather than being cast out of the land in Divine judgment in this life and being cast out of the Lord's presence eschatologically to experience everlasting torment. Spiritual life before God, which includes both fellowship with God on earth through the resurrection and in all future ages to eternity, was generally associated in Israel with a long and prosperous physical life and the promise of life in the Millennial kingdom.[363] True Israel, rather than being eschatologically "cut off" from the people of God under Divine judgment,[364] received life in all of its physical, spiritual, and eschatological blessings. The just partake of physical blessings in this age, spiritual life now, life in the resurrection of the righteous, and life in the Millennial and eternal states.

The New Testament confirms the Old Testament doctrine that, as evidenced in the paradigmatic example of Abraham,[365] the "just shall live by faith."[366] The quotations of Genesis 15:6 and Habakkuk 2:4 in the New Testament emphasize different aspects of the truth taught in the Old Testament text.[367] Before the specific New Testament texts are 363 Cf. Deuteronomy 5:33; 6:24; 16:20; Psalm 34:12-14; 41:2; Proverbs 3:2.

---

364 Cf. Exodus 30:33, 38; 31:14; Leviticus 7:20, 21, 25, 27; 17:4, 9; 18:29; 19:8; 20:17, 18; 23:39; Numbers 9:13; 15:30; Isaiah 53:8; Daniel 9:26; Zechariah 14:2; also Deuteronomy 10:16; 30:6; Jeremiah 4:4; cf. Psalm 125:5.

365 Genesis 15:6; Romans 4:3; Galatians 3:6; James 2:23.

366 Habakkuk 2:4; Romans 1:17; Galatians 3:11; Hebrews 10:38; Ὁ . . . δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται.

367 B. B. Warfield notes:

> It lies on the very surface of the New Testament that its writers were not conscious of a chasm between the fundamental principle of the religious life of the saints of the old covenant and the faith by which they themselves lived. To them, too, Abraham is the typical example of a true believer (Romans 4; Galatians 3; Hebrews 11; James 2); and in their apprehension "those who are of faith," that is, "Christians," are by that very fact constituted Abraham's sons (Galatians 3:7; Romans 4:16), and receive their blessing only along with that "believer" (Galatians 3:9) in the steps of whose faith it is that they are walking (Romans 4:12) when they believe on Him who raised Jesus our Lord from the dead (Romans 4:24). And not only Abraham, but the whole series of Old Testament heroes are conceived by them to be examples of the same faith which was required of them "unto the gaining of the soul" (Hebrews 11). Wrought in them by the same Spirit (2 Corinthians 4:13), it produced in them the same fruits, and constituted them a "cloud of witnesses" by whose testimony we should be stimulated to run our own race with like patience in dependence on Jesus, "the author and finisher of our faith" (Hebrews 12:2). Nowhere is the demand of faith treated as a novelty of the new covenant, or is there a distinction drawn between the faith of the two covenants; everywhere the sense of continuity is prominent (John 5:24, 46; 12:38, 39, 44; 1 Peter 2:6), and the "proclamation of faith" (Galatians 3:2, 5; Romans 10:16) is conceived as essentially one in both dispensations, under both of which the law reigns that "the just shall live by his faith" (Habakkuk 2:4; Romans 1:17; Galatians 3:11; Hebrews 10:38). Nor do we need to penetrate beneath the surface of the Old Testament to perceive the justice of this New Testament view. Despite the infrequency of the occurrence on its pages of the terms "faith" [and] "to believe," the religion of the Old Testament is obviously as fundamentally a religion of faith as is that of the New Testament. There is a sense, to be sure, in which all religion presupposes faith (Hebrews 11:6), and in this broad sense the religion of Israel, too, necessarily rested on faith. But the religion of Israel was a religion of faith in a far more specific sense than this; and that not merely because faith was more consciously its foundation, but because its very essence consisted in faith, and this faith was the same radical self-commitment to God, not merely as the highest good of the holy soul, but as the gracious Saviour of the sinner, which meets us as the characteristic feature of the religion of the New Testament. Between the faith of the two Testaments there exists, indeed, no further difference than that which the progress of the historical working out of redemption brought with it.
>
> The hinge of Old Testament religion from the very beginning turns on the facts of man's sin (Genesis 3) examined, a general overview of New Testament teaching about the just, about life, and about faith will be conducted.[368] and consequent unworthiness (Genesis 3:2-10), and of God's grace (Genesis 3:15) and consequent saving activity (Genesis 3:4; 4:5; 6:8, 13f.). This saving activity presents itself from the very beginning also under the form of promise or covenant, the radical idea of which is naturally faithfulness on the part of the promising God with the answering attitude of faith on the part of the receptive people. Face to face with a holy God, the sinner has no hope except in the free mercy of God, and can be authorized to trust in that mercy only by express assurance. Accordingly, the only cause of salvation is from the first the pitying love of God (Genesis 3:15, 8:21), which freely grants benefits to man; while on man's part there is never question of merit or of a strength by which he may prevail (1 Samuel 2:9), but rather a constant sense of unworthiness (Genesis 32:10), by virtue of which humility appears from the first as the keynote of Old Testament piety. . . . [F]rom the very beginning the distinctive feature of the life of the pious is that it is a life of faith, that its regulative principle is drawn, not from the earth but from above. Thus the first recorded human acts after the Fall—the naming of Eve, and the birth and naming of Cain—are expressive of trust in God's promise that, though men should die for their sins, yet man should not perish from the earth, but should triumph over the tempter; in a word, in the great promise of the Seed (Genesis 3:15). Similarly, the whole story of the Flood is so ordered as to throw into relief, on the one hand, the free grace of God in His dealings with Noah (Genesis 6:8, 18; 8:1, 21; 9:8), and, on the other, the determination of Noah's whole life by trust in God and His promises (Genesis 6:22; 7:5; 9:20). The open declaration of the faith-principle of Abraham's life (Genesis 15:6) only puts into words, in the case of him who stands at the root of Israel's whole national and religious existence, what not only might also be said of all the patriarchs, but what actually is most distinctly said both of Abraham and of them through the medium of their recorded history. The entire patriarchal narrative is set forth with the design and effect of exhibiting the life of the servants of God as a life of faith, and it is just by the fact of their implicit self-commitment to God that throughout the narrative the servants of God are differentiated from others. This does not mean, of course, that with them faith took the place of obedience: an entire self-commitment to God which did not show itself in obedience to Him would be self-contradictory, and the testing of faith by obedience is therefore a marked feature of the patriarchal narrative. But it does mean that faith was with them the precondition of all obedience. The patriarchal religion is essentially a religion, not of law but of promise, and therefore not primarily of obedience but of trust; the holy walk is characteristic of God's servants (Genesis 5:22, 24; 6:9; 17:1; 24:40; 48:15), but it is characteristically described as a walk "with God"; its peculiarity consisted precisely in the ordering of life by entire trust in God, and it expressed itself in conduct growing out of this trust (Genesis 3:20; 4:1; 6:22; 7:5; 8:18; 12:4; 17:23; 21:12, 16, 22). The righteousness of the patriarchal age was thus but the manifestation in life of an entire self-commitment to God, in unwavering trust in His promises.

---

The piety of the Old Testament thus began with faith. . . . Faith, therefore, does not appear as one of the precepts of the law, nor as a virtue superior to its precepts, nor yet as a substitute for keeping them; it rather lies behind the law as its presupposition. Accordingly, in the history of the giving of the law, faith is expressly emphasized as the presupposition of the whole relation existing between Israel and Jehovah. The signs by which Moses was accredited, and all Jehovah's deeds of power, had as their design (Exodus 3:12; 4:1, 5, 8, 9; 19:4, 9) and their effect (Exodus 4:31; 12:28, 34; 14:31; 24:3, 7; Psalm 106:12) the working of faith in the people; and their subsequent unbelief is treated as the deepest crime they could commit (Numbers 14:11; Deuteronomy 1:32; 9:23; Psalm 78:22, 32, 106:24), as is even momentary failure of faith on the part of their leaders (Numbers 20:12). It is only as a consequent of the relation of the people to Him, instituted by grace on His part and by faith on theirs, that Jehovah proceeds to carry out His gracious purposes for them, delivering them from bondage, giving them a law for the regulation of their lives, and framing them in the promised land into a kingdom of priests and a holy nation. In other words, it is a precondition of the law that Israel's life is not of the earth, but is hid with God, and is therefore to be ordered by His precepts. Its design was, therefore, not to provide a means by which man might come into relation with Jehovah, but to publish the mode of life incumbent on those who stand in the relation of children to Jehovah[.] ((“The Biblical Doctrine of Faith,” Warfield, in Biblical Doctrines, vol. 2 of Works)

368 Summarizing the evidence of the New Testament, Warfield writes:

By means of the providentially mediated diversity of emphasis of the New Testament writers on the several aspects of faith, the outlines of the biblical conception of faith are thrown into very high relief.

Of its subjective nature we have what is almost a formal definition in the description of it as an "assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen" (Hebrews 11:1). It obviously contains in it, therefore, an element of knowledge (Hebrews 11:6), and it as obviously issues in conduct (Hebrews 11:8, cf. 5:9; 1 Peter 1:22). But it consists neither in assent nor in obedience, but in a reliant trust in the invisible Author of all good (Hebrews 11:27), in which the mind is set upon the things that are above and not on the things that are upon the earth (Colossians 3:2, cf. 2 Corinthians 4:16-18; Matthew 6:25. The examples cited in Hebrews 11 are themselves enough to show that the faith there commended is not a mere belief in God's existence and justice and goodness, or crediting of His word and promises, but a practical counting of Him faithful (Hebrews 11:11), with a trust so profound that no trial can shake it (Hebrews 11:35), and so absolute that it survives the loss of even its own pledge (Hebrews 11:17). So little is faith in its biblical conception merely a conviction of the understanding, that, when that is called faith, the true idea of faith needs to be built up above this word (James 2:14ff). It is a movement of the whole inner man (Romans 10:9, 10), and is set in contrast with an unbelief that is akin, not to ignorance but to disobedience (Hebrews 3:18, 19; John 3:36; Romans 11:20, 30, 15:31; 1 Thessalonians 1:8; Hebrews 4:2, 6; 1 Peter 1:7, 8; 3:1, 20; 4:18; Acts 14:2; 19:9), and that grows out of, not lack of information, but that aversion of the heart from God (Hebrews 3:12) which takes pleasure in unrighteousness (2 Thessalonians 2:12), and is so unsparingly exposed by our Lord (John 3:19; 5:44; 8:47; 10:26). In the breadth of its idea, it is thus the going out of the heart from itself and its resting on God in confident trust for all good. But the scriptural revelation has to do with, and is directed to the needs of, not man in the abstract, but sinful man; and for sinful man this hearty reliance on God necessarily becomes humble trust in Him for the fundamental need of the sinner—forgiveness of sins and reception into favour. In response to the revelations of His grace and the provisions of His mercy, it commits itself without reserve and with abnegation of all self-dependence, to Him as its sole and sufficient Saviour, and thus, in one act, empties itself of all claim on God and casts itself upon His grace alone for salvation.

It is, accordingly, solely from its object that faith derives its value. This object is uniformly the God of grace, whether conceived of broadly as the source of all life, light, and blessing, on whom man in his creaturely weakness is entirely dependent, or, whenever sin and the eternal welfare of the soul are in view, as the Author of salvation in whom alone the hope of unworthy man can be placed. This one object of saving faith never varies from the beginning to the end of the scriptural revelation; though, naturally, there is an immense difference between its earlier and later stages in fulness of knowledge as to the nature of the redemptive work by which the salvation intrusted to God shall be accomplished; and as naturally there occurs a very great variety of forms of statement in which trust in the God of salvation receives expression. Already, however, at the gate of Eden, the God in whom the trust of our first parents is reposed is the God of the gracious promise of the retrieval of the injury inflicted by the serpent; and from that beginning of knowledge the progress is steady, until, what is implied in the primal promise having become express in the accomplished work of redemption, the trust of sinners is explicitly placed in the God who was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself (2 Corinthians 5:19). Such a faith, again, could not fail to embrace with humble confidence all the gracious promises of the God of salvation, from which indeed it draws its life and strength; nor could it fail to lay hold with strong conviction on all those revealed truths concerning Him which constitute, indeed, in the varied circumstances in which it has been called upon to persist throughout the ages, the very grounds in view of which it has been able to rest upon Him with steadfast trust. These truths, in which the "Gospel" or glad-tidings to God's people has been from time to time embodied, run all the way from such simple facts as that it was the very God of their fathers that had appeared unto Moses for their deliverance (Exodus 4:5), to such stupendous facts, lying at the root of the very work of salvation itself, as that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God sent of God to save the world (John 6:69; 8:24; 11:42; 13:19; 16:27, 30; 17:8, 21; 20:31; 1 John 5:15), that God has raised Him from the dead (Romans 10:9; 1 Thessalonians 4:14), and that as His children we shall live with Him (Romans 6:8). But in believing this variously presented Gospel, faith has ever terminated with trustful reliance, not on the promise but on the Promiser,— not on the propositions which declare God's grace and willingness to save, or Christ's divine nature and power, or the reality and perfection of His saving work, but on the Saviour upon whom, because of these great facts, it could securely rest as on One able to save to the uttermost. Jesus Christ, God the Redeemer, is accordingly the one object of saving faith, presented to its embrace at first implicitly and in promise, and ever more and more openly until at last it is entirely explicit and we read that "a man is not justified save through faith in Jesus Christ" (Galatians 2:16). If, with even greater explicitness still, faith is sometimes said to rest upon some element in the saving work of Christ, as, for example, upon His blood or His righteousness (Romans 3:25; 2 Peter 1:1), obviously such a singling out of the very thing in His work on which faith takes hold, in no way derogates from its repose upon Him, and Him only, as the sole and sufficient Saviour.

The saving power of faith resides thus not in itself, but in the Almighty Saviour on whom it rests. It is never on account of its formal nature as a psychic act that faith is conceived in Scripture to be saving,—as if this frame of mind or attitude of heart were itself a virtue with claims on God for reward, or at least especially pleasing to Him (either in its nature or as an act of obedience) and thus predisposing Him to favour, or as if it brought the soul into an attitude of receptivity or of sympathy with God, or opened a channel of communication from Him. It is not faith that saves, but faith in Jesus Christ: faith in any other saviour, or in this or that philosophy or human conceit (Colossians 2:16, 18; 1 Timothy 4:1), or in any other gospel than that of Jesus Christ and Him as crucified (Galatians 1:8, 9), brings not salvation but a curse. It is not, strictly speaking, even faith in Christ that saves, but Christ that saves through faith. The saving power resides exclusively, not in the act of faith or the attitude of faith or the nature of faith, but in the object of faith; and in this the whole biblical representation centres, so that we could not more radically misconceive it than by transferring to faith even the smallest fraction of that saving energy which is attributed in the Scriptures solely to Christ Himself. This purely mediatory function of faith is very clearly indicated in the regimens in which it stands, which ordinarily express simple instrumentality. It is most frequently joined to its verb as the dative of means or instrument (Acts 15:9; 26:18; Romans 3:28; 4:20; 5:2; 11:20; 2 Corinthians 1:24; Hebrews 11:3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 11, 17, 20, 21, 23, 24, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31); and the relationship intended is further explained by the use to express it of the prepositions ἐκ (Romans 1:17; 3:26, 30; 4:16; 5:1; 9:30, 32; 10:6; 14:23; Galatians 2:16; 3:7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 27, 28; 5:5, 1 Timothy 1:5; Hebrews 10:38; James 2:24) and διά (with the genitive, never with the accusative, Romans 3:22, 25, 30; 2 Corinthians 5:7; Galatians 2:16; 3:14, 26; 2 Timothy 3:15; Hebrews 6:12; 11:33, 39; 1 Peter 1:5),—the fundamental idea of the former construction being that of source or origin, and of the latter that of mediation or instrumentality, though they are used together in the same context, apparently with no distinction of meaning (Romans 3:25, 26, 30; Galatians 2:16). It is not necessary to discover an essentially different implication in the exceptional usage of the prepositions ἐπί (Acts 3:16; Philippians 3:9) and κατά (Hebrews 11:7, 13; cf. Matthew 9:29) in this connexion: ἐπί is apparently to be taken in a quasi-temporal sense, "on faith," giving the occasion of the divine act, and κατά very similarly in the sense of conformability, "in conformity with faith." Not infrequently we meet also with a construction with the preposition ἐν which properly designates the sphere, but which in passages like Galatians 2:20; Colossians 2:7; 2 Thessalonians 2:13 appears to pass over into the conception of instrumentality.

So little indeed is faith conceived as containing in itself the energy or ground of salvation, that it is consistently represented as, in its origin, itself a gratuity from God in the prosecution of His saving work. It comes, not of one's own strength or virtue, but only to those who are chosen of God for its reception (2 Thessalonians 2:13), and hence is His gift (Ephesians 6:23, cf. 2:8, 9; Philippians 1:29), through Christ (Acts 3:16; Philippians 1:29; 1 Peter 1:21; cf. Hebrews 12:2), by the Spirit (2 Corinthians 4:13; Galatians 5:5), by means of the preached word (Romans 10:17; Galatians 3:2, 5); and as it is thus obtained from God (2 Peter 1:1; Jude 3; 1 Peter 1:21), thanks are to be returned to God for it (Colossians 1:4; 2 Thessalonians 1:3). Thus, even here all boasting is excluded, and salvation is conceived in all its elements as the pure product of unalloyed grace, issuing not from, but in, good works (Ephesians 2:8-12). The place of faith in the process of salvation, as biblically conceived, could scarcely, therefore, be better described than by the use of the scholastic term "instrumental cause." Not in one portion of the Scriptures alone, but throughout their whole extent, it is conceived as a boon from above which comes to men, no doubt through the channels of their own activities, but not as if it were an effect of their energies, but rather, as it has been finely phrased, as a gift which God lays in the lap of the soul. "With the heart," indeed, "man believeth unto righteousness"; but this believing does not arise of itself out of any heart indifferently, nor is it grounded in the heart's own potencies; it is grounded rather in the freely-giving goodness of God, and comes to man as a benefaction out of heaven. . . .

[H]e who humbly but confidently casts himself on the God of salvation has the assurance that he shall not be put to shame (Romans 11:11; 9:33), but shall receive the end of his faith, even the salvation of his soul (1 Peter 1:9). This salvation is no doubt, in its idea, received all at once (John 3:36; 1 John 5:12); but it is in its very nature a process, and its stages come, each in its order. First of all, the believer, renouncing by the very act of faith his own righteousness which is out of the law, receives that "righteousness which is through faith in Christ, the righteousness which is from God on faith" (Philippians 3:9, cf. Romans 3:22; 4:11; 9:30; 10:3, 10; 2 Corinthians 5:21; Galatians 5:5; Hebrews 11:7; 2 Peter 1:1). On the ground of this righteousness, which in its origin is the "righteous act" of Christ, constituted by His "obedience" (Romans 5:18, 19), and comes to the believer as a "gift" (Romans 5:17), being reckoned to him apart from works (Romans 4:6), he that believes in Christ is justified in God's sight, received into His favour, and made the recipient of the Holy Spirit (John 7:39, cf. Acts 5:32), by whose indwelling men are constituted the sons of God (Romans 8:13). And if children, then are they heirs (Romans 8:17), assured of an incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading inheritance, reserved in heaven for them; and meanwhile they are guarded by the power of God through faith unto this gloriously complete salvation (1 Peter 1:4, 5). Thus, though the immediate effect of faith is only to make the believer possessor before the judgment-seat of God of the alien righteousness wrought out by Christ, through this one effect it draws in its train the whole series of saving acts of God, and of saving effects on the soul. Being justified by faith, the enmity which has existed between the sinner and God has been abolished, and he has been introduced into the very family of God, and made sharer in all the blessings of His house (Ephesians 2:13f.). Being justified by faith, he has peace with God, and rejoices in the hope of the glory of God, and is enabled to meet the trials of life, not merely with patience but with joy (Romans 5:1f.). Being justified by faith, he has already working within him the life which the Son has brought into the world, and by which, through the operations of the Spirit which those who believe in Him receive (John 7:39), he is enabled to overcome the world lying in the evil one, and, kept by God from the evil one, to sin not (1 John 5:19). In a word, because we are justified by faith, we are, through faith, endowedwith all the privileges and supplied with all the graces of the children of God. ("The Biblical Doctrine of Faith," Biblical

The New Testament confirms that it is the just[369] or righteous man who will live by faith. The just are so for two reasons. First, arising out of the decree of the Father, they have been accounted perfectly righteous legally[370] on the sole basis of the imputed righteousness of the perfectly righteous Christ,[371] who has the very righteousness of God.[372] Second, the just have also been made inwardly righteous—although imperfectly in this life (Romans 3:10), since they will not be completely "made perfect" until their departure from this world (Hebrews 12:23)—through regeneration and progessive sanctification by the Holy Spirit. Before their regeneration, the just were entirely abominable sinners without any righteousness,[373] but after being born again they possess both inward and outward righteousness rather than inward wickedness and a hypocritical or even a sincere but merely outward righteousness.[374] The just man characteristically acts in a righteous way, a way that is in accord with the righteousness that God has placed within his heart in regeneration and strengthens in progressive sanctification (Matthew 1:19). At times the just are specified as righteous without distinguishing between their perfect judicial justifying and imperfect but still real inward righteousness,[375] for both are necessarily conjoined; all the righteous possess both imputed righteousness and imparted inward holiness,[376] for without both (1 John 3:7) men are cast into hell fire,[377] the place of those who are "disobedient"[378] and "unjust,"[379] those who practice evil (1 Peter 3:12), the

---

Doctrines, Warfield, vol. 2 of Works)

369 δίκαιος. The complete list of New Testament references is: Matthew 1:19; 5:45; 9:13; 10:41; 13:17, 43, 49; 20:4, 7; 23:28–29, 35; 25:37, 46; 27:19, 24; Mark 2:17; 6:20; Luke 1:6, 17; 2:25; 5:32; 12:57; 14:14; 15:7; 18:9; 20:20; 23:47, 50; John 5:30; 7:24; 17:25; Acts 3:14; 4:19; 7:52; 10:22; 22:14; 24:15; Romans 1:17; 2:13; 3:10, 26; 5:7, 19; 7:12; Galatians 3:11; Ephesians 6:1; Philippians 1:7; 4:8; Colossians 4:1; 2 Thessalonians 1:5–6; 1 Timothy 1:9; 2 Timothy :8; Titus 1:8; Hebrews 10:38; 11:4; 12:23; James 5:6, 16; 1 Peter 3:12, 18; 4:18; 2 Peter 1:13; 2:7–8; 1 John 1:9; 2:1, 29; 3:7, 12; Revelation 15:3; 16:5, 7; 19:2; 22:11.

370 Romans 5:19; also 1 John 3:7, "Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous." τεκνία, μηδεὶς πλανάτω ὑμᾶς· ὁ ποιῶν τὴν δικαιοσύνην δίκαιός ἐστι, καθὼς ἐκεῖνος δίκαιός ἐστιν. The one who characteristically practices righteousness as a lifestyle (ὁ ποιῶν τὴν δικαιοσύνην), although he does so imperfectly (cf. 1 John 1:8-10), is nonetheless perfectly righteous, even as God is righteous (δίκαιός ἐστι, καθὼς ἐκεῖνος δίκαιός ἐστιν), because of the imputed righteousness received at the moment of conversion, faith, and regeneration.

371 Matthew 27:19, 24; Luke 23:47; 1 Peter 2:21-24; 3:18; 1 John 2:1, 29.

372 John 17:24; Acts 3:14; 7:52; 22:14; Romans 3:26; 1 John 1:9; Revelation 16:5.

373 Matthew 9:13; Mark 2:17; Luke 5:32; cf. 15:7; 18:9.

374 Matthew 23:28; Luke 20:20; Acts 10:22.

375 Matthew 10:41; 13:17; 1 Timothy 1:9; Titus 1:8; 2 Peter 2:7-8; 1 John 2:29; 3:7, 12.

376 Matthew 23:28-29, 35; Luke 14:4; Romans 5:7; Hebrews 11:4; 12:23; James 5:16; Revelation 22:11.

377 Matthew 13:41-43, 48-49; 25:34-46.

378 ἀπειθής, Luke 1:17.

"filthy,"[380] the "ungodly"[381] and the "sinner,"[382] rather than the righteous. Just men are characteristically "good,"[383] "devout,"[384] and "holy" (Mark 6:20), "walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless" (Luke 1:6) as "doers of the law" (Romans 2:13), who characteristically practice righteousness (1 John 2:29), for they have been inwardly renewed in regeneration and are being transformed into Christ's image by sanctification. These men—those perfectly righteous by justification solely on the basis of Christ's imputed righteousness, and characteristically growing progressively more inwardly holy through sanctification by the Spirit—are the just who shall live.

As in Genesis 15:6 the reckoning or accounting of Abraham as righteous was a reference to a legal or judicial imputation of righteousness, not to an infusion or inner impartation of holiness, so when the New Testament speaks of righteousness being counted, accounted, or imputed[385] to Abraham or to believers in general, reference is made to a legal reckoning of righteousness, not an infusion or a making inwardly just. While inner transformation in progressive sanctification is the necessary and certain result of the receipt of Divine imputed righteousness through justification, the root and fundament of the designation of the people of God as just or righteous is the legal accounting of their persons as righteous on the basis of Christ's substitutionary atonement. Many references to the verb to account or impute[386] are very clear instances of a declarative or an accounting idea, and no reference in the New Testament with the verb speaks of a transformation or infusion of new personal qualities by means of imputation. Similarly, the verb to justify[387] always refers to a reckoning or declaration of 379 ἄδικος, Luke 16:10.

---

380 Revelation 22:11, ὁ ῥυπῶν, from ῥυπόω.

381 1 Peter 4:18, ἀσεβής.

382 1 Peter 4:18, ἁμαρτωλός. While a sinful saint Peter, feeling overwhelmed, once refers to himself as a ἁμαρτωλός (Luke 5:8), in all the clear texts where the Divine determination is in view, the unregenerate, not the regenerate, are sinners; see the complete list of texts: Matthew 9:10–11, 13; 11:19; 26:45; Mark 2:15–17; 8:38; 14:41; Luke 5:8, 30, 32; 6:32–34; 7:34, 37, 39; 13:2; 15:1–2, 7, 10; 18:13; 19:7; 24:7; John 9:16, 24–25, 31; Romans 3:7; 5:8, 19; 7:13; Galatians 2:15, 17; 1 Timothy 1:9, 15; Hebrews 7:26; 12:3; James 4:8; 5:20; 1 Peter 4:18; Jude 1:15.

383 Matthew 5:45; 13:48-49; Luke 23:50. Such a man is both ἀγαθός and καλός as opposed to πονηρός, σαπρός, ἄδικος, and κακός (1 Peter 3:12).

384 Luke 2:25, εὐλάβης.

385 λογίζομαι, Romans 4:3; Galatians 3:6; James 2:23.

386 This fact is easily verifiable by an examination of the 41 instances of λογίζομαι in the New Testament: Mark 11:31; 15:28; Luke 22:37; Acts 19:27; Romans 2:3, 26; 3:28; 4:3–6, 8–11, 22–24; 6:11; 8:18, 36; 9:8; 14:14; 1 Corinthians 4:1; 13:5, 11; 2 Corinthians 3:5; 5:19; 10:2, 7, 11; 11:5; 12:6; Galatians 3:6; Philippians 3:13; 4:8; 2 Timoty 4:16; Hebrews 11:19; James 2:23; 1 Peter 5:12.

387 δικαιόω. The verb appears 40 times in the New Testament: Matthew 11:19; 12:37; Luke 7:29, 35; 10:29; 16:15; 18:14; Acts 13:39; Romans 2:13; 3:4, 20, 24, 26, 28, 30; 4:2, 5; 5:1, 9; 6:7; 8:30, 33; 1 righteousness, and never to a transformation into an inwardly righteous state. Consequently, in line with the truth affirmed in Genesis 15:6, the New Testament references to Genesis 15:6 and Habakkuk 2:4 affirm that the righteousness of the just is fundamentally forensic and legal, a righteousness received by all the people of God through the imputation or crediting of Christ's merit.

Habakkuk 2:4, as quoted in the New Testament,[388] promises that the just shall live by faith. The verb to live[389] is employed for the essential life of the Triune God,[390] for physical life on earth in its different aspects,[391] for the life of individuals who have been raised from the dead through a miracle worked by Christ or the Apostles in the first century,[392] for the life of those who will be raised from the dead in the future resurrection of all men and for life possessed in the resurrected eschatological state,[393] for Christ's life after His bodily resurrection,[394] for the Messianic theanthropic life,[395] for the life of the unconverted in bondage to their sinful nature,[396] for the believer's spiritual life on Corinthians 4:4; 6:11; Galatians 2:16–17; 3:8, 11, 24; 5:4; 1 Timothy 3:16; Titus 3:7; James 2:21, 24–25; Revelation 22:11.

---

388 Romans 1:17; Galatians 3:11; Hebrews 10:38.

389 ζάω. The verb appears 142 times in 127 verses in the New Testament. Other uses are found, in addition to those listed in the text. The verb is employed to designate fresh spring water ("living" water) rather than stagnant water, John 4:10, 11; 7:38; Revelation 7:17 (cf. Genesis 21:19; 26:19; Leviticus 14:5–6, 50–51; Numbers 19:17; Song 4:15; Zechariah 14:8, LXX; the "living water," while literally fresh spring water, is also certainly used with spiritual significance), to identify the Scripture as a "living" Word (Acts 7:38; Hebrews 4:12; 1 Peter 1:23), etc.; not every verse is categorized in the body of the text above. The complete list of references is: Matthew 4:4; 9:18; 16:16; 22:32; 26:63; 27:63; Mark 5:23; 12:27; 16:11; Luke 2:36; 4:4; 10:28; 15:13; 20:38; 24:5, 23; John 4:10–11, 50–51, 53; 5:25; 6:51, 57–58, 69; 7:38; 11:25–26; 14:19; Acts 1:3; 7:38; 9:41; 10:42; 14:15; 17:28; 20:12; 22:22; 25:19, 24; 26:5; 28:4; Romans 1:17; 6:2, 10–11, 13; 7:1–3, 9; 8:12–13; 9:26; 10:5; 12:1; 14:7–9, 11; 1 Corinthians 7:39; 9:14; 15:45; 2 Corinthians 1:8; 3:3; 4:11; 5:15; 6:9, 16; 13:4; Galatians 2:14, 19–20; 3:11–12; 5:25; Philippians 1:21–22; Colossians 2:20; 3:7; 1 Thessalonians 1:9; 3:8; 4:15, 17; 5:10; 1 Timothy 3:15; 4:10; 5:6; 6:17; 2 Timothy 3:12; 4:1; Titus 2:12; Hebrews 2:15; 3:12; 4:12; 7:8, 25; 9:14, 17; 10:20, 31, 38; 12:9, 22; James 4:15; 1 Peter 1:3, 23; 2:4–5, 24; 4:5–6; 1 John 4:9; Revelation 1:18; 2:8; 3:1; 4:9–10; 5:14; 7:2, 17; 10:6; 13:14; 15:7; 16:3; 19:20; 20:4.

390 Matthew 16:16; 26:63; John 6:57; Acts 14:15; Romans 9:26; 14:11; 2 Corinthians 3:3; 6:16; Galatians 2:20; 1 Thessalonians 1:9; 1 Timothy 3:15; 4:10; 6:17; Hebrews 3:12; 9:14; 10:31; 12:22; Revelation 1:18; 4:9-10; 5:14; 7:2; Revelation 10:6; 15:7.

391 Matthew 27:63; Mark 5:23; Luke 2:36; 15:13; John 4:50, 51, 53; Acts 10:42; 17:28; 22:22; 25:24; 26:5; 28:4; Romans 7:1-3; 1 Corinthians 7:39; 9:14; 15:45; 2 Corinthians 1:8; 6:9; Galatians 2:14; Philippians 1:21-22; Colossians 2:20; 1 Thessalonians 4:15, 17; 1 Timothy 5:6; 2 Timothy 3:12; 4:1; Titus 2:12; Hebrews 2:15; 9:17; James 4:15; 1 Peter 2:5; Revelation 13:14; 16:3; 19:20.

392 Matthew 9:18; Acts 9:41; 20:12.

393 John 5:25; 2 Corinthians 13:4; Revelation 20:4.

394 Mark 16:11; Luke 24:5, 23; Acts 1:3; 25:19; 2 Corinthains 13:4.

395 John 6:57; 14:19; Hebrews 7:8, 25; Revelation 1:18; 2:8. The believer's eternal life is derived from the living Triune God through Christ as Theanthropic Mediator; cf. John 1:4; 5:26-27; 1 John 1:1-2; 2:25.

396 Romans 8:12-13; Colossians 3:7.

earth,[397] for the believer's enjoyment of life with God after his death but before his resurrection,[398] and for all aspects of eternal life, including both present and eschatological spiritual and resurrected eternal life—that is, for "life" in all senses associated with salvation.[399] Similarly, the noun life[400] is employed for physical life,[401] including life in the Millennial kingdom,[402] life in both its spiritual and physical aspects,[403] and the Theanthropic life of Christ,[404] but is used the large majority of the time for eternal life in all its aspects, from present spiritual life to eschatological resurrected life.[405] As in Habakkuk 2:4 the just would live—have life in its spiritual, physical, and eschatological blessings as a gift from their God and Redeemer with whom they had been brought into saving union, so in the New Testament the just receive life in the like manner. Eternal life—both spiritual life in this present age and eschatological life, which includes the life of the resurrected and glorified physical body—are promised to the just in the New Testament.

The New Testament indicates that Abraham received life when he believed[406] God,[407] for the just shall live by faith.[408] The verb believe is used[409] of receiving 397 Matthew 4:4; Luke 4:4; Romans 6:2, 10, 11, 13; 12:1; 14:7-9; 2 Corinthians 4:11; 5:15; Galatians 2:19-20; 1 Peter 2:24.

---

398 Matthew 22:32; Mark 12:27; Luke 20:38.

399 Luke 10:28; John 6:51, 57, 58; 11:25-26; 14:19; Romans 1:17; 8:13; 10:5; Galatians 3:11-12; 5:25; 1 Thessalonians 5:10; Hebrews 10:38; 12:9; 1 John 4:9; Revelation 3:1.

400 ζωή. The noun appears 134 times in 126 verses. The complete list of references is: Matthew 7:14; 18:8–9; 19:16–17, 29; 25:46; Mark 9:43, 45; 10:17, 30; Luke 1:75; 10:25; 12:15; 16:25; 18:18, 30; John 1:4; 3:15–16, 36; 4:14, 36; 5:24, 26, 29, 39–40; 6:27, 33, 35, 40, 47–48, 51, 53–54, 63, 68; 8:12; 10:10, 28; 11:25; 12:25, 50; 14:6; 17:2–3; 20:31; Acts 2:28; 3:15; 5:20; 8:33; 11:18; 13:46, 48; 17:25; Romans 2:7; 5:10, 17–18, 21; 6:4, 22–23; 7:10; 8:2, 6, 10, 38; 11:15; 1 Corinthians 3:22; 15:19; 2 Corinthians 2:16; 4:10–12; 5:4; Galatians 6:8; Ephesians 4:18; Philippians 1:20; 2:16; 4:3; Colossians 3:3–4; 1 Timothy 1:16; 4:8; 6:12, 19; 2 Timothy 1:1, 10; Titus 1:2; 3:7; Hebrews 7:3, 16; James 1:12; 4:14; 1 Peter 3:7, 10; 2 Peter 1:3; 1 John 1:1–2; 2:25; 3:14–15; 5:11–13, 16, 20; Jude 1:21; Revelation 2:7, 10; 3:5; 11:11; 13:8; 17:8; 20:12, 15; 21:6, 27–22:2; 22:14, 17, 19.

401 Luke 16:25; John 12:25; Acts 8:33; 17:25; Romans 8:38; 1 Corinthians 3:22; 15:19; 2 Corinthians 4:11; Philippians 1:20; 1 Timothy 4:8; James 4:14; Revelation 11:11.

402 Luke 1:75.

403 Luke 12:15; Acts 3:15; 1 Peter 3:7, 10.

404 John 5:26; Romans 5:10; Hebrews 7:3, 16; 1 John 1:1-2.

405 Matthew 7:14; 18:8-9; 19:16-17, 29; 25:46; Mark 9:43, 45, 10:17, 30; Luke 10:25; 18:18, 30; John 1:4; 3:15-16, 36; 4:14, 46; 5:24, 26, 29, 39, 40; 6:27, 33, 35, 40, 47, 48, 51, 53, 54, 63, 68; 8:12; 10:10; 11:25; 12:25, 50; 14:6; 17:2-3; 20:31; Acts 2:28; 3:15; 5:20; 11:18; 13:46, 48; Romans 2:6; 5:17, 21; 6:4, 22-23; 7:10; 8:2, 6, 10; 11:15; 2 Corinthians 2:16; 4:10-12; 5:4; Galatians 6:8; Ephesians 4:18; Philippians 2:16; 4:3; Colossians 3:3-4; 1 Timothy 1:16; 4:8; 6:12, 19; 2 Timothy 1:1, 10; Titus 1:2; 3:7; James 1:12; 1 Peter 3:7, 10; 2 Peter 1:3; 1 John 1:1-2; 2:25; 3:14-15; 5:11-13, 16, 20; Jude 21; Revelation 2:7, 10; 3:5; 13:8; 17:8; 20:12, 15; 21:6, 27; 22:1-2, 14, 16, 19.

406 πιστεύω. The verb appears 248 times in the New Testament: Matthew 8:13; 9:28; 18:6; 21:22, 25, 32; 24:23, 26; 27:42; Mark 1:15; 5:36; 9:23–24, 42; 11:23–24, 31; 13:21; 15:32; 16:13–14, 16–17; Luke 1:20, 45; 8:12–13, 50; 16:11; 20:5; 22:67; 24:25; John 1:7, 12, 50; 2:11, 22–24; 3:12, 15–16, 18, 36;

revelation[410] and of the moment of saving belief in the gospel and in the Christ who is revealed therein, through which sinners become the people of God.[411] Such saving faith

---

4:21, 39, 41–42, 48, 50, 53; 5:24, 38, 44, 46–47; 6:29–30, 35–36, 40, 47, 64, 69; 7:5, 31, 38–39, 48; 8:24, 30–31, 45–46; 9:18, 35–36, 38; 10:25–26, 37–38, 42; 11:15, 25–27, 40, 42, 45, 48; 12:11, 36–39, 42, 44, 46–47; 13:19; 14:1, 10–12, 29; 16:9, 27, 30–31; 17:8, 20–21; 19:35; 20:8, 25, 29, 31; Acts 2:44; 4:4, 32; 5:14; 8:12–13, 37; 9:26, 42; 10:43; 11:17, 21; 13:12, 39, 41, 48; 14:1, 23; 15:5, 7, 11; 16:31, 34; 17:12, 34; 18:8, 27; 19:2, 4, 18; 21:20, 25; 22:19; 24:14; 26:27; 27:25; Romans 1:16; 3:2, 22; 4:3, 5, 11, 17–18, 24; 6:8; 9:33; 10:4, 9–11, 14, 16; 13:11; 14:2; 15:13; 1 Corinthians 1:21; 3:5; 9:17; 11:18; 13:7; 14:22; 15:2, 11; 2 Corinthians 4:13; Galatians 2:7, 16; 3:6, 22; Ephesians 1:13, 19; Philippians 1:29; 1 Thessalonians 1:7; 2:4, 10, 13; 4:14; 2 Thessalonians 1:10; 2:11–12; 1 Timothy 1:11, 16; 3:16; 2 Timothy 1:12; Titus 1:3; 3:8; Hebrews 4:3; 11:6; James 2:19, 23; 1 Peter 1:8, 21; 2:6–7; 1 John 3:23; 4:1, 16; 5:1, 5, 10, 13; Jude 5.

[407] Romans 4:3; Galatians 3:6; James 2:23.

[408] Romans 1:17; Galatians 3:11; Hebrews 10:38; πίστις. The noun appears 244 times in the New Testament: Matthew 8:10; 9:2, 22, 29; 15:28; 17:20; 21:21; 23:23; Mark 2:5; 4:40; 5:34; 10:52; 11:22; Luke 5:20; 7:9, 50; 8:25, 48; 17:5–6, 19; 18:8, 42; 22:32; Acts 3:16; 6:5, 7–8; 11:24; 13:8; 14:9, 22, 27; 15:9; 16:5; 17:31; 20:21; 24:24; 26:18; Romans 1:5, 8, 12, 17; 3:3, 22, 25–28, 30–31; 4:5, 9, 11–14, 16, 19–20; 5:1–2; 9:30, 32; 10:6, 8, 17; 11:20; 12:3, 6; 14:1, 22–23; 16:26; 1 Corinthians 2:5; 12:9; 13:2, 13; 15:14, 17; 16:13; 2 Corinthians 1:24; 4:13; 5:7; 8:7; 10:15; 13:5; Galatians 1:23; 2:16, 20; 3:2, 5, 7–9, 11–12, 14, 22–26; 5:5–6, 22; 6:10; Ephesians 1:15; 2:8; 3:12, 17; 4:5, 13; 6:16, 23; Philippians 1:25, 27; 2:17; 3:9; Colossians 1:4, 23; 2:5, 7, 12; 1 Thessalonians 1:3, 8; 3:2, 5–7, 10; 5:8; 2 Thessalonians 1:3–4, 11; 2:13; 3:2; 1 Timothy 1:2, 4–5, 14, 19; 2:7, 15; 3:9, 13; 4:1, 6, 12; 5:8, 12; 6:10–12, 21; 2 Timothy 1:5, 13; 2:18, 22; 3:8, 10, 15; 4:7; Titus 1:1, 4, 13; 2:2, 10; 3:15; Philemon 1:5–6; Hebrews 4:2; 6:1, 12; 10:22, 38–11:1; 11:3–9, 11, 13, 17, 20–24, 27–31, 33, 39; 12:2; 13:7; James 1:3, 6; 2:1, 5, 14, 17–18, 20, 22, 24, 26; 5:15; 1 Peter 1:5, 7, 9, 21; 5:9; 2 Peter 1:1, 5; 1 John 5:4; Jude 1:3, 20; Revelation 2:13, 19; 13:10; 14:12.

Note also the 67 uses of the adjective πιστός: Matthew 24:45; 25:21, 23; Luke 12:42; 16:10–12; 19:17; John 20:27; Acts 10:45; 13:34; 16:1, 15; 1 Corinthians 1:9; 4:2, 17; 7:25; 10:13; 2 Corinthians 1:18; 6:15; Galatians 3:9; Ephesians 1:1; 6:21; Colossians 1:2, 7; 4:7, 9; 1 Thessalonians 5:24; 2 Thessalonians 3:3; 1 Timothy 1:12, 15; 3:1, 11; 4:3, 9–10, 12; 5:16; 6:2; 2 Timothy 2:2, 11, 13; Titus 1:6, 9; 3:8; Hebrews 2:17; 3:2, 5; 10:23; 11:11; 1 Peter 4:19; 5:12; 1 John 1:9; 3 John 1:5; Revelation 1:5; 2:10, 13; 3:14; 17:14; 19:11; 21:5; 22:6.

The words πιστόω (2 Timothy 3:4), ἀπιστέω (Mark 16:11, 16; Luke 24:11, 41; Acts 28:24; Romans 3:3; 2 Timothy 2:13), ἀπιστία (Matthew 13:58; 17:20; Mark 6:6; 9:24; 16:14; Romans 3:3; 4:20; 11:20, 23; 1 Timothy 1:13; Hebrews 3:12, 19), ἄπιστος (Matthew 17:17; Mark 9:19; Luke 9:41; 12:46; John 20:27; Acts 26:8; 1 Corinthians 6:6; 7:12–15; 10:27; 14:22–24; 2 Corinthians 4:4; 6:14–15; 1 Timothy 5:8; Titus 1:15; Revelation 21:8) and ὀλιγόπιστος (Matthew 6:30; 8:26; 14:31; 16:8; Luke 12:28) complete the word group in the New Testament. Naturally, at different points the various words in the word group are placed together; e. g., 1 Corinthians 14:22 contrasts τοῖς πιστεύουσιν with τοῖς ἀπίστοις.

[409] The classification in the rest of this paragraph is not a comprehensive examination of all that is involved in every usage of πιστεύω in the New Testament. It provides an overview of all uses as background for the uses of πιστεύω that relate to sanctification, the subject of the paragraphs that follow. The classification of the uses of πίστις follows the examination of the uses of πιστεύω.

[410] The aorist of πιστεύω is employed for receipt of revelation about Christ that preceeds the aorist act of saving faith in John 4:21; 10:38; Acts 13:41; Romans 10:16 & Hebrews 11:6. In John 4:21, Christ commands the woman at the well to believe (Γύναι, πίστευσόν μοι) in the Word of God that He is speaking and revealing, so that she might come to saving faith, for receiving the Word is necessary to come to saving faith in Christ (John 10:38), although the unbeliever can exercise a kind of faith in Divine revelation that falls short of saving faith (John 2:23-3:3; Acts 8:13; 26:27-28).

[411] The aorist of πιστεύω is employed for the instantaneous transaction of justifying faith in Matthew 21:32 (publicans and harlots believe the gospel as preached by John the Baptist, while the chief priests and elders did not believe, nor feel remorse, in order that they might believe); Mark 16:15-17; Luke 8:12; John 1:7; 4:39-41; 4:53; 5:44; 6:29-30; 7:31, 48; 8:24, 30; 9:36; 10:38 (where aorist belief in Christ's always leads to continuing faith[412] in God through Christ by means of the Word, for when God gives the lost saving faith, He will continue to give them faith.[413] That is, by means of the exercise of saving faith in Christ at the moment of conversion and regeneration, the lost become those who are believers, those who are believing ones.[414] They believe at a miracles, receipt of revelation about Christ, preceeds the aorist act of saving faith); 10:42; 11:42, 45; 12:38, 47; 17:8, 21; 19:35; 20:29, 31; Acts 4:4, 32; 8:12-13 (genuine conversion in most, spurious "faith" in Simon the sorceror); 9:42; 11:17, 21; 13:12, 48; 14:1; 15:7; 16:31; 17:12, 34; 18:8; 19:2 (what Paul assumes was a true conversion, although it was not one at this point); 19:4; Romans 10:9 (summary action for both belief and confession, although belief, unlike confession, must take place at the moment of regeneration); 10:14; 13:11; 1 Corinthians 3:5; 15:2, 11; Galatians 2:16; Ephesians 1:13; 2 Thessalonians 2:12 (cf. v. 11-13); 1 Timothy 3:16; Hebrews 4:3.

---

The future of πιστεύω likewise regularly represents the point of saving conversion, a fact supported in the contexts where belief as receiving the Word is under consideration (John 3:12; 5:47), where belief is shown to be entrusting (Luke 16:11), and, of course, where specifically saving belief is in view (John 11:48, cf. v. 42, 45 & 12:11; John 17:20; Romans 10:14). In Matthew 27:42 (cf. the aorist subjunctive in Mark 15:32) the Jewish religious leaders make a mocking promise to believe if Christ rejects the way of the cross, while one of the thieves crucified with Christ comes to saving faith in the crucified Christ (Luke 23:42), and after Christ's death, because of His High Priestly intercession, the guard of Gentile soldiers watching Him are born again (Luke 23:34, 47; Matthew 27:54).

412 Thus, many of the aorists of πιστεύω in John express the initial action of saving faith, which leads to continuing faith. For example, the aorist belief of John 4:39-42 leads to the present tense belief of 4:42; the aorist belief of 8:30 leads to the faith expressed with a perfect participle in 8:31; 9:35-38 presents the sequence: "Are you a believer (present tense, πιστεύεις)?" (9:35); "Who do I need to believe (aorist, πιστεύσω) on?" (9:36); "Me," (9:37); "I am a believer [having just become one]; Πιστεύω," (9:38) and so I now recognize You as Lord and God, the One who deserves worship: Πιστεύω, Κύριε· καὶ προσεκύνησεν. Outside of John, comparisons are present such as the present participle in Acts 2:44 and the aorist participle in Acts 4:32, or the aorist imperative in Acts 16:31 and the perfect participle in 16:34, or the present and aorist in 10:43 and 11:17, or the interplay of tenses in Romans 10:9-14; 2 Thessalonians 1:10; cf. also the contrast in the aorist and present subjunctives in 1 John 3:23.

The handful of instances of the imperfect of πιστεύσω provide only limited further support for a durative character of saving faith. In John 12:11, the imperfect is iterative and distributive, used of many coming to saving faith in Christ at different times because of the raising of Lazarus (cf. John 11:42, 45, 48). Acts 18:8 is another distributive use of the imperfect for many coming to conversion and being baptized. John 7:5 & 12:37 speak of continuing unbelief in Christ, as does John 5:46. John 5:46b does, however, provide some evidence for a durative character to saving faith—if those spoken of had been believing in Moses, they would have been believing in Christ (2nd class, present contrary-to-fact condition). Finally, John 2:24 speaks of Christ not entrusting or commiting Himself to those who had not truly come to saving faith in Him (cf. 2:23-3:3).

413 Thus, note the present infinitive of believe in Philippians 1:29; the people of God have faith in both its initial and continuing aspects given to them. The other present infinitives of πιστεύω in the New Testament are durative; see Luke 24:25; John 12:39; Romans 15:13; 1 Timothy 1:16 (not an exception because of the present tense of μέλλω—the verb appears 92 times in the present tense, 17 times in the imperfect, once in the future, and never in the aorist).

414 Thus, Scripture frequently employs a substantival present tense participle of πιστεύω to designate believers. Note Matthew 18:6; Mark 9:42; John 1:12; 3:15, 16, 18, 36; 5:24; 6:35, 40, 47, 64; 7:38-39; 11:25-26; 12:44 (belief in the Son is belief in the Father also); 12:46; 14:12; Acts 2:44; 5:14 (believers added to the Lord's church through baptism); 10:43; 13:39 (note the present tense of "justified"; compare the sense of Genesis 15:6; all who have their confidence in Christ are currently justified through the sole instrumentality of faith, a condition that began at the moment of conversion); 22:19; Romans 1:16; 3:22; 4:5, 11, 24; 9:33; 10:4; 10:11; 1 Corinthians 1:21; 14:22; Galatians 3:22; Ephesians 1:19; 1 Thessalonians 1:7; 2:10, 13; 2 Thessalonians 1:10; 1 Peter 1:21; 2:6, 7; 1 John 5:1, 5, 10, 13.

point in time, with the result that they continue to believe.[415] Their belief is not simply intellectual assent, but a whole-hearted committal, surrender, and entrusting of their entire persons to Christ as the Son of God and their own personal Savior,[416] being assured that He will keep His promise to save all those who in this manner come to Him.[417] In

---

It is worthy of note that all believers, not a subcategory of believers who have entered a Higher Life, are designated with the substantival present participle of πιστεύω; no text in the Bible indicates that only some believers are specified with the substantival present participle of believe, or contrasts some believers that are within this category with other believers who are allegedly not so, while the category of being one who is believing is entered into at the moment of saving faith (cf. John 9:38 & many other texts), not at some later point.

The present indicative of πιστεύω in relation to conversion provides further evidence that the people of God are those who are believing in Christ's Person, work, and Word. Note John 1:50; 8:45-46; 9:35, 38; 12:44; 14:10 (a question with οὐ expects a positive answer); Acts 8:37; 27:25; Romans 10:10; 1 Thessalonians 4:14. Note also the present adverbial participle in 1 Peter 1:8 and the present imperatives in Mark 1:15 & John 12:36, indicating that the response to the gospel is not initial belief alone, but also continuing faith. The use of the present tense of in matters other than conversion also supports a durative idea; see Acts 9:26; 15:11; 24:14; 26:27; Romans 6:8; 14:2; 1 Corinthians 11:18; 13:7; 1 John 4:1.

[415] The aspect of the Greek perfect of πιστεύω encapsulates the combination of the point of conversion and the continuing faith in the regenerate; see John 3:18; 6:69; 8:31; 11:27; 16:27; 20:29; Acts 15:5; 16:34; 18:27; 19:18; 21:20, 25; 2 Timothy 1:12; Titus 3:8; 1 John 4:16; 5:10. The two instances where πιστεύω in the perfect is not used for personal conversion (1 Corinthians 9:17; Galatians 2:17) also both illustrate the aspect of the perfect as a portrayal of point action with continuing results.

[416] The idea of committal or entrustment in πιστεύω is exemplified in Luke 16:11 (committing or entrusting true riches to a person); John 2:24 (Christ's not committing Himself to the unregenerate); Romans 3:2 (the Word of God being entrusted or commited to Israel); 1 Corinthians 9:17; Galatians 2:7; 1 Timothy 1:11; Titus 1:3 (an administration of the gospel being committed or entrusted to Paul, or (1 Thessalonians 2:4) to Paul and his associates.

Furthermore, "Deissmann in Light From the Ancient East gives several convincing quotations from the papyri to prove that πιστεύειν εἰς αὐτόν meant surrender or submission to. A slave was sold into the name of the god of a temple; i. e., to be a temple servant. G. Milligan agrees with Deissmann that this papyri usage of εἰς αὐτόν is also found regularly in the New Testament. Thus to believe on or . . . into the name of Jesus means to renounce self and to consider onself the life-time servant of Jesus" (pg. 105, A Manual Grammar of the Greek New Testament, H. E. Dana & Julius R. Mantey. New York, NY: MacMillan, 1955). Concerning the contribution of the prepositional usages with πιστεύω, Warfield notes:

> πιστεύω + ἐν, which is the most frequent of the constructions with prepositions in the Septuagint, retires almost out of use in the New Testament[.] . . . The implication of this construction would seem to be firm fixedness of confidence in its object. Scarcely more common is the parallel construction of ἐπί with the dative, expressive of steady, resting repose, reliance upon the object. . . . The constructions with prepositions governing the accusative, which involve an implication of "moral motion, mental direction towards," are more frequently used. . . . The special New Testament construction . . . is that with εἰς, which occurs some forty-nine times, about four-fifths of which are Johannine and the remainder more or less Pauline. . . . [W]hat these passages express is "an absolute transference of trust from ourselves to another," a complete self-surrender to Christ. . . . [Similarly,] πίστις [is] self-abandoning trust[.] . . . [NT] usage [of the πιστεύω word group demonstrates] . . . that the idea of "faith" is conceived of in the New Testament as the characteristic idea of Christianity, and that it does not import mere "belief" in an intellectual sense, but all that enters into an entire self-commitment of the soul to Jesus as the Son of God, the Saviour of the world. (pgs. 476-478, 483, Biblical Doctrines, Warfield)

[417] The element of assurance in πιστεύω is validated in all the texts where the idea of trusting or entrusting is prominent; cf. Luke 16:11; Ephesians 1:13; 1 Thessalonians 2:4; 1 Timothy 1:11; 2 Timothy 1:12. Compare 2 Timothy 3:14's use of πιστόω, "to be sure about something because of its reliability, feel confidence, be convinced" (BDAG), for "the things which thou . . . hast been assured of," and also the important πείθω word group.

contrast, the unconverted are in a state of unbelief[418] in Christ.[419] While they can make superficially positive responses to Christ,[420] they refuse to entrust themselves to Him[421] and believe the gospel[422] because they reject the testimony to Him of the Word.[423]

The adjective faithful/believing[424] illustrates the Biblical continuity between the initial act of faith in conversion and the continued believing of the regenerate and the 418 Compare the uses of ἀπιστέω, used in the New Testament only for disbelief in the resurrection of Christ (Mark 16:11; Luke 24:11, 41) and for those who do not believe and are consequently are eternally damned (Mark 16:16; Acts 28:24; Romans 3:3; 2 Timothy 2:13 (cf. 2:13 with 2:12b)).

---

419 John 6:36, 64; 10:25-26, 37-38; 16:9 (present tense); 7:5 (imperfect); 1 John 5:10 (present participle and perfect tense verb)

420 That is, they can have a temporary belief without possessing a root in themselves (Luke 8:13), a belief that the Lord Jesus is from God and a doer of miracles without genuine saving faith and the new birth (John 2:23-3:3; Acts 8:13-24), a belief that does not displace a predominant love of self, so that one is unwilling to confess Christ and endure religious persecution (John 12:42-43), and a belief that Christ speaks the truth (John 4:50) or that is an assent to doctrinal orthodoxy (James 2:19). Scripture never uses the perfect tense of πιστεύω for the "faith" of the unconverted, and John never uses the present tense in such a manner, either. The use of the present tense in Luke 8:13 is specifically limited in context (οἳ πρὸς καιρὸν πιστεύουσι), and the character of the belief as mere assent is also very clear in the context of James 2:19. The testimony of Scripture is clear that saints exercise saving faith at a particular moment in time, and that their belief then continues, while the ungodly neither exercise saving faith nor have a persevereing faith.

421 In Jude 5, those spoken of are eternally destroyed because they are those who never come to faith (τοὺς μὴ πιστεύσαντας, aorist participle). In John 3:18, the one in a state of unbelief (ὁ . . . μὴ πιστεύων, contrasted with ὁ πιστεύων εἰς αὐτὸν) is already condemned (ἤδη κέκριται) because he has never come to place his faith in the Son of God (ὅτι μὴ πεπίστευκεν εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ μονογενοῦς υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ).

422 Mark 16:15-17.

423 Believing in a person and believing his message are closely related (Luke 22:67; John 10:25-26; Matthew 21:25, 32; Mark 11:31; Luke 20:5; all these texts are aorists). The Jews do not have God's Word abiding (τὸν λόγον . . . οὐκ ἔχετε μένοντα) in them, because they do not believe (οὐ πιστεύετε) in Christ (John 5:38). They should believe the testimony involved in Christ's works (τοῖς ἔργοις πιστεύσατε) in order that they might come to faith (ἵνα . . . πιστεύσητε) in Christ as the Divine Messiah (John 10:25-26, 37-38). In John 5:44-47, the unconverted Jews were not able to come to faith in Christ (δύνασθε . . . πιστεῦσαι) because they were seeking honor of each other and not seeking the honor that comes from God alone (δόξαν παρὰ ἀλλήλων λαμβάνοντες, καὶ τὴν δόξαν τὴν παρὰ τοῦ μονου Θεοῦ οὐ ζητεῖτε) and because, although they trusted in (ἠλπίκατε) Moses, they were actually in a state of unbelief in the Word written by Moses, and so were unable to believe in Christ or His Word (εἰ γὰρ ἐπιστεύετε Μωσῇ, ἐπιστεύετε ἂν ἐμοί· περὶ γὰρ ἐμοῦ ἐκεῖνος ἔγραψεν. εἰ δὲ τοῖς ἐκείνου γράμμασιν οὐ πιστεύετε, πῶς τοῖς ἐμοῖς ῥήμασι πιστεύσετε). Furthermore, remaining in unbelief concerning earthly things testified to by Christ (John 3:12a, present tense) prevents one from believing in heavenly things He speaks of (John 3:12b, future tense; cf. the example of unbelief (in the aorist) in Christ's miraculous healing of the man born blind, John 9:18). Apart from signs and wonders the Jews would by no means believe (Ἐὰν μὴ σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα ἴδητε, οὐ μὴ πιστεύσητε, John 4:48, cf. 20:29), but even after Christ did vast numbers of miracles, they could not believe because of their hardened hearts and blinded eyes (John 12:38-39). Because the unconverted refuse to believe the Word, they will believe a Satanic lie (πιστεῦσαι . . . τῷ ψεύδει) when it is set before them and be damned because they did not believe the truth (οἱ μὴ πιστεύσαντες τῇ ἀληθεία, 2 Thessalonians 2:11-13; contrasted with ἀδελφοι ἠγαπημένοι ὑπὸ Κυρίου who have πίστει ἀληθείας).

related identity of those who have believed in Christ and those who are faithful to Him. God[425] and Christ[426] are faithful, many individual Christians[427] and groups of Christians[428] are specified as being faithful, and all those who believe[429] are the [424] πιστός. The translational difference between faithful and believing is a product of the adjective presenting the passive or active ideas of πιστεύω; πιστός is either "1. pertaining to being worthy of belief or trust, trustworthy, faithful, dependable, inspiring trust/faith, pass. aspect of πιστεύω" or "2. pert. to being trusting, trusting, cherishing faith/trust act. aspect of πιστεύω" (BDAG). The large majority of the time in the New Testament πιστός refers specifically to faithfulness; it is translated faithful 53 times, and believe or believing only 8 times out of its 67 appearances. All the references where πιστός sis predicated of non-animate objects necessarily refer to faithfulness, as only animated beings can actively believe; hence deeds can be faithful (3 John 5, "a faithful thing thou doest," πιστὸν ποιεῖς), the mercies of David are "sure" or faithful (Acts 13:44), Scripture is faithful (Titus 1:9), and various sayings, in particular the words of God (Revelation 21:5; 22:6), are true and faithful (1 Timothy 1:15; 3:1; 4:9; 2 Timothy 2:11; Titus 3:8). The complete list of references is: Matthew 24:45; 25:21, 23; Luke 12:42; 16:10–12; 19:17; John 20:27; Acts 10:45; 13:34; 16:1, 15; 1 Corinthians 1:9; 4:2, 17; 7:25; 10:13; 2 Corinthians 1:18; 6:15; Galatians 3:9; Ephesians 1:1; 6:21; Colossians 1:2, 7; 4:7, 9; 1 Thessalonians 5:24; 2 Thessalonians 3:3; 1 Timothy 1:12, 15; 3:1, 11; 4:3, 9–10, 12; 5:16; 6:2; 2 Timothy 2:2, 11, 13; Titus 1:6, 9; 3:8; Hebrews 2:17; 3:2, 5; 10:23; 11:11; 1 Peter 4:19; 5:12; 1 John 1:9; 3 John 5; Revelation 1:5; 2:10, 13; 3:14; 17:14; 19:11; 21:5; 22:6.

---

[425] 1 Corinthians 1:9; 10:13; 2 Corinthians 1:18; 1 Thessalonians 5:24; 2 Thessalonians 3:3; 2 Timothy 2:13; Hebrews 10:23; 11:11; 1 Peter 4:19; 1 John 1:9.

Lightfoot points out the close connection between believing and faithfulness in the idea of πιστός and its Hebrew and English cognates:

> The Hebrew אֱמוּנָה, the Greek πίστις, the Latin 'fides,' and the English 'faith,' hover between two meanings; trustfulness, the frame of mind which relies on another; and trustworthiness, the frame of mind which can be relied upon. Not only are the two connected together grammatically, as active and passive senses of the same word, or logically, as subject and object of the same act; but there is a close moral affinity between them. Fidelity, constancy, firmness, confidence, reliance, trust, belief—these are the links which connect the two extremes, the passive with the active meaning of 'faith.' Owing to these combined causes, the two senses will at times be so blended together that they can only be separated by some arbitrary distinction. When the members of the Christian brotherhood, for instance, are called 'the faithful,' οἱ πιστοί, what is meant by this? Does it imply their constancy, their trustworthiness, or their faith, their belief? In all such cases it is better to accept the latitude, and even the vagueness, of a word or phrase, than to attempt a rigid definition, which after all can be only artificial. And indeed the loss in grammatical precision is often more than compensated by the gain in theological depth. In the case of 'the faithful' for instance, does not the one quality of heart carry the other with it, so that they who are trustful are trusty also; they who have faith in God are stedfast and immovable in the path of duty? (Lightfoot, Commentary on Galatians, sec. "The Words Denoting 'Faith'")

[426] Christ is a faithful High Priest (Hebrews 2:17; 3:2; cf. 3:5, Moses' faithfulness as a type of Christ), and a faithful witness, (Revelation 1:5; 3:14; 19:11). Christ's faithfulness in Revelation is set forth as a pattern for the believer's faithfulness. Christ was a faithful witness unto death, and Christians must likewise be faithful unto death (Revelation 1:5; 2:10, 13; 3:14; 17:14; 19:11).

[427] Moses as a type of the faithful Christ (Hebrews 3:5); Paul (1 Corinthians 7:25; 1 Timothy 1:12); Timothy (1 Corinthians 4:17); Tychicus (Ephesians 6:21; Colossians 4:7); Epaphras (Colossians 1:7); Onesimus (Colossians 4:9); Silvanus (1 Peter 5:12); Antipas (Revelation 2:13) & Abraham (Galatians 3:9). The use of πίστος for Abraham illustrates the continuity between those who are believing and those who are faithful; Abraham is the father and the pattern of the people of God, for he was faithful/believing and so are they. Similarly, those who love Christ—as all do who will be saved (John 8:42; 1 Corinthians 16:22; Ephesians 6:24)—are the faithful/believing who receive the crown of life (Revelation 2:10; James 1:12).

[428] Paul and his coworkers (1 Corinthians 4:2); the wives of deacons (1 Timothy 3:11); the children of qualified overseers (Titus 1:6); & male church members with the ability to teach others (2 Timothy 2:2; "faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also," πιστοῖς ἀνθρώποις, οἵτινες ἱκανοὶ ἔσονται faithful.[430] While there are certainly degrees of faithfulness, and indwelling sin is present and ever active in the regenerate, nonetheless all Christians are specified as faithful, and no text indicates that any believer is unfaithful.[431] On the contrary, only those who are καὶ ἑτέρους διδάξαι, are all the regenerate men, the believing and faithful men, in the church with teaching ability; Scripture gives no category of unfaithful and unbelieving men who are properly church members—the unfaithful are the unregenerate who are eternally damned, Revelation 21:8).

---

[429] Acts 10:45; 16:1; 2 Corinthians 6:15; 1 Timothy 4:3, 10, 12, 5:16; 6:2. None of these passages even hint that some who believe are not faithful. Indeed, 1 Timothy 6:2 (And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them, because they are brethren; but rather do them service, because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort, οἱ δὲ πιστοὺς ἔχοντες δεσπότας μὴ καταφρονείτωσαν, ὅτι ἀδελφοί εἰσιν· ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον δουλευέτωσαν, ὅτι πιστοί εἰσι καὶ ἀγαπητοὶ οἱ τῆς εὐεργεσίας ἀντιλαμβανόμενοι. ταῦτα δίδασκε καὶ παρακάλει.) specifically identifies the believing and the faithful. Those with "believing" masters—clearly all Christian masters, all who are "brethren"—are to honor their masters because they are "faithful and beloved." πιστοί . . . καὶ ἀγαπητοί is translated correctly in the Authorized Version, for as "beloved" (ἀγαπητός) in the verse signifies "one being loved," the passive sense of ἀγαπάω, so "faithful" (πιστός) is the passive sense of of πιστεύω, that is, "faithful" rather than "believing." That is, the masters are specified as "faithful and beloved," rather than "believing and beloved." Consequently, the two senses of πιστός are equated as identical categories in 1 Timothy 6:2. The "believing" are the "faithful."

[430] Matthew 24:45; 25:21, 23; Luke 12:42; 16:10-12; 19:17; Acts 16:15; Ephesians 1:1; Colossians 1:2; Revelation 2:10; 17:14.

[431] John 20:27, the verse containing the only use of πιστός in John's Gospel, as well as the only use of ἄπιστος, is no exception. (The noun πίστις does not appear in John's Gospel.) The Apostle Thomas is not specified as one who is in the category of the faithless, but as one who is on the way to such a category, but is stopped from becoming faithless by the almighty power of the resurrected Christ—a power He exercises on behalf of all His people. Thomas had affirmed that he would by no means come to faith in Christ's resurrection without seeing physical evidence of it (οὐ μὴ πιστεύσω, John 20:25—an attitude Christ had condemned in the unregenerate Jews, 4:48), but upon the appearance of Christ in His resurrected body, the Lord exhorted Thomas to not become faithless and unbelieving, but faithful and believing (μὴ γίνου ἄπιστος, ἀλλὰ πιστός, John 20:27), accompanying His exhortation with supernatural grace and power, the kind of supernatural grace and power exerted by the risen Christ whenever He brings a sinner from darkness into light (cf. John 6:44), resulting in Thomas's great confession of Christ as his own Lord and his own God (Ὁ Κύριός μου καὶ ὁ Θεός μου, 20:28), and Christ's recognition that, as evidenced by his confession, Thomas was now in a state of believing, having passed out of his position on the road to faithlessness to a state of faith and consequent faithfulness (πεπίστευκας, 20:29, so that Thomas was now πιστός, not one on the path to ἄπιστος, 20:27). The Lord Jesus' word, μὴ γίνου ἄπιστος, ἀλλὰ πιστός, was Christ's command to Thomas not to continue on the pathway toward becoming a faithless unbeliever, but rather to become a faithful believer, and His command was accompanied by effectual grace that made His Word so. By His word of command, Christ created the universe out of nothing (cf. the uses of γίνομαι in John 1:3; 10 & Genesis 1:3, 6, etc.), and by the same omnipotent word of command, He created faith within Thomas. By his unbelief in the act of the resurrection, Thomas was in danger of becoming an unbeliever in Christ generally, and the Lord effectually interposed to deliver His beloved sheep from such a possibility by bringing him to a belief in the resurrection. "Stop becoming an unbeliever," or "Do not be becoming an unbeliever," μὴ γίνου ἄπιστος, using γίνομαι, "to become," is a different command than μὴ ἴσθι ἄπιστος, "Do not continue to be an unbeliever," using εἰμί, "to be." John's Gospel is very capable of clearly distinguishing γίνομαι and εἰμί (cf. John 1:1–2, 4, 8–10, 15, 18 & John 1:3, 6, 10, 12, 14–15, 17). As Peter's faith was, considered independently of Christ, able to fail, but because of Christ's High Priestly intercession for Peter, the Apostle's faith was certainly not going to fail, but would certainly be strengthened (Luke 22:32), so the Apostle Thomas's faith, considered independently, was capable of failure, but Christ's effectual work on his behalf as Mediator guaranteed that Thomas would not become an unbeliever (cf. John 17); instead, Christ's command of power in John 20:27 lost are specified by the adjective unfaithful or unbelieving.[432] The faithful are all those who have received spiritual grace, been adopted into God's family, and consequently become church members, rather than only a subcategory of the church or a subclass of Christian.[433] The faithful are those who enter the everlasting kingdom rather than burning in hell,[434] and those who receive the crown of life and who will be with the Lamb rather than being separated from Him forever.[435] Those who come to believe in Christ are made, by supernatural grace, into those who will continue to entrust themselves to Him. God makes them into those who are characteristically faithful, rather than being unfaithful.

As with the verb to believe, the noun faith[436] regularly refers to the faith exercised at the moment of conversion and regeneration, bringing immediate justification and all the blessings of union with Christ.[437] As seen with the adjective faithful/believing, Scripture does not draw a sharp distinction in its usage of the noun faith between the faith immediately and effectually turned Thomas from the path towards unbelief and brought the Apostle to make his great confession to Christ, "My Lord and my God" (John 20:28).

---

Indeed, as John 20 is the climax of John's Gospel, Thomas' confession of the crucified and resurrected Christ as his own Lord and God (20:28), consequent upon Christ's effectual command and exercise of supernatural efficacy upon Thomas to be a believer (20:27; cf. 6:44-45, 65), is a paradigm of the character of saving faith in the Son of God as exercised by the unbeliever (John 20:29-31). Thomas's faith-response to the revelation of Christ is paradigmatic for the Divinely-enabled response of faith in the conversion of the lost and for the continuing Divinely-enabled faith-response to greater revelations of the Person and work of the Triune God to the believer. Thus, considered in context, John 20:27 is so far from proving that a true Christian can be ἄπιστος, "unbelieving/unfaithful," instead of πιστός, "faithful/believing," that it affirms both that conversion involves a transition from being ἄπιστος to being πιστός and that Christ prevents His people from ever falling into the category of ἄπιστος as He preserves every last one of them unto His eternal kingdom.

[432] ἄπιστος. The complete list of references is: Matthew 17:17; Mark 9:19; Luke 9:41; 12:46; John 20:27; Acts 26:8; 1 Corinthians 6:6; 7:12–15; 10:27; 14:22–24; 2 Corinthians 4:4; 6:14–15; 1 Timothy 5:8; Titus 1:15; Revelation 21:8. In every instance, with the sole exception of Acts 26:8, where reference is not made to persons, but to an event that is deemed hard to believe or incredible, it is very clear that the ἄπιστος is an unconverted person, one who is contrasted with the people of God, one who is under the control of Satan (2 Corinthians 4:4) and whose eternal destiny is the lake of fire (Revelation 21:8).

However, the noun ἀπιστία is used in the Gospels for not only for the lack of faith of the unsaved (Matthew 13:58; Mark 6:6) but also for the weakness of faith of the people of God (Mark 16:14) that reduces their effectiveness in service (Matthew 17:20; Mark 9:24). Paul restricts ἀπιστία to the unconverted (Romans 3:3; 4:20; 11:20, 23; 1 Timothy 1:13; Hebrews 3:12, 19) in the manner that the entirety of the New Testament restricts the status of ἄπιστος to the unconverted.

[433] Ephesians 1:1, cf. 1:2ff.; Colossians 1:2.

[434] Matthew 24:45 vs. 51; 25:21, 23 vs. 25:30; Luke 12:42 vs. 46; 16:10-14 (the unfaithful are without true, spiritual riches, like the unconverted Pharisees); 19:17 vs. 22-27.

[435] Revelation 2:10; 17:14.

[436] πίστις.

[437] Matthew 8:10-11; 9:2; Mark 2:5; 5:34; 10:52; Luke 5:20; 7:50; 8:48; 17:19; 18:42; Acts 14:27; 15:9; 20:21; 26:18; Romans 3:25-28, 30-31; 4:5, 9, 11-14, 16, 19-20; 5:1-2, 9:30, 32; 10:6, 8, 17; 11:20; Galatians 3:2, 5, 7-9, 11-12, 14, 22-26, 5:5-6, Ephesians 2:8; Colossians 2:12; 2 Thessalonians 2:13.

exercised at the moment of regeneration and the faith continually present in all true Christians—the believer's continuing entrusting of himself to Christ for justification, sanctification, and eternal life is simply the continuation of the state into which he entered for the first time at the moment of his conversion.[438] Thus, all God's people continually trust in Christ alone for their salvation;[439] even those in a state of severe backsliding are preserved from the loss of faith by the intercession of their High Priest (Luke 22:31-34; cf. 1 Peter 1:5). Those who receive spiritual and eternal life at the moment of their justification by faith never have their faith or spiritual life entirely eliminated. Consequently, in all the saints their union with Christ by faith produces visible results, so that their faith is never isolated from spiritual graces and never without works.[440] Saving faith always results in justification, but not justification only, but also sanctification and its endpoint, glorification, for the exercise of saving faith always results in the "obedience of faith."[441]

The specific object of faith is Christ the Mediator, and through Him the Triune God,[442] to whom one comes with an assured confidence[443] in His ability and willingness 438 An examination of all or at least almost all the passages referenced in the previous footnote will validate this fact. As Abraham's faith in his initial conversion began a lifelong entrusting of himself to his Redeemer, so the Christian's exercise of saving faith leads to his being one who walks in the steps of the faith exercised by Abraham (Romans 4:11-12) for the word of faith includes both righteousness received at the moment of conversion and the confession of Christ before men and life of prayer that springs out of the presence of faith in the heart (Romans 10:6-17); initial receipt of the Spirit at the moment of faith is united to the presence of faith that leads to the exercise of spiritual gifts (Galatians 3:2, 5), and those who receive righteousness by faith are those in whom faith works by love (Galatians 5:5-6). A variety of texts speak of the faith present as a mark of all the people of God; cf. 1 Corinthians 15:14, 17 & the texts in the following note.

---

439 Thus, all the people of God have faith, Luke 18:7-8; Romans 1:8, 12; 1 Corinthians 2:5; Galatians 6:10; Colossians 1:4; Philippians 2:17; 1 Thessalonians 3:2, 5-7; 2 Thessalonians 3:2.

440 James speaks of faith as the present possession of all the saints (James 1:3, 2:1, 5), and the kind of faith that they possess, the "faith of God's elect" (Titus 1:1), is never without works (James 2:17-26). Hebrews similarly assumes justifying faith always results in perseverance, even in light of severe difficulties. Evidence from both James and Hebrews is explicated below.

441 ὑπακοὴν πίστεως, Romans 1:5; 16:26. These two texts, the first and last references to faith in Romans, both mentioning the "obedience of faith" through which pagan Gentiles are transformed into ἅγιοι, holy ones or saints (1:7), illustrate the fact that Romans teaches that the salvation which is received through faith includes not justification only (3-5), but sanctification also (6-8, 12-15).

442 In texts such as Romans 3:22; Galatians 2:16, 20; 3:22; Ephesians 3:12; Philippians 3:9 the πίστις Χριστοῦ, "faith of Christ," and their related phrases are objective genitives, signifying "faith in Christ." Compare Romans 5:1-2; Ephesians 2:18; & pgs. 81-98, Chapter 7, "On the πίστις Χριστοῦ Question," On Romans: And Other New Testament Essays, C. E. B. Cranfield. Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1998. Carson & Beale note:

> [P]rior to the 1970s the construction pistis Iēsou Christou was almost universally understood to mean "faith in Jesus Christ" (the so-called objective genitive), but in recent decades many scholars have argued that it should be rendered "the faith/faithfulness of Jesus Christ" (subjective genitive). . . . [T]he arguments usually advanced against the traditional interpretation are either irrelevant (e.g., some scholars point to the absence of pistis + objective genitive of a person in classical literature, but this absence is precisely what one would expect in documents that do not otherwise speak about the need for believing in a person) or based on an

to save, without any additional human requirements of works (Romans 3:27-28), in accordance with His promise, but it also encompasses the entire revelation and body of truth contained in the Word of God, which is "the faith."[444] "The faith in Christ"[445] includes, in addition to the direct act of faith in the Person of the Redeemer, the recognition of other Scriptural truths such as "righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come" (Acts 24:24). "The faith" includes the gospel (Philippians 1:27), all that Paul preached (Galatians 1:23), and all the propositional and practical affirmations of Christianity (Ephesians 4:5), for it consists of all that has been revealed by Christ,[446] the entirety of the Scripture, to which each true believer and church are commanded to conform and to which they will attain perfect conformity eschatologically (Ephesians 4:13-14). Loyalty to Christ and Christianity, to "the faith," requires both justifying faith and faithfulness.[447] Thus, those who are born again are "obedient to the faith" (Acts inadequate understanding of the objective genitive (e.g., that it is not natural, or that it does not apply in this case because pisteuō is construed with the dative or with a prepositional phrase). The ambiguity inherent in genitival constructions can be resolved only by examining unambiguous constructions in the immediate and broader contexts, preferably if they use the same or cognate terms. The NT as a whole, and Paul in particular, regularly and indisputably use both pistis and pisteuō of the individual's faith in God or Christ, but they never make unambiguous statements such as episteusen Iēsous ("Jesus believed") or pistos estin Iēsous ("Jesus is believing/faithful"). These and other considerations explain why the early fathers who spoke Greek as their native tongue never seem to have entertained the idea that this genitival construction has Jesus Christ as the subject of the implied action (pgs. 789-790, Commentary on the New Testament Use of the Old Testament, G. K. Beale & D. A. Carson. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Academic, 2007)

---

Similarly, Warfield noted:

> [The] object [of] πίστις is most frequently joined to [it] as an objective genitive, a construction occurring some seventeen times, twelve of which fall in the writings of Paul. In four of them the genitive is that of the thing, namely in Philippians 1:27 the gospel, in 2 Thessalonians 2:13 the saving truth, in Colossians 2:12 the almighty working of God, and in Acts 3:16 the name of Jesus. In one of them it is God (Mark 11:22). The certainty that the genitive is that of object in these cases is decisive with reference to its nature in the remaining cases, in which Jesus Christ is set forth as the object on which faith rests (Romans 3:22, 26; Galatians 2:16 [2x], 20; 3:22; Ephesians 3:12; 4:13; Philippians 3:9; James 2:1; Revelation 2:13; 14:12). ("The Biblical Doctrine of Faith," Warfield, in Biblical Doctrines, vol. 2 of Works.)

Compare the many πιστεύω + εἰς contructions with Christ as their object (Matthew 18:6; Mark 9:42; John 1:12; 2:11; 3:15-18, etc.), although such faith directed toward Christ includes faith in that God who sent Him as well (John 5:24; 1 Thessalonians 1:8; 1 Peter 1:21).

443 Acts 17:31; Romans 4:21. While personal assurance of salvation is not of the essence, but is of the well-being, of faith, faith does necessarily involve certainty about the ability and willingness of God to save in accordance with His gospel promises.

444 In Galatians 3:23, 25, "the faith" refers to the fuller revelation in the New Testament, as set in contrast with the Mosaic dispensation, that Jesus Christ of Nazareth is the promised Messiah; saving faith now involves trusting that the son of Mary is the crucified and risen Redeemer.

445 τῆς εἰς Χριστὸν πίστεως.

446 Revelation 2:13; 14:12. "The faith" is "the faith of Jesus" (τὴν πίστιν Ἰησοῦ), who calls it "my faith" (τὴν πίστιν μου), because it is revelation from Him and about Him, a body of truth that pertains to Him and, being possessed by Him, is communicated to, received by, and practiced by His people.

447 Revelation 2:19; 13:10, etc. It is very clear that πίστις refers, at times, to faithfulness, rather than to the subjective act of faith; see, e. g., Romans 3:3; Titus 2:10.

6:7)[448] while an unconverted man who "turn[s] away . . . from the faith" rejects Christianity and refuses to come to conversion (Acts 13:8). Those who have Christ in them—which necessarily produces inward and outward holiness—are those who are "in the faith" (2 Corinthians 13:5). The faith[449] includes both doctrinal propositions[450] and a holy lifestyle, including edifying speech (1 Timothy 1:4), care for one's needy family members (1 Timothy 5:8), righteousness, godliness, faithfulness, love, patience, and meekness (1 Timothy 6:11), and both the avoidance of a love for money (1 Timothy 6:10) and profane babblings (1 Timothy 6:20-21). The propositional and practical elements of the faith are inextricably intertwined,[451] so that a sound or healthy faith includes both propositional and practical soundness.[452] Scriptural faith and faithfulness includes walking humbly with God.[453] Fighting the "good fight of faith" (1 Timothy 6:12) and earnestly contending for the faith (Jude 3) involves a grace-enabled battle for both the propositional and practical elements of the faith in the church and the world while holding to them oneself; the believer is to possess and contend for an unhypocritical or unfeigned faith.[454] The "faith of God's elect" includes both "truth" and "godliness" (Titus 1:1); failure to tenaciously hold to faith and a good conscience leads to doctrinal and practical shipwreck concerning the faith.[455] Obedience to Scripture establishes Christians and churches in the faith (Acts 16:5), for those who are reconciled to God "continue in the faith grounded and settled," and are not "moved away from the

---

448 ὑπήκουον τῇ πίστει. The imperfect ὑπήκουον includes more than just obedience to the Divine summons to pardon and justification.

449 All the references to πίστις in in the pastoral epistles relate to the faith as a body of truth, while some to faithfulness also, and to the subjective exercise of faith in sanctification, with one or the other side of πίστις emphasized to different degrees in the various passages; see 1 Timothy 1:2, 4–5, 14, 19; 2:7, 15; 3:9, 13; 4:1, 6, 12; 5:8, 12; 6:10–12, 21; 2 Timothy 1:5, 13; 2:18, 22; 3:8, 10, 15; 4:7; Titus 1:1, 4, 13; 2:2, 10; 3:15. The study entitled "The πίστις word-group in the Pastoral Epistles" (pgs. 213-217, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Pastoral Epistles, I. H. Marshall & P. H. Towner. London: T & T Clark, 2004) has some value, despite various errors, including those derived from rationalism.

450 1 Timothy 4:1, 6; 6:20-21; 2 Timothy 1:13; 2:18.

451 2 Timothy 3:8-16; 4:1-7.

452 Titus 1:10-16; 2:1-10; Jude 3-20; Revelation 2:13-16; cf. the results of coming to "the unity of the faith" in knowledge of and likeness to the Son of God in purity of doctrine and of life (Ephesians 4:14-16), in love for God with all the mind and all the heart and soul.

453 Matthew 23:23, referencing Micah 6:8. Micah's "to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God" (עֲשׂוֹת מִשְׁפָּט וְאַהֲבַת חֶסֶד וְהַצְנֵעַ לֶכֶת עִם־אֱלֹהֶיךָ׃) is referenced in Matthew as "judgment, mercy, and faith" (τὴν κρίσιν καὶ τὸν ἔλεον καὶ τὴν πίστιν). Compare also Zechariah 7:9.

454 A πίστις that is ἀνυπόκριτος; 1 Timothy 1:5; 2 Timothy 1:5. The believer, and especially the spiritual leader, must not be a fake or be disingenuous in his doctrinal profession or his lifestyle.

455 1 Timothy 1:19; cf. 3:9.

hope of the gospel" (Colossians 1:23).[456] Spiritual leaders and disciplers are to train others to faithful steadfastness in all the truths of the Word, acting as spiritual fathers who establish spiritual sons in the faith,[457] for sanctification includes being progressively built up upon the foundation of the faith.[458] Believers commit themselves to "the faith" at the moment of their conversion and grow in their knowledge of, practice of, and ability to practice, defend, and propagate the faith in its propositional and practical entirety in their progressive sanctification.

The synoptic Gospels indicate that believing has an important role in the Christian life as a response to specific revelation from God and as an instrument for the receipt of specific blessings from God, particularly the receipt of answers to prayer. The disciple who disbelieves specific revealed truths or acts of God is blameworthy,[459] while disbelieving a counterfeit of the Word as proclaimed by false prophets is commanded.[460] On the other hand, answers to prayer are given to believers[461] who, recognizing the ability of God in Christ to meet their needs, petition and trust in Him to do so[462] and remain stedfast in faith,[463] as enabled by the Holy Spirit, although God in His mercy can answer the sincere prayer offered by one who groans under the burden of felt unbelief.[464] Thus, while God preserves perpetually a root of faith in all those to whom He has given it at the moment of their regeneration and conversion, faith is sometimes a grace that 456 The "if," εἴγε, of Colossians 1:23 introduces a first class, not a third class conditional clause; Paul assumes that the Colossians will continue in the faith.

---

457 1 Timothy 1:2; Titus 1:4.

458 Jude 20. Jude opens and closes his epistle with a reference to "the faith" (Jude 3, 20), so "building up yourselves on your most holy faith," τῇ ἁγιωτάτῃ ὑμῶν πίστει ἐποικοδομοῦντες ἑαυτούς, refers to individual and corporate Christian edification on the basis of and grounded upon "the faith," so that in this manner growing spiritually, believers will be protected from apostasy and "keep themselves in the love of God," ἑαυτοὺς ἐν ἀγάπῃ Θεοῦ τηρήσετε, Jude 21.

459 Mark 16:13-14; Luke 1:20 (cf. 1:45); 24:25.

460 Matthew 24:23, 26; Mark 13:21.

461 In all of the texts where faith is enjoined upon people for answer to prayer those who have exercised saving faith are in view; the unconverted are never in view.

462 Matthew 8:13; Mark 5:36; 9:23-24; Luke 1:45.

463 Note the present tenses for the state of faith associated with answered prayer in Matthew 9:28 (Πιστεύετε ὅτι δύναμαι τοῦτο ποιῆσαι; λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, Ναί, Κύριε); 21:22 (πάντα ὅσα ἂν αἰτήσητε ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ, πιστεύοντες, λήψεσθε; note the contrast between the aorist αἰτήσητε and the present πιστεύοντες); Mark 5:36 (Μὴ φοβοῦ, μόνον πίστευε); 9:23-24 (note both coming to faith and the state of faith in Εἰ δύνασαι πιστεῦσαι, πάντα δυνατὰ τῷ πιστεύοντι) 11:23-24 (note again the aorist and present in ἀμὴν γὰρ λέγω ὑμῖν ὅτι ὃς ἂν εἴπῃ τῷ ὄρει τούτῳ, Ἄρθητι, καὶ βλήθητι εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν, καὶ μὴ διακριθῇ ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτοῦ, ἀλλὰ πιστεύσῃ ὅτι ἃ λέγει γίνεται· ἔσται αὐτῷ ὃ ἐὰν εἴπῃ. διὰ τοῦτο λέγω ὑμῖν, Πάντα ὅσα ἂν προσευχόμενοι αἰτεῖσθε, πιστεύετε ὅτι λαμβάνετε, καὶ ἔσται ὑμῖν); Luke 8:50 (Μὴ φοβοῦ· μόνον πίστευε, καὶ σωθήσεται).

464 Mark 9:23-24.

pertains to the believer's particular acts of trust for specific situations.[465] A believer who wants certainty that God will answer his prayers must, enabled by grace, "have faith, and doubt not," and then "whatsoever [h]e shall ask in prayer, believing, [h]e shall receive."[466] Such answers to prayer are related to the genuineness, rather than the quantity, of the believer's faith (Matthew 17:20); one either is trusting the Lord for an answer to prayer, or is lacking in faith (Luke 17:6).[467] Faith is consequently required in prayer for healing.[468] Likewise, one who lacks wisdom is commanded to "ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord" (James 1:5-7). Those who doubt in a particular situation, such as trusting God for safety and consequently being free from fear in a storm (Psalm 46:1-3; Isaiah 43:2), and are consequently wavering like the waves of the sea, have, in that particular situation "no faith,"[469] instead of having a steadfast faith (Colossians 2:7). For specific blessings, Christians must with assurance and confidence trust the Lord to meet specific needs, and, in prayer, ask with unwavering faith, for then God has promised to answer them.

As a grace[470] that pertains to the believer's continual, lifelong level of entrusting himself to the Lord, some disciples have weak faith, some have strong faith, and faith can become weaker or grow stronger. When "the apostles said unto the Lord, Increase[471] our

---

465 The texts in the first part of this paragraph employ πιστεύω, while the latter half examines uses of πίστις. The two are combined because of the similar teaching enforced by the verb and the noun.

466 Matthew 21:21-22; Mark 11:22-24.

467 The εἰ εἴχετε πίστιν . . . ἂν of Luke 17:6 (corrupted in the critical text to εἰ ἔχετε), a second class conditional, indicates that no faith was present for the particular prayer request mentioned in the verse.

468 James 5:15 sets forth the general principle that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick," while New Testament narrative provides a variety of examples where Christ tells those who have entrusted themselves to Him for salvation, "as thou hast believed" for a particular healing "so be it done unto thee" (Matthew 8:13), "according to your faith be it unto you" (Matthew 9:29; cf. 9:22; 15:28; Mark 5:34; 10:52; Luke 7:9-10; 8:48; 17:19; 18:42; Acts 3:16; 14:9). Acts 3:16 also agrees with James 5:14-16 in ascribing faith for healing to supernatural grace given by God through Christ (the faith which is by him, ἡ πίστις ἡ δι᾽ αὐτοῦ, cf. "the faith which comes through him," ἡ πίστις ἡ δι᾽ αὐτοῦ, Ignatius to the Philadelphians 8:2) Reference the discussion of James 5 in the section on Boardman.

469 Mark 4:40; Luke 8:25. Matthew 8:26 indicates that the disciples had a little faith, but as the storm kept going on, their faith for safety failed, even as Peter had faith for a little while to walk to Christ on stormy water, but then his faith, being only little, failed him as well, and he began to sink (Matthew 14:28-31).

470 Thus, faith is a central and abiding quality in the believer comparable to hope and love, 1 Corinthians 13:13.

471 πρόσθες, from προστίθημι, "to add to something that is already present or exists" (BDAG).

faith" (Luke 17:5), they asked for something very proper.[472] As regenerate persons, the Apostles already possessed faith, but they wished for their already extant faith to grow. They did not ask for a new type of faith, but for an increase and growth in what they already had from the time of their conversion—they want "furtherance . . . of faith," faith progressing and passing into an ever more advanced state.[473] Faith does not experience a qualitative alteration from mistrust into trust, but in progressive sanctification it does undergo a quantitative increase and a qualitative increase in stedfastness and decrease in mutability.[474] Furthermore, faith is not an autonomous product of the human will, but a supernaturally imparted gift given by Christ. Indeed, God deals to believers different measures of faith, and they should think soberly of themselves and exercise their spiritual gifts in accordance with the measure of faith God has given them[475] through Christ by the [472] A genuine trust in the Lord for a particular request in prayer, such as an ability to forgive those who repeatedly wrong one, is a matter of either the possession of a true confidence in God to answer the request or a lack thereof—even the faith of a mustard seed, if a true confidence, will bring the fulfillment of the prayer (Luke 17:4-6). On the other hand, the believer's entrusting of himself to God in Christ, which began at the time of his conversion and never thenceforward departs for the course of his life, can increase in its measure. As a mustard seed, in the proper conditions of watering and provision, grows into a very large tree, Matthew 13:31-32, so faith grows through the spiritual provision of God. Indeed, both the continual entrusting of oneself to Christ that marks a Christian and the ability to trust the Lord for a specific answer to prayer are Divinely wrought graces within the soul—neither is a self-production of the human will.

---

[473] Philippians 1:25, προκοπὴν . . . τῆς πίστεως. A "progress, advance . . . frequently of moral progress" (Liddell-Scott) of faith, a "change [of] one's state for the better by advancing and making progress," to "advance, to progress, to change for the better, advancement" (Louw-Nida). Compare 1 Timothy 4:15 & TLNT, as well as προκόπτω in Luke 2:52; Galatians 1:14; 2 Timothy 2:16; 3:13.

[474] The qualitative continuity and quantitative development of faith is well expressed in the Old London/Philadelphia Baptist Confession of 1689:

> 1. The grace of faith, whereby the elect are enabled to believe to the saving of their souls, is the work of the Spirit of Christ (2 Corinthians 4:13; Ephesians 2:8) in their hearts, and is ordinarily wrought by the ministry of the (Romans 10:14, 17) word; by which also, and by the administration of baptism, and the Lord's supper, prayer, and other means appointed of God, it is increased (Luke 17:5; 1 Peter 2:2; Acts 20:32) and strengthened. 2. By this faith, a Christian believeth to be true (Acts 24:14) whatsoever is revealed in the word, for the authority of God himself; and also apprehendeth an excellency therein (Psalm 19:7, 8, 9, 10; Psalm 119:72) above all other writings, and all things in the world; as it bears forth the glory of God in his attributes, the excellency of Christ in his nature and offices, and the power and fulness of the Holy Spirit in his workings and operations; and so is enabled to (2 Timothy 1:12) cast his soul upon the truth thus believed; and also acteth differently upon that which each particular passage thereof containeth; yielding obedience to the (John 15:14) commands, trembling at the (Isaiah 66:2) threatenings, and embracing the (Hebrews 11:13) promises of God, for this life and that which is to come. But the principal acts of saving faith have immediate relation to Christ, accepting, receiving, and resting upon (John 1:12; Acts 16:31; Galatians 2:20; Acts 15:11) him alone, for justification, sanctification, and eternal life, by virtue of the covenant of grace. 3. This faith, although it be different in degrees, and may be weak (Hebrews 5:13, 14; Matthew 6:30; Romans 4:19, 20), or strong, yet it is in the least degree of it different in the kind, or nature of it (as is all other saving grace) from the faith (2 Peter 1:1) and common grace of temporary believers; and therefore, though it may be many times assailed and weakened, yet it gets (Ephesians 6:16; 1 John 5:4, 5) the victory, growing up in many, to the attainment of a full (Hebrews 6:11, 12; Colossians 2:2) assurance through Christ, who is both the author (Hebrews 12:2) and finisher of our faith. (Chapter 14, "Of Saving Faith.")

[475] Romans 12:3-6. In Romans 12:3, both μερίζω, "to make an allotment . . . deal out, assign, apportion" (BDAG), and μέτρον, "the result of measuring, quantity" (BDAG), are clear evidence that faith

Spirit.[476] They should not have weak faith,[477] or "little faith,"[478] but "great faith"[479] and "strong . . . faith."[480] They are to seek, by means of exercise, to have their faith "increase,"[481] "grow exceedingly,"[482] and "abound,"[483] growing towards the goal of having "all faith" (1 Corinthians 13:2), possessing the highest possible quantity and quality of faith, just as they seek the highest degree of diligence, knowledge, and love (2 Corinthians 8:7). However, as long as indwelling sin remains in the believer, faith has "that which is lacking"[484] in it, and stands in need of being "perfect[ed]" (1 Thessalonians 3:10). Disciples should not let their faith become weak, but maintain a steadfast and strong faith.[485] They should fervently pray, night and day, and have others pray also, for the perfecting of that which is lacking in their faith,[486] and become those who are both "full of faith"[487] and yet growing ever the more full. While the New Testament emphasizes faith as either present or absent in regard to receiving spiritual blessings in specific situations, it also presents faith as a spiritual grace that, while present in all the can increase in its quantity and quality, as is the reference to faith's ἀναλογία, "proportion" (BDAG; cf. "mathematical proportion," Liddell-Scott), in Romans 12:6.

---

476 Ephesians 6:23; 1 Corinthians 12:8-9; Galatians 5:22.

477 Romans 14:1; ἀσθενέω & πίστς.

478 Matthew 6:30; 8:26; 14:31; 16:8; Luke 12:28, ὀλιγόπιστος, "pertaining to having relatively little faith—'of little faith, of insufficient faith'" (Louw-Nida). ὀλίγος can refer, among other uses, to smallness in amount (1 Timothy 5:23) or duration (Acts 14:28). Little faith is both small temporally and quantitatively. Also, while little faith fears (Matthew 8:26), strong faith does not (Hebrews 11:23).

479 Matthew 8:10; Luke 7:9, τοσοῦτος πίστις, faith of a "high degree of quantity, so much, so great," or a "high degree of quality . . . so great/strong" (BDAG).

480 Romans 4:20, ἐνεδυναμώθη τῇ πίστει, explained in v. 21 as "being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, he was able also to perform," πληροφορηθεὶς ὅτι ὃ ἐπήγγελται, δυνατός ἐστι καὶ ποιῆσαι.

481 2 Corinthians 10:5, αὐξάνω, "to become greater, grow, increase . . . in extent, size, state, or quality" (BDAG).

482 2 Thessalonians 1:3, ὑπεραυξάνει ἡ πίστις, from ὑπεραυξάνω, "to increase beyond measure; to grow exceedingly" (Thayer). Such spectacular growth ought to be a continual process, as it was among the Thessalonians.

483 2 Corinthians 8:7, περισσεύω, "to exist in abundance" (Louw-Nida). The verse affirms that faith is a spiritual grace that can grow and abound like other graces, such as love, knowledge, or diligence.

484 ὑστέρημα, "the lack of what is needed or desirable, frequently in contrast to abundance, need, want, deficiency . . . a defect that must be removed so that perfection can be attained*, lack, shortcoming*" (BDAG). The word is usually quantitative in the New Testament; note the complete list of references: Luke 21:4; 1 Corinthians 16:17; 2 Corinthians 8:13–14; 9:12; 11:9; Philippians 2:30; Colossians 1:24 (not Christ's vicarious sufferings, which are never designated with θλῖψις in the New Testament, but Paul's afflictions for Christ, which have a Divinely ordained full measure); 1 Thessalonians 3:10. The Christian's failure to have "all faith" indicates his quantitative lack, which muts be perfected.

485 Colossians 2:5; Acts 16:5; στερέωμα, "firmness, steadfastness, strength," & στερεόω; cf. Acts 3:7, 16.

486 1 Thessalonians 3:10, νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας ὑπὲρ ἐκπερισσοῦ δεόμενοι εἰς τὸ ἰδεῖν ὑμῶν τὸ πρόσωπον, καὶ καταρτίσαι τὰ ὑστερήματα τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν.

487 Acts 6:5, 8; 11:24; πλήρης πίστεως.

regenerate, has degrees, and is Divinely strengthened, increases, and abounds, as believers exercise it.

The Apostle Paul also taught that a believer's continuing faith played a role in his sanctification, both as an instrument to enable specific ministry and as a conduit for receipt of Divine grace and transformation in general. As King David, in the Old Testament, spoke for the Lord despite trial and affliction (Psalm 116:1-9) because he believed (Psalm 116:10), so Paul and other preachers speak and preach the truth and endure persecution (2 Corinthians 4:8-12) because of their continuing faith in Christ (2 Corinthians 4:13) arising out of their conversion. That is, Christian ministry, specifically bold preaching of the gospel, even in the face of tremendous hostility and opposition, arises out of the continuing faith and confidence of the believer in the risen Christ, his Redeemer (2 Corinthians 4:14). Paul also taught that God fills believers with all joy and peace as they believe and by means of their faith (Romans 15:13);[488] faith is the human response through which God makes the believer holy, filling him with the holy attributes of hope, peace, and joy. The Apostle Paul taught that faith was the necessary foundation for boldness and perseverance in gospel ministry and the means through which God transforms believers into His image. Thus, as the verb believe illuminates the believer's greater entrustment of himself to Christ in progressive sanctification, so the noun faith illuminates the role of faith in the spiritual life of the regenerate.[489] Faith prompts the believer to perform specific spiritual ministries, such as speaking for Christ (2 Corinthians 4:13), for power from the Holy Spirit arises out of the "hearing of faith."[490] Faith prompts generous sharing of physical goods with other believers (Philemon 5-7). Saving faith will always result in good works (James 2).[491] Furthermore, faith is indeed essential for spiritual life and growth, because whatever does not proceed out of, whatever is not sourced in faith is sin (Romans 14:23).[492] A strong faith will trust in God and His promises despite human impossibilities, while a weak faith will stagger in such 488 Note the discussion of this verse in the examination of the book of Romans below.

---

489 The first part of this paragraph examines uses of πιστεύω, and the latter half uses of πίστις; similarity of content justifies bringing the two together.

490 Galatians 3:5, cf. 3:2. Spiritual gifts, such as the first century sign gift of miracle working power mentioned in 3:5, are a product which developed out of the continuing hearing of faith (ἐξ ἀκοῆς πίστεως). The Spirit Himself was received at the moment of conversion and regeneration by the hearing of faith, ἐξ ἀκοῆς πίστεως, 3:2, and His gifts are bestowed in the same manner, 3:5.

491 James 2; πίστις appears in 2:1, 5, 14, 17, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26.

492 πᾶν δὲ ὃ οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως, ἁμαρτία ἐστίν (Romans 14:23b). While the specific issue in context is faith in eating certain foods (Romans 14:22-23a), Christian life is a life ἐκ πίστεως, for ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται, Romans 1:17; Galatians 3:11; Hebrews 10:38.

situations (Romans 4:19-20).[493] The degree of weakness or strength of faith leads the believer to its respective degree of proneness to wander and susceptability to fall or to stedfastness and faithfulness (Romans 14). Patience is produced by faith that is successfully tried and tested.[494] It is not surprising, then, that by "taking[495] the shield of faith" and the "breastplate of faith and love," the Christian can "quench all the fiery darts of the wicked," "stand,"[496] and "resist . . . the devil . . . steadfast in the faith"[497]—faith is key to resisting sin and Satan. Indeed, God continually keeps, preserves, and guards His people through faith, and so brings them to ultimate salvation.[498] Those with faith are the regenerate, and all such people definitively overcame the world at the moment of their conversion, are overcoming now, and will ultimately and finally overcome the world and enter the eternal kingdom.[499] Faith in both its initial bestowal and its increase in sanctification is not an autonomous product of man, but is initially created and 493 That the faith of the Christian life is an outflow of the initial entrustment to Christ of the people of God is evident in Romans 4:19-20's placement within a context of many instances of πίστις that refer to the moment of justification.

---

494 James 1:3; cf. 1 Peter 1:7.

495 The command of Ephesians 6:13, ἀναλάβετε τὴν πανοπλίαν, is to take up the armor to use it in battle, here in spiritual battle.

496 Ephesians 6:13-18; 1 Thessalonians 5:8. The shield of faith can by no means be neglected; "above all," ἐπὶ πᾶσιν, (cf. Colossians 3:14; Luke 3:20; not the tiny minority text reading ἐν πᾶσιν), "taking the shield of faith."

497 1 Peter 5:8-9. ὁ . . . διάβολος . . . ᾧ ἀντίστητε στερεοὶ τῇ πίστει.

498 God has a certain inheritance reserved in heaven (κληρονομίαν . . . τετηρημένην ἐν οὐρανοῖς) for those whom He keeps by His power through faith unto eschatological salvation, τοὺς ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ φρουρουμένους διὰ πίστεως εἰς σωτηρίαν ἑτοίμην ἀποκαλυφθῆναι ἐν καιρῷ ἐσχάτῳ, 1 Peter 1:5-6, so that they will certainly receive the end of their faith (τὸ τέλος τῆς πίστεως), the salvation of their souls (1 Peter 1:9), even if God tries their precious faith (1 Peter 1:7). Sanctifying faith, which is the continuation of initial justifying faith, reaches its ultimate issue in glorification.

499 1 John 5:4-5, ὅτι πᾶν τὸ γεγεννημένον ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ νικᾷ τὸν κόσμον· καὶ αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ νίκη ἡ νικήσασα τὸν κόσμον, ἡ πίστις ἡμῶν. τίς ἐστιν ὁ νικῶν τὸν κόσμον, εἰ μὴ ὁ πιστεύων ὅτι Ἰησοῦς ἐστὶν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ; Those who have been and consequently are born of God (τὸ γεγεννημένον ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ) are having victories, are overcoming (νικᾷ) the world, because the root of that victory, through which the world was at its fundamental level overcome, ἡ νίκη ἡ νικήσασα τὸν κόσμον, (cf. 1 John 2:13; 4:4 with νικάω in the perfect) took place at the moment of faith, πίστις, and regeneration, through which they were brought into union with that Christ who has overcome (νενίκηκα) the world (John 16:33), and gives them His Spirit to destroy their sinfulness and sinning, so that those who believe are those who are overcoming now (ὁ νικῶν τὸν κόσμον . . . . ἐστιν . . . ὁ πιστεύων), the root of faith in Jesus Christ continuing to powerfully produce results, so that these will ultimately, finally, and completely overcome the world. Faith "is the victory" as a metonomy for the means through which victory was obtained; because faith unites believers with Christ, faith is the means through which victory is achieved.

It is noteworthy that 1 John 5:4 is the only instance of the noun πίστις in either John's Gospel or his three Epistles, although he uses the word several times in Revelation.

subsequently strengthened by the supernatural efficacy of the Holy Spirit,[500] although not the Spirit alone, but also the Father and the Son, and therefore, the entire Trinity, give believers both initial faith and ever greater measures of faith, love, and other spiritual graces (2 Peter 1:1; Ephesians 6:23). Through the efficacious working of God, the believer's faith is established, strengthened, and confirmed, with the result that it abounds[501] and "groweth exceedingly."[502] God produces this increase of faith through the Scripture, for faith, while ultimately resting on God, proximately rests upon His revelation of Himself in the Word. While God produces faith, believers are responsible to "add to their faith" virtue, knowledge, and other holy graces, which develop out of the root of faith; believers are to diligently and industriously pursue the means to obtain what they desire God to bestow upon them,[503] and in this manner their faith, knowledge, godliness, charity, and other holy graces will be in them all the more, increasing and abounding, with the result that they bear spiritual fruit.[504] Sanctification takes place as one is "nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine," inspired words that both produce faith and sound doctrine and which describe and delimit what such faith and doctrine are.[505] Believers are to "stand fast in the faith" (1 Corinthians 16:13), for Paul 500 That is, faith is a fruit of the Spirit, something that originates in Him, in contrast to the works of the flesh, which are indeed products originating with the fallen human person, rather than with God (Galatians 5:19-23).

---

501 βεβαιούμενοι ἐν τῇ πίστει . . . περισσεύοντες ἐν αὐτῇ, Colossians 2:7. Compare the other βεβαιόω texts in the New Testament: Mark 16:20; Romans 15:8; 1 Corinthians 1:6, 8; 2 Corinthians 1:21; Colossians 2:7; Hebrews 2:3; 13:9.

502 2 Thessalonians 1:3, ὑπεραυξάνει ἡ πίστις; a continuing action, resulting in strength to endure persecutions and tribulations, 1:4, and set in contrast to a faith that is "lacking" or deficient (ὑστέρημα, 1 Thessalonians 3:10)

503 2 Peter 1:5-7. Believers are to add or supply (ἐπιχορηγέω) such virtues to their faith, but God gives (χορηγέω, 1 Peter 4:11; cf. 2 Peter 1:1, 3) the faith in the first place. Compare the ἐπιχορηγέω/ χορηγέω in 2 Corinthians 9:10. By adding or ministering additionally (ἐπιχορηγέω) to their faith, an entrance into God's eternal kingdom will be given or ministered additionally (ἐπιχορηγέω) to them, 2 Peter 1:11.

504 2 Peter 1:8, "these things" (ταῦτα) the holy graces of the previous verses, can be in them and be increasing or abounding (ὑπάρχοντα καὶ πλεονάζοντα), and they will make them (καθίστησιν) not to be unfruitful (οὐκ ἀργοὺς οὐδὲ ἀκάρπους).

505 In 1 Timothy 4:6, rather than giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, through his faithful warning ministry Timothy will "be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine," καλὸς ἔσῃ διάκονος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἐντρεφόμενος τοῖς λόγοις τῆς πίστεως, καὶ τῆς καλῆς διδασκαλίας. The articular τῆς πίστεως is not limited to a body of teaching or truth rather than personally possessed and exercised faith because: 1.) Elsewhere in the pastoral epistles a distinction between articular and nonarticular πίστις as, respectively, a body of truth and personally exercised faith, cannot be maintained; see, e. g., 2 Timothy 1:5; 3:10. 2.) τῆς πίστεως is in the second attributive position, and "[e]specially when the article is used to denote the second attributive position would we say that it has almost no semantic meaning" (pg. 239, Greek Grammar Beyond the Basics, Wallace). 3.) The personal exercise of faith is intimately associated with the body of doctrine in which faith is exercised. 4.) Being "nourished up" in the realm and by the instrumentality of "the words of writes, "by faith ye stand" (2 Corinthians 1:24). Indeed, believers "walk by faith, not by sight" (2 Corinthians 5:7),[506] so the spiritual life of the Christian is a walk of faith, specifically, faith in the Son of God (Galatians 2:20),[507] through whom believers are strengthened by the Spirit to employ their free, gracious, and confident access by faith to the Father.[508] Rather than Jewish ceremonial, faith that works by and is being energized by love is what matters (Galatians 5:6).[509] The believer's faith can grow in quantity, resulting in his proper exercise of his spiritual giftedness and in holy living (Romans 12:3-21), for the more faith the believer has, the more spiritual joy and other holy graces he has, and the greater progress he makes in holiness (Philippians 1:25).[510] An increase of faith will result in an increase in good works, in the "work of faith."[511] Indeed, while all believers already have Christ in them,[512] the Father grants that believers, as they are spiritually strengthened, have Christ dwelling[513] in their hearts by faith in an ever greater faith" supports the idea that personal faith is in view. 5.) Other portions of Scripture indicate that faith is produced by the Word (Romans 10:17, cf. v. 8). Compare also "faith in Him," τὸν λόγον τῆς εἰς αὐτὸν πίστεως, Dialogue with Trypho 40.

---

506 Note that there is nothing in the context of 2 Corinthians 5:7 that suggests that only a subcategory of Christians who have discovered the secret of the Higher Life walk by faith, while the rest of God's people do not do so, nor that believers enter into a walk of faith at some point subsequent to their conversion, from which they can fall by not walking by faith but then re-enter by starting to walk by faith again. It is certain that the faith of believers can vary in its strength, and believers can certainly fail to exercise faith in specific situations, but nothing like the distinctive Higher Life theology is supported by 2 Corinthians 5:7 in its context.

507 ἐν πίστει ζῷ τῇ τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ is clearly an objective genitive construction.

508 Romans 5:2; Ephesians 2:18; 3:12. Access (προσαγωγή) was obtained at the moment of faith and regeneration, and continues always to be available to the believer (note the perfect tense ἐσχήκαμεν in Romans 5:2).

509 ἐν γὰρ Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ οὔτε περιτομή τι ἰσχύει, οὔτε ἀκροβυστία, ἀλλὰ πίστις δι᾽ ἀγάπης ἐνεργουμένη. Note the rather frequent association of faith and love: 1 Corinthians 13:2, 13; 2 Corinthians 8:7; Galatians 5:6, 22; Ephesians 1:15; 3:17; 6:23; Colossians1:4; 1 Thessalonians 1:3; 3:6; 5:8; 2 Thessalonians 1:3; 1 Timothy 1:5, 14; 2:15; 4:12; 6:11; 2 Timothy 1:13; 2:22; 3:10; Titus 2:2; Philemon 5; Revelation 2:19.

510 In Philippians 1:25's τὴν ὑμῶν προκοπὴν καὶ χαρὰν τῆς πίστεως, πίστεως and ὑμῶν modify both προκοπὴν and χαρὰν; compare 1:20. The connection between joy and faith is also affirmed in Romans 15:13.

511 1 Thessalonians 1:3. In the "work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope" (τοῦ ἔργου τῆς πίστεως, καὶ τοῦ κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης, καὶ τῆς ὑπομονῆς τῆς ἐλπίδος) the genitives all produce what is signified by the head noun. God works to fulfill in believers "the work of faith with power," 2 Thessalonians 1:11; ὁ Θεὸς . . . πληρώσῃ πᾶσαν εὐδοκίαν ἀγαθωσύνης καὶ ἔργον πίστεως ἐν δυνάμει.

512 Colossians 1:27; 2 Corinthians 13:5.

513 Ephesians 3:17, κατοικέω. Paul teaches that all believers have the Holy Spirit (and consequently the undivided Trinity) dwelling (οἰκέω, Romans 8:9, 11; cf. 1 Corinthians 3:16) in them, but Christ's presence dwelling (κατοικέω) in them can increase, so that their personal possession of the Divine presence can grow towards that of Christ the Mediator, in whom dwells (κατοικέω) all the fulness of the Godhead bodily (Colossians 1:19; 2:9), and who dispenses of that fulness to them (John 1:16). (The truth here stated does not, and should not be employed to by any means deny the absoute uniqueness of the way, and as His special presence in them increases, they are rooted and grounded in love for their brethren, experientially know the love of Christ, and are filled with ever greater degrees of the fulness of God.[514]

The peitho word group[515] supplies further light on the nature of Christian faith.[516] The verb means "to come to believe the certainty of something on the basis of being convinced—'to be certain, to be sure, to be convinced,'" or "to believe in something or someone to the extent of placing reliance or trust in or on—'to rely on, to trust in, to depend on, to have (complete) confidence in, confidence, trust.'"[517] Coming to saving faith, to believing, is to be persuaded[518] of the truth about Christ and the gospel, and consequently, turning from all false confidences,[519] to trust or place one's confidence[520] in Him alone. Related words signify persuasive, convincing,[521] persuasion,[522] and hypostatic union as properly confessed at Chalcedon, nor should any attempt be made to reduce the union of natures in the undivided Person of Christ to a mere Nestorianizing indwelling of God in the human Christ.) Compare the greater strength of κατοικέω as compared with οἰκέω in the LXX in Genesis 19:30; Jeremiah 31:28 (Eng. 48:28); Ezekiel 38:11; Judith 5:5; cf. also Justin Martyr's Dialogue with Trypho 78; Theophilus to Autolycus 2:3, and Philo, Flaccus 55.

---

514 Ephesians 3:14-19. A greater degree of the presence of the Son in the believer necessitates a greater presence of the Trinitarian God, for the Divine essence is undivided.

515 πείθω, Matthew 27:20, 43; 28:14; Mark 10:24; Luke 11:22; 16:31; 18:9; 20:6; Acts 5:36–37, 40; 12:20; 13:43; 14:19; 17:4; 18:4; 19:8, 26; 21:14; 23:21; 26:26, 28; 27:11; 28:23–24; Romans 2:8, 19; 8:38; 14:14; 15:14; 2 Corinthians 1:9; 2:3; 5:11; 10:7; Galatians 1:10; 3:1; 5:7, 10; Philippians 1:6, 14, 25; 2:24; 3:3–4; 2 Thessalonians 3:4; 2 Timothy 1:5, 12; Philemon 1:21; Hebrews 2:13; 6:9; 11:13; 13:17–18; James 3:3; 1 John 3:19 (the only use in the Johannine corpus; John 3:36 is the only other use in the entire word group); πεποίθησις, 2 Corinthians 1:15; 3:4; 8:22; 10:2; Ephesians 3:12; Philippians 3:4; πειθός, 1 Corinthians 2:4; πεισμονή, Galatians 5:8; πειθαρχέω, Acts 5:29, 32; 27:21; Titus 3:1; ἀπειθής, Luke 1:17; Acts 26:19; Romans 1:30; 2 Timothy 3:2; Titus 1:16; 3:3; ἀπειθέω, John 3:36; Acts 14:2; 17:5; 19:9; Romans 2:8; 10:21; 11:30–31; 15:31; Hebrews 3:18; 11:31; 1 Peter 2:7–8; 3:1, 20; 4:17; ἀπείθεια, Romans 11:30, 32; Ephesians 2:2; 5:6; Colossians 3:6; Hebrews 4:6, 11.

516 "πείθω . . . [is] allied with pistis, fides, foedus, etc." (Thayer, Greek Lexicon, on πείθω). "Constructs in πιστ- derive from the dep. πείθομαι" (pg. 175, Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, vol. 6, Kittel). Note the parallelism between πείθω and πιστεύω in John 3:36 (ὁ πιστεύων . . . ὁ δὲ ἀπειθῶν).

517 Louw-Nida 31.46, 31.82. The breakdown in BDAG is very helpful.

518 Acts 17:4 (aorist passive); 28:24 (imperfect passive); cf. Luke 16:31; Acts 18:4; 19:8, 26; 26:28; 28:23; 2 Corinthians 5:11; Galatians 1:10. Paul persuaded men to turn from their sins and entrust themselves to Christ, and then continue in the grace of God (Acts 13:43).

519 E. g., riches, Mark 10:24, themselves, 2 Corinthians 1:9, their own righteousness, Luke 18:9, or the flesh and religious ceremonies, Philippians 3:3-4.

520 2 Corinthians 1:9; Philippians 2:24; 3:3-4; Hebrews 2:13 (Christ as the Son of Man, identified and in union with his human brethren, perfectly trusted in God, as do they, Psalm 18:2, albeit imperfectly; also Matthew 27:43 & Psalm 22:8); 13:8. See also Luke 11:22.

521 πειθός, "pertaining to being able to persuade or convince—'persuasive, convincing.'" (Louw-Nida).

522 πεισμονή, "the means by which someone is caused to believe—'that which persuades, the means of convincing' . . . [or] the actual process of persuasion" (Louw-Nida), that is, "πεισμονή . . . like the English 'persuasion,' may be either active or passive; 'the act of persuading' . . . or 'the state of one persuaded'" (St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, J. B. Lightfoot on Galatians 5:8).

confidence or trust.[523] Paul, as a pattern true for every Christian, testified: "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day."[524] The saving faith of the Old Testament saints, set forth as a paradigm for those in the dispensation of grace, possessed, in addition to knowledge, persuasion of the truth concerning Christ and the promises about Him as a constituent element, which resulted in an embrace of the promises and He who was offered in them.[525] Persuasion, confidence, trust, and assurance that Christ will indeed save those who come to Him are elements of saving faith.[526] Since "[t]o be convinced and to believe is finally to obey,"[527] peitho consequently passes over from confidence and trust to obedience.[528] The idea obey is clearly present in the word group.[529] The people of God are those who believingly trust and consequently obey[530]—thus, the verb [523] πεποίθησις, "1. a state of certainty about something to the extent of placing reliance on, trust, confidence." (BDAG).

---

[524] 2 Timothy 1:12, οἶδα γὰρ ᾧ πεπίστευκα, καὶ πέπεισμαι ὅτι δυνατός ἐστι τὴν παραθήκην μου φυλάξαι εἰς ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν. Paul had entrusted himself to the Lord Jesus, at which moment he came to be persuaded that Christ was able to keep him from spiritual destruction, and his entrusting and persuasion continued to the time of his statement.

[525] Hebrews 11:13, "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." Κατὰ πίστιν ἀπέθανον οὗτοι πάντες, μὴ λαβόντες τὰς ἐπαγγελίας, ἀλλὰ πόρρωθεν αὐτὰς ἰδόντες, καὶ πεισθέντες, καὶ ἀσπασάμενοι, καὶ ὁμολογήσαντες ὅτι ξένοι καὶ παρεπίδημοί εἰσιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. Their faith included knowledge of the promises ("having seem them afar off,"), persuasion, and a trusting embrace of the promises, which resulted in confession.

[526] The ideas of persuasion and confident assurance are found in the New Testament in many texts where the specific act of justifying faith is not under consideration. For persuasion, consider Matthew 27:20; 28:14; Luke 20:6; Acts 5:40 (aorist passive is rendered "agreed"); 12:20 (the chamberlain persuaded, convinced, won over, cf. 2 Maccabees 4:45, ἤδη δὲ λελειμμένος ὁ Μενέλαος ἐπηγγείλατο χρήματα ἱκανὰ τῷ Πτολεμαίῳ Δορυμένους πρὸς τὸ πεῖσαι τὸν βασιλέα, "But Menelaus, being now convicted, promised Ptolemee the son of Dorymenes to give him much money, if he would pacify the king toward him."); 14:19; 21:14; 23:21 (being persuaded results in yielding); 26:26; 27:11 ("believed"); Romans 8:38; 14:14; 15:14; 2 Timothy 1:5; Hebrews 6:9; 1 John 3:19. For confident assurance and trust, consider Romans 2:19; 8:38; 15:14; 2 Corinthians 2:3; 10:7; Galatians 5:10; Philippians 1:6, 14, 25, 2 Thessalonians 3:4; 2 Timothy 1:5; Philemon 21; 1 John 3:19.

It is one thing—and a truth—to say that saving faith is inherently assured of the sufficiency of Christ and the truth of the Divine promises in the Gospel. It is another—and a falsehood—to say that saving faith involves within it the assurance that one is personally converted. Assurance in this latter sense belongs to the well-being, not the essence, of Christian faith.

[527] πείθω, πείθομαι, πειθός, πεισμονή, πεποίθησις, Theological Lexicon of the New Testament, vol. 3, Spicq & Earnest, pg. 67.

[528] Acts 5:36-37; Romans 2:8 (note the πείθω/ἀπειθέω contrast in the μέν/δέ clause); Galatians 3:1; 5:7; Hebrews 13:16; James 3:3.

[529] As evidenced, e. g., in the uses of πειθαρχέω, Acts 5:29, 32; 27:21; Titus 3:1. The "verb is ordinarily translated 'obey,' . . . [with] the peculiar nuance of . . . voluntary consent" (Theological Lexicon, Spicq).

[530] In none of its 55 uses in the New Testament are the people of God ever said to be people devoid of πείθω. Galatians 3:1 & 5:7 would be the only texts that might appear to indicate otherwise. However, in these verses false teachers were seeking to lead the Galatians to apostatize from the gospel, but in both disbelieve or disobey[531] is never used of them, nor are its related noun[532] or adjective.[533] Saving faith is an entrusting of oneself to Christ which results in obedience.

The specific quotations of Genesis 15:6[534] and Habakkuk 2:4 in the New Testament, both by Paul and by James, lie in clear continuity with both the grammatical-historical meaning of the Old Testament texts in their specific contexts and the wider Old and New Testament doctrines about the status and character of the just, the nature of the life that they possess, and the role of faith. The New Testament quotations will be examined in their chronological order—James, then Galatians, then Romans, and finally Hebrews.

James, in his quotation from Genesis 15:6 in James 2:23, emphasizes the aspect of the Old Testament doctrine of faith that indicates that continuing faith, faithfulness, and verses "that ye should not obey the truth" (τῇ ἀληθείᾳ μὴ πείθεσθαι) is a purpose clause, specifying, respectively, the purpose the false teachers had in their bewitching (3:1) and the purpose of the false teachers in their hindering the Galatians' running well (5:7). While many of the regenerate members of the church at Galatia had been influenced by these false teachers, so that, no doubt, their understanding and obedience were being shaken, neither in Galatians 3:1 nor 5:7 does Paul make the affirmation that they had actually become people who were rejectors of the truth or people who had now apostatized and become people of unbelief and disobedience. He simply states the purpose of the false teachers with the infinitive πείθεσθαι.

---

531 ἀπειθέω is used for those who disbelieve in or disobey the Son instead of believing (πιστεύω) in Him and not being condemned (John 3:36), for unbelieving and disobedient Jews (Acts 14:2; 17:5), for hardened people who do not believe or obey the gospel (Acts 19:9), for the unregenerate who disobey and disbelieve the truth (Romans 2:8), as unconverted Israel disbelieves and disobeys (Romans 10:21; 15:31) and the Gentiles disbelieved and disobeyed before their conversion, but did not do so after their salvation (Romans 11:30-31), and for those who disbelieve and disobey so that they do not enter into spiritual rest but eternally perish (Hebrews 3:18; 11:31). Christ is precious to those who believe (πιστεύω), but to the disbelieving and disobedient He is a stone of stumbling (1 Peter 2:7-8; cf. John 3:36). A non-Christian husband is disobedient and disbelieving in the Word (1 Peter 3:1), as the ungodly in Noah's day who died in the flood were disbelieving and disobedient (1 Peter 3:20). A terrible end will come upon the disbelieving and disobedient (1 Peter 4:17)—the lake of fire.

532 ἀπείθεια; The lost are in unbelief or disobedience (Romans 11:30, 32), for they are the sons of disobedience and unbelief (Ephesians 2:2; 5:6; Colossians 3:6), and they will fall because of their unbelief and disobedience (Hebrews 4:6, 11).

533 ἀπειθής; The unsaved are the disobedient (Luke 1:17), disobeying both God (Titus 1:16; 3:3) and their parents (Romans 1:30; 2 Timothy 3:2). Paul, in contrast, was not disobedient (Acts 26:19).

534 Richard Longenecker notes:

> The theme of the faith of Abraham in the NT . . . has a number of facets to it, and each possesses its own validity as well as serves to enhance the whole: Faith is a wholehearted response to God in Christ, apart from a person's own attempts to gain merit, as Paul has stressed in countering the Judaizers; it is that which results in acts of positive helpfulness and kindness with respect to the physical needs of others, as James has emphasized in combating a perversion of Christian doctrine: and it is that which eagerly looks forward to the full realization of God's promises in the future, arranging its priorities and setting its lifestyle accordingly here and now, as . . . Hebrews has highlighted in confronting the situation [it] was addressing. Like the beauty of a diamond which is only fully appreciated when the gem is rotated slowly in the light, so the faith of Abraham is only known in its fulness as we study it in its varying circumstantial dimensions and as we allow those dimensions to transform our own thinking, outlook, lifestyle and action. (pg. 211, "The 'Faith of Abraham' Theme in Paul, James, and Hebrews: A Study in the Circumstantial Nature of New Testament Teaching," Richard N. Longenecker. Journal of the Evangelical Theological Society 20:3 (September 1977) 203-212) obedience are the certain products of genuine conversion and justifying faith. His usage is clear from an examination of James 2:14-26. A man who says that he has faith, but does not have works, does not have the sort of faith that Abraham possessed, but a "faith" of a different and inferior character, a kind of mental assent that does not result in inward renewal and one that will not save he who possesses only it (James 2:14).[535] James 2:14a-d does not actually affirm that the speaker is a possessor of genuine faith; rather, he is one who only vocally testifies that he is a possessor of faith (cf. 1:25). Nor does James call him a "brother"; he is simply "a man," a certain one who says[536] he has faith—indeed, he is but a "vain man" (2:20). While he does not affirm that this "vain man" has real faith, James does state that this man does not have works—while such a person says that he has faith, what is actually clear is that he does not have works.[537] His faith does not express itself in deeds, only in words—the only way that he can show that he has faith is by a confession of orthodox doctrine, for his deeds show nothing (2:18-19).[538] The absence of works is a clear distinguishing characteristic of his life.[539] James therefore asks, "can faith—the kind of faith[540] that does not produce works—save?" (James 2:14e). James' answer to this question is "no."[541] Such a profession of faith is as empty and worthless as are pleasant sounding words unaccompanied by genuine material

---

535 Τί τὸ ὄφελος, ἀδελφοί μου, ἐὰν πίστιν λέγῃ τις ἔχειν, ἔργα δὲ μὴ ἔχῃ; μὴ δύναται ἡ πίστις σῶσαι αὐτόν; James 2:14 states the topic of the entire section of 2:14-26.

536 λέγῃ τις. Note also 2:18, where his claim that he has faith is repeated, although James affirms that his claim is merely empty.

537 ἔργα δὲ μὴ ἔχῃ.

538 James' reference to the Shema (Deuteronomy 6:4) is illustrative, not comprehensive, of the orthodox doctrinal affirmations of his rhetorical adversary (the "vain man" of v. 20) in 2:14-26. The point is not that one has dead faith who is merely a monotheist, but that one who has a matchless profession of doctrinal orthodoxy, as illustrated in a happy confession of the Shema, but has no deeds, has dead faith. The devils are not merely monotheists, but have a peerless theological orthodoxy; they believe in the Trinity, in justification before God by faith alone, in the creation account of Genesis, the resurrection of Christ, heaven and hell, and all other Biblical doctrine, but they are obviously devoid of saving faith.

539 James consequently employs the present subjunctive ἔχῃ rather than the aorist subjunctive σχῶ (Acts 25:26; Romans 1:13; Philippians 2:27) to describe what the man of James 2:14 does not have. Many texts with the present subjunctive of ἔχω clearly refer to durative or continuing action, and not one clearly refers to a point action (Matthew 17:20; 19:16; 21:21; Mark 4:25; Luke 8:18; John 3:15–16; 5:40; 6:40; 8:6; 10:10; 13:35; 16:33; 17:13; 20:31; Romans 15:4; 1 Corinthians 4:15; 6:4; 13:1–3; 2 Corinthians 1:15; 2:3; 5:12; 8:12; Ephesians 4:28; Colossians 3:13; 1 Thessalonians 4:12; 1 Timothy 5:20; Hebrews 6:18; 12:28; James 2:14, 17; 1 John 1:3; 2:28; 3:17; 4:17).

540 The article in James 2:14e on ἡ πίστις is anaphoric, referring to the πίστιν λέγῃ τις ἔχειν of James 2:14c; that is, it "points back to a certain kind of faith as defined by the author" (pg. 219, Wallace, Greek Grammar Beyond the Basics), namely, the kind of faith that does not produce works. This kind of faith, a faith that does not manifest itself in works, is the topic in view throughout the passage. Note the series of anaphoric articles on faith in the following verses: ἡ πίστις, v. 17; τὴν πίστιν σου . . . τὴν πίστιν μου, v. 18; ἡ πίστις, v. 20; ἡ πίστις, v. 22 (2x); ἡ πίστις, v. 26.

541 The question with μή in v. 14 anticipates a negative answer.

assistance to a desperately needy, hungry, and naked Christian brother who is in danger of death by starvation or exposure (2:15-17; cf. Matthew 25:36, 43). A profession of compassion without deeds has no value in meeting physical needs, and an empty profession of faith that does not produce works similarly has no power to save spiritually. This kind of faith,[542] the kind that is characteristically or continually unaccompanied by works,[543] is dead, being alone or by itself[544] (2:17, 20, 26). There is as much of a difference between this professed but empty and dead "faith" and saving faith as there is between a dead body and a living man (2:26),[545] and such a dead faith will only save men as much as it will save devils (2:19).[546]

James sets forth Abraham (2:21-24) as the paradigmatic example of the fact that saving faith is always accompanied with works. Abraham was justified by works[547]—shown to be righteous[548] in this world—when he offered Isaac his son, as recorded in 542 Note again the anaphoric article in οὕτω καὶ ἡ πίστις.

---

543 μὴ ἔργα ἔχῃ expresses durative action.

544 Compare the καθ᾽ ἑαυτήν of James 2:17 with Acts 28:16; Hebrews 6:13.

545 In James 2:26, the "faith" which is compared to a body is, in keeping with the pericope, intellectual assent to a body of doctrinal propositions. Such intellectual assent, James affirms, is not alive without works, which are compared to the animating spirit. A living man, in contrast to a corpse, has both a body and a spirit.

546 While the πιστεύω ὅτι in James 2:19 is not unable to express the totality of what is involved in saving faith, it here emphasizes the intellectual assent of the "faith" mentioned.

547 The question of James 2:20 with οὐ, which introduces the example of Abraham, expects a positive answer, as do the questions with οὐ in 2:4-7, 25; 4:1, 4.

548 The verb to justify (δικαιόω) in James 2:21, 24, 25 does not refer to a legal declaration of righteousness at the judgment bar of God, based solely on the imputed righteousness of Christ, as it does in a variety of other texts in the New Testament (Luke 18:14; Acts 13:39; Revelation 22:11) and especially frequently in Paul, when he refers to the present justification believers receive through the sole instrumentality of faith (cf. Romans 3:20, 24, 26, 28, 30; 4:2, 5; 5:1, 9; 8:30, 33; 1 Corinthians 6:11; Galatians 2:16-17; 3:8, 11, 24; 5:4; Titus 3:7). A variety of other senses of justification appear in the New Testament (cf. 1 Timothy 3:16; 1 Corinthians 4:4). The reference in James is rather to Abraham being declared, manifested, or shown as righteous in this world, during his lifetime, because of his righteous actions. James' declarative point is clearly stated in the context: "I will shew thee my faith by my works" (James 2:18). Abraham was shown to be righteous because he offered up Isaac, and Rahab was shown to be righteous because she protected the Hebrew spies. Neither the predominant Pauline sense of to justify as a reference to the Divine declaration of the believer as righteous based solely on the imputed righteousness of Christ, nor the sense of to justify in James 2, refers to justification as an infusion of righteousness that confounds justification with progressive sanctification; in both Paul and James justification is a declaration based on what is already present, not an infusion of holiness that inwardly constitutes one righteous. It should be noted that the New Testament certainly does not always refer to justification as a legal declaration by God directed towards men, although justification remains always a declaration of righteousness rather than an infusion of holiness: the children of wisdom justify wisdom (Matthew 11:19; Luke 7:35); God is justified in his sayings and overcomes when He is judged (Romans 3:4); people justify God by submitting to the baptism of John the Baptist (Luke 7:29); the self-righteous wish to justify themselves (Luke 10:29), and, indeed, the Pharisees were justifying themselves before men while they were still abominable to God (Luke 16:15). People can declare God to be righteous, but they hardly can make Him so. In light of the range in New Testament usage, there is nothing out of the ordinary in James' use of Genesis 22.[549] Works did not transfer Abraham from the realm of those under Divine wrath and headed for damnation into the realm of the redeemed who possess the Divine favor and are headed for eternal glory. Such a transformation, as James indicates by his quotation of Genesis 15:6, took place when Abraham believed and was accounted righteous through the imputation of Messianic righteousness. Works do not transform a dead faith into a living faith, but they manifest the presence of living faith. James recognizes the teaching of Genesis that faith, not obedience, is the instrumentality through which men receive that perfect and sufficient righteousness that provides a sure everlasting hope in the sight of God, while he emphasizes the fact, also clearly taught in Genesis and the rest of the Old Testament, that the believing are the faithful, so that those who are declared righteous before God on the basis of imputed righteousness are also shown righteous in this life by their works. James refers to the "works" of Abraham, rather than to the single "work" of offering up Isaac, because Abraham's faithfulness on Mount Moriah, in putting Jehovah's command before his own beloved Isaac (Genesis 22), was the culminating work recorded in Genesis of the patriarch's life of faithfulness, all of which sprung out of the transformation that took place in his life decades earlier through his being brought into union with God through faith in the land of Ur[550] as attested in Genesis 15:6. Abraham's faith was "made perfect"[551] by his works (James justification as a this-worldy recognition of the righteousness of the righteous upon the earth, nor does his usage of the verb in this sense contradict in the least the usage of Paul about justification before the legal tribunal of God in heaven.

---

James' usage of to justify also matches the dominant Pauline usage of the verb to refer to present realities possesssed by the people of God upon the earth, rather than an eschatological vindication. In James 2 neither Abraham nor Rahab was justified with reference to an eschatological judgment; Abraham offered up Isaac, and Rahab protected the spies, on the earth during their respective lifetimes. Since all those who possess true faith will also be faithful, so that those who have had Christ perfectly fulfill the law for them will also be characterized by obedience to the law, there is no reason to deny that the people of God will experience an eschatological vindication of themselves as righteous associated with their speech and deeds (Matthew 12:37, cf. Romans 10:9-10). Nonetheless those that are shown righteous, whether in this life (James 2) or in eschatological judgment, still have as the ultimate ground or basis of their standing before God only a righteousness from Christ credited to them through faith alone. Those who characteristically obey the law will be justified (Romans 2:13), but not on the ground or basis of their obedience to the law, but because the doers of the law are those who have believed on the Lord Jesus Christ and consequently, by means of regeneration, have become faithful, although their standing before God, whether during their earthly pilgrimage or at the time of their standing before God in judgment, remains solely based on the imputed righteousness of Christ.

[549] Note God's statement of Abraham's righteousness in Genesis 22:12, where Abraham's willingness to offer Isaac reveals the patriarch's already extant faith, resulting in the blessings stated in 22:16-18.

[550] Compare Hebrews 11:8-19. Note the view of James 2 in 1 Clement 10-12 also.

[551] In the expression ἐκ τῶν ἔργων ἡ πίστις ἐτελειώθη, τελειόω + ἐκ indicates that faith is "made perfect" by works in the sense that faith reaches its intended goal in works, rather than that faith is inherently imperfect or flawed until a certain level of works become manifest. A conceptual parallel is found in 1 John 4:12 (ἐὰν ἀγαπῶμεν ἀλλήλους, ὁ Θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν μένει, καὶ ἡ ἀγάπη αὐτοῦ

2:22) because Abraham's receipt of a Divine imputed righteousness was not left alone, but led to progressive sanctification and ultimately to glorification. Justification, sanctification, and glorification are a continuum along which all the saints, but none but they, are brought. Abraham's faith in response to the Divine call and revelation in Genesis 12 and 15 was brought to full measure, to completeness, by works, in that inward holiness and its outward fruit of good works are products of the union with Christ established through faith. The statement of Genesis 15:6 that Abraham believed God was "fulfilled" (James 2:23) by Abraham's faithful obedience, culminating in the events of Genesis 22, because true faith, the faith that brings he who exercises it into union with Jehovah and results in imputed righteousness, also always results in faithfulness and obedience. Such obedience is so certain an issue of saving faith that James can regard the statement of Abraham's exercise of saving faith in Genesis 15:6 as a prediction[552] of following obedience which was fulfilled in the patriarch's works, culminating in Genesis 22. Abraham's offering up his son was a fulfillment of his believing in God. One who believes will come to act like Abraham did in Genesis 22 and will be the friend of God[553] instead of being the friend of the world and the adulterous enemy of God (James 4:4). Had Abraham stayed in Ur of the Chaldees instead of rejecting idolatry and entrusting himself to and following Jehovah based on the Abrahamic covenant, he would not have been justified, as Rahab would likewise not have been justified had she sided with the idolatrous enemies of Jehovah in Jericho and had she refused to protect the spies (James 2:25; Joshua 2, 6), but they both would have been unjustified not because they had a true faith that just never produced anything, but because such a lack of works would have been indicative of an absence of true faith.[554] Since true faith always results in τετελειωμένη ἐστὶν ἐν ἡμῖν), where the love of God is "perfected" in believers as they love one another in that Divine love is brought to its intended goal—certainly God's love is not imperfect until believers come to love one another enough. The specific τελειόω + ἐκ construction in James 2:22 is a New Testament hapax legomenon, but Koiné parallels support the idea of perfecting as being brought to an intended goal; e. g., Philo refers to one who has been "made perfect by education," that is, brought to the intended goal by means of education (ἐκ διδασκαλίας τελειωθέντι, On Rewards and Punishments 1:49; cf. On Husbandry 1:42; On the Confusion of Tongues 1:181).

---

552 The "and the scripture was fulfilled" (καὶ ἐπληρώθη ἡ γραφή) formula of James 2:23 is Biblically employed for the fulfillment of prophecy (Matthew 26:54, 56; Mark 14:49; 15:28; Luke 4:21; Acts 1:16) and should not have its prophecy/fulfillment sense weakened in the exposition of James 2.

553 James 2:23, φίλος Θεοῦ. See Isaiah 41:8 (Symmachus, τοῦ φίλου μου for the Hebrew אֹהֲבִי); 2 Chronicles 20:7; cf. John 15:14-15. In Genesis 18, Abraham also showed friendship/hospitality (φιλοξενία) to the Lord and two angels (Hebrews 13:2). Abraham was the friend of God from the time of his justification by faith, but he was called (ἐκλήθη, James 2:23) and recognized as the friend of God subsequently because of the works that manifested his faith.

554 Hebrews 11:31. All the inhabitants of the city of Jericho had the "faith" of the "vain man" of James 2:20 (Joshua 2:9-11), but only Rahab truly believed and entrusted herself to Jehovah (Hebrews 11:31; Joshua 2:11; cf. Deuteronomy 4:39) and consequently acted on her already present living faith, so faithfulness,[555] the kind of faith that does not produce works is dead (James 2:20, 24, 26). James affirms, as does Paul (Romans 2:13) and the rest of the Old and New Testament, that one who possesses a dead "faith only"[556] that is without works, one who is a "hearer only" (James 1:22)[557] who does not obey the Word, is yet unregenerate.[558] Such a person must not allow himself to be deceived by his empty profession. Abraham's life is clear—true faith results in faithfulness, and only the believing, who are the faithful, possess spiritual life now and eternal life in the eschaton. The just shall live by faith.

In the book of Galatians, Paul quotes Genesis 15:6 and Habakkuk 2:4 to establish the fundamental soteriological doctrine of justification before God by faith alone. Genesis 15:6 is quoted in Galatians 3:6, while Habakkuk 2:4 is quoted in Galatians 3:11. Galatians 3:1-4:11 provides arguments in favor of the propositions Paul stated in that she was saved instead of perishing with the idolators of Jericho. While those in Jericho with the vain man's "faith" perished as "accursed" (חֵרֶם) under the temporal curse of death and the eternal curse of the second death, "Rahab . . . shall live" and be "saved . . . alive" (Joshua 6:17, 25, חָיָה) with all that pertained to her, delivered from spiritual, physical, and eternal death with the pagans in Jericho, to possess spiritual life, a blessed portion with the people of God, and eternal life.

---

[555] From his use of both Abraham and Rahab as illustrations, James demonstrates that in all cases works proceed from true faith. If those from the status of the patriarch of Israel down to the status of a Canaanite prostitute woman manifest their faith in works, surely all those of any status with real faith will manifest their belief in works (cf. James 2:1ff.).

[556] πίστις μόνος.

[557] μόνος ἀκροατής, the only other use of μόνος in James.

[558] Warfield notes:

> It was to James that it fell to rebuke the Jewish tendency to conceive of the faith which was pleasing to Jehovah as a mere intellectual acquiescence in His being and claims, when imported into the Church and made to do duty as 'the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Glory' (James 2:1). He has sometimes been misread as if he were depreciating faith, or at least the place of faith in salvation. But it is perfectly clear that with James, as truly as with any other New Testament writer, a sound faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as the manifested God (James 2:1) lies at the very basis of the Christian life (James 1:3), and is the condition of all acceptable approach to God (James 1:6, 5:15). It is not faith as he conceives it which he depreciates, but that professed faith (λέγῃ, James 2:14) which cannot be shown to be real by appropriate works (James 2:18), and so differs by a whole diameter alike from the faith of Abraham that was reckoned unto him for righteousness (James 2:23), and from the faith of Christians as James understood it (James 2:1, 1:3, cf. 1:22). The impression which is easily taken from the last half of the second chapter of James, that his teaching and that of Paul stand in some polemic relation, is, nevertheless, a delusion, and arises from an insufficient realization of the place occupied by faith in the discussions of the Jewish schools, reflections of which have naturally found their way into the language of both Paul and James. And so far are we from needing to suppose some reference, direct or indirect, to Pauline teaching to account for James' entrance upon the question which he discusses, that this was a matter upon which an earnest teacher could not fail to touch in the presence of a tendency common among the Jews at the advent of Christianity (cf. Matthew 3:9; 7:21; 23:3; Romans 2:17), and certain to pass over into Jewish-Christian circles: and James' treatment of it finds, indeed, its entire presupposition in the state of things underlying the exhortation of James 1:22. When read from his own historical standpoint, James' teachings are free from any disaccord with those of Paul, who as strongly as James denies all value to a faith which does not work by love (Galatians 5:6; 1 Corinthians 13:2; 1 Thessalonians 1:3). In short, James is not depreciating faith: with him, too, it is faith that is reckoned unto righteousness (ii.23), though only such a faith as shows itself in works can be so reckoned, because a faith which does not come to fruitage in works is dead, non-existent. He is rather deepening the idea of faith, and insisting that it includes in its very conception something more than an otiose intellectual assent. ("The Biblical Doctrine of Faith," Biblical Doctrines, vol. 2 of Works)

Galatians 2:15-21. Galatians 3:1-18 proves that righteousness is received apart from the law. Within 3:1-18, 3:6-14 provides arguments from the Old Testament establishing the truth of justification by faith apart from the law.[559] Paul points out, first of all, that the truth that one is justified in the sight of God apart from the law (2:16) is established because Abraham was accounted righteous, receiving the imputed righteousness of the Messiah, through the sole instrumentality of faith (3:6).[560] Consequently, believers, "they which are of faith," rather than law-keepers, "are the children of Abraham" spiritually (3:7). Those who believe as Abraham did become the recipients of the redemptive blessings associated with the patriarch. Indeed, the Old Testament had foreseen that God would justify Gentiles, non-lawkeepers, through faith, for God had promised Abraham all nations, not lawkeeping Jews only, blessing through his Seed, the Messiah.[561] Consequently, all those who are of faith receive the Abrahamic blessing (3:9). Indeed, none of the sons of Adam can receive salvation through obedience to the law, for the legal standard is continual, perfect, sinless obedience, but all have sinned and deserve God's curse.[562] Furthermore, the explicit testimony that "the just shall live by faith"[563]

---

559 Compare the outline in Galatians, Richard N. Longenecker, vol. 41 in the Word Biblical Commentary.

560 Note the further discussion below in the analysis of the quotations of Genesis 15:6 and Habakkuk 2:4 as found in the book of Romans. In Galatians 3, the quotation from Genesis 15:6 is central to the entire passage.

561 Galatians 3:8; Genesis 12:3; 18:18; 22:18; 26:4 28:14. The προευαγγελίζομαι of Galatians 3:8 specifies that the gospel was preached beforehand to Abraham, not only in the proclamation of the Messiah, but also in the declaration of the doctrine of righteousness by faith.

562 Galatians 3:10; Deuteronomy 27:26.

563 A comparison of Galatians 3:11 and 12 indicates that Paul interpreted Habakkuk 2:4 in accordance with its meaning in its original context, that is, as "the righteous shall live by faith" rather than as "he who through faith is righteous shall live" (for a comparison of the writers who take the one or the other position, see, e. g., pgs. 33-35, "'The Righteous Shall Live by Faith'—A Decisive Argument for the Traditional Interpretation," H C. C. Cavallin. Studia Theologica 32 (1978) 33-43). The sense of live in both ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται and in ὁ ποιήσας αὐτὰ ἄνθρωπος ζήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς is parallel. In Galatians 3:12 and Leviticus 18:5 (יַעֲשֶׂה אֹתָם הָאָדָם וָחַי בָּהֶם) the prepositional phrase cannot be construed with the subject, but must be taken to modify the verb. Consequently, in both 3:11 and 3:12 the prepositional phrases (ἐκ πίστεως/ἐν αὐτοῖς), not the subjects (ὁ δίκαιος/ὁ ποιήσας αὐτὰ ἄνθρωπος), modify the verb ζήσεται in their respective clauses, even as in Galatians 3:11a the prepositional phrase ἐν νόμῳ modifies the verb δικαιοῦται, paralleling the modification of ζήσεται by ἐκ πίστεως in 3:11b. Since both spiritual life on earth and eschatological eternal life are included in the quotation in Galatians from Leviticus 18:5 (parallel texts such as Deuteronomy 5:33 validate the fact that "life" with the smile and blessing of God now is included in Leviticus 18:5, but eschatological life is by no means excluded; see the interpretation of the Leviticus text as a reference to "eternal life" in the Targum Onkelos & Pseudo-Jonathan—note furthermore that Paul's quotation of Leviticus 18:5 in Romans 10:5, where a contrast with the promise of Habakkuk 2:4 as found in Romans 1:16-17 likewise includes both justification, spiritual life on earth, and eschatological salvation—the same kinds of life are contrasted in Romans 1:16-17; 10:5, as they are in Galatians 3:11-12), both are included also in Paul's view of the life promised in Habakkuk 2:4, rather than justification at the moment of conversion alone. Of course, Paul's recognition that Habakkuk 2:4 promises both spiritual and eschatological life to faith includes as its good elminates the possibility that life comes from the law, for the just are all those who are justified by faith (3:11).[564] The law sets a different and contrary standard—life for sinless obedience.[565] Christ took the curse of the law upon Himself on the cross so that the Gentiles could be accepted by God and receive salvation in all its aspects, inclusive of both justification and the promise of the Spirit, through faith.[566]

Paul's use of Genesis 15:6 and Habakkuk 2:4 in Galatians 3 emphasizes the receipt of justification through faith alone rather than the faithfulness and holiness that are the fruit of justifying faith. As the Apostle demonstrates, the Old Testament is clear—righteousness before God is the possession of all those who believe, rather than a possession of those who merit salvation by works. However, the faithfulness that is the fruit of the union with Christ entered into at the moment of justification is by no means excluded in Galatians. The promised Spirit, who sinners receive through faith alone at the moment of their justification (3:14), will produce His fruit (5:16-26; 4:6) in those who have received Him. Those justified by faith alone will be led by the Spirit (5:18) into a walk of holiness that is characterized by love, joy, peace, longsuffering, and other holy and necessary consequence that one is justified by faith as well as living the continuing Christian pilgrimage by faith. In Galatians 3:11, Romans 1:17, and Hebrews 10:38 Paul employs the quotation of Habakkuk 2:4 properly in its original context as a reference to the receipt of the blessing of spiritual life, including justification, sanctification, and glorification, through the instrumentality of faith, emphasizing one or the other facet of the life received in his various references to Habakkuk.

---

While a real offer of life to sinless perfection and perfect obedience to the law is made in Galatians 3:12; Romans 10:5; Leviticus 18:5 (cf. Deuteronomy 4:1ff., 30:16-20; Romans 7:10; contrast Romans 10:4-11; Habakkuk 2:4; Isaiah 55:1-3, etc.) the promise cannot be received by any of the fallen sons of Adam because of their sin (Galatians 3:10). The law itself is not imperfect, and it gives instructions for perfect righteousness, but only the virgin-born Messiah has ever perfectly fulfilled its holy requirements (cf. Galatians 3:21). Therefore, spiritual inheritance can actually be received by sinners only through the free promise of grace through faith—a way not anulled by the law, but which actually preceded the law—and, in any case, God knew that sinners could not perfectly keep His law, and did not give it to them for the purpose of them receiving salvation by obedience to it (3:15-22). These facts explain why the method of justification set forth by the law is one foreign to faith (3:12a).

564 That is, Galatians 3:11 identifies the "just" and the "justified": ὅτι δὲ ἐν νόμῳ οὐδεὶς δικαιοῦται παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, δῆλον· ὅτι Ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται. All believers are the just who live by faith.

565 Galatians 3:12; Leviticus 18:5; Nehemiah 9:29; Ezekiel 20:11, 13. Note that the quotations of Leviticus 18:5 in Nehemiah, Ezekiel, and Galatians all indicate failure to meet the decreed standard of sinless perfection, just as the Pentateuch itself indicates that Israel was failing and would continue to fail to keep the law (Deuteronomy 4:26-30; 9:5, etc.). No text in either the Old or New Testament indicates that any son of Adam actually met the standard of obedience commanded by the law. The Pentateuch itself, as well as the references in Nehemiah 9 and Ezekiel 20 to Leviticus 18:5, support Paul's setting of Galatians 3:10 and 3:12 in sharp contrast to 3:11—law and curse are set against faith and righteousness. Galatians 3:10-12 provides Paul's proofs from the propositional statements of the Old Testament that his affirmations in 2:16, 21 are true, and that the Old Testament validates his affirmations about the experience of the Galatians (3:1-5) and of Abraham (3:6-9).

566 Galatians 3:13-14; Deuteronomy 21:23. Note that the reference to the Spirit in v. 14 ties back to 3:2-5, where not only conversion, but also the continuation of the Christian life, is under discussion. The promise of the Spirit is a promise that includes the progressive sanctification of all believers.

Spirit-produced acts, rather than the fleshly works that characterize those who will not enter the kingdom but suffer damnation (5:19-23). Faith will work by love (5:6). Indeed, the entire Christian life is lived by faith in the Son of God (2:20; cf. 5:5). The Christian dispensation itself is the coming of faith (3:23, 25). Justification by faith alone (2:16, 21) does not lead to a life of sin, because the believer is legally dead to the law, crucified with Christ, and alive to God (2:17-20). As is clear in Genesis and Habakkuk, Galatians affirms the twin truths that justification in the sight of God is by grace through faith alone, based on the imputed righteousness of Christ alone, and that faithfulness and holiness are the inevitable consequents springing from true faith. The just shall live by faith, as Abraham did.

The affirmation of Habakkuk 2:4 that "the just shall live by faith," the thesis statement of the Old Testament prophet,[567] is found in the thesis statement of the book of Romans: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith" (Romans 1:16-17).[568] Genesis 15:6 is also quoted in Romans 4:3 to prove that Abraham was justified by faith alone apart from works of the law. The significance of these two quotations in the context of the book of Romans, and their value in illuminating the character of Christian faith, will be examined in book order.

Romans 1:16-17 reads: "I am not ashamed[569] of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith."[570] Romans 1:16-17a illuminate what is involved in 567 R. M. Moody demonstrates that "Romans . . . has in a very important way the same theme as Habakkuk. . . . In Habakkuk the centre of the solution of Habakkuk's problem is Hab 2:4, and the theme verse of Romans is 1:17 . . . both books are on the same subject. . . . We therefore arrive at the conclusion that we have in Romans an extensive study of Habakkuk in the light of the coming of Christ in which Paul fully examines every aspect of Habakkuk's solution to the problem of God's dealing with Jew and Gentile" (pg. 208, "The Habakkuk Quotation in Romans 1:17," R. M. Moody. Expository Times 90 (1980-81) 205-208).

---

568 οὐ γὰρ ἐπαισχύνομαι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ· δύναμις γὰρ Θεοῦ ἐστιν εἰς σωτηρίαν παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι, Ἰουδαίῳ τε πρῶτον καὶ Ἕλληνι. δικαιοσύνη γὰρ Θεοῦ ἐν αὐτῷ ἀποκαλύπτεται ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν, καθὼς γέγραπται, Ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται.

569 Contrast the use of ἐπαισχύνομαι in 1:16 with the only other use in Romans, found in 6:21; Paul, as one would expect for the saints of God, is not ashamed of the gospel of the crucified God-Man, but believers are ashamed of the sins they committed before their conversion. Compare the other NT ἐπαισχύνομαι texts: Mark 8:38; Luke 9:26; 2 Timothy 1:8, 12, 16; Hebrews 2:11; 11:16.

570 οὐ γὰρ ἐπαισχύνομαι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ· δύναμις γὰρ Θεοῦ ἐστιν εἰς σωτηρίαν παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι, Ἰουδαίῳ τε πρῶτον καὶ Ἕλληνι. δικαιοσύνη γὰρ Θεοῦ ἐν

the affirmation of Habbakuk that "the just shall live by faith."[571] First, Paul proves in 1:18-3:20 that all need the gracious justification of God through the gospel of Christ, αὐτῷ ἀποκαλύπτεται ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν, καθὼς γέγραπται, Ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται. The verses are full of key terms that appear throughout Romans.

---

It should be noted that both instances of πίστις in Romans 1:17's "from faith to faith" refer to the act of human believing, so that the phrase speaks of the increase and strengthening of the believer's faith; neither instance in Romans 1:17 refers to God's faithfulness, and consequently the sense of the phrase is not "from the faithfulness of God to man's faith." Indeed, both the ἐκ πίστεως construction in the New Testament (Romans 1:17; 3:26, 30; 4:16; 5:1; 9:30, 32; 10:6; 14:23; Galatians 2:16; 3:7–9, 11–12, 22, 24; 5:5; Heb 10:38; James 2:24) and the διὰ πίστεως construction (Romans 1:12; 3:22, 25, 27, 30–31; 4:13, 16; 2 Corinthians 5:7; Galatians 2:16; 3:14, 26; Ephesians 2:8; 3:12, 17; Philippians 3:9; Colossians 2:12; 1 Thessalonians 3:7; 2 Timothy 3:15; Hebrews 6:12; 11:33, 39; 1 Peter 1:5) always refer to human "faith" rather than to God or Christ's faithfulness (cf. pgs. 363-373, The Epistle to the Romans, vol. 1, John Murray, for further examination of this question and validation of the conclusions here stated).

571 As the Hebrew accentuation in Habakkuk 2:4 makes it clear that Habakkuk's assertion is "the just, by his faith he shall live," rather than "the just by his faith, he shall live," so in Romans 1:17 Paul's Ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται does not mean "he who through faith is righteous shall live," but "the righteous shall live by his faith," a fact not only borne out by the Hebrew of Habakkuk but also a number of evidences from the Greek. That is, the ἐκ πίστεως modifies ζήσεται, rather than δίκαιος. Paul could easily have written ὁ ἐκ πίστεως δίκαιος ζήσεται or ὁ δίκαιος ὁ ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται had he wished to indicate that ἐκ πίστεως modified δίκαιος.

As noted by Moody Smith (pgs. 17-19, "O DE DIKAIOS EK PISTEWS ZHSETAI," Moody D. Smith, in Studies in the History and Text of the New Testament, FS K. W. Clark, ed B. L. Daniels and M. J. Suggs. Salt Lake City: University of Utah, 1967; Smith's argument is very closely followed below), Romans 1:16f. falls into four parts, the first three introduced by γάρ and the fourth by καθώς. The first, introductory, section is v. 16a. The subsequent parts consist of three propositions with significant parallelism. Three elements appear in each part, with the following pattern: a.) The action of God b.) is a revelation which brings salvation c.) for all who receive it in faith. That is:

A v. 16b δύναμις γὰρ Θεοῦ
  b. 17a δικαιοσύνη γὰρ Θεοῦ
  v. 17b ὁ δὲ δίκαιος
B v. 16b ἐστιν εἰς σωτηρίαν
  v. 17a ἐν αὐτῷ (=εὐαγγελίῳ) ἀποκαλύπτεται
  v. 17b ζήσεται
C v. 16b παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι
  v. 17a ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν
  v. 17b ἐκ πίστεως

In v. 16b and 17a the pattern ABC is followed. Since Paul follws the order of the text of Habakkuk (יִחְיֶה׃ וְצַדִּיק בֶּאֱמוּנָתוֹ), v. 17b has the order ACB, but the pattern of the two preceding syntactical units indicates how Paul understands the Habakkuk quotation. The pattern in v. 16b and 17a of: a.) God's action, b.) salvific revelation, c.) reception by faith, provides a key for unlocking Paul's understanding of the Habakkuk quotation. Furthermore, the Habakkuk formula helps explain the disposition of the two preceding affirmations in three parallel elements. Thus, the parallel structure supports the fact that Paul construes the ἐκ πίστεως with the verb ζήσεται.

Furthermore, it appears that v. 17a is a restatement of v. 16b in terms supplied by Habakkuk 2:4. Paul's mention of the righteousness of God is an abstraction prompted by the upcoming ὁ δίκαιος. The present tense ἀποκαλύπτεται corresponds to the future ζήσεται of the Habakkuk quotation. The present tense of ἀποκαλύπτεται, with the phrase ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν, indicates a continuing process of Divine self-disclosure on the basis of faith. What Paul affirms abstractly and with respect to its Divine origin in 17a is then given scriptural grounds and set forth in concrete terms with respect to the human situation in 17b: "The righteous [man] shall live by faith."

The view that the New Testament quotation of Habakkuk 2:4 means "the righteous shall live by faith" rather than "the righteous by faith shall live" is found throughout the church age; see, e. g., for the because all, Jew and Gentile, are sinners devoid of righteousness. They stand in need of, by faith, becoming those who are just and shall live. Men are by nature and choice the enemies of God,[572] under His wrath, and separated from the spiritual and eternal life[573] that comes through faith.[574] Whether Jews (2:1-29) or Gentiles (1:18-32), all[575] stand condemned (3:1-20).[576] In 1:18-3:20, the righteous wrath of God is revealed (1:18), rather than His righteous manner of showing mercy in and by Christ (8:18),[577] for men are unrighteous,[578] while God is righteous.[579]

Second, Paul proves in 3:21-5:21 that men are delivered from sin and justified apart from the law and through faith alone. Since, as Habakkuk affirms, those who have faith are those who have spiritual and eternal life, and are the just before God, clearly early church period, The Epistle of Ignatius to the Tarsians, Chapter 1; Clement of Alexandria, Stromata 2:6; 4:16; Chrysostom, Homilies on the Epistle of St. Paul to the Romans, Homily 7.

---

572 While Θεός, and His righteous wrath and judment, are ubiquitous in Romans 1:18-3:20 (see 1:18–19, 21, 23–26, 28, 32; 2:2–5, 11, 13, 16–17, 23–24, 29; 3:2–7, 11, 18–19), Χριστός (and Ἰησοῦς) appears only in 2:16 (the only reference to εὐαγγέλιον in this portion of the epistle also), where His Messianic judgment and condemnation of the unbelieving wicked is in view; there is no σωτηρία in 1:18-3:20 (the complete list of texts with the word in Romans is: 1:16; 5:9–10; 8:24; 9:27; 10:1, 9–10, 13; 11:11, 14, 26; 13:11). In contrast, God as Author of the gospel and the loving and propitiated Father of those in Christ appears very frequently in the other portions of Romans (cf. 1:1, 7-9, 16-17, 3:21-23, 25-26, 29-30, 4:2-3, 6, 17, 20; 5:1-2, 5, 8, 10, 11, 15; 6:10, 11, 13, 17, 22-23, 7:4, 22, 25; 8:3, 9, 14, 16, 17, 19, 21, 27, 28, 31, 33, 34, 39, 9:8, 11, 16, 26, 10:1, 3, 9, 17; 11:2, 22-23, 29-30, 32-33; 12:1-3, 14:3, 6, 17-18, 20, 22, 15:5-9, 13, 15-17, 19, 30, 32-33; 16:20, 26-27) among a significant variety of other uses of Θεός (cf. 1:4, 10; 8:7-8; 9:5-6, 14, 20, 22; 10:2, 11:8, 21; 13:1-2, 4, 6, 14:11-12—note that His judgment and wrath are also present in a variety of these texts). Χριστός appears elsewhere frequently in Romans (1:1, 4, 6–8, 16; 3:22, 24; 5:1, 6, 8, 11, 15, 17, 21; 6:3–4, 8–9, 11, 23; 7:4, 25–8:2; 8:9–11, 17, 34–35, 39–9:1; 9:3, 5; 10:4, 6–7; 12:5; 13:14; 14:9–10, 15, 18; 15:3, 5–8, 16–20, 29–30; 16:3, 5, 7, 9–10, 16, 18, 20, 24–25, 27) as does Ἰησοῦς (1:1, 4, 6–8; 3:22, 24, 26; 4:24; 5:1, 11, 15, 17, 21; 6:3, 11, 23; 7:25–8:2; 8:11, 39; 10:9; 13:14; 14:14; 15:5–6, 8, 16–17, 30; 16:3, 18, 20, 24–25, 27).

573 Romans 2:7-8. Of course, spiritual life and eternal life are highly overlapping or even synonymous terms—those who will have eternal and spiritual life eschatologically are those who have spiritual and eternal life now by means of faith and regeneration.

574 The human exercise of πίστις is absent in 1:18-3:20. Obviously, 3:3 is no exception.

575 All (πᾶς, 1:16) need the salvation set forth in the gospel because God's wrath is revealed against all unrighteousness and ungodliness (1:18) of all men, Jew or Gentile (2:1, 9-10; 3:9) who are filled with all unrighteousness (1:29; 3:12) and therefore are all unable to be justified by the law (3:19-20). Thankfully, the gospel is set forth in Romans as offered to all, whether Jew or Gentile, who believe (3:22-23; 4:11, 16; 5:12, 18; 9:33; 10:4, 11-13, 18, 26, 32; 15:11; 16:26). The point of Romans 2:13 is the availability of salvation to both Jew and Gentile, as the following context demonstrates, while the verse also indicates that all who are justified by faith alone will characteristically keep God's commandments.

576 2:9; 3:9. 2:10 is a proleptic reference to truth explained after 3:20—the manner in which, by grace through faith alone, one can become a true Jew (2:17, 28-29).

577 ἀποκαλύπτω appears only in 1:17, 18; 8:18.

578 ἀδικία, 1:18, 29; 2:8; 3:5; cf. 6:13. Οὐκ ἔστι δίκαιος οὐδὲ εἷς, 3:10. The δίκαιος recipient of δικαιόω in 2:13 does not receive elaboration in the portion from 1:18-3:20; the following portions of the epistle provide elaboration.

579 3:4-5; 9:14.

salvation is the possession of every believer, whether Jew or Gentile, rather than the prize only of those who perform meritorious works.

> But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference: For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay: but by the law of faith. Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law. (Romans 3:21-28)[580]

The just or righteous are all[581] those Jews and Gentiles[582] who have been declared righteous by the gracious God[583] on the basis of the imputed righteousness of the God-Man, Jesus Christ.[584] Works cannot earn righteous standing before God—on the contrary, imputed righteousness is received solely through the instrumentality of faith.[585] The imputation of righteousness brings salvation and spiritual and eternal life.[586]

---

[580] 21 νυνὶ δὲ χωρὶς νόμου δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ πεφανέρωται, μαρτυρουμένη ὑπὸ τοῦ νόμου καὶ τῶν προφητῶν· 22 δικαιοσύνη δὲ Θεοῦ διὰ πίστεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ εἰς πάντας καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας τοὺς πιστεύοντας· οὐ γὰρ ἐστι διαστολή· 23 πάντες γὰρ ἥμαρτον καὶ ὑστεροῦνται τῆς δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ, 24 δικαιούμενοι δωρεὰν τῇ αὐτοῦ χάριτι διὰ τῆς ἀπολυτρώσεως τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· 25 ὃν προέθετο ὁ Θεὸς ἱλαστήριον, διὰ τῆς πίστεως, ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι, εἰς ἔνδειξιν τῆς δικαιοσύνης αὐτοῦ, διὰ τὴν πάρεσιν τῶν προγεγονότων ἁμαρτημάτων, 26 ἐν τῇ ἀνοχῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ· πρὸς ἔνδειξιν τῆς δικαιοσύνης αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ, εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν δίκαιον καὶ δικαιοῦντα τὸν ἐκ πίστεως Ἰησοῦ. 27 ποῦ οὖν ἡ καύχησις; ἐξεκλείσθη. διὰ ποίου νόμου; τῶν ἔργων; οὐχί ἀλλὰ διὰ νόμου πίστεως. 28 λογιζόμεθα οὖν πίστει δικαιοῦσθαι ἄνθρωπον, χωρὶς ἔργων νόμου.

[581] 3:22–23; 4:11, 16; 5:12, 18.

[582] 3:29; 4:17–18.

[583] The emphasis of the texts with Θεός in 3:21-5:21 (3:21–23, 25–26, 29–30; 4:2–3, 6, 17, 20; 5:1–2, 5, 8, 10–11, 15) differs radically from those references to Θεός in 1:18-3:20—in the latter section, God is now, because of Jesus Christ, who is abundantly referenced in the section (3:22, 24; 5:1, 6, 8, 11, 15, 17, 21), the God who manifests grace and love through propitiated justice, rather than the God of wrath who justly punishes those who have not been reconciled through the Redeemer.

[584] Notice the abundance of references to both God's and to imputed δικαιοσύνη (3:21-22, 25-26, 4:3, 5, 6, 9, 11, 13, 22; 5:17, 21) and to δικαιόω (3:20, 24, 26, 28, 30; 4:2, 5; 5:1, 9); note also δίκαιος (3:26; 5:7, 19). The progression manifested in the uses of δικαίωμα is noteworthy. The ungodly know God's righteous judgments but do not keep them (1:32), while regenerate Gentiles who keep God's righteous judgments will be reckoned among the people of God (2:26). Despite many offences, the people of God receive δικαίωμα for Christ's sake, δι᾽ ἑνὸς δικαιώματος receiving δικαίωσις (5:16, 18). Consequently, because of regeneration, the righteous judgments of the law are fulfilled in them (8:4).

In the book of Romans, the complete list of references to δικαιοσύνη is: 1:17; 3:5, 21–22, 25–26; 4:3, 5–6, 9, 11, 13, 22; 5:17, 21; 6:13, 16, 18–20; 8:10; 9:28, 30–31; 10:3–6, 10; 14:17; δικαιόω appears in 2:13; 3:4, 20, 24, 26, 28, 30; 4:2, 5; 5:1, 9; 6:7; 8:30, 33, and δίκαιος in 1:17; 2:13; 3:10, 26; 5:7, 19; 7:12.

[585] πίστις, 3:22, 25–28, 30–31; 4:5, 9, 11–14, 16, 19–20; 5:1–2; πιστεύω, 4:3, 17–18, 24.

[586] σωτηρία, 5:9-10 (eschatological, rather than present, σωτηρία); ζωή, 5:17, 18, 21 (see also 5:10)—note the references to ζωή appear only at the end of the section 3:21-5:21, where a transition is being made to 6:1-8:39, and the references to σωτηρία are also both in chapter 5, where the δικαιόω word group is, although certainly still present, less overwhelmingly central than it is in chapters 3-4.

Third, Paul proves in 6:1-8:39 that those justified by faith receive a spiritual life that encompasses not justification only, but also progressive sanctification and glorification. Entrance into the realm of righteousness and the reign of grace makes certain the possession of life in all its justifying, sanctifying, and glorifying fulness (5:21). Indeed, all of life in its future and present aspects proceeds out of or from faith,[587] so that the Christian life is a life of faith. Since salvation in all its aspects arises from faith,[588] God justifies those who are of faith,[589] crediting righteousness to them.[590] The spiritual life of the Christian earthly pilgrimage that proceeds from the reception of life at the moment of regeneration and justification is likewise lived by faith,[591] as the believer by faith eagerly awaits his future inheritance[592] with a faith that is accompanied by holiness of life,[593] since "whatsoever is not of faith is sin."[594] In this manner those justified by faith shall live on earth by faith, and, as God gives to them increasing measures of faith,[595] their earthly sojourn is a life "from faith to faith,"[596] from one measure of faith to another and greater measure, and from one degree of holiness to the 587 ἐκ πίστεως. Note that this important Pauline expression (Romans 1:17; 3:26, 30; 4:16; 5:1; 9:30, 32; 10:6; 14:23; Galatians 2:16; 3:7–9, 11–12, 22, 24; 5:5; Hebrews 10:38) occurs only in Habakkuk 2:4 in the LXX. It is also rare in the writings of early post-apostolic Christendom (but cf. Justin Martyr's Dialogue with Trypho 135: "[T]here are two seeds of Judah, and two races, as there are two houses of Jacob: the one begotten by blood and flesh, the other by faith and the Spirit" (δύο σπέρματα Ἰούδα, καὶ δύο γένη, ὡς δύο οἴκους Ἰακώβ· τὸν μὲν ἐξ αἵματος καὶ σαρκός· τὸν δὲ ἐκ πίστεως καὶ πνεύματος γεγεννημένον).

---

588 The believer is one who has the quality of being ὁ ἐκ πίστεως, Romans 4:16.

589 ὁ ἐκ πίστεως, Romans 3:26, 30; 4:16; Galatians 3:7-9; also Romans 5:1; Galatians 2:16; 3:22-24; contrast 3:12.

590 Romans 9:30-32; 10:6.

591 In addition to Romans 12:3; 14:23; 15:13, note also 1 Corinthians 16:13; 2 Corinthians 1:24; 4:13; 5:7, for evidence that the entire Christian life from justification to glory is a life of faith.

592 Galatians 5:5, ἐκ πίστεως . . . ἀπεκδεχόμεθα.

593 James 2:24.

594 πᾶν δὲ ὃ οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως, ἁμαρτία ἐστί, Romans 14:23b.

595 Romans 12:3, ὁ Θεὸς ἐμέρισε μέτρον πίστεως.

596 ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν—followed by καθὼς γέγραπται, Ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται. The significance of the "from faith to faith" (ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν) is illuminated by "they shall go from strength to strength" (πορεύσονται ἐκ δυνάμεως εἰς δύναμιν, Psalm 84:7 (83:8, LXX)); "they have gone on from evil to evil" (ἐκ κακῶν εἰς κακὰ ἐξήλθοσαν, Jeremiah 9:2 (9:3, LXX)); "To the one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life" (οἷς μὲν ὀσμὴ θανάτου εἰς θάνατον, οἷς δὲ ὀσμὴ ζωῆς εἰς ζωήν, 2 Corinthians 2:16); "But we all . . . are changed into the same image from glory to glory" (ἡμεῖς δὲ πάντες . . . τὴν αὐτὴν εἰκόνα μεταμορφούμεθα ἀπὸ δόξης εἰς δόξαν, 2 Corinthians 3:18); classical parallels include Suetonius, Galba 14.1, where in abandoning one imperial choice after the next after the death of Nero, "some demon" drove the soldiers "from treachery to treachery" (ἐκ προδοσίας εἰς προδοσίαν).

next, in contrast to the ungodly, whose life is a servitude to uncleanness and "to iniquity unto iniquity."[597]

Nonetheless, Paul's focus in 6:1-8:39 is not the progressive growth of Christian faith,[598] but the sure possession and character of Christian life, specifically, the life "in Christ"[599] that is the product of union with Him at the moment of justification and regeneration—the just shall live by faith.[600] Eternal life is the present possession of the believer because of the reign of grace through Jesus Christ (5:17-21), and the possession of this life, in conjunction with its corollary, the believer's judicial death to sin, and progressive death to sin's practice and growth in practical righteousness, arising out of union with Christ in His death and resurrection and the receipt of judicial righteousness in justification, guarantees that the believer will not continue in sin (6:1-14). The "righteousness of God" is revealed in the salvation through the gospel of Christ in both judicial justifying and inward sanctifying righteousness, for the "just" or righteous are the heirs of both by grace (1:16-17).[601] The ability to obey is restored by the regenerating and sanctifying power of God, based on the work of Christ, through the application of the Holy Spirit—this is part of what is included in the gospel being "the power of God unto salvation" (1:16).[602] Paul asks, "Is it possible for the believer to continue in sin?"

---

597 Romans 6:19; note the contrast: ὥσπερ γὰρ παρεστήσατε τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν δοῦλα τῇ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ καὶ τῇ ἀνομίᾳ εἰς τὴν ἀνομίαν, οὕτω νῦν παραστήσατε τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν δοῦλα τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ εἰς ἁγιασμόν, the latter being a description of the same process of progressive sanctification as 1:17's ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν.

598 Thus, πίστις appears in Rom 1:5, 8, 12, 17; 3:3, 22, 25–28, 30–31; 4:5, 9, 11–14, 16, 19–20; 5:1–2, but then disappears until 9:30, after which it appears again in 9:32; 10:6, 8, 17; 11:20; 12:3, 6; 14:1, 22–23; 16:26. The πιστεύω word group appears only in 6:8 between 5:2 and 9:30. The gap is unmistakable when the entire group in Romans is examined: Romans 1:5, 8, 12, 16–17; 3:2–3, 22, 25–28, 30–31; 4:3, 5, 9, 11–14, 16–20, 24; 5:1–2; 6:8; 9:30, 32–33; 10:4, 6, 8–11, 14, 16–17; 11:20, 23; 12:3, 6; 13:11; 14:1–2, 22–23; 15:13; 16:22, 26.

599 ἐν Χριστῷ appears once in Romans 1-5 (3:24), but becomes more frequent after the idea involved in union with Adam and with Christ is set forth, although without the specific use of ἐν Χριστῷ, in 5:12-21; thus, in the section 6:1-8:39 (where ἐν Χριστῷ concludes the section in 8:39), and in the subsequent portions of Romans, the phraseology grows very notably in abundance (Romans 3:24; 6:11, 23; 8:1–2, 39–9:1; 12:5; 15:17; 16:3, 7, 9–10).

600 Thus, ζωή and ζάω are central in 6-8, being found in 6:2, 4, 10–11, 13, 22–7:3; 7:9–10; 8:2, 6, 10, 12–13, 38—Ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται. Note the identification of Christ and His life with the believer and his life through the συζάω of 6:8. ἀναζάω is also found in 7:9. The complete list of ζωή texts in Romans is: 2:7; 5:10, 17–18, 21; 6:4, 22–23; 7:10; 8:2, 6, 10, 38; 11:15. ζάω appears in 1:17; 6:2, 10–11, 13; 7:1–3, 9; 8:12–13; 9:26; 10:5; 12:1; 14:7–9, 11.

601 Note the transition from judicial righteousness to practical righteousness in progressive sanctification in the use of the δίκαιος word group; contrast the uses in Romans 3:20–22, 24–26, 28, 30; 4:2–3, 5–6, 9, 11, 13, 22; 5:1, 7, 9, 17, 19, 21 with those in Romans 6:7, 13, 16, 18–20.

602 That is, the δύναμις . . . Θεοῦ . . . εἰς σωτηρίαν of 1:16 includes a restoration by the Holy Spirit (8:9ff.) of the δύναμις to obey God lost in the Fall (8:7-8, δύναμαι), and God's exercise of δύναμις is absolutely and unstoppably effectual in its purpose (cf. 8:38-39); see 15:13, 14, 19; 16:25.

"Certainly not," the Apostle answers, because the Christian is dead to it, and therefore cannot live in it any longer (6:1-2).[603] As pictured in his post-conversion immersion, the 603 While a rhetorical oughtness should not be excluded from the questions in Romans 6:1, 15 (Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? ἐπιμενοῦμεν τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ, ἵνα ἡ χάρις πλεονάσῃ; Shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? ἁμαρτήσομεν, ὅτι οὐκ ἐσμὲν ὑπὸ νόμον, ἀλλ᾽ ὑπὸ χάριν;), the questions are not simply ones of propriety, but ones of possibility—a possibility indubitably negated, Paul declares. That is, the "God forbid" (μὴ γένοιτο) that answers Paul's questions does not just negate the propriety of continuing in sin, but the possibility of it. The fact that Romans 6:1ff. teaches that the believer is certain to not continue in sin is demonstrated by a number of exegetical considerations.

---

First, whenever Paul follows a "What shall we say" (τί ἐροῦμεν;) question in Romans with another question, what is negated is the possibility, not merely the propriety, of the action. Consider the examples outside of Romans 6:

> A.) The answer to "What shall we say? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance?" (Romans 3:5, τί ἐροῦμεν; μὴ ἄδικος ὁ Θεὸς ὁ ἐπιφέρων τὴν ὀργήν (κατὰ ἄνθρωπον λέγω);—note that the "I speak as a man" is an appropriate addition to all of the following similar questions in Romans) is not, "God who takes vengeance ought not to be unrighteous, but perhaps He is unrighteous," but "God who takes vengeance is certainly not unrighteous."
>
> B.) The answer to "What shall we say then? Is the law sin?" (Romans 7:7, Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; ὁ νόμος ἁμαρτία;), is not "The law ought not to be sin, but perhaps it is sin," but "The law certainly is not sin."
>
> C.) The answer to the question, "What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?" (Romans 8:31, Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν πρὸς ταῦτα; εἰ ὁ Θεὸς ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, τίς καθ᾽ ἡμῶν;), is not "No one ought to be effectually against us and defeat God's purpose of grace, but it is possible that God will be defeated," but "Certainly no one is effectually against us and can defeat God's purpose of grace."
>
> D.) The answer to the question, "What shall we say then? Is there unrighteousness with God?" (Romans 9:14, Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; μὴ ἀδικία παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ;), is not, "There ought not to be unrighteousness with God, but perhaps there is," but "There is certainly no unrighteousness with God."

Certainty, not possibility, is not only under consideration in all the "What shall we say?" constructions in Romans followed by a question outside of chapter six, but also in view when a statement rather than a question follows (9:30). Consequently, the questions in Romans 6 are also answered by certainties, not mere potentialities or proprieties. "What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound?" (Romans 6:1, Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; ἐπιμενοῦμεν τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ, ἵνα ἡ χάρις πλεονάσῃ;) is not answered, "we ought not, but may, continue in sin," but "we shall certainly not continue in sin." "How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" (Romans 6:2, οἵτινες ἀπεθάνομεν τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ, πῶς ἔτι ζήσομεν ἐν αὐτῇ;) is not answered, "We that are dead ought not to be alive to and live in sin any longer, but we may," but "We that are dead will not be alive to and live in sin any longer." The question, "What then? shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace?" (Romans 6:15, Τί οὖν; ἁμαρτήσομεν, ὅτι οὐκ ἐσμὲν ὑπὸ νόμον, ἀλλ᾽ ὑπὸ χάριν;) is not answered, "We ought not to continue in sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace, but we might," but "We will not continue in sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace." Likewise, the condition in Romans 6:8 is not merely possible, but certain; those that are dead with Christ will certainly, rather than only potentially, live with Him—they are eternally secure and saved from sin's penalty and power. The questions that parallel those of Romans 6:1, 15 demonstrate that the believer will certainly not continue in sin.

Second, leaving aside the "What shall we say?" (Romans 3:5; 4:1; 6:1; 7:7; 8:31; 9:14, 30) use of ἐροῦμεν, which does not, in any case, provide any contrary evidence, Paul always uses the first plural future active indicative (the Textus Receptus properly reads ἐπιμενοῦμεν and ἁμαρτήσομεν in Romans 6:1, 15, while the minority text's reading of ἐπιμένωμεν and ἁμαρτήσωμεν is corrupt) of a certainty, not a mere possibility. Believers are certain to judge angels (1 Corinthians 6:3); it is certain that it is not a great thing to reap carnal things where spiritual things have been sown (1 Corinthians 9:11); it is certain that believers will bear the image of the heavenly second Adam (1 Corinthians 15:49); it is certain that believers who do not faint will reap (Galatians 6:9); it is certain that those who are dead with Christ will believer is identified with Christ's death and resurrection and will therefore walk in newness of life (6:3-6), since he is judicially free from sin (6:7). He is free from the dominion of sin and lives spiritually to God, for he is alive with Christ (6:8-10). He is to reckon himself dead to sin and alive to God, as one who has risen from spiritual death to life, because sin will not have dominion over him, since he is under the reign of grace (6:11-14; 5:21). So will the believer sin, because he is under God's grace? No, he will not, because he has been made free from sin when he was converted—he will, therefore, characteristically yield himself more and more to righteousness and holiness instead of to ever greater depths of iniquity (6:15-22). He will not receive the wages of sin in spiritual death, but the gift of God, eternal and spiritual life through Jesus Christ—life in growing measure through the course of his Christian walk, and everlasting life to the highest extent in the coming glory (6:23). He is dead to his old sinful servitude and the spiritual live with Him (2 Timothy 2:11); it is certain that those who suffer with Christ will reign with Him (2 Timothy 2:12); it is certain that the audience of Hebrews will go on, if God permit (Hebrews 6:3); it is certain that those who are in subjection to the Father of spirits shall live (Hebrews 12:9). Consequently, it is also certain that believers will not continue in sin (Romans 6:1, 15) and will not live in sin (Romans 6:2) but will live with Christ (Romans 6:8).

---

Third, in every instance where Paul negates an affirmation with "God forbid" (μὴ γένοιτο) in Romans, what is negated is not potentially possible, but certainly impossible. It is certain that the faithfulness of God is not of none effect (Romans 3:3-4). It is certain that God who takes vengence is not unrighteous (Romans 3:5-6). It is certain that the law is not sin (Romans 7:7). It is certain that God's good law was not made death unto Paul (Romans 7:13). It is certain that there is no unrighteousness with God (Romans 9:14). It is certain that God has not cast away His people (Romans 11:1). It is certain that Israel has not stumbled so that the nation was cast off forever (Romans 11:11). Indeed, there is no clear evidence of any instance of "God forbid" in Paul's writings that does not deal with a certainty (Romans 3:4, 6, 31; 6:2, 15; 7:7, 13; 9:14; 11:1, 11; 1 Corinthians 6:15 (cf. 6:9-11); Galatians 2:17; 3:21; 6:14). Consequently, it is a certainty that believers will not continue in sin (Romans 6:1-2, 15). God forbid—He will not allow it to be so. (Note that God is involved, and "God forbid" a proper translation, in the expression μὴ γένοιτο. See, on the Old Testament construction with חָלִילָה, Commentary on the Old Testament, C. F. Keil & F. Delitzsch, on Joshua 22:29; also see 1 Samuel 24:6; 26:11; 1 Kings 21:3; Job 34:10; 1 Chronicles 11:19. The LXX renders the Old Testament חָלִילָה phrase with μὴ γένοιτο at times (Genesis 44:7, 17; Joshua 22:29; 24:16). A. T. Robertson notes: "In modern Greek Dr. Rouse finds people saying not μὴ γένοιτο, but ὁ θεὸς νὰ φυλάξῃ" (pg. 940, A Grammar of the Greek New Testament in the Light of Historical Research, A. T. Robertson. See also pg. 94, The Epistle to the Romans, John Murray).

Fourth, the context of Romans 6 indicates that the believer is certain not to live in sin. His death to sin and identification with Christ (6:1-4) make a walk in newness of life certain. He is certain to be in the holy likeness of Christ's resurrection (6:5). Crucifixion with Christ is certain to bring freedom from sin's domination (6:6-7); the believer's new spiritual life is as certain as the resurrection of Christ to new life (6:8-10). The believer is to reckon himself dead to sin and alive to God (6:11-13), not because it is possible that true Christians can be dominated by sin, but because God's promise is certain: "sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace" (6:14). While his new obedience is imperfect (6:19), nonetheless the time that believers were enslaved to sin is in the past—now all have become the servants of righteousness and are free from sin's dominion (6:17-21). All believers have their fruit unto holiness, and their end everlasting life (6:22), while all those who still bring forth fruit unto sin receive spiritual death and eternal damnation (6:15-16, 21-23).

Sound exegesis makes it very clear that Romans 6:1 and 15 affirm that the believer not only ought not to, but certainly will not, live in sin as do the unregenerate.

death associated with it and alive to a new master, Christ, in a manner comparable to that of a woman whose old husband has died and who now has a new lord (7:1-6). The law, which should have been the means of life, brought death because of the power of sin, with the result that sin came to be recognized as exceedingly sinful (7:7-13). Indeed, the contrast of the perfect standard of the law and even the believer's obedience is very great, but Jesus Christ gives the victory and even now the believer no longer sins with his whole being, but serves God with his mind (7:14-25). Therefore, believers do not walk after the flesh, but after the Spirit, because the law of the Spirit of life in Christ has made them free from the law of sin and death (8:1-2). Christ's death has brought believers deliverance from the power of sin and death and the presence of the indwelling Spirit[604] with the result that the righteous requirements of the law are now partially fulfilled within and by the believer on earth as, by grace, he grows in holiness, and are totally and perfectly filled in the eschaton (8:3-4).[605] Christians now have life and peace because of their possession of a spiritual mind, instead of the fleshly and rebellious mind they had before their conversion, which brings spiritual death (8:5-8). They have spiritual life and the indwelling Holy Spirit (8:9-11). They are led by the Spirit of God to mortify their indwelling sin and receive eternal life (8:12-14), being freed from bondage into the glory of the adopted sons of God (8:15-17), a glory that will extend to the redemption of the whole creation—indeed, all things work together for good to them, and blessings from predestination in eternity past, to present justification, to future glorification, are certain to them (8:18-39). Judicial and practical righteousness, spiritual and eternal life, are all included in the life that believers, who are the just, receive by grace alone from their redeeming God.

---

604 Note the plentitude of references to the πνεῦμα in Romans 8 (8:1–2, 4–6, 9–11, 13–16, 23, 26); the Holy Spirit is mentioned earlier in Romans only in 1:4 and 5:5 (though the word πνεῦμα also appears in 1:9; 2:29; 7:6. After Romans 8, the Holy Spirit is mentioned also in 9:1; 14:17; 15:13, 16, 19, 30; πνεῦμα appears also in 11:8; 12:11). The Holy Spirit as a Product and Gift of the "in Christ" relationship, and as Producer of spiritual life, comes to the fore in Romans 8. It should be noted that His presence and work are a blessing possessed by all those in union with Christ in Romans 8—nothing in the chapter limits His work to a minority of Christians or to, say, those who affirm that they have entered into a post-conversion second blessing or Higher Life experience.

605 The passive πληρωθῇ in τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ νόμου πληρωθῇ ἐν ἡμῖν indicates that God is the source of the fulfillment of the law—grace is the source of all in the believer's salvation and new covenant obedience. However, there is nothing in Romans 8:4 that indicates that the believer's progressive sanctification is vicarious or that the believer does not himself act in the fulfillment of the law. In the similar syntax in John 17:13 (ἵνα ἔχωσι τὴν χαρὰν τὴν ἐμὴν πεπληρωμένην ἐν αὐτοῖς), God is certainly the One who produces the fulfillment, but the believers are actively joyful. Indeed, the syntax of the passive of πληρόω + ἐν + pronoun can even be instrumental; cf. "this was Jesus, and that the Scripture was fulfilled in/by Him," Τοῦτον εἶναι Ἰησοῦν, καὶ πεπληρῶσθαι ἐν αὐτῷ τὴν Γραφήν, (Irenaeus, Against Heresies 3:12:8).

Romans 9-11 unfolds some of what is involved in the gospel being "to the Jew first, and also to the Greek" (1:16).[606] Israel received tremendous privileges (9:1-5, cf. 3:1-2), from the Scriptures to the covenants to the eternally blessed God over all, the Messiah. Nevertheless, only a Jewish remnant believed the gospel as Paul preached it in the dispensation of grace. This fact, however, was by no means a failure of the Word or promises of God, for under the old covenant also only a remnant was saved—despite Israel's national election, only those who were and are of faith constituted the true seed of Abraham who received everlasting salvation (9:6-29). In fact, the Old Testament indicated that not Jews only, but all, including Gentiles, who would believe would be saved (9:24, 30-33), and that salvation by faith, which was universally and indiscriminately offered to all men, would indeed by received by many Gentiles but rejected by many of the physical seed of Israel (10:1-21). However, God had not cast Israel away, nor had His promises and Word failed, for a remnant would continue to come to faith throughout the dispensation of grace, and the entire Jewish nation will be converted in the future at the end of the Tribulation period as the Millennial kingdom is ushered in (11:1-36). Whether Jews or Gentiles, those who are of faith are the just who shall live.

Romans 12:1-15:13 exhorts the Roman church to a myriad of practical duties that should adorn the life of those who by faith are just. In light of the "mercies of God"[607] set forth in Romans 1-11, Paul "therefore" exhorts the "brethren," the just who live by faith, to serve God as living sacrifices (12:1ff.). Romans 15:13, which concludes the main body of Romans that began with the thesis statement of 1:16-17, indicates, as does the "from faith to faith" of 1:16-17, that God fills the saints with all joy and peace as they 606 Ἰουδαίῳ τε πρῶτον καὶ Ἕλληνι. Ἕλλην appears in 10:12 after being absent since early in Romans (1:14, 16; 2:9–10; 3:9), and Ἰουδαῖος reappears also in 9:24, 10:12 after being absent since 1-3 (1:16; 2:9–10, 17, 28–3:1; 3:9, 29), while Ἰσραήλ appears only in 9-11, but there very frequently (9:6, 27, 31; 10:1, 19, 21; 11:2, 7, 25–26; note also ἔθνος in 9:24, 30; 10:19; 11:11–13, 25, which had been absent since 1-4; ἔθνος also reappears in 15-16 in light of the content of those chapters, after being absent in 12-14). Since the receipt, or rejection, of salvation (σωτηρία/σῴζω, 9:27; 10:1, 9–10, 13; 11:11, 14, 26) in its juridical, renewing, and eschatological fullness is under consideration in the chapters, the development from emphasis upon righteousness and consequently life found in the progression from 3:20-5:21 and 6:1-8:39 is no longer maintained. Thus, πίστις reappears (Romans 9:30, 32; 10:6, 8, 17; 11:20) along with πιστεύω (9:33; 10:4, 9–11, 14, 16) frequently in the company of δικαιοσύνη (9:28, 30–31; 10:3–6, 10), while the fact that receipt of righteousness brings life is assumed rather than receiving continued emphasis (hence ζάω appears only in 9:26; 10:5, in neither case of the life of the justified by faith). Note also the reappearance of εὐαγγέλιον/εὐαγγελίζω in 10:15–16; 11:28, appearing earlier only in 1:1, 9, 15–16; 2:16.

---

607 διὰ τῶν οἰκτίρμων τοῦ Θεοῦ in 12:1 refers back to 9:15, Ἐλεήσω ὃν ἂν ἐλεῶ, καὶ οἰκτειρήσω ὃν ἂν οἰκτείρω.

believe and by means of their faith;[608] faith is the human response through which God makes the believer holy, filling him with the holy attributes of hope, peace, and joy. The increase of the saint's inward holiness consequently results in holy actions (15:14; cf. 12:1-15:13). The gospel of God, through the power[609] of the Holy Ghost, provides all the saints a judicial righteousness, practical righteousness, and a perfect ultimate righteousness, and, indeed, all spiritual blessings, as necessary concomitants of union with the Son (8:32). Paul's preaching of the gospel was a priestly service[610] that led to formerly wicked Gentiles becoming an acceptable[611] sacrifice, "sanctified by the Holy Ghost" (15:16), obedient in word and deed because of the sanctifying efficacy of the Almighty Spirit of God (15:18-19).[612] Sanctification is an absolutely certain consequence of justification—Gentiles incorporated into the people of God become living and holy sacrifices[613] to the God whose mercy delivered them from the penalty and power of sin (12:1-2). Receipt of the gospel in faith leads both to justification and to the saints being established in holiness by the power of God, resulting in the "obedience of faith" (16:25-27).[614] Paul's use of Habakkuk 2:4 in the thesis statement of his epistle to the Romans in 1:16-17 is exactly in line with the meaning of the Lord through the Old Testament

---

608 In Romans 15:13, ὁ δὲ Θεὸς τῆς ἐλπίδος πληρῶσαι ὑμᾶς πάσης χαρᾶς καὶ εἰρήνης ἐν τῷ πιστεύειν, εἰς τὸ περισσεύειν ὑμᾶς ἐν τῇ ἐλπίδι, ἐν δυνάμει Πνεύματος Ἁγίου, the ἐν τῷ πιστεύειν of Romans 15:13 indicates the means (cf. pg. 145, A Grammar of New Testament Greek, vol. 3, Nigel Turner) by which the saints are filled with joy and peace, just as the ἐν δυνάμει Πνεύματος Ἁγίου indicates means. Both the Divine power and the human responsibility in sanctification are seen in the parallel ἐν phrases, while Paul does not affirm that they have equal ultimacy. While ἐν τῷ + infinitive is more commonly used for contemporaneous time than for means, the parallelism with ἐν δυνάμει Πνεύματος Ἁγίου supports means (cf. also 15:19, ἐν δυνάμει Πνεύματος Θεοῦ). Furthermore, even if one wished to affirm that ἐν τῷ πιστεύειν indicates contemporaneous time, the fact that the filling takes place at the time of the believing would support that belief is in some sense a condition of being filled with joy and peace. The spiritual life of Divinely produced joy and peace received by means of faith is part of what is involved in the life that the just have by faith (Romans 1:16-17), as Romans 15:13 is the logical conclusion to the main body of the letter that began in 1:16. Compare 1 Peter 1:8.

609 The ἐν δυνάμει Πνεύματος Ἁγίου of 15:13 also ties back to the "power of God," the δύναμις . . . Θεοῦ, of 1:16; note the references to δύναμαι at 15:14 and the end of the epistle in 16:25.

610 A ἱερουργέω of τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Θεοῦ; note also λειτουργός; cf. Hebrews 8:2; Ezra 7:24; Nehemiah 10:39; Isaiah 61:6 (LXX).

611 εὐπρόσδεκτος; cf. 1 Peter 2:5, Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ, καὶ αὐτοὶ ὡς λίθοι ζῶντες οἰκοδομεῖσθε οἶκος πνευματικός, ἱεράτευμα ἅγιον, ἀνενέγκαι πνευματικὰς θυσίας εὐπροσδέκτους τῷ Θεῷ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

612 Romans 15:18-19 indicates that the ὑπακοή ἐθνῶν, λόγῳ καὶ ἔργῳ, was a product of the mediate agency of Paul's apostolic ministry ἐν δυνάμει σημείων καὶ τεράτων and the ultimate agency of the Spirit, ἐν δυνάμει Πνεύματος Θεοῦ.

613 The offering of 15:25-33 and the holy actions mentioned in the people listed in 16:1-24 are examples of the holy sacrifices that the almighty grace of God produces in those justified and regenerated; they are specific manifestations of what the renewed life of those who have become just by faith looks like.

614 The continuity and development from 1:16-17 to 15:13-16 (cf. 17-20) and 16:25-27 is clear.

prophet. Since the just shall live by faith, justification is a free gift received by grace alone through faith alone. Since the just shall live by faith, progressive sanctification and growth in spiritual life, faith, faithfulness, and holiness is certain for all the justified, for all those who possess faith, while faithfulness is impossible without saving faith. Since the just shall live by faith, ultimate glorification is also certain for all the justified (cf. 8:28-39)—every one of God's precious just ones shall receive the consummation of eternal life in a blessed eternity. All believers continue to rely on Christ alone for the entirety of their justifying righteousness, and all believers live—they have spiritual life now, characteristically trust in Jehovah and grow in faith and other fruits of the Spirit, and will receive the consummation of the life they now enjoy in a blessed life in the eschaton.

As in Romans 1:16-17 Paul's interpretation of Habakkuk 2:4 is in complete harmony with the literal meaning of the Old Testament passage, so the Apostle's quotation in Romans 4:3 of Genesis 15:6 is in full agreement with the literal meaning of Moses. Paul wrote: "For what saith the scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness."[615] As in Genesis 15:6, so in Romans 4:3 faith is the instrument through which Christ's righteousness is imputed, rather than faith itself being the ground or basis of the receipt of righteousness.[616] Paul makes it very clear that 615 τί γὰρ ἡ γραφὴ λέγει; Ἐπίστευσε δὲ Ἀβραὰμ τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικαιοσύνην. The One who accounted Abraham as righteous is God, τῷ Θεῷ; ἐλογίσθη is a form of the Divine passive. "Abraham believed in God, and God reckoned [it] ["it was reckoned by God"] to him unto righteousness." Compare Leviticus 7:18 (7:8, LXX): ἐὰν δὲ φαγὼν φάγῃ ἀπὸ τῶν κρεῶν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ τρίτῃ, οὐ δεχθήσεται αὐτῷ τῷ προσφέροντι αὐτό, οὐ λογισθήσεται αὐτῷ, μίασμά ἐστιν· ἡ δὲ ψυχή, ἥτις ἐὰν φάγῃ ἀπ᾽ αὐτοῦ, τὴν ἁμαρτίαν λήμψεται, "And if he do at all eat of the flesh on the third day, it shall not be accepted for him that offers: it shall not be reckoned to him, it is pollution; and whatsoever soul shall eat of it, shall bear his iniquity." Whether in Romans 4:3, Galatians 3:6, or James 2:23, the aorist of Ἐπίστευσε in the New Testament quotation of Genesis 15:6 is constative. Compare the present tenses of πιστεύω employed for Christian belief in 4:5, 11, 24 and the aorists for Abraham's belief in 4:3, 17, 18.

---

616 Charles Hodge explains:

> According to the Remonstrants or Arminians, faith is the ground [rather than merely the instrumental cause] of justification. Under the Gospel God accepts our imperfect obedience including faith and springing from it, in place of the perfect obedience demanded by the law originally given to Adam. There is one passage in the Bible, or rather one form of expression, which occurs in several places, which seems to favour this view of the subject. In Romans 4:3, it is said, "Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness;" and again in ver. 22 of that chapter, and in Galatians 3:6. If this phrase be interpreted according to the analogy of such passages as Romans 2:26, "Shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision?" it does mean that faith is taken or accepted for righteousness. The Bible, however, is the word of God and therefore self-consistent. Consequently if a passage admits of one interpretation inconsistent with the teaching of the Bible in other places, and of another interpretation consistent with that teaching, we are bound to accept the latter. . . . [We must not only consider what] grammatical structure and logical connection indicate . . . [but also] the analogy of Scripture. . . . [T]he Apostle . . . teaches, first, that the great promise made to Abraham, and faith in which secured his justification, was not that his natural descendants should be as numerous as the stars of heaven, but that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed; secondly, that the seed intended was not a multitude, but one person, and that that one person was Christ (Gal. 3:16); and, thirdly, that the blessing which the seed of Abraham was to secure for the world was justification is by faith alone in Christ alone, through which the sinner receives the imputed righteousness of Christ and obtains a perfect legal standing before God. Abraham was not justified by works, but solely through faith, entirely by grace exclusive of all human merit or effort (4:1-5), a teaching to which David also testifed (4:6-8). Since Abraham was justified prior to his circumcision, it is apparent that ceremonies or rituals, even those ordained by God such as circumcision, are not the instrumentality redemption. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: … that the blessing of Abraham (i.e., the promise made to Abraham) might come on" us. The promise made to Abraham, therefore, was redemption through Christ. Hence those who are Christ's, the Apostle teaches, are Abraham's seed and heirs of his promise. What, therefore, Abraham believed, was that the seed of the woman, the Shiloh, the promised Redeemer of the world, was to be born of him. He believed in Christ, as his Saviour, as his righteousness, and deliverer, and therefore it was that he was accepted as righteous, not for the merit of his faith, and not on the ground of faith, or by taking faith in lieu of righteousness, but because he received and rested on Christ alone for his salvation.

---

Unless such be the meaning of the Apostle, it is hard to see how there is any coherence or force in his arguments. His object is to prove that men are justified, not by works, but gratuitously; not for what they are or do, but for what is done for them. They are saved by a ransom; by a sacrifice. But it is absurd to say that trust in a ransom redeems, or is taken in place of the ransom; or that faith in a sacrifice, and not the sacrifice itself, is the ground of acceptance. To prove that such is the Scriptural method of justification, Paul appeals to the case of Abraham. He was not justified for his works, but by faith in a Redeemer. He expected to be justified as ungodly (Romans 4:5). This, he tells us, is what we must do. We have no righteousness of our own. We must take Christ for our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. In the immediately preceding chapter the Apostle had said we are justified by faith in the blood of Christ, as a propitiation for sin; and for him to prove this from the fact that Abraham was justified on account of his confiding, trusting state of mind, which led him to believe that, although a hundred years old, he should be the father of a numerous posterity, would be a contradiction.

Besides, it is to be remembered, not only that the Scriptures never say that we are justified "on account" of faith (διὰ πίστιν), but always "by," or "through" faith (διὰ or ἐκ πίστεως, or πίστει); but also that it is not by faith as such; not by faith in God, nor in the Scriptures; and not by faith in a specific divine promise such as that made to Abraham of a numerous posterity, or of the possession of the land of Canaan; but only by faith in one particular promise, namely, that of salvation through Christ. It is, therefore, not on account of the state of mind, of which faith is the evidence, nor of the good works which are its fruits, but only by faith as an act of trust in Christ, that we are justified. This of necessity supposes that He, and not our faith, is the ground of our justification. He, and not our faith, is the ground of our confidence. How can any Christian wish it to be otherwise? What comparison is there between the absolutely perfect and the infinitely meritorious righteousness of Christ, and our own imperfect evangelical obedience as a ground of confidence and peace!

This doctrine is moreover dishonouring to the Gospel. It supposes the Gospel to be less holy than the law. The law required perfect obedience; the Gospel is satisfied with imperfect obedience. And how imperfect and insufficient our best obedience is, the conscience of every believer certifies. If it does not satisfy us, how can it satisfy God?

The grand objection, however, to this Remonstrant doctrine as to the relation between faith and justification, is that it is in direct contradiction to the plain and pervading teachings of the Word of God. The Bible teaches that we are not justified by works. This doctrine affirms that we are justified by works. The Bible teaches that we are justified by the blood of Christ; that it is for his obedience that the sentence of justification is passed on men. This doctrine affirms that God pronounces us righteous because of our own righteousness. The Bible from first to last teaches that the whole ground of our salvation or of our justification is objective, what Christ as our Redeemer, our ransom, our sacrifice, our surety, has done for us. This doctrine teaches us to look within, to what we are and to what we do, as the ground of our acceptance with God. It may safely be said that this is altogether unsatisfactory to the awakened conscience. The sinner cannot rely on anything in himself. He instinctively looks to Christ, to his work done for us as the ground of confidence and peace. This in the last resort is the hope of all believers . . . they all cast their dying eyes on Christ. "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." (pgs. 167-170, Systematic Theology, vol. 3, Charles Hodge) through which sinners are justified (4:9-12).[617] Salvation is by grace through faith to all, whether Jew or Gentile, and not by the law or circumcision, for Abraham's justification apart from circumcision and the law (4:12-22) is a pattern for Christian justification (4:23-25). In the book of Romans, Paul cogently and clearly demonstrates with his quotation from Genesis 15:6 that Abraham, and all, receive justification apart from works by grace through faith alone.

---

617 The Reformed sacramental notion that infant baptism is a vehicle conveying saving grace and that through baptism grace is "conferred by the Holy Ghost" upon the elect (Westminster Confession of Faith, Article 28) because baptism is a "seal" of salvation is a serious heresy. Since Romans 4:11 is the only verse in Scripture that could with any plausibility be used to support the Reformed view, its advocates argue from this text that circumcision is a "seal" of grace, that their sacrament of infant baptism is equivalent to circumcision, and that, therefore, infant baptism seals or conveys grace to their infants. This argument is filled with errors. Even if circumcision were equivalent to baptism, which it is not, the example of Abraham would teach that faith is a prerequisite to baptism. A parallel between circumcision given to all the physical seed of Abraham and baptism given to the spiritual seed of Abraham would restrict baptism to believers, since "they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham" (Galatians 3:7).

The use of the word "seal" (σφραγίς) in Romans 4:11—for the already justified and already believing Abraham—by no means supports the Reformed contention. First, the verse does not say that circumcision was a seal of grace to Jewish male infants. While circumcision was a "sign" by nature, it is not affirmed to have been a "seal" to all, but only personally to believing Abraham, who received it when he had already been justified by faith. A recognition of this distinction in Romans 4:11 explains the Old Testament use of the word sign or token (אוֹת) in connection with circumcision (Genesis 17:11) but the complete absence of references in the Old Testament to the ceremony as a "seal." Second, the New Testament does not equate circumcision with baptism or state that the latter replaces the former. Third, the Biblical immersion of believers has nothing to do with the ceremonial application of water to infants that the Reformed claim is baptism. Fourth, a seal is a visible mark or impression evidencing the authority of the one who authorizes the seal to the genuineness or correctness of whatever is witnessed to by its presence. However, baptism does not leave a visible mark upon those who receive it, and it is not administered to single individuals by Divine authority—the authority given the church to administer baptism is general (Matthew 28:18-20). No man can put marks upon the elect of God which shall authoritatively certify that they are His, and neither baptism nor the Lord's Supper authenticate one's personal election to himself or to others; such authentication is given to the regenerate individual himself by the presence of true faith and the manifestation of that faith in a changed life, as taught in 1 John (cf. 5:13). Unlike the ordinance of baptism, the "seal" of circumcision given to Abraham was indeed a visible mark and was applied to the individual man Abraham by direct Divine authority. Circumcision was a seal to Abraham, but to nobody else. Finally, when advocates of Reformed theology and other Protestants speak of baptism as a "seal" or vehicle of grace, they use the word in a sense entirely absent in Scripture. None of the appearances of the word "seal" (σφραγίς) in the New Testament indicate that grace is conveyed through a "seal" (Romans 4:11; 1 Corinthians 9:2; 2 Timothy 2:19; Revelation 5:1-2, 5, 9; 6:1, 3, 5, 7, 9, 12; 7:2; 8:1; 9:4). Those who think that infant baptism was the instrument of their receiving forgiveness, those who think that they received the sacrament as confirmation and evidence that they were already regenerated in the womb, and those who think they had water applied to them in infancy as evidence that they were certain to be regenerated in the future unless they consciously rejected the "sacrament" and its efficacy are underneath a terrible spiritual delusion. They will certainly be damned unless they recognize that their unbiblical religious ceremony did nothing beneficial for them, admit they are still lost, and then repent and believe the gospel.

Indeed, baptism is not even a "sign" in the sense regularly employed in Reformed theology. The ordinance is indeed a sign of what Christ did and suffered, but it is not a "sign" promising that any saving work will be done in the one who receives it—yet it is in this latter sense that the Reformed generally speak of the ordinance as a "sign."

While Paul's main point in his argument of Romans four is justification, the transformed lifestyle that is the certain consequent of and companion of gratuitous justification is not absent from the chapter. Those who have ceased working to obtain justification and simply believe on Christ (4:5) are those whose lifestyle evidences a "walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham."[618] Those justified by faith alone will also be the faithful, following the pattern of Abraham who not only received a free justification but also separated from the idolatry of Ur and obeyed, loved, and served Jehovah. God both declared that Abraham was righteous solely by faith and stated of the patriarch, "Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws" (Genesis 26:5). Abraham not only entrusted himself to the Lord at a particular moment, but he also persevered in the faith (Romans 4:17-22). The continuity between justifying and persevering, sanctifying faith is clear in Romans 4-5—one and the same faith results in both salvific blessings. While the main emphasis of Romans 4 is the element of the Old Testament doctrine that "the just shall live by faith" that establishes justification by faith alone based on the righteousness of Christ alone, the corollary truth of the life of faithfulness of the justified is also apparent.

Finally, Paul[619] also quotes Habakkuk 2:4 in the book of Hebrews. Based on the foundation of justification by faith, Paul's quotation in Hebrews 10:38 emphasizes the perseverance that results from genuine saving faith.[620] Those who are truly just, Paul 618 Romans 4:12, τοῖς στοιχοῦσι τοῖς ἴχνεσι τῆς ἐν τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ πίστεως τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν Ἀβραάμ. The present participle στοιχοῦσι supports the fact that a continuing lifestyle that matches Abraham's is in view, rather than only the action of a particular moment.

---

619 There are many convincing works defending the Pauline authorship of Hebrews, from John Owen's "Of the Penman of the Epistle to the Hebrews" in his Exercitations on the Epistle to the Hebrews in vol. 17 of his complete works, to Charles Forster's The Apostolic Authority of the Epistle to the Hebrews (London: James Duncan, 1838), to William Leonard's Authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews: Critical Problem and Use of the Old Testament (Rome: Vatican Polyglot Press, 1939), to more modern works. However, the testimony of Scripture itself to the Pauline authorship of the Apostle's 14th epistle is conclusive. 2 Peter 3:15-16 indicates that Paul wrote an inspired epistle, a work that is part of the New Testament canon, to the Jewish diaspora (2 Peter 3:1; 1 Peter 1:1; cf. James 1:1). Since Paul's other thirteen inspired and canonical epistles are written to specific Gentile churches, the book of Hebrews must be the Pauline epistle that Peter refers to in 2 Peter 3:15-16.

620 "That in the Epistle to the Hebrews it is the general idea of faith, or, to be more exact, the subjective nature of faith, that is dwelt upon, rather than its specific object, is not due to a peculiar conception of what faith lays hold upon, but to the particular task which fell to its writer in the work of planting Christianity in the world. With him, too, the person and work of Christ are the specific object of faith (Hebrews 13:7, 8; 3:14; 10:22). But the danger against which, in the providence of God, he was called upon to guard the infant flock, was not that it should fall away from faith to works, but that it should fall away from faith into despair. His readers were threatened not with legalism but with 'shrinking back' (Hebrews 10:39), and he needed, therefore, to emphasize not so much the object of faith as the duty of faith. Accordingly, it is not so much on the righteousness of faith as on its perfecting that he insists; it is not so much its contrast with works as its contrast with impatience that he impresses on his readers' consciences; it is not so much to faith specifically in Christ and in Him alone that he exhorts them as to an teaches, will live by faith: "Now the just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul."[621] The just, those who believe to the saving[622] of their souls, all the people of God, are contrasted with those who apostatize instead of persevering, who "draw back unto perdition"[623] and are eternally damned. Paul sets forth this truth as an encouragement to the believing Hebrews to persevere in the faith despite persecution and as a warning to those who would apostatize from Christ and return to the shadows of Judaism that they will receive, not freedom from persecution only, but with it God's eternal curse and everlasting damnation. Those who respond in faith to the gospel (Hebrews 4:2) have more than a bare faith in God (Hebrews 6:1, cf. v. 1-9), but a kind of faith that will be mixed with patience and therefore will receive an eternal inheritance (Hebrews 6:12), a kind of faith that brings with it the purified heart of the New Covenant (Hebrews 10:22; 8:8-12). The heroes of the Old Testament recalled in Hebrews 11 are the justified, those who obtained a good report and will be perfected in eternal glory with those of the first century who persevered in like manner (Hebrews 11:2, 39-40); they are the just who live by faith, attitude of faith—an attitude which could rise above the seen to the unseen, the present to the future, the temporal to the eternal, and which in the midst of sufferings could retain patience, in the midst of disappointments could preserve hope. This is the key to the whole treatment of faith in the Epistle to the Hebrews—its definition as the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen (Hebrews 11:1); its illustration and enforcement by the example of the heroes of faith in the past, a list chosen and treated with the utmost skill for the end in view (11.); its constant attachment to the promises (Hebrews 4:1, 2; 6:12; 10:36, 38; 11:9); its connexion with the faithfulness (Hebrews 11:11; cf. 10:23), almightiness (Hebrews 11:19), and the rewards of God (Hebrews 11:6, 26); and its association with such virtues as boldness (Hebrews 3:6; 4:16; 10:19, 35), confidence (Hebrews 3:14; 11:1), patience (Hebrews 10:36; 12:1), [and] hope (Hebrews 3:6; 6:11, 18; 10:23)" ("The Biblical Doctrine of Faith," Biblical Doctrines, Warfield, vol. 2 of Works).

---

621 ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται· καὶ ἐὰν ὑποστείληται, οὐκ εὐδοκεῖ ἡ ψυχή μου ἐν αὐτῷ. ἡμεῖς δὲ οὐκ ἐσμὲν ὑποστολῆς εἰς ἀπώλειαν, ἀλλὰ πίστεως εἰς περιποίησιν ψυχῆς.

The critical text corruption that changes Paul's ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται into ὁ δὲ δίκαιός μου ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται in Hebrews 10:38 contradicts the Hebrew text of Habakkuk 2:4 and Paul's own method of quoting the passage in Romans and Galatians. The Textus Receptus follows 97% of Greek MSS, while the critical text corruption follows the remaining 3%. There is even evidence in the MSS of the LXX for ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται rather than ὁ δὲ δίκαιός μου ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται.

622 While ἀπώλεια is a word Scripture reserves, in spiritual judgments, to the unregenerate, περιποίησις, "saving" in Hebrews 10:39, is employed only of blessings upon the people of God (Ephesians 1:14; 1 Thessalonians 5:9; 2 Thessalonians 2:14; Hebrews 10:39; 1 Peter 2:9).

623 The proud person, the עֻפְּלָה֙ לֹא־יְשָׁרָ֣ה נַפְשׁ֔וֹ בּ֑וֹ of Habakkuk 2:4a, is the one who draws back (ὑποστείληται) in Habakkuk 2:4a, LXX—the passage identifies him as an unsaved person. Furthermore, "perdition," ἀπώλεια, is never used in the New Testament of a spiritual judgment that a saved person can undergo, but is very regularly used of the eternal damnation of the unregenerate (cf. the complete list of uses: Matthew 7:13; 26:8; Mark 14:4; John 17:12; Acts 8:20; 25:16; Romans 9:22; Philippians 1:28; 3:19; 2 Thessalonians 2:3; 1 Timothy 6:9; Hebrews 10:39; 2 Peter 2:1–3; 3:7, 16; Revelation 17:8, 11). Note also συναπόλλυμι for the fate of unbelievers in Hebrews 11:31.

those who believe to the saving of their souls, those just men made perfect who enter the New Jerusalem (Hebrews 12:23) and are a great cloud of witnesses to encourage the Hebrews in Paul's day to persevere (Hebrews 12:1), even as the godly Christian preachers known to the recipients of Hebrews had a saving faith that led them to a blessed eternity with Jesus Christ (Hebrews 13:7-8), in contrast with those in whom God has no pleasure (cf. Hebrews 10:38; 11:5-6), those who draw back to perdition (Hebrews 10:38-39).

Thus, explicating Hebrews 10:38-39, Hebrews 11 supplies an extensive analysis of how genuine faith, that possessed by those that believe to the saving of the soul, appeared in the life of Old Testament believers. The "by faith"[624] refrain of chapter 11 indicates that the Old Testament worthies acted as they did both because of the presence of genuine faith in them and through the instrumentality of that faith. The chapter does not affirm that they were free from the effects of indwelling sin, or that they never experienced spiritual declensions, but it does teach that, as people of genuine faith, they possessed a graciously given predominant bent towards God that manifested itself in a life characterized by faithfulness and acts of faith. The servants of God in Hebrews 11, therefore, do not represent a second or higher class of Christian, but all those truly in the kingdom of God their recognized Creator (Hebrews 11:1-3), the just or righteous (Hebrews 10:38; 11:4) who please God (11:5-6), who are righteous by faith and receive salvation (11:7), who will, like Abraham and Sarah, enter the heavenly city (11:8-19), who look for future reward and therefore suffer affliction with the people of God instead of enjoying the temporary pleasures of sin (11:25-26, cf. 20-26), who forsake the heathen and are not destroyed with them (27-31), and who live by faith in whatever circumstances God places them in and enjoy the resurrection to life with an abundant reward (32-38), receiving the promise of eternal inheritance with the rest of those who possess true faith and consequently persevere (9:15; 11:39-40). That is, Hebrews 11 teaches both that justification is simply by faith and sets forth the pattern of the life of faith that will mark the justified.[625] Since the elders obtained a good report simply by faith (11:1-2), works do not justify; nevertheless, those who have such a good report will manifest that they are just or righteous by acts such as Abel's worship of God even at the cost of martyrdom, and will, after their life by faith as just men, enter into eternal blessedness.[626]

---

624 πίστει.

625 Compare John Owen's extensive exposition of chapter 11 in his Exposition of Hebrews.

626 Hebrews 10:38; 11:4; 12:23 are the only texts with δίκαιος in Hebrews, and they all refer to the same sort of person. Those who are the just will live like just Abel, and then enter into the eternal home of just men made perfect.

They will be resurrected with the just because in their lifetime they pleased God,[627] as did Enoch (11:5), by faith (11:6). Like all the righteous of chapter 11, their good report before God in justification will issue in sanctification (11:39).[628] Those who would inherit "the righteousness which is by faith" will stand for God against the opposition of the world like Noah did when he built the ark (11:7). Those with saving faith will follow the example of Abraham, who "by faith . . . obeyed" God's call, even at the cost of separation from one's kindred and way of life for a wandering existence as a stranger and foreigner (11:8-9), because enduring such earthly trials to inherit the New Jerusalem is worthwhile (11:10). Saving faith recognizes the validity of God's promises, as Sarah did, even if they seem impossible (11:11-12). Saving faith not only intellectually apprehends and is persuaded of God's promises, but embraces them, resulting in an open confession of and identification with Him, His ways, and His people (11:13), and an open declaration of a preference for His heavenly country (11:14, 16) because of an inward preference for such a holy land and for its holy King—one who truly inwardly prefers this world to God's coming kingdom will find an occasion to turn back from the way of faith and spiritual and everlasting life (11:15). True believers are not ashamed of God, and He is not ashamed of them, but has prepared an eternal city for them.[629] They characteristically respond in faith to trials, as Abraham did when he put God's command before his own son Isaac (11:17-19). They have respect to the promises of God and act in accordance with them, as did Isaac (11:20).[630] Saving faith has respect to the Divine promises even to the time of death and manifests itself in a true heart of worship, as seen 627 εὐηρεστηκέναι τῷ Θεῷ. εὐαρεστέω appears in the NT only in Hebrews 11:5-6; 13:16. As in Hebrews 11:5-6 those with saving faith please God, so in Hebrews 13:16 God is pleased with the good deeds and charitable sharing with needy fellow Christians that arise out of a heart established with grace, rather than being pleased with the sacrifices performed by the unconverted Jews who would call the Christian Hebrews back to the shadows of the ceremonial law (13:7-17).

---

628 Note the continuity demonstrated in the uses of μαρτυρέω in Hebrews 11:

11:2 ἐν ταύτῃ γὰρ ἐμαρτυρήθησαν οἱ πρεσβύτεροι.
For by it the elders obtained a good report.

11:4 πίστει πλείονα θυσίαν Ἄβελ παρὰ Κάϊν προσήνεγκε τῷ Θεῷ, δι᾽ ἧς ἐμαρτυρήθη εἶναι δίκαιος, μαρτυροῦντος ἐπὶ τοῖς δώροις αὐτοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ· καὶ δι᾽ αὐτῆς ἀποθανὼν ἔτι λαλεῖ.
By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh.

11:5 πίστει Ἐνὼχ μετετέθη τοῦ μὴ ἰδεῖν θάνατον, καὶ οὐχ εὑρίσκετο, διότι μετέθηκεν αὐτὸν ὁ Θεός· πρὸ γὰρ τῆς μεταθέσεως αὐτοῦ μεμαρτύρηται εὐηρεστηκέναι τῷ Θεῷ·
By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God.

11:39 καὶ οὗτοι πάντες, μαρτυρηθέντες διὰ τῆς πίστεως, οὐκ ἐκομίσαντο τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν,
And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise:

629 Hebrews 11:16; cf. 2:11; Romans 9:33; 10:9-11; 1 Peter 2:6.

630 Genesis 27, which is referred to in Hebrews 11:20, illustrates both the true faith present in Isaac and that serious sins and manifestations of corruption from indwelling sin can be present in those with saving faith.

in Jacob and Joseph (11:21-22). Saving faith fears God rather than man, and honors Him even if the government commands the contrary, as seen in Moses' parents (11:23). Saving faith identifies with the people of God and their worship, esteems reproach for Christ greater riches than worldly treasures, forsakes the world, and endures, because it looks to the coming eternal reward, as Moses did (11:24-28). Faith exposes its possessors to what appear to be severe physical dangers if required by the command of God, as is evident in Israel's passing through the Red Sea, whose waters could, were they not restrained by God, have drowned the whole nation as they did the Egyptian army (11:29). Faith will fight the spiritual warfare to which God has called His people in accordance with His commandment (11:30), as seen in Israel's conquest of Jericho. Faith will lead believers to protect God's servants even at great personal risk, so that those who possess it, as did Rahab, will not perish with those who are unbelievers (11:31).[631] Indeed, the Old Testament validates that faith is the cause and instrument for both obtaining spiritual victories and for possessing an overcoming endurance of extreme suffering, torture, and martyrdom for Christ's sake (11:32-38). Since such Old Testament heroes received life and lived by faith, Paul concludes, so must the Hebrews endure and overcome by faith if they are to obtain the promise of eternal life (11:39-12:1)—indeed, they must look to and follow the greatest Pattern of all of overcoming endurance, Jesus Christ Himself (12:2-3). As they took up the cross to follow Christ at the moment of their conversion, so must they continue to follow Him. As Habakkuk made clear, the book of Hebrews affirms that the just not only enter into life by faith but also live by faith during their earthly pilgrimage and consequently enter into their promised eternal inheritance. The complete idea taught in Genesis 15:6 and Habakkuk 2:4 appears, although with differences of emphasis, in all the New Testament quotations of the Old Testament text in James, Galatians, Romans, and Hebrews.

John's Gospel teaches that believers have their faith strengthened and deepened through the believing reception of greater revelations through the Word (John 2:22)[632] of the Triune God in His ontology and economy,[633] particularly as seen in Christ the 631 Note that the section from 11:4-31 begins with a plain statement that acts of faith manifest the presence of spiritual life in the just or righteous and are instrumental in holy practice (11:4) and ends with an indication that those who do not possess those products of faith in the life will perish as unbelievers (11:31).

---

632 In John 2:22, both the Old Testament Scripture and Christ's audible speech during His earthly ministry are the Word of God (ἐπίστευσαν τῇ γραφῇ, καὶ τῷ λόγῳ ᾧ εἶπεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς), which the disciples believe in regard to His resurrection (2:18-22).

633 The "ontological Trinity [refers to] the internal, intratrinitarian distinctions ad intra or within the Godhead itself," while the "economic Trinity [refers to] the offices or functions performed by each of the three members of the Trinity. The economic Trinity concerns the roles that each member performs in terms

Mediator,[634] and through their response, enabled by grace, of fuller surrender to and entrusting of themselves to Him. Even the smallest degree of true confidence in, coming to, and cleaving to Christ will bring union with Him, and consequently justification, sanctification, and all the other blessings of salvation, but one can cleave to Christ more closely, grow in confidence in Him, surrender more fully to Him, and entrust oneself more fully to Him. Such a greater degree of trust in the Person of the Redeemer and in the Triune God, which is associated in Scripture with receipt of a fuller revelation of His nature and work through the Word, is growth in faith. Through such an increase of faith the saints partake of an increase of spiritual life and fellowship with God. Christ's exercise of creative power in transforming water into the fruit of the vine in John 2 was a manifestation of His glory, in response to which His disciples, those who had already exercised saving faith, believed on Him in a deeper way (John 2:11).[635] His miracle, both of the created order ad extra or outside of himself" (pgs. 954, 959, Dogmatic Theology, W. G. T. Shedd, 3rd. ed. Phillipsburg, NJ: Presbyterian and Reformed, 2003). That is, the ontological Trinity is God as He is in Himself, while the economic Trinity is God as He is towards us.

---

634 Brian Kay, in setting forth the Trinitarian spirituality of John Owen, effectively explains the connection between meditation on the Trinity and on Christ the Mediator:

> [W]hat exactly is the connection between meditating on the Trinity in action and actual growth towards Christian maturity? The best way to understand this may come by examining . . . another related question which is more specific: how is meditating on Christ transformative for the believer? These are related questions, of course, because . . . the prime ad extra act of the Trinity is to communicate Christ to the believer[.] . . . Thus, to meditate on the glory of Christ as Redeemer is to meditate on the most important work of the Trinity. . . . [A]pprehending Christ in his glory is not only the remedy for spiritual decays, but our apprehension of this glory is the spring of all our obedience and is also the controlling object of Christian affection because of Christ's consuming beauty. How is this contemplation so effective? Two reasons . . . rise to the surface. The first is that since the Spirit's work is to fashion believers into the image of Christ's human nature, the believer's own transformation begins as he fills his mind with thoughts of the now glorified human nature of Christ [and other elements of His Theanthropic glory]. In other words, one slowly becomes what one fills one's mind with . . . one becomes what one apprehends or gazes upon. The connection between beholding and transformation comes also in the scriptural language "we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord[."] . . .
>
> More deeply, a consideration by the worshipper of the very hypostatic union by which Christ's human nature is united to [the] divine nature is especially powerful. On one hand, diligently inspecting the Son of God's condescension to take on human nature impresses the believer's mind with the prototype of all Christian self-denial, for human obedience is similarly acting in self-denying submission to the will of the Father. On the other hand, the hypostatic union presents to the mind a glorious mystery that exalts God's ineffable wisdom in salvation. . . . [C]ontemplating . . . Christ as fully God and fully man . . . raises the human mind to new heights of both delight in God and progress in sanctification. Somehow, such lofty thoughts of such an inexplicable union, yet a union made real by the Godhead as an act of love for those who would be saved because of it, moves the soul to humble worship and new sensations of appreciative delight. . . . [E]njoyment [is] the language of . . . meditating on Christ[.] . . . In the last analysis, the enjoyment of Christ is what drives out the enjoyment of sin, for the former causes the believer to lose his appetite for the latter. The late-born Puritan Thomas Chalmers would express the same idea with the title of a sermon on the secret of dislodging fleshly appetites, "The Expulsive Power of a new Affection." (pgs. 70-71, Trinitarian Spirituality, Brian Kay. Some quotation marks have been removed and the traditional English generic pronoun restored.)

635 ταύτην ἐποίησε τὴν ἀρχὴν τῶν σημείων ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐν Κανᾷ τῆς Γαλιλαίας, καὶ ἐφανέρωσε τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἐπίστευσαν εἰς αὐτὸν οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ. The specific manifestation of Christ's glory in the miracle at the wedding feast in Cana, and the specific belief in Him as an exercise of creative power such as pertained only to the eternal Jehovah and a manifestation of His grace and lovingkindness as the Provider for and Redeemer of His people, showed forth Christ's glory as both the eternal Son of God and as the incarnate God-Man, and the faith of His disciples was directed towards Him[636] as all He was in Himself and on their behalf in a greater way as a consequence. Furthermore, through the display of the Divine glory manifested by the incarnate Christ through His raising of Lazarus from the dead, His disciples were led to believe in Him in a deeper way (John 11:15). Christ was revealed as One who, weeping over Lazarus' death, could perfectly identify with human sorrow, and was filled to the fullest extent with perfect human love and sympathy (John 11:35-36), while He was also revealed as God the Word and the Father's only begotten Son, as One who was Himself the Resurrection and the Life, and who, out of His infinite Divine love, could and would exercise the Almighty power of God to redeem His beloved ones from even that last enemy, death (John 11:25-27). While revelation of the glory of God in Christ leads His people to deeper faith (John 2:11; 11:15), at the same time their response of faith to His Word is a condition of and a means to a greater revelation of His glory (John 11:40).[637] Christ reveals Himself to His chosen ones, so that love that contemplates Him, faith that trusts in Him, and obedience that follows Him, is aroused the more in them. To such faith, love, and obedience, Christ in turn responds by revealing Himself in yet clearer and clearer ways. Christ also predicted His betrayal to strengthen His disciples' faith in Him as the Messiah and as Jehovah, the I AM (John 13:19).[638] In John 14:1, Christ addressed His disciples: "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me."[639] His disciples had already believed, and were believing, in God, and already had come to saving faith in Christ, but the Lord exhorts them to a deeper faith in Himself as the One who is going to go away and come again to receive them to Himself, to a faith that clearly respects His humiliation, crucifixion, resurrection, ascension, and mediatorial office (John 14:6, a response to this particular manifestation of His glory, is specified by the aorists ἐφανέρωσε and ἐπίστευσαν. Note that John 11:15, 40; 13:19; 19:35; 20:8, 25, 29, 31; 1 John 3:23 also contain aorists.

---

636 πιστεύω + εἰς.

637 ἐὰν πιστεύσῃς, ὄψει τὴν δόξαν τοῦ Θεοῦ. While all present in John 11 saw the physical miracle of the raising of Lazarus, only those with spiritual sight could see the glory of God in Christ revealed by the miracle.

638 ἀπ᾽ ἄρτι λέγω ὑμῖν πρὸ τοῦ γενέσθαι, ἵνα, ὅταν γένηται, πιστεύσητε ὅτι ἐγώ εἰμι.

639 Μὴ ταρασσέσθω ὑμῶν ἡ καρδία· πιστεύετε εἰς τὸν Θεόν, καὶ εἰς ἐμὲ πιστεύετε. As in the Authorized Version, the first πιστεύετε is an indicative, while the second is an imperative; cf. Non turbetur cor vestrum. Creditis in Deum, et in me credite (Vulgate). Support for taking πιστεύετε in 14:1b as an imperative is also found in the present imperative πιστεύετε in 14:11 and the exhortation to πιστεύω in 14:10.

29[640]), to be added to their already extant justifying faith. The Lord Jesus exhorts His disciples to a deeper faith in His Person in John 14:1, but does not there exhort His disciples to a deeper faith in the Father in particular, because the first Person of the Trinity is not the One who they would see in such a radically different light or have difficulty recognizing in light of the cross.[641] Christ then proceeds to lead His disciples to a stronger faith in the Trinitarian perichoresis[642] (cf. John 10:30, 38) and to Himself as the One in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily on account of His Word and works (John 14:10-12).[643] As a result of the discourse of John 14-16, the disciples, who had already come to saving faith in Christ with all of its permanent results, and consequently loved Him and were loved by the Father (John 16:27),[644] declared that they were now believing in a deeper way in Christ (John 16:30),[645] although the Lord warned them that their faith was still weak enough that it would not keep them from forsaking Him when He was betrayed (John 16:31-32),[646] for stronger faith leads to a more decided stand for Christ against the world and to all other fruits of righteousness. Unbelievers are exhorted to trust in the crucified Christ, and believers exhorted to a closer embrace of Christ in faith,[647] because of the revelation of His saving work, as predicted in the Old Testament, grounded in His substitutionary death, and producing justification and sanctification for those in union with Him (John 19:34-37). Men should follow the pattern of a believing response to the Divine saving self-revelation in the crucifixion and

---

640 The πιστεύσητε of John 14:29 is a specific and deeper faith in Christ as all He has revealed Himself to be in John 14, specifically in Christ as the soon to be crucified and ascended Redeemer who would send the Spirit, and come again.

641 The πιστεύετε, both the indicative and the imperative, are in the present tense. As the disciples were already believing in God, so they were to believe ever the more deeply in Christ as His saving work on their behalf was revealed to them in the Word and fulfilled in history.

642 "[T]he Greek perichōrēsis (περιχώρησις), or emperichōrēsis . . . [is] used as a synonym of . . . circumincessio: circumincession or coinherence. . . . Circumincessio refers primarily to the coinherence of the persons of the Trinity in the divine essence and in each other, but it can also indicate the coinherence of Christ's divine and human natures in their communion or personal union. (pgs. 67-68, Dictionary of Latin and Greek Theological Terms: Drawn Principally from Protestant Scholastic Theology, Richard A. Muller. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Books, 1985). The fact that the fulness of the Godhead is in the Theanthropos is the natural consequence in salvation-history of the ontological trinitarian circumincession.

643 The question "Believest thou not[?]" (οὐ πιστεύεις) of 14:10 expects a positive answer. Note that 14:11 subordinates belief based on Christ's miracles to belief based on His Word.

644 The disciples already had a perfect tense faith (πεπιστεύκατε ὅτι ἐγὼ παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐξῆλθον, John 16:27), one which began at the moment of their regeneration and which had abiding results.

645 νῦν . . . πιστεύομεν ὅτι ἀπὸ Θεοῦ ἐξῆλθες.

646 Ἄρτι πιστεύετε; ἰδού, ἔρχεται ὥρα καὶ νῦν ἐλήλυθεν, ἵνα σκορπισθῆτε ἕκαστος εἰς τὰ ἴδια, καὶ ἐμὲ μόνον ἀφῆτε. Their faith was deeper, but it still was far weaker than it should have been.

647 πιστεύσητε, John 19:35. The audience of the "that ye might believe" is the same as the audience of the gospel of John as a whole, 20:30-31.

resurrection by entrusting themselves to Christ as their own Lord and God (John 20:28-31) and becoming people who are believingly faithful (John 20:27). Such a response of faith appeared in the Apostle John when, in light of the empty tomb, he "saw, and believed" (John 20:8), and in the Apostle Thomas when he saw and believed (John 20:29)[648] and was consequently no longer on the path to faithlessness, but was believing (John 20:27, 25), although in truth "blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed" (John 20:29).[649] All believers are in such a state of blessedness, for they have come to saving faith in the crucified and resurrected Christ[650] and have consequently become believing and faithful people. The record of Thomas's response of faith to the crucified and resurrected Son of God as Redeemer, Lord, and God, contained as it is within the climax of the Gospel of John in chapter twenty,[651] is set forth as a pattern for all men—those who are unconverted need to make a comparable faith response in Christ to enter into life, and those who are already converted need to continue to embrace Christ in faith ever the more fully, that they might experientially possess spiritual life in an ever [648] Οτι ἑώρακας με, Θωμᾶ, πεπίστευκας.

---

[649] By means of Christ's exhortation to Thomas to not become faithless and unbelieving, but faithful and believing (μὴ γίνου ἄπιστος, ἀλλὰ πιστός, John 20:27), accompanied by His effectual grace and power, Thomas was brought into a state of believing, having passed out of his position as one on the road to faithlessness to a state of faith and consequent faithfulness (πεπίστευκας, 20:29, so that Thomas was now πιστός, not one on the path to ἄπιστος, 20:27). John 20:27 contains the only references to the adjectives πιστός and ἄπιστος in the Gospel; the noun πίστις does not appear in John's Gospel. A comparison with the Johannine epistles and Revelation, supported also by the context of John 20, indicates that the emphasis of πιστός/ἄπιστος in John 20:27 is faithfulness (1 John 1:9; 3 John 1:5; Revelation 1:5; 2:10, 13; 3:14; 17:14; 19:11; 21:5; 22:6 & Revelation 21:8) although, of course, such faithfulness is impossible without faith (3 John 5; Revelation 2:10, 13; 17:14; 21:8). Thomas is exhorted to embrace the truth of the resurrection, with all that it involves about the Person and Office of Christ, and consequently become one who is faithful, not faithless (note the present imperative in μὴ γίνου ἄπιστος, ἀλλὰ πιστός; cf. γίνου πιστὸς ἄχρι θανάτου, Revelation 2:10, and the discussion on pgs.121ff. of A Grammar of New Testament Greek, vol. 1, J. H. Moulton). As Christ's exhortation is accompanied by His Almighty power, Thomas does indeed respond in faith to Christ's self-revelation, confess Him as Lord and God, and become one who is believing and faithful (πεπίστευκας, 20:29). The believing response in the Apostle Thomas is a paradigm of the faith of the normal Christian, the one who has not seen, and yet has believed, and so is blessed (μακάριοι οἱ μὴ ἰδόντες, καὶ πιστεύσαντες, John 20:29); such a believing response is the purpose of the Gospel (John 20:30-31).

[650] Thomas's faith-response to the revelation of Christ is set forth as a pattern by John for the response of faith in the conversion of the lost and for the continuing faith-response to greater revelations of the Person and work of Christ by the Christian, although, in light of 1 Corinthians 15, the specific doubt about the bodily resurrection of Christ by Thomas is not possible for the child of God in the fully inaugurated dispensation of grace as it was for the disciples in the pre-resurrection and ascension period. Indeed, John 20, in its context, clearly teaches that rejecting the resurrection is an act of the unregenerate, and Christ prevents Thomas from reaching that point through His command, accompanied by His effectual grace, in 20:27.

[651] For a helpful outline of John's Gospel, its themes, purpose, and plan, see "The Purpose of the Fourth Gospel, Part I" and "The Plan of the Fourth Gospel, Part II," by W. H. Griffith Thomas, Bibliotheca Sacra 125:499 (July 1968) 254-263 & 125:500 (October 1968) 313-324.

higher degree, such earthly spiritual life being a sweet foretaste of the blessed fulness of life in the coming eschatological glory. John's Gospel is written "that ye might believe[652] that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing[653] ye might have life through his name" (John 20:31). The revelation of the glory and salvation of Christ and God through the signs recorded in the Gospel are written so that people might come to initial saving faith, and that those who are believers might through a continuing and ever deeper entrustment of themselves to Christ experientially possess a greater fulness of life in all its senses—that is, "that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly" (John 10:10)—for life is not bare existence, or simply a future state of joy instead of pain, but knowing the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom He has sent (John 17:3). It is impossible for the unbeliever to possess any saving knowledge of God and Christ, while all believers possess such cognitive and experiential knowledge, but the believer's knowledge, and thus his experience of spiritual and eternal life, can be deepened through repeated, stronger, and fuller responses to the revelation of his God and Savior in the Word.

The Apostle John similarly taught in his first epistle that unbelievers are to come to faith in Christ and, through the receipt of a new nature, become people of love who also are to exercise particular acts of faith in Christ (1 John 3:23),[654] while believers, those who have exercised saving faith and become believing ones,[655] should, by obtaining assurance of their salvation, believe more deeply. Their growth in faith is associated with their disbelief in false teachers (1 John 4:1)[656] because of the failure of such teachers to fit the criteria set forth by the Apostolic faith in the Word (1 John 4:1-6). Concluding his epistle, John stated: "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on

---

652 ἵνα πιστεύσητε, "that ye might come to initial saving faith in Christ," the first purpose of the Gospel of John, a fact supported by the aorist tense verb. (The aorist, found in the Textus Receptus and 99.5% of Greek MSS, is indubitably the correct reading.)

653 ἵνα πιστεύοντες ζωὴν ἔχητε ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι αὐτοῦ, "that you might through continuing deeper and fuller entrusting of and surrender to Christ, be having life in ever greater spiritual fulness through Christ's name," the second purpose of the Gospel of John, a fact supported by the present tense verbs.

654 πιστεύσωμεν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, leading to continuing love, a fruit of regeneration (ἀγαπῶμεν ἀλλήλους). The first person plural "we should believe," and the fact that the audience of 1 John is believers, indicates that the πιστεύσωμεν is not limited to the conversion of the unbeliever. God also commands the regenerate to exercise particular acts of faith in Christ.

655 1 John 4:16; 5:1, 5, 10, 13; ἡμεῖς ἐγνώκαμεν καὶ πεπιστεύκαμεν τὴν ἀγάπην ἣν ἔχει ὁ Θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν, through which the Christian now is ὁ πιστεύων, 1 John 5:1, 5, 10, 13, while the unbeliever is ὁ μὴ πιστεύων because οὐ πεπίστευκεν, 5:10. Those who enter into perfect tense faith possess present tense faith.

656 μὴ παντὶ πνεύματι πιστεύετε.

the name of the Son of God" (1 John 5:13).[657] The verse indicates that John writes his epistle to those who are believers[658] in the Son of God. He wants them to enjoy the knowledge that they currently possess eternal life.[659] By possessing assurance, and growing in their assurance of their personal salvation, they will believe the more deeply and exercise ever greater faith in the Son of God,[660] resulting in full joy (1 John 1:4) and holy living (1 John 2:1).

In agreement with the teaching of the Old Testament,[661] John makes it clear that communion with the Father and the Son by the Spirit through the revelation of the Triune God in His ontology and economy to His beloved people will result in ever greater degrees of Christ-conformity in the ever more deeply believing believer. The saints are the possessors of a real relationship with, sharing in, association and fellowship with[662] Jehovah; they can say: "truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ" (1 John 1:3). The saint who is right with God has Christ's promise: "I will come

---

657 Ταῦτα ἔγραψα ὑμῖν τοῖς πιστεύουσιν εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἵνα εἰδῆτε ὅτι ζωὴν ἔχετε αἰώνιον, καὶ ἵνα πιστεύητε εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

658 τοῖς πιστεύουσιν.

659 εἰδῆτε ὅτι ζωὴν ἔχετε αἰώνιον. Since εἰδῆτε is from οἶδα the perfect functions as does the present ἔχετε. It is unfortunate that the critical Greek New Testament follows a tiny minority of Greek MSS to corrupt both the purpose statement of 1 John in 5:13 and the purpose statement of the Gospel of John (20:31).

660 ἵνα πιστεύητε εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

661 Moses knew the value of greater experiential knowledge of God and of the holy graces that flowed from such knowledge, and consequently prayed in Exodus 33:13 that because he had found grace, the Jehovah of the Theophany, the eternal Son of God (John 1:18), would reveal Himself to him, that he might have the more grace, based on Jehovah's redeeming covenants with His people: וּרְאֵ֣ה כִֽי־עַמְּךָ֣ הַגּ֣וֹי הַזֶּ֑ה׃ וְעַתָּ֗ה אִם־נָ֤א מָצָ֙אתִי֙ חֵ֣ן בְּעֵינֶ֔יךָ הוֹדִ֥עֵנִי נָ֖א אֶת־דְּרָכֶ֑ךָ וְאֵדָ֣עֲךָ֔ לְמַ֥עַן אֶמְצָא־חֵ֖ן בְּעֵינֶ֑יךָ "Now therefore, I pray thee, if I have found grace in thy sight, shew me now thy way, that I may know thee, that I may find grace in thy sight: and consider that this nation is thy people." The presence of experiential knowledge and communion in the text was recognized by the LXX translator (although the last clause of the verse is mistranslated): εἰ οὖν εὕρηκα χάριν ἐναντίον σου, ἐμφάνισόν μοι σεαυτόν· γνωστῶς ἴδω σε, ὅπως ἂν ὦ εὑρηκὼς χάριν ἐναντίον σου, καὶ ἵνα γνῶ ὅτι λαός σου τὸ ἔθνος τὸ μέγα τοῦτο. "If then I have found favour in thy sight, reveal thyself to me, that I may evidently see thee; that I may find favour in thy sight, and that I may know that this great nation is thy people."

David recorded the Messiah's promise to His Father that as the Risen Redeemer He would reveal the Father to His people after His crucifixion and resurrection: "I will declare thy name unto my brethren: in the midst of the congregation will I praise thee." אֲסַפְּרָ֣ה שִׁמְךָ֣ לְאֶחָ֑י בְּת֖וֹךְ קָהָ֣ל אֲהַלְלֶֽךָּ׃ Psalm 22:22, cf. 22:1-21 & Hebrews 2:12, Ἀπαγγελῶ τὸ ὄνομά σου τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς μου, ἐν μέσῳ ἐκκλησίας ὑμνήσω σε, "I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee."

The intertestamental Jews also knew that the Lord revealed Himself to those who believed in Him: Ἀγαπήσατε δικαιοσύνην, οἱ κρίνοντες τὴν γῆν, φρονήσατε περὶ τοῦ κυρίου ἐν ἀγαθότητι καὶ ἐν ἁπλότητι καρδίας ζητήσατε αὐτόν. ὅτι εὑρίσκεται τοῖς μὴ πειράζουσιν αὐτόν, ἐμφανίζεται δὲ τοῖς μὴ ἀπιστοῦσιν αὐτῷ. "Love righteousness, ye that be judges of the earth: think of the Lord with a good heart, and in simplicity of heart seek him. For he will be found of them that tempt him not; and manifests himself to such as are not disbelieving in him" (Wisdom 1:1-2).

662 That is, κοινωνία.

in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me" (Revelation 3:20).[663] The Lord Jesus does not leave His purchased ones alone, but promises: "I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you" (John 14:18).[664] They love Christ and keep His commandments, and are those whom the Son and His Father love, and to whom they manifest themselves in a manner of which the unconverted world can know nothing, so that the Divine Persons come to dwell in and with them, that their closeness and sweet fellowship might grow the more as the Triune Presence is the more manifest. The Lord Jesus explained:

> He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. Judas saith unto him, not Iscariot, Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world? Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.[665]

As their Theanthropic Mediator, Christ makes known to His people by the Holy Spirit the revelation the Father gave Him for them.[666] Through the Spirit and mediated by the Son, they have the Father's glory revealed to them, and are transformed by this vision of God's glory and brought into ever closer union with the Triune God through the God-Man. Such a revelation of the Father was the eternal Divine purpose on the heart of God, as appears in the covenant of redemption among the Divine Persons and the covenant of grace[667] through which the Father would save the elect by the Son through the Spirit, for 663 Revelation 3:20 has absolutely nothing to do with an unsaved person asking Jesus to come into his heart in order to be saved. The unregenerate need to repent and believe, not ask Jesus to come into their hearts.

---

664 οὐκ ἀφήσω ὑμᾶς ὀρφανούς· ἔρχομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς. The Lord Jesus will not leave His own "without the aid and comfort of one who serves as associate and friend, orphaned" (BDAG on ὀρφανός; cf. KJV margin, "comfortless: or, orphans.")

665 John 14:21-23, ὁ ἔχων τὰς ἐντολάς μου καὶ τηρῶν αὐτάς, ἐκεῖνός ἐστιν ὁ ἀγαπῶν με· ὁ δὲ ἀγαπῶν με, ἀγαπηθήσεται ὑπὸ τοῦ πατρός μου· καὶ ἐγὼ ἀγαπήσω αὐτόν, καὶ ἐμφανίσω αὐτῷ ἐμαυτόν. λέγει αὐτῷ Ἰούδας, οὐχ ὁ Ἰσκαριώτης, Κύριε, τί γέγονεν ὅτι ἡμῖν μέλλεις ἐμφανίζειν σεαυτόν, καὶ οὐχὶ τῷ κόσμῳ; ἀπεκρίθη ὁ Ἰησοῦς καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ, Ἐάν τις ἀγαπᾷ με, τὸν λόγον μου τηρήσει, καὶ ὁ πατήρ μου ἀγαπήσει αὐτόν, καὶ πρὸς αὐτὸν ἐλευσόμεθα, καὶ μονὴν παρ᾽ αὐτῷ ποιήσομεν. The verb ἐμφανίζω is to "lay open to view, make visible . . . to provide information, make clear, explain, inform, make a report . . . of matters that transcend physical sight or mere verbal statement reveal, make known . . . ἐμφανίσω αὐτῷ ἐμαυτόν I will reveal myself to that person J 14:21" (BDAG). Compare the use of ἐμφανίζω in Exodus 33:13 (LXX) and the evidence of inter-testamental Judaism in the use in Wisdom 1:2.

666 John 15:15; 16:13-14, "[A]ll things that I [Christ] have heard of my Father I have made known unto you. . . . [T]he Spirit of truth . . . shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you," πάντα ἃ ἤκουσα παρὰ τοῦ πατρός μου ἐγνώρισα ὑμῖν. . . . τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς ἀληθείας . . . ἐκεῖνος ἐμὲ δοξάσει, ὅτι ἐκ τοῦ ἐμοῦ λήψεται, καὶ ἀναγγελεῖ ὑμῖν. Note that the order of the working in the economic Trinity reflects the eternal order in the ontological Trinity; the Son who is eternally begotten by the Father is, in time, sent by the Father and is the Agent for the revelation of the Father, and the Holy Spirit, who eternally proceeds from the Father and the Son as from a single principle, is in time sent by the Father and the Son to reveal to the saints what has been given by the Father to the God-Man Mediator. Compare also Matthew 11:27; Luke 10:22; John 1:18; 14:6-9.

667 The covenant of redemption or pactum salutis is "the pretemporal, intratrinitarian agreement of the Father and the Son concerning the covenant of grace and its ratification in and through the work of the Son this revelation of God, which takes place through the Word, is at the heart of what is involved in the possession of eternal life:

> And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent. . . . I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou gavest me out of the world: thine they were, and thou gavest them me; and they have kept thy word. . . . For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me. . . . I have given them thy word . . . sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth. . . . And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me. Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world. O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee: but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me. And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them. [668] incarnate. The Son covenants with the Father, in the unity of the Godhead, to be the temporal sponsor of the Father's testamentum in and through the work of the Mediator. In that work, the Son fulfills his sponsio or fideiussio, i.e., his guarantee of payment of the debt of sin in ratification of the Father's testamentum. . . . [T]he idea of the pactum salutis is to emphasize the eternal, inviolable, and trinitarian foundation of the temporal foedus gratiae much in the way that the eternal decree underlies and guarantees the ordo salutis. . . . [The] foedus gratiae [or] covenant of grace; also foedus gratiae gratuitum: gracious or graciously given covenant of grace; and foedus gratiae evangelicum: covenant of grace concerning the gospel or evangelical covenant of grace; considered, first, as a foedus monopleuron, or one-sided covenant, the covenant of grace is the pact (pactum, pactio) made by God beginning with the protevangelium, confirmed and revealed more fully in Abraham, and finally fulfilled in Christ. It is a foedus monopleuron because it stands as a gracious promise of salvation given to fallen man apart from any consideration of man's ability to respond to it or fulfill it and apart from any human initiative. Human beings are drawn into covenant by the grace of God alone. Once they enter covenant, however, and become parties to the divine offer of salvation, they take on responsibilities, under the covenant, before God. The foedus gratiae, therefore, also appears as a mutual pact and agreement between God and man, a foedus dipleuron" (pgs. 120-121, 217*, Dictionary of Latin and Greek Theological Terms*, Richard Muller).

---

It should be noted that recognition of the fact that the ideas of a covenant of redemption and covenant of grace have Scriptural support does not deny the clear Biblical covenantal distinctions affirmed by classical dispensationalism, nor does the use of such a terminology constitute either an endorsement of Reformed covenant theology or a rejection of dispensationalism, any more than the acceptance of the covenant of redemption and of grace by Lewis Sperry Chafer constitutes a repudiation of his own theological system by that outstanding dispensationalist (cf. pg. 42, vol. 1, pgs. 163-165, 232, vol. 4, etc., Systematic Theology, Chafer).

668 John 17:3, 6, 8, 14, 17, 22-26. αὕτη δὲ ἐστιν ἡ αἰώνιος ζωή, ἵνα γινώσκωσί σε τὸν μόνον ἀληθινὸν Θεόν, καὶ ὃν ἀπέστειλας Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν. . . . ἐφανέρωσά σου τὸ ὄνομα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις οὓς δέδωκάς μοι ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου· σοὶ ἦσαν, καὶ ἐμοὶ αὐτοὺς δέδωκας· καὶ τὸν λόγον σου τετηρήκασι. . . . ὅτι τὰ ῥήματα ἃ δέδωκάς μοι, δέδωκα αὐτοῖς· καὶ αὐτοὶ ἔλαβον, καὶ ἔγνωσαν ἀληθῶς ὅτι παρὰ σοῦ ἐξῆλθον, καὶ ἐπίστευσαν ὅτι σύ με ἀπέστειλας. . . . ἐγὼ δέδωκα αὐτοῖς τὸν λόγον σου . . . ἁγίασον αὐτοὺς ἐν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ σου· ὁ λόγος ὁ σὸς ἀλήθεια ἐστι. . . . καὶ ἐγὼ τὴν δόξαν ἣν δέδωκάς μοι, δέδωκα αὐτοῖς, ἵνα ὦσιν ἕν, καθὼς ἡμεῖς ἕν ἐσμεν. ἐγὼ ἐν αὐτοῖς, καὶ σὺ ἐν ἐμοί, ἵνα ὦσι τετελειωμένοι εἰς ἕν, καὶ ἵνα γινώσκῃ ὁ κόσμος ὅτι σύ με ἀπέστειλας, καὶ ἠγάπησας αὐτούς, καθὼς ἐμὲ ἠγάπησας. πάτερ, οὓς δέδωκάς μοι, θέλω ἵνα ὅπου εἰμὶ ἐγώ, κἀκεῖνοι ὦσι μετ᾽ ἐμοῦ· ἵνα θεωρῶσι τὴν δόξαν τὴν ἐμήν, ἣν ἔδωκάς μοι, ὅτι ἠγάπησάς με πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου. πάτερ δίκαιε, καὶ ὁ κόσμος σε οὐκ ἔγνω, ἐγὼ δέ σε ἔγνων, καὶ οὗτοι ἔγνωσαν ὅτι σύ με ἀπέστειλας· καὶ ἐγνώρισα αὐτοῖς τὸ ὄνομά σου, καὶ γνωρίσω· ἵνα ἡ ἀγάπη, ἣν ἠγάπησας με, ἐν αὐτοῖς ᾖ, κἀγὼ ἐν αὐτοῖς.

The supernatural revelation and manifestation of God's name, character, and glory through Christ by the Spirit in the Scriptures to the saints results in their sanctification, in a greater degree of God's presence in and with them, and in their possession and manifestation of all the communicable Divine attributes, so that as they are filled with the Divine presence they are also filled with Divine love and all other holy attributes, including faith and faithfulness.

Both the Old and New Testaments teach that the just—those who receive the imputed righteousness of Jesus Christ, and who consequently have lives characterized by justice—will live. They possess spiritual life and fellowship with God on earth and are certain of eternal life in Christ's everlasting kingdom. This life came to them through the instrumentality of faith. At the moment they believingly embraced Christ, they were justified. Their Christian growth is associated with greater and stronger entrustings of themselves to the Lord Jesus in faith as He draws closer to them and they draw closer to Him. In this manner their spiritual life is carried on by faith until the completion of their earthly pilgrimage and their entry into that glorious realm of sight where faith and hope are done away and charity only remains.

Applications of the Truth that the Just Shall Live by Faith

Do you have saving faith? If not, why, oh unbeliever, will you trust in anything or anyone other than the Triune Jehovah, who loved you and sent His Son to die for your sins? Is not hope in men in vain? Why will you perish? For you certainly will do so. There is not the slightest doubt that you will be eternally damned unless you repent of your sins and come to the Lord Jesus Christ in saving faith. Turn from any confidence in works, sacraments, self-righteousness, outward decisions such as the repetition of a "sinner's prayer," and all else, to trust only in the all-sufficient merit of the atoning death of the Son of God. Surrender to Christ as Lord. Roll your full persuasion and confidence upon Him and His gospel promises. He will not fail you, nor ever cast you out. He will effectually deliver you from the penalty, power, and presence of sin, and keep you eternally secure from the moment of your regeneration to all eternity future, if you will, enabled by His grace, come to Him.

Saving faith is not just mental assent, but whole-souled entrustment of Christ as both Lord and Savior, a product of supernatural grace working in the heart. Consequently, all who have truly embraced Christ in faith will be faithful. Nobody without faithfulness has true saving faith. Saving faith always results in obedience, and faith without works is dead. If, after your professed conversion, you are still like the heathen who stayed in Jericho rather than Rahab, or still like the idolators of Ur rather than like Abraham, your eternal destiny will be the same fire and brimstone which those unconverted pagan wretches have been hopelessly enduring for the last three thousand years and more. Abraham was not a sinless man after his conversion (e. g., Genesis 12:10-13), but he was unquestionably a changed man. The new birth does not bring sinless perfection, but it always brings genuine spiritual life. The New Covenant includes both the Divine promise, "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more" and the equally sure Divine promise, "I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people" (Hebrews 8:10-12). If you do not have the law written in your mind and heart, your sins have not been remitted. If you are still a proud and rebellious man (Habakkuk 2:4a), your problem is not that you have not entered into the Higher Life or into a Second Blessing, but that you have never become a just man by means of genuine faith (Habakkuk 2:4b). All the saints, not an elite minority of them only, are just, and not by imputed only, but also by imparted righteousness. The Bible never teachs that some Christians are entirely devoid of spiritual life because they have failed to make a post-conversion faith-decision to appropriate sanctification. Rather, Scripture teaches that all believers have spiritual life and the kernel from which all spiritual blessings, including not justification only, but also sanctification, progressively unfold themselves in ever-greater fulness and glory. There is no evidence in either the Old or New Testaments that some saved people do not live by faith.[669] Can the believer's faith fail him in particular trials? Yes, certainly. Can he fall into spiritual declensions and periods in which his faith is growing weaker? Sadly, the answer is an unequivocal affirmative. However, notwithstanding all such concessions, it is nevertheless those only who are just who will live, and will do so because they exercised saving faith, entrusting themselves to Jesus Christ as both Lord and Savior, at the moment of their justification and regeneration. Have you truly come to Jesus Christ?

---

669 That is, the Higher Life view of Habakkuk 2:4 and its New Testament quotations, as set forth by William Boardman and others (cf. Hannah W. Smith's article in the Friends Review of 1867, reproduced in the entry for February 18 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter), must be reckoned eisegesis, not exegesis:

> "The just shall live by faith." The just shall be made alive first, and afterwards learn to live by faith. The just shall be justified before God first, and afterwards learn the way to become just also in heart and life, by faith. . . . [This is the] two-fold significance of the text, illustrated by its suggestion the first and second time in [Luther's] heart, as by a celesial voice within, with the interval of years between the two, and meeting in each case a want so different[.] (pg. 191, The Higher Christian Life, W. E. Boardman. New York: Sheldon & Co., 1859. Italics found in original.)

Boardman's "afterwards" disjunction that leaves some Christians, those who have not yet discovered his Higher Life theology, without any spiritual growth, has no support whatsoever in the New Testament doctrine of the just living by faith, and his historical reconstruction of Luther's life is most questionable.

Furthermore, one who does not manifest the obedience of faith should neither be self-assured, nor be assured by others, that he has indeed passed from death to life. Believers have the blessed possibility and privilege of being assured of their salvation (1 John 5:13), but only those who manifest the changes evident in 1 John are truly believers. Christian personal workers should follow the pattern of Jesus Christ, who told new converts, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed" (John 8:30-32). Someone who has newly professed conversion should not be given assurance because he has repeated a sinner's prayer or made an outward profession. While it is most proper to rejoice that someone has made such a decision, personal workers should explain that true conversion results in a lifestyle of obedience to Jesus Christ, and explaining what Scripture sets forth as the faithfulness that pertains to the just, they should allow the Holy Spirit to give assurance. Indeed, neither one with a merely outward profession, nor a true Christian who is backslidden and spiritually decaying, should expect to have Biblical assurance of salvation. Also, before a backslidden Christian can possess Biblical assurance, he needs to repent and have an upright heart before the Lord restored.

On the other hand, believers who do manifest the obedience of faith should not doubt their salvation. God wants His faithful people to joyfully possess an assured salvation, and a lack of assurance is a great hinderance to the further growth of Christian faith and to holy living (1 John 1:4; 2:1; 5:13c). Believer, be assured of your salvation, so that you may more deeply believe in Christ! It is not a secondary or a little thing for you to have assurance. It is the will of God. God has changed you, and His Spirit testifies inwardly to you that you are a child of God. Will you supress and deny God's testimony and His work in you? What sort of ingratitude and unreasonableness is this? God has specifically, and in love, "written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God" (1 John 5:13). Receive His promise—be assured of your salvation—and go on in your Christian walk from strength to strength.

The exercise of saving faith is a definite, conscious, willful action that takes place at a particular moment of a person's life. One who has, by grace, turned with all his heart and soul to Jesus Christ and been born again would in all but the most extraordinary of situations be able to clearly testify to and explain his conversion. The idea, often set forth by advocates of Reformed theology, that one can have "always believed,"[670] so that

---

670 E. g.: "We must insist, with . . . the Reformed confessions . . . that . . . it is intolerable cruelty to demand of people a dramatic conversion experience before they can be assured of their salvation. Such obstacles may not be placed before believers who grew up in the church, who were taught to pray on their mother's knee, who were catechized and who therefore do not know a time when they did not believe in someone who has grown up under Christian influences, or who has had baptismal water applied to him in his infancy, need never consciously come to a point of conversion, is an extremely dangerous, indeed, a soul-damning heresy. Ephesians 2:1-3 states: "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins; wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience: among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others." Ephesians was written to the Christian congregation at Ephesus (Ephesians 1:1), which, of course, included parents who had infants and children (6:1). The children of Christians, like everyone else, are dead in their sins, under the power of the devil, and fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, until they are made alive at the moment they are born again by grace through faith in Christ (2:8-9). Since infants have "no knowledge between good and evil,"[671] they do not conduct themselves "in the lusts of [their] flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind." Since all those made alive in Christ at one time conducted themselves in the lusts of the flesh and of the mind, people—including those with Christian parents—are only born again after they have reached an age where they are able to so conduct themselves, and consciously repent and believe the gospel. Nobody has always been a Christian. The only people who are made alive in Christ are those who have been consciously lost, walking in sin, and have subsequently repented and believed.[672] Conversion is the most important event that can take place in the life of any individual. One does not repent by accident. A person who has experienced the stupendous change associated with conversion should be able to describe when and how it took place.

How truly "blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered." How truly "blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin" (Romans 4:7-8)! Oh Christian, marvel in the blessedness of the forgiveness of your sins. They were innumerable, and each of them an infinite evil, but now they are all gone. You were Christ. . . . Nor may it be demanded on the mission field. . . . True conversion is a lifelong process, where the child of God daily turns from sin to God[.] . . . This is the Reformed doctrine of conversion as set forth in the Heidelberg Catechism" (pgs. 83-84, "The Notion of Preparatory Grace in the Puritans," Martyn McGeown. Protestant Reformed Theological Journal 41:1 (November 2007) 58-84). While such an idea may indeed be the teaching of the Heidelberg Catechism, it is certainly not the teaching of the Bible.

---

671 Deuteronomy 1:39; Isaiah 7:16; Jonah 4:11; Romans 9:11.

672 This fact is supported not only by the pattern of Old and New Testament conversion, but also by the fact that saving faith, as seen in the perfect tense uses of pisteuo, "to believe," contain within them the idea of a snapshot action—the point of conversion—with results that continue. One must come to Christ with an aorist, point-action of faith before one can have a perfect tense belief in the Lord Jesus Christ.

black, but Christ has made you white. You were pressing down to hell under an intolerable weight of transgression, but Jesus Christ has forever removed your load. You were in bondage, but Christ has made you free. You were certain of everlasting torment, but Christ endured all that torment for you, so that you might enter into inconceivable and eternal blessedness. And not only so, but the Lord Jesus has brought you into an intimate union with Himself, and with God through Him. Say to yourself, "How can it be that I have been brought into union with Jesus Christ—that infinitely lovely and precious One? Oh, what am I, that the God of glory, the Creator of the heaven and earth, God the Father, Son, and Spirit, would reveal Himself to me—to me, who would not, of myself, take even the smallest step towards Him! And not reveal Himself only, but in Christ suffer the shame, the bitterness, and the torment of the cross, to bring my wretched soul to Himself!" Yes, Christian, because of God's mere grace alone—not of yourself, not of your works, not of your striving, not of your preparation for grace, not of anything you ever did, have done, or will do, you have been brought into union with the Lord Jesus Christ. How you ought to treasure the fact of this union and glory in Him with whom you have been united! How you ought to esteem and love Jesus Christ, the blessed and ever-overflowing fount of all spiritual treasures, graces, and blessings that you have ever received, or ever will receive, to all eternity! Do you do so?

Glory, then, not in your own righteousness, but in Christ and His righteousness. All your righteousnesses are filthy rags, and all holiness imparted to you in sanctification is only and entirely a product of God's grace, power, and love. Indeed, you need Christ to sanctify the iniquity clinging to your very holiest things (Exodus 28:38). You have nothing to glory in yourself. The evidential just character of the redeemed is solely a product of Divine grace and power, and your faith is not a meritorious instrument, but simply the means through which you embrace God and receive all freely from Him. Indeed, the more inward holiness God creates within you, the more you will see how wretched, vile and hateful you really are, and with the greater strength you will cleave to Christ and His righteousness only as your perfect standing before God. Yet notwithstanding all your unworthiness, the Lord Jehovah says to you: "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the LORD, and their righteousness is of me, saith the LORD" (Isaiah 54:17). Have you received His priceless righteousness "without money and without price" (Isaiah 55:1)? Then hearken to the Scripture: "I will greatly rejoice in the LORD, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels" (Isaiah 61:10). Oh blessed imputed righteousness of Christ, the glory and the ground of exceedingly great rejoicing for the saints of all ages from the foundation of the world to today, the trust of all the spiritual sons of Abraham from the time of the conversion of that abominable idolator until today, when it becomes the perfect standing for such wretched sinners as you are!

You should earnestly strive to have God's view of your own fleshly tendency towards self-righteousness—seek to see it as the abominable and detestable wickedness that God considers it. Also recognize the hateful and abominable character of all false religions of works-righteousness, whether Romanism, Quakerism, cults such as the Watchtower or Seventh Day Adventism, or all other systems of salvation by works and merit. Be astonished, be horribly afraid, be overwhelmed with indignation that any would dare to exalt his own righteousness against the righteousness of the infinite Jehovah. What rebellion, what blasphemy is this! And, alas, oh God, what is this tendency to such self-exaltation that I see within my own fleshly heart! Purge me, oh God, and I will be clean—wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

Recognize that it is God's blessed decree that you actually grow increasingly righteous over the course of your earthly pilgrimage, and the consummation of that creative work of righteousness is certain in the coming kingdom. He has covenanted to perform that work in you by His own Almighty power, the same power that created the world, raised Christ from the dead, and regenerated you. Both the initial bestowal of faith, and the increase of faith, are supernatural gifts from God, not autonomous products of your will, and the Lord has committed Himself to work in you both to will and do of His good pleasure until the day of Jesus Christ. Therefore, with confidence pursue the means of sanctification, recognizing that it is by such means that God will transform you. Passionately treasure the Word. Read it, study it, memorize it, meditate upon it, hear it preached, discuss it with others. Reject all theologies of sanctification that deny that God produces real inward holiness within His people. Indwelling sin is not merely to be counteracted, but progressively eradicated; inward holiness is not just to be maintained, but to grow. You are crucified with Christ—you are legally dead to sin, and its dominion has been shattered. Then reckon it to be so, and strengthened by the Spirit, put to death the remnants of indwelling sin. At the moment of your regeneration, you overcame the world—manifest that victory through ever greater conquests and desolations of your already defeated foe. Settle for nothing less than what God has promised. Recognize, nevertheless, that the fulness of perfect holiness will not be obtained short of your entrance into eternal rest. How this fact should make you treasure heaven! For the eternal dwelling of the redeemed is not just a place of peace, happiness, and freedom from pain, but of holiness—blessed, perfect, desirable, sweet, and glorious holiness—the dwelling of that Holy One who makes it so. There you will see your Jesus, and be like Him, seeing Him as He is. There you will be pure, even as He is pure. There you will be fully embraced by and enter into the fellowship of the eternal Trinitarian love. There you will enjoy, with all the purchased saints, fulness of communion with the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit for ever and ever and ever. Let your soul cry out, "Oh come, Lord Jesus—take me, and all thy purchased pilgrims, home to be with Thee! Or if it is not yet Thy appointed time to return, oh, how I long to be with Thee and see Thy face, not only by faith, but in full sight! When is it, oh my Father, oh my Redeemer, that I will be forever with Thee? Thou art all my hope, my joy, and the desire of my heart, now and for ever."

Furthermore, the propositional and practical elements of the faith are inextricably intertwined—faithfulness includes fidelity to both. The devils know doctrine, and a natural man can have a kind of unspiritual pleasure through an intellectual apprehension of the theological system of Scripture—a system that he, nevertheless, refuses to practice. Mere nature can also lead others, who hate the beauty and glory of the theological system of the Bible—which to hate is to despise the mind of Christ and the Wisdom of God—to the practice of a kind of merely natural morality. The saints must avoid both errors, and passionately embrace both the totality of the propositional revelation of Himself that their Father has commanded them to love with all their minds and the totality of the practical duties that are the necessary concomitants of true submissive assent to the Scriptural revelation. Is your faith genuine—unfeigned, and unhypocritical? Do you both believe and do? Do you earnestly contend for both propositions and praxis?

Since "whatsoever is not of faith is sin" (Romans 14:23), be sure that you can act out of faith in all that you do. Do not look for gray areas or take refuge in what is not clearly wrong, but "merely" doubtful. Take the higher ground. Practice only what is unquestionably right. Stay far away from any violation of Scripture, and consider very carefully the testimony of your conscience. You will, without any doubt, have to give an account to God one day. If you would, in the things that pertain merely to this life, take great pains that your gold, silver, and precious stones were not stolen and replaced with wood, hay, and stubble, how much the more ought you to take heed that you do not lose eternal treasures for the sake of some doubtful and fleeting temporal pleasure?

Do you believe? Then speak—open your mouth and preach the gospel! (2 Corinthians 4:8-13). Is not the Lamb who was slain worthy of a greater number casting their crowns before Him? If you believe, you will not keep silent. Those who believe in their hearts will confess Christ with their mouths. Does your testimony to your family, neighbors, and coworkers, evidence that you believe? Are you going house to house preaching repentance and faith, as the first century Christians were (Acts 20:20-21; 5:42)? Are you filling your local area with the gospel? What are you doing so that everyone in your area—and those even to the uttermost parts of the earth—hear the gospel of the Lord Jesus?

Do you speak, because of faith, against compromise, error, and false doctrine of all kinds, or do you allow leaven to spread unchecked and unwarned about? Do not deceive yourself into thinking that your silence, your refusal to follow the practice of Christ and the Apostles in specifically identifying, marking, warning about, and separating from all false teachers and false teaching is generosity, kindness, a friendly spirit, charitableness, or any other good thing. No, God's view of your silence is very different. His view is that you are a faithless rebel and a coward. If you would follow the Apostolic example, you will speak, because you believe. You will boldly, unashamedly, and purely set forth all the truth, without adding or taking away anything. That is living by faith—and that is true love.

All Christian ministry and service must be grounded in faith. Faithlessness will eliminate the blessing of Jehovah. Furthermore, your spiritual enemies are not merely natural, but supernatural—you have the world, the flesh, and the devil to fight, and you cannot overcome them on your own. How will you slay the indwelling lusts that, before your regeneration, held you in an unbreakable grip, without the strength of the Lord through faith? Do you think you will defeat the devil and his vast hosts of demons without taking to yourself the "shield of faith" (Ephesians 6:16)? How necessary it is to trust in the Lord your God in all situations—and also how sweet it is so to do! He is a sure and unfailing confidence. Do not fear, but place all your confidence in Him. He is a certain refuge, a strong rock, and a high tower. Men may, and will, fail, as will their devices, but the counsel of the Sovereign and Almighty One shall stand. Indeed, the righteous trust in the Lord—not in outward action only, in their inward disposition. Do you act like the righteous when times are easy, but abandon their Rock in times of trial? What, then, is this weakness of faith? Meditate upon the revelation of the character of God as the faithful God, as your own God in covenant with you, for He reveals Himself, and gives His people precious promises, to quicken and strengthen their trust in Him. He is a good Father, who gives abundantly to His own children out of His overflowing abundance. He will strengthen you in your weakness, strengthen your wavering faith, and fill you abundantly with His grace.

Trust, without doubting, that you have from your Father what you ask, and God will answer your prayers. His promises indicate His desire to hear and answer you: "And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive" (Matthew 21:22). His character is such that He will certainly fulfill His promises. Therefore, meet the conditions for answered prayer: 1.) Ask! "Ye have not because ye ask not" (James 4:2). You will not receive if you do not ask; therefore "ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full" (John 16:24). 2.) Ask in faith. This is impossible unless you have an upright heart. "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me" (Psalm 66:18). You cannot ask in faith if you are wilfully cherishing sin. If you are right with God, then you can always ask in faith for anything that God has promised you in His Word, for you can know without a doubt that all such promises are as certain as God's own self-testimony. Do you lack wisdom? "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him" (James 1:5). Are you being tempted? "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it" (1 Corinthians 10:13). Do you long for holiness? "[H]is divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust" (2 Peter 1:3-4). Furthermore, you are encouraged to pray about everything, since God "is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think" (Ephesians 3:20). When it is His will (2 Corinthians 12:9) to fulfill your request, your Father can give you faith for that need (James 5:15). Christian, do you come to your Father with confidence, or are you vacillating and doubting when you cry to Him? Do you even cry? Do you seek the Lord in prayer in such a manner as befits your deep duty and astonishing privilege of coming to Him?

Faith is the instrumentality through which God fills you with spiritual joy and peace, as well as other holy attributes (Romans 15:13). Saint of God, you have tasted that the Lord is good. You know that you possess a rich spiritual banquet that the world knows nothing of, and cannot even comprehend. Would you be filled with greater measures of this blessed joy and peace? Such sweet spiritual treasures are part of the glorious inheritance of life that those who are just receive by faith. Exercise your faith, so that it will grow! Moreover, do not just grit your teeth and seek to endure trials, but value them as occasions for the strengthening of faith. The "trial of your faith" is far more precious than "gold that perisheth," and the fact that the successful passage of such trials will bring "praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ" can bring you, believing, an anticipatory "joy unspeakable and full of glory" (1 Peter 1:3-9) even before the certainly coming final consummation of joy.

Since life in all its blessed fulness comes to those who entrust themselves to the Lord, and greater measures of life are found in those who more closely trust their God, how essential it is that you entrust yourself to Him! The worldly pleasures that the wicked prefer to God, that keep them from trusting in Him, will not last. These rebellious ones are living on borrowed time; life, even in its physical sense, is not promised to them. The physical, as well as the incomparably glorious spiritual delights, that will be partaken of forever in the New Jerusalem are inconceivably superior to anything possessed in this present time, but they will be shut out from them all. They chose to go from iniquity to iniquity, and wrath will fall upon them to the uttermost. In contrast, in the regenerate, spiritual life increases as they go from faith to faith. Therefore, by God's grace, grow in faith, for then you will receive greater measures of life from God. What a blessing that, instead of going, as by nature you would certainly have done, from iniquity to iniquity, you can go from faith to faith, receiving from the fulness of Christ grace for grace! What is there in this dying world that could be better than this? Eternal glory is but the consummation of that spiritual and eternal life you can possess, in growing measure, now. Do you treasure spiritual life as you ought? Are you increasing in your possession of this blessed life?

Do you wish for your faith to grow? John's Gospel teaches that your faith is strengthened and deepened through the exercise of believing receipt of greater revelations through the Word of the Triune God in His ontology and economy and through your response, enabled by grace, of fuller surrender to and entrusting of yourself to Him. Therefore, while unbelievers refuse, to their eternal ruin, to see the Lord Jesus in the Word and entrust themselves to Him at all, you must seek to see more and more of Christ and the entire Triune Godhead in the Word, and entrust yourself to Him in an ever greater way as the revelation of Him in the Scripture is illuminated to your soul, through the supernatural grace decreed by the Father for your good by Christ the Mediator through the applicatory work of God the Holy Spirit. See ever the more of the glory of the Lord Jesus' Divine Person. Wonder ever the more at the condescending love manifested in His incarnation. Meditate upon all the aspects of His glorious saving work. Think in amazement about His exercise of all the Divine attributes towards you for your good. Rejoice with exceeding joy at His exercise of all the attributes of His glorified human nature towards you for your good. Fill yourself up with these things. You will be worshipping and praising your Triune God through your precious Lord Jesus for them for all eternity.

Specifically:

1.) Passionately desire that God the Spirit will illumine to you the revelation of the Triune Jehovah, and of Christ the Blessed Mediator, in the Word. How necessary it is that God reveals Himself to you! Left to yourself, you are utterly unable to discover Him. You will not know whether to turn to the right hand or the left. Furthermore, your heart contains such corruption and wickedness within it that God would be perfectly just to immediately thrust you into the depths of hell, separated from His blessed face for all eternity. Is the infinite King of glory obliged to show Himself to such a worm? God forbid! Recognize that both the initial bestowal of faith upon you, and the increase of faith in its exercise in you, are supernatural gifts from God, not autonomous products of your fallen will, and look to the Lord to perform in you what you cannot perform yourself. Without the free, gracious, and sovereign work of the Spirit in revealing Christ to you, you will never find Him. How necessary it is, then, that God takes the initative and reveals Himself to your soul!

You certainly should have no such expectation of a gracious revelation, and you will not be looking to the Lord and seeking for God to reveal Himself to you in Christ, if you are not upright in heart—if you are wilfully choosing sin over Christ, you evidence that you do not desire a part in any of this glory, as you prefer your sinful abominations to that knowledge of and communion with God that is the greatest treasure of eternity.

2.) Diligently apply yourself to the reading, study, memorization of, and meditation on the Word, praying for the illumination of the Spirit, depending on His sovereign grace alone, hungering and thirsting after knowledge of God in Christ. The Bible is the very Word of God, the infallible, inerrant, revelatory speech of the Most High to man. It is a more sure Word than even the audible testimony of the Father to Christ as heard on the Mount of Transfiguration (2 Peter 1:16-21). It is the perfect, unbreakably authoritative revelation of the Father to you through Christ by the Spirit. Oh, the sureness, the power, the infinite value of the Scriptures! Here is a sure anchor for your faith. Here is pure knowledge of God. Here is a genuine revelation, each jot and tittle of which is more sure and more lasting than the heavens and the earth. Here is the spring from whence the waters of life flow. Here is the love-letter of the Most High to His blood-bought people. The Bible is the instrument that the Spirit uses to show God in Christ to those who cry out for knowledge of Him. Do you treat the Bible as the invaluable treasure that it is? Does your use of time reflect such a view of God's Word? What is your attitude when you read and study it? "[T]o this man will I look . . . saith the LORD . . . even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word" (Isaiah 66:2). Furthermore, read, study, memorize, and meditate upon the Word with the expectation that God will work. He has promised that if you draw nigh to Him, He will draw nigh to you. He both supernaturally produces initial saving faith and supernaturally strengthens faith through the instrumentality of the Word (Romans 10:17). If you hunger and thirst after Him, He will certainly satisfy your longings for Him and will sup with you, and you with Him—for He Himself, in His gracious love, has placed those desires within you. He will shine in your heart the light of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Seek, then, oh Christian—seek your God in His Word!

3.) Indeed, the believer should seek for the highest intellectual knowledge of Christ's Person, of his Triune God, and of the specific character of all their works. Careful, detailed, and taxing theological work and careful study contributes to, rather than detracts from, affective appreciation of God in Christ. Carelessness or disinterest in careful thought about God is not piety, but ungodliness. Do you love the truth represented by the Nicene homoousios? Do you love the truth represented by the Chalcedonian definition of Christ's Person and natures? Throughout John's Gospel, learning and understanding more about Christ led to greater faith in Him. Do you long to learn and understand more about the Lord Jesus Christ? While the intellectual apprehension of facts is not enough—commital to Him, based on those facts, must follow (John 2:23-3:3)—unknowing determinations of the will without knowledge are also insufficient (John 9:1-34 vs. 35-41).[673] The embrace of faith requires a properly known and apprehended object. Do you seek God with your mind, as well as your will and affections?

Furthermore, since the Biblical Christ is a real Person—the Creator and Redeemer of the world, and the only begotten Son of God—believing fellowship with Jesus Christ is both a product of and a means to a greater knowledge of Him, and leads to a holy abhorrance of every counterfeit "Jesus" (2 Corinthians 11:4) set forth by the world, the flesh, and the devil. Love for the living Christ and views of His glory will lead to a love of holy and spiritual worship and a rejection of the fleshly worship of fleshly "Jesus"; a love for the Redeemer who boldly and plainly rebuked the false doctrines of the Pharisees and Saduccees will lead the Christian to reject the ecumenical "Jesus" that unites false doctrine with the true; knowledge of the true Christ will lead one to reject the fanaticism 673 That is, those in John 2:23-25 knew that Christ did miracles and had intellectual apprehension of various facts about Him, but did not commit themselves to Him, and were thus still unconverted (3:1-3). The blind man Christ healed in John 9 was willing to get cast out of the synagogue for His sake, yet he did not know that the Lord Jesus was the Son of God (9:36), or that He was not a sinner (9:25), and was only converted at the end of the chapter when he found out the proper knowledge of the Person of Christ (9:35-41).

of the charismatic "Jesus," the annihilationist "Jesus" of sundry cults, the Arian or Sabellian "Jesus" of others, the wafer "Jesus" of Romanism, and all other false Christs.

4.) Behold in the Word the glory of God in Christ.

a.) Behold the glory of Jesus Christ as the eternal Son of God. He has existed from eternity with His Father, rejoicing always before Him, participating in the ineffable communion of love and delight of the three Persons in the undivided Trinity. Before the beginning, now, and to all eternity, He possesses in full the undivided Divine essence. He is God from God, Light from Light, true God from true God, eternally begotten of the Father. His throne, as God, is for ever and ever, and the scepter of His kingdom is a righteous sceptre. He is the I AM, who was, and is, and is to come, the Almighty. He is self-existent, immeasurable, and eternal. He is the Creator and Sovereign of the Universe—all things were made by Him, all things consist by Him, and all things are of Him, through Him, and unto Him. He fully possesses the infinite Divine glory, and will receive, with His Father and the Holy Spirit, the worship and adoration of the entire redeemed creation, for ever and ever.

b.) Behold the glory of Jesus Christ in His Mediatorial office. Behold, in the eternal counsel of peace, the Father giving the elect to the Son, the Son agreeing to redeem them, and the Spirit determining to regenerate them. Behold, and wonder at the mystery of godliness: God manifest in the flesh. See the condescension of the Father's express Image tabernacling among men, He who was always consubstantial with the Father as to His Godhead becoming consubstantial with humanity as to His manhood, uniting in His one Person the Divine nature and a true human nature. Behold the eternal Word conceived in the womb of Mary, being born in a manger. See the fulness of the Godhead embodied in a true Child who grew in wisdom and stature, and favor with God and man. Behold Him in His human identification with the sinful and desperately needy race He came to redeem. See Him growing weary with a journey, and sitting on Jacob's well to rest. See Him weeping at the grave of Lazarus—and raising his beloved friend from the dead. See His tender friendship with the Apostle John, the disciple whom Jesus loved. See Him sorrowful and very heavy in light of His coming cross, agonizing in prayer to the Father, betrayed by a familiar friend and deserted and denied by the rest. See Him unjustly condemned, mocked, spat upon, whipped, and crucified. See Him saving the soul and bringing to Paradise the repentant thief crucified next to Him. See Him bearing the sins of the world in His body, perfectly satisfying the demands of Divine justice through His one offering. See Him rising from the dead and so destroying the power of death, and ascending to the right hand of His Father, being crowned with glory and honor, and having all power in heaven and earth given into His hand. See Him interceding for His people as their Priest and Advocate, and by His omnipotent power preserving every one of them to everlasting glory. See Him, with the Father, sending the Holy Spirit, reflecting the Spirit's eternal procession from the Father and the Son in His temporal mission to indwell the church. See the union His elect have with Him in His death, burial, resurrection, and ascension. See Him completing the work of His humiliation, and uniting to His immutable Divine perfections the human perfections that make Him the perfect and all-sufficient Savior of all who will come to Him. See Him ruling over the church in the world, preparing mansions for His beloved people, and coming again to bring them to Himself. See Him sitting on the throne of David and manifesting the righteous rule of God over the earth in the Millennial kingdom. See Him as the Light of the New Jerusalem, and His people singing the praises of redeeming love and serving Him before the throne of God and the Lamb for ever and ever. See Christ's glory in John's Gospel as the bread of life, the light of the world, the door to eternal life, the good shepherd who gives His life for the sheep, the resurrection and the life, the way, the truth, and the life, and the true vine, the source of all grace, the font of spiritual and eternal life for all those brought into union with Him. See the glory of the Lord Jesus in all Scripture, in type and in antitype, in promise and in fulfillment, and embrace Him, cleave to Him ever the more in all that He is and in all that He does. The glory of God in Christ is an inexhaustible theme, the delight and glory of the saints to all eternity. A few lines of application certainly cannot even begin to compass it in its beauty and glory.[674] Oh Christian, set in motion the work of eternity now—through the Scripture, behold the glory of God in Christ! In so doing, He will reveal Himself to you, you will partake in ever greater levels of spiritual life, and you will be transformed into the moral likeness of your incarnate Head.

5.) Consider also that the more true intellectual and experiential knowledge of God in Christ the Christian has, the more he longs for more such knowledge, and the more he hates his fleshly feebleness in seeking after it. Does your heart and flesh, all the faculties of your whole renewed person, cry out for God, the living God, as your own God? What an awful evil is this faintness, this feebleness, in seeking after God your Father, His Son,

---

674 For what is arguably the preeminent treatment of this theme, see ΧΡΙΣΤΟΛΟΓΙΑ: or, a Declaration of the Glorious Mystery of the Person of Christ, and Meditations and Discourses on the Glory of Christ, in His Person, Office, and Grace: With the Differences Between Faith and Sight: Applied unto the Use of Them that Believe & Applied unto Unconverted Sinners and Saints Under Spiritual Decays, by John Owen.

and His Spirit? How does believing meditation on Gethsemane, and on the cross, affect the heart! For seeing the Lord Jesus in His glory enflames the believer's soul with love for Him, with true sanctification as a result. And yet the disciples failed to watch and pray, but slept while the Lord wept His infinitely precious tears of blood, and forsook the Lord when He went to the cross. How often do I follow their faithless and criminal example, and fail to draw nigh to the Lord when He has come nigh to me? My God, oh for grace to love and know Thee more!

6.) Consider the great privilege believers, and in particular ministers, have, in proclaiming the mystery of God in Christ. Oh Christian, you have the privilege and the duty to give the gospel to the unconverted, and to set forth the Lord Jesus before believers in all His glory and grace to stir up their holy affections for Him. How much time do you spend proclaiming the gospel? How many doors have you knocked on this week? Is not Jesus Christ worthy of being known by all men? Furthermore, Hebrews 10:24-25 commands you to provoke others in the church to love and to good works. How better to do this than to set God in Christ before them? Do you talk of your Father, and of His Son your Redeemer, on the Lord's Day? "Then they that feared the LORD spake often one to another: and the LORD hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the LORD, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the LORD of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not" (Malachi 3:16-18).

Furthermore, pastor, evangelist, and Christian preacher, you have the privilege and duty of setting forth the most stupendous of all truths in the proclamation of the Triune God and the incarnate, crucified, and risen Christ. Am I to proclaim the "mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh"? Who is sufficient for these things? Employ the great privileges that God has given you and set forth the truth, and all the truth, with nothing added or taken away, with holy boldness and passion, and with holy fear and trembling over the fact that the Lord has chosen and commanded you so to do. Earnestly contend for the faith, that nothing whatever of the glory of God revealed in Christ through the Scriptures, and committed to you for bold and public proclamation everywhere to all men, be lost.

7.) Do not turn aside from the full proclamation of God in Christ, as set forth from Genesis to Revelation, to any other and lesser message. Do not turn from Christ to a merely "practical" message or mere moralism. Doubtless the people of God must, and will, adorn their knowledge of God with good works. Indeed, the greater their true spiritual fellowship with Christ, the greater will be their outward manifestations of practical holiness. However, to take knowledge of the Lord Jesus away to focus exclusively upon what is "practical" is to rip out the soul from true religion and leave a lifeless corpse. Any "piety" that does not lead men to behold, believe on, receive, and know Jesus Christ is false, fleshly, and devilish.

What is more, as you strive against specific sins, do not let the Lord Jesus be removed from your view. It is certainly proper to set yourself mightily against particular lusts and products of the old man and to strive to utterly put to death specific manifestations of indwelling sin (Romans 8:13; Colossians 3:5). But do not remove the glory of God in Christ from its central place in your heart and mind. Sweet fellowship with Him causes the vain allurements of sin to quickly fade. Yes, your specific sins are awful, and a terrible problem—fight them with all your might. But make sure that in your warfare you have the Captain of the hosts of the Lord with you—without Him you can do nothing. Closer communion with Christ will end many a seemingly intractable battle with besetting sins.

Also, you should expect God's blessing to the conversion of sinners and the spiritual strengthening of saints when Christ is preached and plainly set forth. Proper preaching of the Lord Jesus will have supernatural efficacy to produce spiritual results, while the employment of humanly devised marketing or salesmanship techniques will only detract from a real focus on the revealed glory of God in the incarnate Redeemer. What is the chaff to the wheat?

Indeed, in the instituted services of the church, the worship of the Triune God through Christ must not be removed from its proper central place. Since God's own instituted worship is the best means of His own revelation, the Regulative Principle of worship must be consistently practiced. What is more, in whatever music is employed, not only must all fleshly sounds be rejected, but even proper melody and harmony must not be allowed to overshadow the spiritual worship of God. He must always remain the focus—let not the elements of worship, and especially the circumstances, attract attention to themselves and become ends in themselves.

E. The Body of Sin Is Indeed Destroyed, Not Merely Counteracted

BDAG[675] provides the following definition for the verb katargeo (καταργέω), translated destroy in Romans 6:6:

> καταργέω fut. καταργήσω; 1 aor. κατήργησα; pf. κατήργηκα. Pass.: 1 fut. καταργηθήσομαι; 1 aor. κατηργήθην; pf. κατήργημαι (s. ἀργέω; since Eur., Phoen. 753; Polyb.; POxy 38, 7 [49/50 AD]; PFlor 176, 7; 218, 13; PStras 32, 7; 2 Esdr; TestSol [also PVindobBosw for 18:38]; AscIs 3:31; Just.).
>
> 1. to cause someth. to be unproductive, *use up, exhaust, waste of a tree κ. τὴν γῆν Lk 13:7 (cp. ἀργεῖ οὐδὲν ἀλλὰ καρποφορεῖ OdeSol 11:23).
>
> 2. to cause someth. to lose its power or effectiveness, *invalidate, make powerless fig. extension of 1 (so, above all, in Paul and the writings dependent on him; cp. Herm. Wr. 13, 7 κατάργησον τ. σώματος τὰς αἰσθήσεις; of the soul of Jesus: κ. τὰ ἐπὶ κολάσεσιν πάθη Iren. 1, 25, 1 [Harv. I 205, 4]) make ineffective, nullify τὴν πίστιν τοῦ θεοῦ God's fidelity Ro 3:3. ἐπαγγελίαν Gal 3:17; cp. Ro 4:14; τὰ ὄντα κ. nullify the things that (actually) exist 1 Cor 1:28. τὸν νόμον make the law invalid Eph 2:15; cp. Ro 3:31 (RThompson, ETh 63, '87, 136–48, on alleged rabbinic background; s. also ἵστημι A4). Also in B of the OT cultic ordinances, which have lost their validity for Christians 5:6; 9:4; 16:2.
>
> 3. to cause someth. to come to an end or to be no longer in existence, *abolish, wipe out, set aside τὶ someth. τὰ τοῦ νηπίου set aside childish ways 1 Cor 13:11. Of God or Christ: God will do away with both stomach and food 6:13; bring to an end πᾶσαν ἀρχήν, ἐξουσίαν, δύναμιν 15:24. τὸν ἄνομον 2 Th 2:8. τὸν καιρὸν τοῦ ἀνόμου put an end to the time of the lawless one (i.e., the devil) B 15:5. τὸν θάνατον break the power of death 2 Ti 1:10; B 5:6; pass. 1 Cor 15:26 (MDahl, The Resurrection of the Body [1 Cor 15], '62, 117–19). τὸν τὸ κράτος ἔχοντα τοῦ θανάτου destroy the one who has power over death Hb 2:14. ἵνα καταργηθῇ τὸ σῶμα τ. ἁμαρτίας in order that the sinful body may be done away with Ro 6:6. In 2 Cor 3:14 the subject may be ἡ παλαιὰ διαθήκη or, more probably (despite some grammatical considerations), κάλυμμα; in the latter case the mng. is remove.—Pass. cease, pass away προφητεία, γνῶσις 1 Cor 13:8. τὸ ἐκ μέρους what is imperfect vs. 10. ἄρα κατήργηται τὸ σκάνδαλον τοῦ σταυροῦ the cross has ceased to be an obstacle Gal 5:11. πᾶς πόλεμος καταργεῖται every war is brought to an end IEph 13:2. καταργούμενος doomed to perish of the ἄρχοντες τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου 1 Cor 2:6. Of the radiance on Moses' face 2 Cor 3:7. Subst. τὸ καταργούμενον what is transitory vss. 11, 13.
>
> 4. to cause the release of someone from an obligation (one has nothing more to do with it), *be discharged, be released. In our lit. pass. καταργοῦμαι ἀπό τινος of a woman upon the death of her husband κατήργηται ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου τοῦ ἀνδρός Ro 7:2. Of Christians κ. ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου be released fr. the law vs. 6. Of those who aspire to righteousness through the law κ. ἀπὸ Χριστοῦ be estranged from Christ Gal 5:4.—Frisk s.v. 2 ἀργός; also DELG s.v. ἔργον. M-M. EDNT. TW.

675 Danker, Frederick William (ed.), A Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament and other Early Christian Literature, 3rd. ed. Chicago, IL: University of Chicago Press, 2000.

The lexicon places Romans 6:6 in category 3, "to cause something to come to an end or to be no longer in existence, abolish, wipe out, set aside," specifically translating the portion of Romans 6:6 in question[676] as "in order that the sinful body may be done away with." This is also the category of katargeo in the verse with the syntax that is closest to Romans 6:6 in the NT, namely, Hebrews 2:14: "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil."[677] In both Romans 6:6 and Hebrews 2:14, the verb katargeo is an aorist subjunctive[678] within a subordinate hina clause that gives the Divine purpose (which brings a certain result) of the main clause. The certain result of cocrucifixion with Christ is the destruction of the body of sin, Romans 6:6; the certain result of the incarnation and death of Christ is the destruction of the devil, Hebrews 2:14. The similar syntax of katargeo in the aorist subjunctive within a hina clause in 1 Corinthians 1:28[679] also means much more than simply "counteract," as does the final instance of the word in the aorist subjunctive in 1 Corinthians 15:24.[680]

Indeed, all four of the definitions for katargeo (καταργέω) given by BDAG, each of which is certainly countenanced in the New Testament, mean more than simply "counteract." None of them can reduce Romans 6:6 to simply "that the body of sin might be counteracted." Definition #1, which is only used in the New Testament for a tree that makes ground unproductive, is not especially relevant to Romans 6:6. If one wanted to affirm that Romans 6:6 is an instance of definition #2 of katargeo, a restriction of the verse to "counteraction" does not fit; the body of sin "lose[s] its power or effectiveness,

---

676 ἵνα καταργηθῇ τὸ σῶμα τῆς ἁμαρτίας.

677 ἐπεὶ οὖν τὰ παιδία κεκοινώνηκε σαρκὸς καὶ αἵματος, καὶ αὐτὸς παραπλησίως μετέσχε τῶν αὐτῶν, ἵνα διὰ τοῦ θανάτου καταργήσῃ τὸν τὸ κράτος ἔχοντα τοῦ θανάτου, τοῦτ᾽ ἔστι τὸν διάβολον.

678 However, the verb in Hebrews 2:14 is in the active voice, while in Romans 6:6 the verb is in the passive voice.

679 And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: καὶ τὰ ἀγενῆ τοῦ κόσμου καὶ τὰ ἐξουθενημένα ἐξελέξατο ὁ Θεός, καὶ τὰ μὴ ὄντα, ἵνα τὰ ὄντα καταργήσῃ·

680 Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. εἶτα τὸ τέλος, ὅταν παραδῷ τὴν βασιλείαν τῷ Θεῷ καὶ πατρί, ὅταν καταργήσῃ πᾶσαν ἀρχὴν καὶ πᾶσαν ἐξουσίαν καὶ δύναμιν.

[is] invalidate[d] [and made] powerless" by its destruction from cocrucifixion. Advocates of the view that the strength and power of the flesh within believers is entirely unchanged through the course of one's life, and is thus equally powerful and living years and decades after regeneration as it is a minute after conversion, do not believe that there is any loss of power or effectiveness in the flesh at any point in one's Christian life. The "counteraction" view does not fit BDAG definition #2; something that is invalidated and made powerless has much more done to it than a simple counteraction, and a translation of katargeo as "invalidated" in the verse comes out to mean something very similar to "destroyed." The "religious sense [of katargeo], which is almost exclusive to Paul . . . means . . . 'to make completely inoperative' or 'to put out of use.'"[681] Such a meaning signifies far more than counteraction. If the flesh grows powerless and ineffective over the believer (not that the flesh itself gets better, Romans 7:18, but that it has less power) as it is gradually mortified and weakened until, at the moment of Christ's return or the believer's death, it is entirely destroyed, the significance of katargeo in Romans 6:6 comes out to mean just about the same thing whether one assigns it to definition #2 of BDAG or keeps the verse in #3, where the authors of the lexicon place it. Finally, if one affirmed Romans 6:6 is an instance of definition #4 (although that definition fits the verse poorly), it would not assist the advocates of simple counteraction. Advocates of "counteraction" in Romans 6:6[682] believe that the Christian can instantly return to life under the power of the flesh and of sin when he ceases to maintain the moment-by-moment faith decision that counteracts the flesh and keeps him in the realm of freedom from acts of sin, and then instantly return again to life under the power of Christ when he restores a moment-by-moment faith decision to counteract the flesh. (It should be noted that there are significant elements of truth here, in that one receives supplies of grace to mortify sin by faith in Christ, by looking to Him for that grace and strength, and that there is indeed a very clear Biblical distinction between one who is deliberately clinging to known sin and one who is seeking for and looking to Christ for deliverance from all sin, who has an evangelical sincerity—cf. 1 Corinthians 11:27-29.[683] However, there is

---

681 Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, ed. Bromily, καταργέω.

682 Counteraction in Romans 6:6 is especially the position of the Keswick theology; see "Excursus VIII: An Analysis of Keswick Theology as Set Forth In So Great Salvation: The History and Message of the Keswick Convention, by Steven Barabas," below.

683 "Every Christian, then, has a 'pure' heart [cf. Matthew 5:8]. But every Christian does not have a 'clean' heart (Psalm 51:10). That which pollutes the heart of a Christian is unjudged sin. Whenever sin is allowed by us, communion with God is broken, and pollution can only be removed, and communion restored, by genuine repentance—a condemning of ourselves, a mourning over the sin, and unsparing confession of the same, accompanied by a fervent desire and sincere resolution not to be overtaken by it again. The willing allowance and indulgence of any known sin cannot exist with a clean heart. . . . By more to sanctification than this alone—one who is in a state of being right with God, who is evangelically sincere, also experiences progressive deliverance from the power of sin and progressive renewal into the image of Christ.) Definition #4 is employed for a woman who is separated from her husband on account of his death, and compared to the freedom of the Christian from the law (Romans 7:2, 6). A woman whose husband has died can never go back to her dead husband and resume the marital relationship. A believer is eternally secure and can never again be condemned by the law. The relation between a Christian and condemnation, and a widow and her dead husband, is not simply a "counteraction" of their connection so that the believer can again be lost or the widow can be remarried to her dead spouse. This idea simply does not fit the use of the word. There is no flip-flopping in Romans 6:6 from one category of believer who experiences katargeo of the flesh and another category of believer that does not experience katargeo for his flesh. (This is not to say, however, that a believer cannot have times when he is holding on to some sin and thus is losing ground spiritually and hindering the work of the Spirit to renew him into the image of Christ, and so is giving the flesh room for greater power as it lusts against the Spirit for dominance, Galatians 5:17. He can face setbacks where he allows sin to reign in more of his mortal body than it was when he was consciously surrendered to God in all areas, Romans 6:12.) Nor does Romans 6:6 give the least hint that the destruction of the sinful body or the freedom from service to sin is a sort of higher Christian life only attained by certain believers at certain times. The verse states a truth about all the saints, about all who died with Christ on the cross and become experientially cocrucified with Him in regeneration. Romans 6 is an explanation of why believers will not live in sin, rather than being only an explanation of how believers may not live in sin (although it does explain this as well, especially in connection with chapters 7-8). Thus, none of the definitions for katargeo in BDAG can be reduced to a mere counteraction of the flesh.

It is not surprising that, since none of the four definitions of katargeo listed in BDAG fit the idea that there is a mere counteraction of an unchanged, unweakened fleshly principle in Romans 6:6, an examination of all the verses in the N. T. with the verb provides not a single clear instance where such a "counteraction" idea, rather than regeneration we have received a "pure heart:" proof of which is, we hate all impurity, although there is still that in us which delights in nothing else. We are to maintain communion with God by cleansing our own hearts (Psalm 73:13), and that, through constant mortification, and the daily and unsparing judgment of all known sin in and from us." (pgs. 54-55, Doctrine of Sanctification, chap. 7, Elec. acc. AGES Digital Library, Christian Library Series vol. 8, Arthur Pink Collection. Rio, WI: 2006)

---

one of the categories of use listed in BDAG, is required by the inspired text.[684] On the other hand, large numbers of verses clearly testify to a sense of "destroy" for the verb.[685] Similarly to BDAG, the Louw-Nida Greek lexicon[686] does not include "counteract" among its definitions for katargeo, while "to cause to cease to exist . . . to cause to come to an end, to cause to become nothing, to put an end to" is listed. Thayer's lexicon[687] is similar, prominently including the "destroy" idea but not listing "counteract" as a definition. The Liddell-Scott lexicon,[688] representing the classical Greek background, classifies Romans 6:6 as "to be abolished, cease" and does not list "counteract" as a definition of the verb.[689] In "the LXX . . . [the verb] occurs only . . . with the meaning 'to destroy,'"[690] and in the earliest documents of Christiandom after the completion of the New Testament, the apostolic patristics, the verb likewise only signifies "to destroy."[691]

---

684 The complete list of references is Luke 13:7; Romans 3:3, 31; 4:14; 6:6; 7:2, 6; 1 Corinthians 1:28; 2:6; 6:13; 13:8, 10-11; 15:24, 26; 2 Corinthians 3:7, 11, 13-14; Galatians 3:17; 5:4, 11; Ephesians 2:15; 2 Thessalonians 2:8; 2 Timothy 1:10; Hebrews 2:14.

685 Such as 1 Corinthians 6:13; 2 Thessalonians 3:8; Hebrews 2:14; etc.

686 Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament Based on Semantic Domains, Johannes P. Louw & Eugene A. Nida, ed.

687 Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament, by Henry Thayer. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1978 (reprint ed.).

688 Greek-English Lexicon, 9th ed., H. G. Liddell & R. Scott. New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 1996.

689 Lampe's Patristic Greek Lexicon does, however, have "counteract" among its definitions of καταργέω. The earliest listed example comes from the writings of Origen, and no examples are listed where the verb is passive, as it is in Romans 6:6. The fact that the classical Greek and Koiné Greek lexica mentioned do not define the word as counteract does not mean that this idea is absolutely impossible to derive from any of the definitions that are listed, but destroy, a clearly live definition with very close syntactical parallel in the New Testament, must be heavily preferred to counteract in Romans 6:6 unless very strong evidence requires it to be abandoned in favor of counteract. Such evidence is not forthcoming, and therefore the translation of the Authorized Version must be deemed correct.

690 Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, ed. Bromily, καταργέω. The four uses of the verb in the LXX all relate to causing the rebuilding of Jerusalem to cease (Ezra 4:21, 23; 5:5) or to leaving alone the men who were doing the rebuilding (6:8).

691 Note:

Eph. 13:2 οὐδέν ἐστιν ἄμεινον εἰρήνης, ἐν ᾗ πᾶς πόλεμος καταργεῖται ἐπουρανίων καὶ ἐπιγείων. There is nothing better than peace, by which all warfare among those in heaven and those on earth is abolished.

Barn. 2:6 ταῦτα οὖν κατήργησεν, ἵνα ὁ καινὸς νόμος τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἄνευ ζυγοῦ ἀνάγκης ὤν, μὴ ἀνθρωποποίητον ἔχῃ τὴν προσφοράν. Therefore he has abolished these things, in order that the new law of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is free from the yoke of compulsion, might have its offering, one not made by man.

Barn. 5:6 οἱ προφῆται, ἀπ᾽ αὐτοῦ ἔχοντες τὴν χάριν, εἰς αὐτὸν ἐπροφήτευσαν. αὐτὸς δὲ ἵνα καταργήσῃ τὸν θάνατον καὶ τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀνάστασιν δείξῃ, ὅτι ἐν σαρκὶ ἔδει αὐτὸν φανερωθῆναι, ὑπέμεινεν, The prophets, receiving grace from him, prophesied about him. But he himself submitted, in order that he might destroy death and demonstrate the reality of the resurrection of the dead, because it was necessary that he be manifested in the flesh.

Barn. 9:4 οὐκοῦν περιέτεμεν ἡμῶν τὰς ἀκοάς, ἵνα ἀκούσαντες λόγον πιστεύσωμεν ἡμεῖς. Ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ περιτομὴ ἐφ᾽ ᾗ πεποίθασιν κατήργηται, περιτομὴν γὰρ εἴρηκεν οὐ σαρκὸς

F. Gradual Deliverance From The Power Of Sin Is Consistent With the Aorist Subjunctive Of "To Destroy" (katargeo) In Romans 6:6

If progressive destruction of the flesh as a result of crucifixion with Christ is indicated in Romans 6:6, one might ask why the verb to destroy is an aorist, not a present subjunctive. A number of considerations suggest themselves. First, the ultimate destruction of the sinful flesh in connection with the believer's entry into heaven is appropriately expressed by the aorist subjunctive. Glorification is truly a point action, the work of a moment. Had a present subjunctive of katargeo been employed in Romans 6:6, it could convey the idea that the body of sin is continually being destroyed and that there is no point in the future when it is actually utterly abolished. A present subjunctive would at least allow for, if not actually affirm, the continuance of the existence of the sinful flesh in believers in heaven. Cocrucifixion with Christ does not bring only a limited deliverance from sin, but absolute and total conquest over it and its utter destruction in every believer. The aorist, not the present subjunctive is the tense to use to express this idea.

One also notes that Romans 6:6 states "that henceforth we should not serve [douleuein, δουλεύειν] sin" employs a present, not an aorist, infinitive. Durative or progressive action is the consistent use of the present infinitive of douleuo (δουλεύω) in the New Testament (Matthew 6:24; Luke 16:13; Romans 6:6; 7:6; Galatians 4:9; 1 γενηθῆναι. ἀλλὰ παρέβησαν, ὅτι ἄγγελος πονηρὸς ἐσόφιζεν αὐτούς. In short, he circumcised our ears in order that when we hear the word we might believe. But the circumcision in which they have trusted has been abolished, for he declared that circumcision was not a matter of the flesh. But they disobeyed, because an evil angel "enlightened" them.

Barn. 15:5 καὶ κατέπαυσεν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ ἑβδόμῃ. τοῦτο λέγει· ὅταν ἐλθὼν ὁ υἱὸς αὐτοῦ καταργήσει τὸν καιρὸν τοῦ ἀνόμου καὶ κρινεῖ τοὺς ἀσεβεῖς καὶ ἀλλάξει τὸν ἥλιον καὶ τὴν σελήνην καὶ τοὺς ἀστέρας, τότε καλῶς καταπαύσεται ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ ἑβδόμῃ. "And he rested on the seventh day." This means: when his son comes, he will destroy the time of the lawless one and will judge the ungodly and will change the sun and the moon and the stars, and then he will truly rest on the seventh day.

Barn. 16:2 σχεδὸν γὰρ ὡς τὰ ἔθνη ἀφιέρωσαν αὐτὸν ἐν τῷ ναῷ. ἀλλὰ πῶς λέγει κύριος καταργῶν αὐτόν; μάθετε· Τίς ἐμέτρησεν τὸν οὐρανὸν σπιθαμῇ, ἢ τὴν γῆν δρακί; οὐκ ἐγώ, λέγει κύριος; ὁ οὐρανός μοι θρόνος, ἡ δὲ γῆ ὑποπόδιον τῶν ποδῶν μου· ποῖον οἶκον οἰκοδομήσετέ μοι, ἢ τίς τόπος τῆς καταπαύσεώς μου; ἐγνώκατε ὅτι ματαία ἡ ἐλπὶς αὐτῶν. For they, almost like the heathen, consecrated him by means of the Temple. But what does the Lord say in abolishing it? Learn! "Who measured heaven with the span of his hand, or the earth with his palm? Was it not I, says the Lord? Heaven is my throne, and the earth is a footstool for my feet. What kind of house will you build for me, or what place for me to rest?" You now know that their hope was in vain.

Justin Martyr speaks of Christians exorcizing demons, καταργοῦντες καὶ ἐκδιώκοντες τοὺς κατέχοντας τοὺς ἀνθρώπους δαίμονας (Apology 2:6), and of the end of circumcision, since τὸ αἷμα τῆς περιτομῆς ἐκείνης κατήργηται, καὶ αἵματι σωτηρίῳ πεπιστεύκαμεν (Trypho, 24).

Thessalonians 1:9). From the moment of regeneration on through eternity future, the believer is permanently and continually freed from bondage to and the service of sin. While there is undoubtedly a very dramatic change in the fullness of the saint's service of God at glorification, his freedom from the slavery to and service of sin is a continual action that begins at the moment of his conversion and continues from that time onward without interruption. While this freedom from the service to sin is appropriately expressed with a Greek present tense, a continuing action of the same nature is not an appropriate way to express the destruction of the sinful flesh in the saint. That fruit of cocrucifixion is completed in a particular instant. There are no remnants of sin left in the believer to destroy from the time he enters glory to all eternity to come. A present subjunctive of katargeo would not fit the sense of Romans 6:6 as well as an aorist.

The aorist of katargeo does not eliminate the fact of the progressive weakening of the cocrucified body of sin during the believer's lifetime. The common category of the constative aorist "treats the act [of the verb in question] as a single whole entirely irrespective of the parts or time involved. If the act is a point in itself, well and good. But the aorist can be used also of an act which is not a point."[692] While a constative aorist does not eliminate the possibility of progressive destruction of the body of sin in this life culminated at glorification, an even better view takes the aorist of katargeo in Romans 6:6 as effective,[693] so that the aorist emphasizes the completion of the action of destruction without eliminating the possibility of a progressive beginning.[694]

The emphasis the aorist subjunctive places upon the final completion of the destruction of the sinful flesh at glorification in the hina clause of Romans 6:6 does not eliminate the progressive mortification and weakening of the body of sin because of cocrucifixion any more than the aorist subjunctive verb "sanctify" and its dependent aorist participle "cleanse" in the hina clause of Ephesians 5:26 eliminates the fact that Christ progressively sanctifies and washes the church by the Word as it is preached, taught, and received until the expected day when He completes the work at His coming and "present[s] . . . to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such

---

692 Pg. 833, A Grammar of the Greek New Testament in the Light of Historical Research, A. T. Robertson. Nashville, TN: Broadman Press, 1934. Compare John 2:20, where an aorist represents the durative action of spending 46 years building the temple.

693 The . . . Consummative (Culminative, Ecbatic, Effective) Aorist . . . is often used to stress the cessation of an act or state. Certain verbs, by their lexical nature, virtually require this usage. . . . The context also assists in this usage at times; it may imply that an act was already in progress and the aorist then brings the action to a conclusion. (pg. 559, Greek Grammar Beyond the Basics, Daniel Wallace).

694 Compare Luke 19:42, ἐκρύβη; Acts 12:25, πληρώσαντες; Acts 27:43, ἐκώλυσεν; Philippians 4:11, ἔμαθον.

thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish" (Ephesians 5:27).[695] A good case could be made that Hebrews 2:14 contains an effective aorist verb, just like Romans 6:6 and Ephesians 5:25-27. The use of katargeo in Hebrews 2:14 is, as noted earlier, syntactically very similar to Romans 6:6—the ultimate destruction of the devil in the lake of fire is assured by the death of Christ, but the fact that the Lord Jesus, through the conversion of sinners, starting of churches, and even Satan's Millennial binding (Revelation 20:1-3) achieves many partial victories that forecast Satan's ultimate demise is not eliminated because of the aorist in Hebrews 2:14. One can also note that the aorist subjunctive of katargeo in 1 Corinthians 15:24 is employed for the action of Christ of progressively putting down all His enemies, until He finally destroys the last enemy, death (15:24-26). Indeed, the parallel between Christ progressively defeating all His enemies until they are finally destroyed in 1 Corinthians 15:24-26 is very close to the progressive defeat and ultimate destruction of sin in the life of the believer in Romans 6:6. Comparable examples of katargeo and related texts about sanctification in the New Testament thus provide excellent support for taking the destruction of the body of sin in Romans 6:6 as a gradual process during life that culminates in sin's final defeat at the believer's glorification, employing an effective aorist.

Furthermore, the present subjunctive of katargeo is not found anywhere in the New Testament—all instances of the subjunctive are in the aorist (Romans 6:6; 1 Corinthians 1:28; 15:24; Hebrews 2:14). Nor are there any instances of the verb in the present subjunctive in the apostolic patristic writers.[696] The present subjunctive of the verb may not have been much of a live option at all.

Thus, employing the aorist subjunctive of katargeo in Romans 6:6 to state that "that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin" does not by any means negate the gradual weakening of the power of the flesh in progressive sanctification, while it emphasizes the ultimate destruction of sin in the believer at glorification. The connection with the present infinitive of "serve," a comparison with the aorist subjunctive in connection with sanctification in Ephesians 5:25-27, the categorization of the aorist in both Romans 6:6 and in Hebrews 2:14 as effective, the comparison to Christ's progressively dominant reign in 1 Corinthians 15:24-26, and the 695 Note the complete sentence in v. 25-27: οἱ ἄνδρες, ἀγαπᾶτε τὰς γυναῖκας ἑαυτῶν, καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς ἠγάπησε τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, καὶ ἑαυτὸν παρέδωκεν ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς· ἵνα αὐτὴν ἁγιάσῃ, καθαρίσας τῷ λουτρῷ τοῦ ὕδατος ἐν ῥήματι, ἵνα παραστήσῃ αὐτὴν ἑαυτῷ ἔνδοξον τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, μὴ ἔχουσαν σπίλον ἢ ῥυτίδα ἤ τι τῶν τοιούτων, ἀλλ᾽ ἵνα ᾖ ἁγία καὶ ἄμωμος.

---

696 The aorist subjunctive is found, however (Epistle of Barnabas 5:6). The subjunctive of καταργέω is not found in the LXX at all. Nor does the verb appear in Josephus, Philo, the Pseudepigrapha, or the Apocryphal Gospels.

nonexistence of the present subjunctive of katargeo in the New Testament and related Koiné literature all validate the appropriateness of the aorist. Indeed, a present subjunctive for the verb would be inappropriate, as it would suggest that even in heaven sin is not ultimately destroyed, but only progressively weakened. The aorist subjunctive in the purpose clause of Romans 6:6 is the appropriate tense to express the gradual mortification of sin and its ultimate utter abolition in glory that is the certain result of the believer's cocrucifixion with the Lord Jesus Christ in regeneration.

G. How Does God Make Believers More Holy in Progressive Sanctification?

As proven in the earlier portions of this composition, in regeneration, God supernaturally changes the predominant inclination of the believer from unholiness and rebellion to obedience. The one who has been born of God no longer is unable to do spiritual good or follow after God (Romans 3:11; John 6:44, 65; Jeremiah 13:23), nor is he enslaved to fleshly lusts. His entire person—mind, affections, spirit, soul, body, will, and heart—all of his being is made new in regeneration and then progressively renewed into the image of Christ by sanctification. His spiritual portion is given a new inclination towards holiness, and a knowledge and understanding of God, both of which were absent before his regeneration, and his body becomes the temple of the Holy Spirit. In progressive sanctification, by the supernatural power of the Holy Spirit, the influence of indwelling sin is gradually weakened, and the new nature of the saint strengthened. Progressive sanctification is the continuation and strengthening of the new principles imparted at regeneration, a process completed at glorification.[697] In progressive sanctification, the Christian's intellectual and practical knowledge of God increases, as does the strength of the predominant bent of his will, his inclination in his soul, towards holiness. Likewise, the influence of his ethically sinful flesh, of his remaining spiritual tendency towards evil, weakens. As God fills him with holy moral qualities (Romans 15:13), he becomes "full of goodness" (Romans 15:14c), of inward personal holiness, and "filled with all knowledge" (Romans 15:14d), intellectual and experiential knowledge of God and His Word, with the result that he performs holy actions (Romans 15:14e). This inward progressive transformation, performed by the supernatural power of the Spirit of God, leads to his performance of holy actions. His body also becomes more holy as he more and more separates himself from all that defiles it. When he is glorified, his inclination towards holiness becomes absolute and fixed, indwelling sin is utterly extirpated, he enters into full knowledge of God, and he receives a perfectly holy glorified body. He becomes entirely holy, body, soul, and spirit, and fit to the absolute limit of his created capacity for fellowship with and the knowledge and service of his Triune God, as the moral image of Christ is made perfect in him.

697 "[S]anctification is wrought by the Spirit of God. As he regenerates the soul by imparting to it a holy disposition, so he carries on the work thus begun by increasing the power of that disposition, and subduing the evil tendencies which oppose it. Hence love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance, are said to be the fruit of the Spirit. Hence also it is said that the Spirit is opposed to the flesh, and the flesh to the Spirit" (pg. 12, The Doctrine of the Higher Christian Life Compared with the Teaching of the Holy Scriptures, by Alvah Hovey).

The changes within the believer in regeneration, sanctification, and glorification are not physical in the sense that anything in the substance of a believer's humanity changes. An unregenerate man possesses the same human nature as a regenerate man. Birds, fish, and mammals on the redeemed Millennial earth will still be members of the same created kinds, possessing the same animal substance, with their progenitors in the current world-system. A less holy Christian possesses the same type of body, soul, and spirit as a more holy one, and in the New Jerusalem the saints will still be truly and genuinely human, even as their incarnate Savior possesses a true and complete human nature, redeeming, as the second Adam, the full humanity that He assumed in the incarnation. Thus, there is no alteration in the believer's substance in progressive sanctification. Mortification does not eliminate any constituent element of his humanity, nor does vivification impart any new physical element.

Regeneration and progressive sanctification begin and continue an ethical change, not a physical one, within the Christian.[698] The new nature imparted to the believer in regeneration is not a change of the substance of his humanity, but a new inclination, a change in the bent of the faculties of his soul and spirit. He comes to possess knowledge of God and the ability and desire to love, commune with, and obey Him. The development and growth of this new nature to maturity (cf. 1 John 2:12-14; Ephesians 4:13) is a spiritual and ethical development, not a physical and substantial one. When Scripture speaks of the flesh as the controlling power in the unregenerate and as a sinful element in the Christian, reference is not made to the human body as such, but to an ethical and immaterial inclination towards evil that reigns in the children of the devil and continues to afflict God's children in their earthly pilgrimage, although it is dethroned. In progressive sanctification, mortification does not not eliminate elements of the human substance, nor does vivification add new physical constituents; rather, the spiritual and ethical revolution that reversed the believer's ultimate allegiance from sin to holiness is [698] Of course, there is a real change in the believer's body when it becomes incorruptible in the resurrection (1 Corinthians 15:42). This obvious fact is not being denied or argued against.

---

strengthened. Thus, speaking substantially, progressive sanctification does not involve either the weakening or eradication of any elements of human nature, but speaking ethically, progressive sanctification involves the weaking and progressive eradication of the flesh and the growth and development of the new holy nature imparted at the moment of the new birth, an ethical alteration that will be completed only at glorification with the full restoration of moral likeness to Christ.[699]

III. The Certainty of Practical Sanctification For All The Regenerate

A. Scripture Clearly Teaches That All Saved People Will Be Changed

Scripture teaches that all who have been regenerated, and are consequently crucified with Christ, will be practically sanctified. There is no such thing as a justified man who is totally unchanged[700]—indeed, there is no such thing as a believer who does 699 Thus, the word nature conveys a different idea when one speaks of the Christian possessing human nature (cf. Galatians 2:15) and when the Christian is said to partake of the divine nature (2 Peter 1:4). In sanctification, believers do not become gods, nor are they added to the Trinity, nor do they gain incommunicable attributes of the Divine substance, such as omnipotence, omnipresence, or omniscience. Their human nature or substance is in that sense unchanged. However, they do participate in ethical renovation and participate in the Divine nature in that they grow to become holy, loving, truthful, faithful, and righteous. William G. T. Shedd, explaining the meaning of nature in language such as sin nature and new nature, aptly wrote:

---

> When the term "nature" is applied to sin, it does not denote "nature" in the primary but the secondary sense. In the primary sense, "nature" denotes a substance, and one that is created by God. In this sense, Augustine denies that sin is "nature," and asserts that it is "intentio." . . . Howe (Oracles, II. xxiv.) remarks that "that evil heart, that nature, not as it is nature but as it is depraved nature, is now transmitted [from parents to children]." When "nature" signifies created substance, it is improper to call sin a nature. Aristotle (Politics, I. ii.) says: "What every being is in its perfect state, that certainly is the nature of that being, whether it be a man, a horse, or a house." Sin is imperfection, and therefore not "nature" in this sense. But there is a secondary meaning of the word. In this use of it, "nature" denotes "natural inclination," or "innate disposition." In this sense, sin is a "nature," and the adjective "natural" is applicable to the corruption of sin. In the same sense, holiness is called a nature in 2 Peter 1:4. Believers are "partakers of a divine nature," by being regenerated and coming to possess a holy disposition or inclination. "It is true that sin is a nature, but then it is a second nature, a state of degeneration." Nitzsch Christian Doctrine, § 107. . . . Since God is the author of nature, how comes it that no blame attaches to God if we are lost by nature? I answer, there is a twofold nature: The one [is] produced by God, and the other is [a] corruption of it. We are not born such as Adam was at first created. (pgs. 20-21, Chapter 5, "Original Sin," in Dogmatic Theology: Anthropology, William G. T. Shedd.)

One could consider the distinction between the unchanging character of human nature and the progressive development of the divine nature in progressive sanctification as a difference between substance and properties—the human substance remains unchanged, while properties such as holiness and purity develop. "Substances have properties that are 'in' them; properties are had by substances that possess them. . . . A substance . . . is a deep unity of properties, parts, and capacities. . . . Properties adhere together in substances . . . because they all . . . inhere in . . . the same substance that stands under them. . . . A substance regularly loses old parts, properties and lower-order capacities and gains new ones. But the substance itself underlies this change and remains the same throughout it" (pgs. 215-217, Philosophical Foundations For A Christian Worldview, J. P. Moreland & William Lane Craig).

700 "Works can be considered in three ways: either with reference to justification or sanctification or glorification. They are related to justification not antecedently, efficiently, and meritoriously, but consequently and declaratively. They are related to sanctification constitutively because they constitute and not have a supernatural, evident change (Matthew 13:8; Mark 4:8, 20).[701] A few of the many texts that prove this esssential Biblical doctrine will be examined.[702]

1 Corinthiains 6:9-11 and Galatians 5:18-24 teach that true believers will not be fornicators, idolators, adulterers, sodomites, thieves, and so on, because they have a new nature, being now "washed . . . sanctified [and] . . . justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God" (1 Corinthians 6:11). The "unrighteous" (ἄδικος) of 6:11, who will be excluded from God's kingdom, is the "unjust" (ἄδικος) of 6:1, the one who is not a brother but an unbeliever (6:6). Indeed, Scripture regularly contrasts the believer and the unbeliever as "the just and the unjust" (δικαίων τε καὶ ἀδικῶν, Acts 24:15; cf. Matthew 5:45; 2 Peter 2:9), but the regenerate are never called "unrighteous" in the Bible.[703] All believers are, in contrast, not the "unrighteous" (ἄδικος, v. 9) but those God views as righteous (δικαιόω, v. 11) because of their justification and sanctification. A contrast is not made between backslidden believers and obedient believers in v. 9-11, but between the people of God and the children of the devil. Similarly, Galatians 5:18-21 contrasts the believers in the church at Galatia ("ye/you," 5:18, 21) with the unsaved ("they," v. 21). Those who receive condemnation in 1 Corinthians 6:9-10; Galatians 5:18-24 are not backslidden believers, but the unregenerate.

When the Bible affirms that "they which do such things [οἱ τὰ τοιαῦτα πράσσοντες, those who practice such sins as the dominant characteristic of their lives] shall not inherit the kingdom of God" (Galatians 5:21), it is impossible to interpret the warning that those who practice such sins "shall not inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Corinthians 6:11; Galatians 5:21) as merely a loss of reward for those who actually end up in heaven anyway. None of the 18 references to the verb inherit (κληρονομέω) in the New Testament distinguish between a higher class of believers that inherit the kingdom promote it. They are related to glorification antededently and ordinatively beause they are related to it as the means to the end; yea, as the beginning to the complement because grace is glory begun, as glory is grace consummated. . . . [W]e do not on this account confound the law and the gospel and interfere with gratuitous justification by faith alone. Good works are required not for living according to the law, but because we live by the gospel; not as the causes on account of which life is given to us, but as effects which testify that life has been given to us" (pg. 705, Topic 17, Question 3:14, Institutes of Elenctic Theology, Francis Turretin)

---

701 A harvest that is "an hundredfold . . . sixtyfold . . . [or] thirtyfold" indicates different levels of Christian growth in believers, but even a "thirtyfold" spiritual harvest would be a very visible and notable production because of the sanctifying work of the Lord (cf. Genesis 26:12). Likewise, those who stop fornicating, stealing, committing idolatry, and so on, because they have been born again, manifest outwardly their inward renewal. Regeneration is not something that can remain entirely internal and hidden—it will show up in one's outward practices.

702 Note also "Excursus VII: Are All Believers Disciples?"

703 The complete list of references employing ἄδικος is: Matthew 5:45; Luke 16:10–11; 18:11; Acts 24:15; Romans 3:5; 1 Corinthians 6:1, 9; Hebrews 6:10; 1 Peter 3:18; 2 Peter 2:9.

and a lower class that somehow are saved but do not have an inheritance (Matthew 5:5; 19:29; 25:34; Mark 10:17; Luke 10:25; 18:18; 1 Corinthians 6:9-10; 15:50; Galatians 4:30; 5:21; Hebrews 1:4, 14; 6:12; 12:17; 1 Peter 3:9; Revelation 21:7); rather, the overwhelming contrast is between those who are saved, and thus "inherit everlasting life" (Matthew 19:29), "inherit the kingdom" (Matthew 25:34), "inherit the [Millennial] earth" (Matthew 5:5), "inherit eternal life" (Mark 10:17), "inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Corinthians 6:9-10; Galatians 5:21), and "inherit all things" (Revelation 21:7), and the lost who do not inherit eternal life.

Similarly, the related noun inheritance (κληρονομία) is regularly used to contrast what all saved people receive and all usaved people do not. Ephesians indicates that all who have the indwelling Spirit have the inheritance (1:13-14), all the predestinated have the inheritance (1:11; cf. 1:18), but "no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God" (5:5), for all such are "the children of disobedience" under the "wrath of God" (5:6; cf. 2:1-3) who have not been brought into union with Christ by faith and inwardly changed (2:4-10) and made into "children of light" (5:8). All those who have been "begotten . . . again" have an "inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven" (1 Peter 1:3-4). While the noun inheritance is sometimes used for the physical passing on of property to heirs by those who have deceased (cf. Luke 12:13), the noun, like the verb to which it is related, never contrasts a higher class of saved people from a lower class of those who are saved but have no inheritance (Matthew 21:38; Mark 12:7; Luke 12:13; 20:14; Acts 7:5; 20:32; Galatians 3:18; Ephesians 1:14, 18; 5:5; Colossians 3:24; Hebrews 9:15; 11:8; 1 Peter 1:4).

Furthermore, not one of the seventy-two verses in the New Testament that employ the phrase kingdom of God indicate that some saved people will be in the kingdom and others who are saved will somehow not enter the kingdom (Matthew 6:33; 12:28; 19:24; 21:31, 43; Mark 1:14-15; 4:11, 26, 30; 9:1, 47; 10:14-15, 23-25; 12:34; 14:25; 15:43; Luke 4:43; 6:20; 7:28; 8:1, 10; 9:2, 11, 27, 60, 62; 10:9, 11; 11:20; 12:31; 13:18, 20, 28-29; 14:15; 16:16; 17:20-21; 18:16-17, 24-25, 29; 19:11; 21:31; 22:16, 18; 23:51; John 3:3, 5; Acts 1:3; 8:12; 14:22; 19:8; 20:25; 28:23, 31; Romans 14:17; 1 Corinthians 4:20; 6:9-10; 15:50; Galatians 5:21; Ephesians 5:5; Colossians 4:11; 1 Thessalonians 2:12; 2 Thessalonians 1:5; Revelation 12:10). While there certainly are phases of the kingdom, from its current spiritual form (Romans 14:17) to its future Millennial and eternal aspects (Revelation 12:10), all the lost are outside of the current spiritual form of the kingdom and will be excluded from its Millennial and eternal phases, and no saved person is outside of the present spiritual kingdom, nor will any of the saved be excluded from the coming Millennial and eternal aspects of the kingdom. The contrast in Scripture is consistently between those who "enter into the kingdom of God" and those who are "cast into hell fire" (Mark 9:47) without any third category of saved people who do not enter the kingdom.

Sound exegesis makes it obvious that 1 Corinthians 6:9-11 and Galatians 5:18-24 teach, as do many other passages (Ephesians 5:5; 1 John 3:3-10; Revelation 21:8, 27; etc.) that no saved person, because he has received a new nature in regeneration, will be dominated by and continually practice sins such as fornication, theft, or idolatry. Since Scripture states, "Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Corinthians 6:9-10), someone who states that believers can be fornicators, idolators, drunkards, extortioners, and so on, is teaching exactly the opposite of what God has declared in His Word. Such a person has been deceived, and should heed the Scripture: "For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience" (Ephesians 5:5-6).

Many further passages of Scripture likewise teach the impossibility of a believer living just like an unconverted person. Just as, because of the dominant sin principle in him, it is impossible for an unbeliever to truly do good works, so it is equally impossible for a believer to be dominated by ungodly works, because of the dominant Divine principle of grace (Matthew 7:18-19), and thus the fact that everyone who does not do good works will be damned (Matthew 7:19) does not in any wise undermine eternal security. Christ's promise is that "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit" (Matthew 7:18). One notes that the parallel passages make it very clear that good works, not simply orthodox doctrine, is intended by good fruit (Matthew 3:8-10; Luke 6:43-48; Matthew 7:26-27—although orthodox doctrine is included within the larger category of good works).

The New Testament or Covenant (Hebrews 8:8-12; 9:15; 1 Corinthians 11:25; Jeremiah 31:31-34) involves God's promises of certain obedience: "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh. And I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them" (Ezekiel 36:26-27). Scripture is very clear that people who are dominated by sin will not enter the kingdom of God because they have never been saved.

John 15:1-11 teaches that the one who does not, as a summary of his life, continue (note the aorist tense in 15:6 for meno) faithful to Christ is, as a branch without genuine connection to the Lord, and one consequently with only an outward profession of Christianity, cast into hell fire, where he will be continually burned (present tense, 15:6) for all eternity. The image of John 15:6 is not one of loss of reward for a believer who never brings forth any fruit. Other than John 15:6, the verbs "cast forth" (ballo) and "burned" (kaio) are found together only in Revelation 8:8; 19:20. Neither reference speaks of believers being cast forth or burned. Revelation 19:20 (cf. 20:11-15; 21:8, "the lake which burneth (kaio) with fire and brimstone"), however, demonstrates that the lost will be "cast (ballo) . . . into a lake of fire burning (kaio) with brimstone." Furthermore, out of 125 instances of the verb "cast forth" (ballo) in the New Testament, believers are never once said to be cast forth by God, but the lost are, over and over again, said to be cast (ballo) into the fires of hell (note Matthew 3:10; 5:13, 25, 29-30; 7:19; 13:42, 48; 18:8-9; Mark 9:42 (cf. vv. 41-48), 45, 47; Luke 3:9; 12:58; 14:35; Revelation 2:22; 12:4, 9, 13; 14:19; 18:21; 19:20; 20:3, 10, 14-15). Thus, the verse indicates that a total lack of fruit is evidence of a non-living connection to the vine and thus of a unregenerate individual. The present tense of ballo, in "cast" them into the fire, refers vividly (cf. the present tenses in Matthew 3:10; 7:19; Luke 3:9; Revelation 2:22) to the unconverted being cast into eternal torment. The judgment of the lost in hell fire is associated with a similar plant and fruit-bearing image to that of Matthew 3:10; 7:19; Luke 3:9. These unregenerate, apostate, "withered" and fruitless branches (cf. Jude 12; Job 8:11-13; James 1:11), of which Judas is the contextual example in John 15, are often "cast forth" (also ballo, here aorist, as in Mark 9:45, 47; Revelation 20:15) in a certain sense in this life, through outward apostasy from the church, to which they had been outwardly united (cf. Matthew 13:47), whether voluntarily or through church discipline, but their ultimate rejection and separation from the elect will take place at the day of judgment. At that time the wheat and chaff, the branches truly united to Christ and those only professedly so, will be "gathered" (sunago, cf. Matthew 3:12; 13:30; 25:32; Luke 3:17) to their respective destinies of eternal joy and torment. The branches without union to Christ will glorify God's justice in their miserable damnation; they will not glorify God here by good works, but they will glorify His justice by their being burned eternally (Ezekiel 15:2-5; Romans 9:22). Note that Christ, in John 15:6 says "if a man" abide not, rather than "if ye abide not," for, Judas having been separated from them, the remaining disciples were all genuine believers.[704]

---

[704] Note the comprehensive study of John 15:1-11 and the significance of abiding in Christ in light of Ephesians 2:8-10 states, "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." God has ordained that all those justified by grace through faith apart from works will do good works. Good works mark a believer's life (2:10) as evil works mark an unbeliever's life (2:2-3). The certainty of the unconverted living for the devil is the same as the certainty of a believer living for God, although both those who have sin reigning in them and those who have grace reigning in them fulfill their predominant principles in different degrees.[705] The verb translated ordained in Ephesians 2:10, proetoimadzo, is found elsewhere in the NT only in Romans 9:23, where it refers to God's elective decree of the vessels of mercy to glory.[706] Thus, this verb refers to God's decretive will, which is never frustrated. "The active [voice] is used in our literature [the Bible and early Christian writings] only of God" (BDAG). Proetimadzo is not used for God's desire or wish, but for His decretive will, in the New Testament, as it is in the apostolic patristic writings.[707] Note also the common use of hetoimadzo for the certain decree of God in the New Testament.[708] Thus, Ephesians 2:10 teaches that God's

---

the other NT uses of the verb meno and the Old Testament background to the vine image in the chapter "A Study of the Biblical Doctrine of Abiding in Christ."

[705] Sometimes the fact that believers will certainly do good works is misrepresented as a view that good works are "automatic" for the saints, almost as if God forces them to do good works and their mind, will, and affections are not involved. Evil works are certain for unbelievers (Romans 8:8-9), but their unrenewed mind, will, and affections are certainly involved in their unavoidable sinning. Only if one wishes to call the conscious, deliberate sinning done by all unconverted people "automatic" can one represent the Scriptural teaching that believers, because of the indwelling Spirit and their new nature, are certain to do good works, as a position that good works are "automatic." The truth is that the New Covenant promises: "I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them" (Ezekiel 36:27), but the fact that God causes the regenerate to walk in His statutes does not turn them into puppets without any freedom of the will. "A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things" (Matthew 12:35), but the good works of the regenerate, and the evil works of the unregenerate, are still not "automatic."

It is interesting to note that, while sanctification is certainly not "automatic" in the sense described above, Scripture employs the adjective αὐτόματος, from which the English word automatic is derived, when describing the development of the reign of God in believers, that is, sanctification (Mark 4:28; cf. Acts 12:10; LXX Leviticus 25:5, 11; Joshua 6:5; 2 Kings 19:29; Job 24:24; Wisdom 17:6). The blessed influences of heaven upon believers leads them to certain spiritual growth in a manner comparable to that by which heavenly blessing leads crops to grow.

[706] Note also the use in the Apocryha in Wisdom 9:8.

[707] See 1 Clement 33:3; 38:3; Ignatius to the Ephesians 9:1; Martyrdom of Polycarp 14:2. The only other use is Shepherd 23:5, where the verb is not in the active voice and God is not the subject of the verb.

[708] Matt. 20:23 And he saith unto them, Ye shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father.

Matt. 20:23 καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, Τὸ μὲν ποτήριόν μου πίεσθε, καὶ τὸ βάπτισμα ὃ ἐγὼ βαπτίζομαι βαπτισθήσεσθε· τὸ δὲ καθίσαι ἐκ δεξιῶν μου, καὶ ἐξ εὐωνύμων μου οὐκ ἔστιν ἐμὸν δοῦναι, ἀλλ᾽ οἷς ἡτοίμασται ὑπὸ τοῦ πατρός μου.
Matt. 25:34 Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world:
Matt. 25:34 τότε ἐρεῖ ὁ βασιλεὺς τοῖς ἐκ δεξιῶν αὐτοῦ, Δεῦτε, οἱ εὐλογημένοι τοῦ πατρός μου, κληρονομήσατε τὴν ἡτοιμασμένην ὑμῖν βασιλείαν ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου.
Matt. 25:41 Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels:
Matt. 25:41 τότε ἐρεῖ καὶ τοῖς ἐξ εὐωνύμων, Πορεύεσθε ἀπ᾽ ἐμοῦ, οἱ κατηραμένοι, εἰς τὸ πῦρ τὸ αἰώνιον, τὸ ἡτοιμασμένον τῷ διαβόλῳ καὶ τοῖς ἀγγέλοις αὐτοῦ.
Mark 10:40 But to sit on my right hand and on my left hand is not mine to give; but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared.
Mark 10:40 τὸ δὲ καθίσαι ἐκ δεξιῶν μου καὶ ἐξ εὐωνύμων μου οὐκ ἔστιν ἐμὸν δοῦναι, ἀλλ᾽ οἷ ς ἡτοίμασται.
1Cor. 2:9 But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.
1Cor. 2:9 ἀλλὰ καθὼς γέγραπται, Ἃ ὀφθαλμὸς οὐκ εἶδε, καὶ οὖς οὐκ ἤκουσε, καὶ ἐπὶ καρδίαν ἀνθρώπου οὐκ ἀνέβη, ἃ ἡτοίμασε ὁ Θεὸς τοῖς ἀγαπῶσιν αὐτόν.
Heb. 11:16 But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly: wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God: for he hath prepared for them a city.
Heb. 11:16 νυνὶ δὲ κρείττονος ὀρέγονται, τοῦτ᾽ ἔστιν, ἐπουρανίου· διὸ οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται αὐτοὺς ὁ Θεός, Θεὸς ἐπικαλεῖσθαι αὐτῶν· ἡτοίμασε γὰρ αὐτοῖς πόλιν.
Rev. 9:15 And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men.
Rev. 9:15 καὶ ἐλύθησαν οἱ τέσσαρες ἄγγελοι οἱ ἡτοιμασμένοι εἰς τὴν ὥραν καὶ ἡμέραν καὶ μῆνα καὶ ἐνιαυτόν, ἵνα ἀποκτείνωσι τὸ τρίτον τῶν ἀνθρώπων.
Rev. 12:6 And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days.
Rev. 12:6 καὶ ἡ γυνὴ ἔφυγεν εἰς τὴν ἔρημον, ὅπου ἔχει τόπον ἡτοιμασμένον ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἵνα ἐκεῖ τρέφωσιν αὐτήν ἡμέρας χιλίας διακοσίας ἑξήκοντα.
Rev. 21:2 And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.
Rev. 21:2 καὶ ἐγὼ Ἰωάννης εἶδον τὴν πόλιν τὴν ἁγίαν, Ἱερουσαλὴμ καινήν, καταβαίνουσαν ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, ἡτοιμασμένην ὡς νύμφην κεκοσμημένην τῷ ἀνδρὶ αὐτῆς.

One could argue that in 2 Timothy 2:21 God's wish, rather than His decretive will, is in view:

2Tim. 2:21 If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work.
2Tim. 2:21 ἐὰν οὖν τις ἐκκαθάρῃ ἑαυτὸν ἀπὸ τούτων, ἔσται σκεῦος εἰς τιμήν, ἡγιασμένον, καὶ εὔχρηστον τῷ δεσπότῃ, εἰς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἡτοιμασμένον.

Note the similarities between 2 Timothy 2:21 and Ephesiahs 2:10, with the specific mention of preparation for good works. But on the text in Timothy, John Gill (Commentary) wrote: "And prepared unto every good work; which an unregenerate man is not; he is to every good work reprobate; he is not capable of performing good works; he is not prepared for them, nor ready at them; but a true believer, one that is regenerated, and sanctified by the Spirit of God, he is created in Christ Jesus unto good works; and has in the performing of them right principles, aims, and ends, as well as a supply of grace, by which he is enabled to do them." Thus, the text does not constitute an exception.

The instances above do not exhaust the uses of hetoimadzo in the New Testament; the verb is used in other ways that do not refer to the certain decree of God, or, for that matter, to God at all. The complete list of references is: Matthew 3:3; 20:23; 22:4; 25:34, 41; 26:17, 19; Mark 1:3; 10:40; 14:12, 15-16; Luke 1:17, 76; 2:31; 3:4; 9:52; 12:20, 47; 17:8; 22:8-9, 12-13; 23:56-24:1; John 14:2-3; Acts 23:23; 1 Corinthians 2:9; 2 Timothy 2:21; Philemon 1:22; Hebrews 11:16; Revelation 8:6; 9:7, 15; 12:6; 16:12; 19:7; 21:2.

unalterable sovereign decree is that those saved by grace will do good works. There is no such thing as an unchanged believer. Someone who is unchanged does not have saving faith (James 2:14-26).

Christ's High Priestly ministry guarantees that all believers will be sanctified. In John 17, the Lord Jesus prays that all those who have ever believed on Him (John 17:8, 20) will be with Him in heaven for all eternity: "Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world" (John 17:24). If even one person who ever trusted Christ for salvation were lost, the prayers of the Son of God would be a failure, something that is totally impossible (John 11:42), indeed, something blasphemous and unthinkable. However, Christ not only prays that all believers will be with Him in heaven, but that God the Father would make them all holy through the instrumentality of the Word of God: "Sanctify[709] them through thy truth: thy word is truth" (John 17:17). Christ's High Priestly ministry would be a failure, and the prayers of God's Beloved Son would be rejected, were one believer to not reach heaven. The same unthinkable consequences would follow were one believer unchanged and left unholy. Christ has prayed that all believers will be sanctified—so all believers are absolutely certain to be sanctified.[710]

Many passages of Scripture teach that all those who are justified will also be progressively sanctified and evidently changed. Some of these texts have been examined here (Matthew 7:18-19; John 15:1-11; 17:17; 1 Corinthians 6:9-11; Galatians 5:18-24; Ephesians 2:8-10; 5:5-6; Hebrews 8:8-12; and Revelation 21:8, 27). The assertion that regenerate people may be dominated by sin and entirely unchanged and fruitless is a rserious false doctrine and, indeed, an assault upon the power and nature of the gospel. Indeed, it is a fundamental misunderstanding of what is involved in justification and regeneration:

---

709 An aorist imperative ἁγίασον. Compare Ephesians 5:25-26 (ὁ Χριστὸς ἠγάπησε τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, καὶ ἑαυτὸν παρέδωκεν ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς· ἵνα αὐτὴν ἁγιάσῃ, καθαρίσας τῷ λουτρῷ τοῦ ὕδατος ἐν ῥήματι); 1 Thessalonians 5:23 (Αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης ἁγιάσαι ὑμᾶς ὁλοτελεῖς· καὶ ὁλόκληρον ὑμῶν τὸ πνεῦμα καὶ ἡ ψυχὴ καὶ τὸ σῶμα ἀμέμπτως ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τηρηθείη); Hebrews 2:11 (ὅ τε γὰρ ἁγιάζων καὶ οἱ ἁγιαζόμενοι, ἐξ ἑνὸς πάντες· δι᾽ ἣν αἰτίαν οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται ἀδελφοὺς αὐτοὺς καλεῖν); Revelation 22:11 (ὁ ἅγιος ἁγιασθήτω ἔτι). The believer's sanctification begins at regeneration and continues from that time forward (cf. the perfect tense ἡγιασμένοι ἐν ἀληθείᾳ in John 17:19).

710 While Christ's prayer guarantees that all believers will grow in holiness, the Lord did not pray that they would all grow at the same speed, or to the same extent—all believers "bea[r] fruit, and brin[g] forth," but some do so "an hundredfold, some sixty, some thirty" (Matthew 13:23). Not every believer bears "an hundredfold," but likewise none bears no fruit at all—and the lowest number mentioned, "thirty[fold]," is itself a striking harvest, evidence of special Divine influence.

> Corruption is the very penalty of sin from which we are freed in justification; holiness is the very reward which is granted us in justification. It is therefore absurd to suppose that sanctification can fail where justification has taken place. Sanctification is but the execution of the justifying decree. For it to fail would be for the acquitted person not to be released in accordance with his acquittal. . . . "[J]ustifying faith" itself necessarily brings sanctification, because justification necessarily issues in sanctification—as the chains are necessarily knocked off of the limbs of the acquitted man.[711]

On the other hand, the fact that all believers are certain to be sanctified, because of their union with Christ and the omnipotent power of God, is a great motive to the saint to press onward in his spiritual growth. Certainty of success provides him with a tremendous encouragement and incentive in his holy warfare against sin. "Through God we shall do valiantly: for he it is that shall tread down our enemies" (Psalm 60:12).

B. 1 John Teaches That All Saved People Are And Will Be Different

The view that only some believers possess the marks mentioned in 1 John was popularized in the late 1980s by the antinomian heretic Zane Hodges,[712] under the

---

[711] Pg. 100, Studies in Perfectionism, Part Two, The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 8, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Bible Software, 2008.

[712] The first written representative of this position was Keswick speaker Guy H. King, who put it in print in 1954 in his book The Fellowship (London: Marshall, Morgan & Scott; elec. acc. http://www.baptistbiblebelievers.com/NTStudies/FirstGeneralEpistleofJohnbyGuyKing/tabid/196/Default.aspx), after which it was taken up at Dallas Seminary, becoming spread most widely by Zane Hodges; see his Absolutely Free! (Dallas, TX: Redención Viva, 1989). As is well known and easily documented, Hodges "contends that saving faith cannot be distinguished from nonsaving faith by its fruits" and that "repentance is in no way necessary to becoming saved" (pgs. 506, 511, Systematic Theology, Norman L. Geisler, vol. 3. Minneapolis, MN: Bethany House, 2004). Furthermore, "Hodges rejects the Reformational view of faith as notitia, assensus, and fiducia. Rather, faith is simply believing saving facts about Jesus or taking God at his Word" (pg. 265, The Cross and Salvation: The Doctrine of Salvation, Bruce A. Demarest). J. I. Packer wrote, concerning Hodges' novel false gospel: "If ten years ago, you had told me that I would live to see literate evangelicals, some with doctorates and a seminary teaching record, arguing for the reality of an eternal salvation, divinely guaranteed, that may have in it no repentance, no behavioral change, no practical acknowledgment of Christ as Lord of one's life, and no perseverance in faith, I would have told you that you were out of your mind." (The Theology of the Christian life in J. I. Packer's Thought, J. D. Payne. Milton Keynes, UK: Paternoster, 2006). However, Hodges did not stop here; he went on to teach that the lost must only believe someone named "Jesus" guarantees everlasting life by faith alone—belief in the Trinity, in Christ's virgin birth, sinless and holy life, ascension, intercession, second coming, status as the God-man, status as the Son of God, death on the cross, burial, and resurrection, are not neceessary. Hodges' "Jesus" could be a mere man who was a sinner, indeed, a wicked man, who died in a car accident, never to rise again and return, but if one thought that this non-extant "Jesus" would give him eternal life, he would be saved. Hodges explained all this heretical and blasphemous trash in, among a variety of other settings, an article about how to lead people to Christ ("How to Lead People to Christ: Part 1: The Content of Our Message," Zane C. Hodges. Journal of the Grace Evangelical Society 13:2 (Autumn 2000) 3-12). With such a "Jesus" and such a gospel, it is not surprising that Hodges would deny that those who are regenerate will manifest the marks in 1 John. However, it would be not a little unwise to allow Zane Hodges' devilish false gospel (Galatians 1:8-9) to lead one to an incorrect view of the book that did not exist for the vast majority of church history.

influence of the weakness of Keswick theology on the certainty of the transformation of the regenerate stemming back to Keswick founder Hannah W. Smith.[713]

C. Excursus I: Does Colossians 2:6 Teach Sanctification by Faith Alone?

A variety of writers and speakers on sanctification[714] have affirmed that Colossians 2:6[715] establishes that the Christian serves the Lord in the same manner as that 713 Thus, for example, Hannah Smith preached at the Oxford Convention that assent to the statements of "believe" texts in Scripture "settles the question" of personal assurance—the transformed life 1 John indicates is key to assurance is not mentioned (pgs. 159-160, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874). This error was passed on to many in the Keswick movement, eventually flowering in people who were willing to actually deny, and defend their denial of the plain teaching of 1 John, in Guy King and Zane Hodges.

---

714 For example, William Boardman wrote:

> [K]eep always the very attitude taken when Jesus was accepted. 'As ye have received the Lord Jesus Christ, so walk ye in him—rooted and grounded in him,' saith the apostle. . . . Even so abide. So walk ye in him. . . . The command is . . . even as ye received Christ Jesus, so walk in HIM.' . . . by faith . . . [not] blind struggles to gain the goal by works. . . . [W]hat shall we tell the young convert about the higher life? . . . Tell him simply to abide in Jesus. As he has received him, so to walk in him. (pgs. 309-310, 329, The Higher Christian Life, Boardman)

Likewise, Hannah Whitall Smith wrote:

> Christians . . . know that the forgiveness of sins through Jesus might have been preached to them forever, but it would never have become theirs consciously until they believed this preaching, and claimed the forgiveness as their own. But when it comes to living the Christian life, they lose sight of this principle, and think that, having been saved by faith, they are now to live by works and efforts; and instead of continuing to receive, they are now to begin to do. . . . And yet it is plainly declared, that "as we have received Christ Jesus the Lord, so we are to walk in Him." We received Him by faith, and by faith alone; therefore we are to walk in Him by faith, and by faith alone. . . . [The Christian has] nothing to do but lie passive in the potter's hands. (The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life, Hannah Whitall Smith, Chapter 4, "How To Enter In," & Chapter 1, "Introductory: God's Side and Man's Side.")

Similarly, she preached: "You received Christ by faith at first, how have you walked in Him—by faith or by effort? . . . As you have received Him, so you are to walk in Him by faith also" (pgs. 68-69, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874. Italics in original.). When the Christian "lie[s] passive in His hands," then "He saves me fully" (Journal, April 25, 1973, reproduced in the entry for June 28 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). In another book, Mrs. Smith employs Colossians 2:6-7 in this manner while putting in print a rejection of the essential gospel truth of forensic justification by the imputed righteousness of Christ alone in favor of the accursed Catholic and Quaker heresy of justification by imparted or infused righteousness. Hannah W. Smith, commenting on Romans 10:4; 3:19-20, wrote:

> He [Christ] is our righteousness. That is, the life of Christ in our souls is a righteous life [an affirmation by which Mrs. Smith denies justification by the imputed righteousness of Christ and thus denies the gospel]. . . the life of Christ in the soul makes righteousness take possession of us. . . . [N]otice the significance of the 'as' and 'so' in the verse which says, 'As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in Him.' You received Him by simple faith alone, and you must walk in Him by simple faith alone also. (pgs. 193-194, Every-Day Religion, or The Common-Sense Teaching of the Bible, Hannah W. Smith. New York: Fleming H. Revell, 1893)

Hannah W. Smith published, as sound Quaker teaching, her view that "We not only receive life by faith, but, in just the same way, we must live by faith" in the Quaker Friends Review of 1867 (reproduced in the entry for February 18 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter; Hannah Smith recognized this view of Colossians 2:6-7 as a Methodist doctrine also; see pgs. 242-243, 245, The Unselfishness of God.). In misinterpreting Colossians 2:6-7 and denying the doctrine of justification, in which he received Christ at the moment of his conversion, that is, by faith alone. Indeed, in the Higher Life and Keswick movement "the text, more than any other, that . . . express[es] what [is] taught and experienced, is . . . Col. ii. 6, 7."[716] The verse allegedly establishes that one lives the Christian life by faith alone without works, just as one is justified originally by faith alone without works. It is argued that "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him," establishes that one lives for Christ now in the same manner in which one originally came to Him for mercy. A first act of simple faith received Christ for justification, and the justified Christian must subsequently with an additional or second act of faith receive Christ for sanctification. "As," or in the same manner that one received Christ, "so," in the same way, one is to walk in Him.

The word translated "as," hos (ὡς), is a common coordinating conjunction that appears 493 times in the New Testament. There are nine major definitions listed in

---

Hannah was indeed following the Quaker teaching of the premier Quaker theologian Robert Barclay, who taught that "justification consists in [a] subjective change" (Systematic Theology, Charles Hodge, vol. 1, pg. 94; cf. Barclay's Apology of 1678). Barclay was Hannah Smith's predecessor in teaching justification and sanctification were received in the identical manner and in denying the Biblical doctrine of justification:

> This most certain doctrine then being received, that there is an evangelical and saving light and grace in all . . . as many as resist not this light, but receive the same, in them is produced an holy, pure, and spiritual birth, bringing forth holiness, righteousness, purity, and all these other blessed fruits which are acceptable to God; by which holy birth (to-wit, Jesus Christ formed within us, and working his works in us) as we are sanctified, so are we justified in the sight of God. (pgs. vii-viii, cf. pgs. 87ff., Proposition 7, "Concerning Justification," and Proposition 8, "Concerning Perfection," An Apology for the True Christian Divinity: being an Explanation and Vindication of the Principles and Doctrines of the People called Quakers, Robert Barclay)

Note also the chapter below, "Hannah Whitall Smith: Speaker on Sanctification, Developer of the Keswick Theology, Quaker Quietist and Universalist Heretic," pg. 133, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874, etc.

Likewise, Robert "Pearsall Smith in the so-called Oxford-Brighton-Keswick Convention movement . . . augmented Luther's slogan 'being righteous by faith alone' with the following: 'as well as being completely holy by faith alone'" (pg. 246, Reformed Dogmatics, vol. 4, Herman Bavinck; cf. pgs. 121-122, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874).

Critiquing the doctrine of sanctification by faith alone, J. C. Ryle wrote: "I never heard of any well-taught Christian who did not hold that faith is the root of holiness, and that until we believe we are not sanctified at all. But [if] . . . a man is sanctified by faith in the same way, and in the same sense, and in the same manner, that he is justified by faith . . . why [does] St. Paul so often sa[y] that we are 'justified by faith without the deeds of the law' but never once says that we are 'sanctified by faith without the deeds of the law'[?]" (pg. 113, "The Brighton Convention and Its Opponents." London Quarterly Review, October 1875).

[715] Colossians 2:6-7 reads: 6 As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him: 7 Rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving.
Ὡς οὖν παρελάβετε τὸν Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν τὸν Κύριον, ἐν αὐτῷ περιπατεῖτε, ἐρριζωμένοι καὶ ἐποικοδομούμενοι ἐν αὐτῷ, καὶ βεβαιούμενοι ἐν τῇ πίστει, καθὼς ἐδιδάχθητε, περισσεύοντες ἐν αὐτῇ ἐν εὐχαριστίᾳ.

[716] pg. 320, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.

BDAG, with a variety of subcategories, providing a great variety of potential significations. A study of hos oun (ὡς οὖν), the construction found in Colossians 2:6, will be more helpful (and less exhausting) in understanding Colossians 2:6 than an examination of the hundreds of instances of ὡς in a different construction. The ὡς οὖν construction appears seven times in the New Testament:

John 4:1 Ὡς οὖν ἔγνω ὁ Κύριος ὅτι ἤκουσαν οἱ Φαρισαῖοι ὅτι Ἰησοῦς πλείονας μαθητὰς ποιεῖ καὶ βαπτίζει ἢ Ἰωάννης

John 4:1 When therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John,

John 4:40 ὡς οὖν ἦλθον πρὸς αὐτὸν οἱ Σαμαρεῖται, ἠρώτων αὐτὸν μεῖναι παρ᾽ αὐτοῖς· καὶ ἔμεινεν ἐκεῖ δύο ἡμέρας.

John 4:40 So when the Samaritans were come unto him, they besought him that he would tarry with them: and he abode there two days.

John 11:6 ὡς οὖν ἤκουσεν ὅτι ἀσθενεῖ, τότε μὲν ἔμεινεν ἐν ᾧ ἦν τόπῳ δύο ἡμέρας.

John 11:6 When he had heard therefore that he was sick, he abode two days still in the same place where he was.

John 18:6 ὡς οὖν εἶπεν αὐτοῖς ὅτι Ἐγώ εἰμι, ἀπῆλθον εἰς τὰ ὀπίσω, καὶ ἔπεσον χαμαί.

John 18:6 As soon then as he had said unto them, I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground.

John 20:11 Μαρία δὲ εἱστήκει πρὸς τὸ μνημεῖον κλαίουσα ἔξω· ὡς οὖν ἔκλαιε, παρέκυψεν εἰς τὸ μνημεῖον,

John 20:11 But Mary stood without at the sepulchre weeping: and as she wept, she stooped down, and looked into the sepulchre,

John 21:9 ὡς οὖν ἀπέβησαν εἰς τὴν γῆν, βλέπουσιν ἀνθρακιὰν κειμένην καὶ ὀψάριον ἐπικείμενον, καὶ ἄρτον.

John 21:9 As soon then as they were come to land, they saw a fire of coals there, and fish laid thereon, and bread.

Colossians 2:6 Ὡς οὖν παρελάβετε τὸν Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν τὸν Κύριον, ἐν αὐτῷ περιπατεῖτε, Colossians 2:6 As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him:

A study of these texts demonstrates that in each of the instances besides Colossians 2:6, hos oun is a temporal marker. This would strongly suggest that it is so in Colossians 2:6 as well, supporting a view that the "as" is not an affirmation that one is to walk in Christ in the same way as one received Him originally for salvation, but a declaration that since or as one received Him in a past time, one is consequently commanded to walk in Him. The idea of "in the same way, then" is impossible as a rendering of the New Testament hos oun constructions other than Colossians 2:6. A temporal notion for hos oun is also supported by the LXX,[717] the apostolic patristic literature,[718] generally contemporary pseudepigraphical works,[719] Philo,[720] and Josephus.[721] In contrast, the "in the same way, then" idea is entirely unsupported. The [717] The only text in which ὡς οὖν appears is Esther 1:17-18: καὶ γὰρ διηγήσατο αὐτοῖς τὰ ῥήματα τῆς βασιλίσσης καὶ ὡς ἀντεῖπεν τῷ βασιλεῖ ὡς οὖν ἀντεῖπεν τῷ βασιλεῖ Ἀρταξέρξῃ οὕτως σήμερον αἱ τυραννίδες αἱ λοιπαὶ τῶν ἀρχόντων Περσῶν καὶ Μήδων ἀκούσασαι τὰ τῷ βασιλεῖ λεχθέντα ὑπ᾽ αὐτῆς τολμήσουσιν ὁμοίως ἀτιμάσαι τοὺς ἄνδρας αὐτῶν, "for he has told them the words of the queen, and how she disobeyed the king. As then, said he, she refused to obey king Artaxerxes, so this day shall the other ladies of the chiefs of the Persians and Medes, having heard what she said to the king, dare in the same way to dishonour their husbands." (BLXX). The temporal sense is supported by the "this day." It is true that the other women would, it is alleged, follow Vashti's bad example. However, this is not something derived from the ὡς οὖν, but from the "in the same way" (ὁμοίως) later in the passage.

---

[718] 2 Clement 8:1 is the sole instance: Ὡς οὖν ἐσμὲν ἐπὶ γῆς, μετανοήσωμεν., "So, then, while we are yet on earth, let us repent." Note that the "while" temporal idea in the English translation is associated with the ὡς οὖν; ἐσμὲν alone would not provide it.

[719] ὡς οὖν εἶδον ὅτι μαινομένη βίᾳ κρατεῖ τὰ ἱμάτιά μου, γυμνὸς ἔφυγον . . . ὡς οὖν ἤμην ἐν πέδαις, ἡ Αἰγυπτία ἠσθένει ἀπὸ τῆς λύπης, καὶ ἐπεκροῶτό μου, πῶς ὕμνουν κύριον ὢν ἐν οἴκῳ σκότους, καὶ ἱλαρᾷ φωνῇ χαίρων ἐδόξαζον τὸν θεόν μου, μόνον ὅτι διὰ προφάσεως ἀπηλλάγην τῆς Αἰγυπτίας.

"When, therefore, I saw that in her madness she was holding fast to my garment, I left it behind, and fled away naked. . . . And when I was in bonds, the Egyptian woman was oppressed with grief, and she came and heard how I gave thanks to the Lord and sang praises in the abode of darkness, and with glad voice rejoiced, glorifying my God that I was delivered from the lustful desire of the Egyptian woman." (Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, Joseph 8:3, 5)

[720] The only instance is Allegorical Interpretation (Legum) 2:82: οὐχ ὁρᾷς ὅτι καὶ ἡ ἄρχουσα σοφία Σάρρα φησίν· "ὃς γὰρ ἂν ἀκούσῃ, συγχαρεῖταί μοι;" ἀλλὰ φέρε τινὰ ἰσχῦσαι ἀκοῦσαι, ὅτι τέτοκεν ἡ ἀρετὴ τὴν εὐδαιμονίαν Ἰσαάκ, καὶ εὐθὺς συγχαρητικὸν ὕμνον ὑμνήσει. ὡς οὖν τοῦ ἀκούσαντός ἐστι τὸ συγχαίρειν, οὕτως τοῦ σωφροσύνην καὶ θεὸν ἰδόντος εἰλικρινῶς τὸ μὴ ἀποθνῄσκειν. "Do you not see that wisdom when dominant, which is Sarah, says, 'For whosoever shall hear it shall rejoice with me.' But suppose that any were able to hear that virtue has brought forth happiness, namely, Isaac, immediately he will sing a congratulatory hymn. As, therefore, it can only be one who has heard the news that can sympathise in one's joy, so also it can only be he who has clearly seen temperance and God, who is safe from death."

[721] Antiquities 1:252 Ὡς οὖν τούτου γενομένου παρῆγε τὸν ξένον
As soon then as this was over, she introduced the stranger;
Antiquities 2:247 ὡς οὖν εἰς τὴν γῆν
As soon . . . as . . . [was come] to the land
Antiquities 2:343 ὡς οὖν ὁ τῶν Αἰγυπτίων στρατὸς ἅπας ἐντὸς ἦν
As soon, therefore, as ever the whole Egyptian army was within it, Antiquities 4:7 Ὡς οὖν ταῦτ᾽ ἄμεινον αὐτοῖς ἔξειν ἔκριναν καὶ τοῖς πολεμίοις ἐπῆλθον
When, therefore, they had come to this resolution, as being best for them, they went against their enemies;
Antiquities 5:110 ὡς οὖν τῆς ὑμετέρας αὐτῶν σωτηρία
Take therefore such measures in this assembly, as supposing that your own safety, Antiquities 6:110 ὡς οὖν ἦκον εἰς τὴν παρεμβολὴν ὁ Ἰωνάθης παρεθάρσυνε τὸν ὁπλοφόρον
As soon, therefore, as they came to the camp, Jonathan encouraged his armor bearer, Antiquities 6:145 ὡς οὖν ἀπεῖπεν ὁ θεὸς τῇ τοῦ προφήτου δεήσει
As soon therefore as God had rejected the intercession of the prophet Antiquities 7:296 ὡς οὖν ταῦτα παρὰ τῶν προφητῶν ἔμαθεν ἐπιζητεῖν τὸν θεόν μεταπέμπεται τοὺς Γαβαωνίτας
As soon therefore as the king understood that this it was which God sought, he sent for the Gibeonites, Koiné background makes it clear that the hos oun of Colossians 2:6 is a declaration that as the Colossian church received Christ temporally in the past, they were consequently to walk in Him. The syntax of the passage does not affirm that Christians are to walk by faith alone now in the same manner in which they received Christ by faith alone; it simply states that they did receive Him in the past, and commands them to walk in Him. No second act of faith where Christ is specifically appropriated for sanctification by the believer is mentioned or hinted at anywhere in the passage. The way believers are to walk in Him is explicated in v. 7, not by the first clause of v. 6. There is nothing in the syntax of Colossians 2:6-7[722] that indicates that a believer is sanctified by faith alone in the same way that he was originally justified by faith.[723] One who preaches this doctrine

---

Antiquities 8:409 ὡς οὖν πλήξαντος αὐτοῦ τὸν Μιχαίαν μηδὲν συνέβη παθεῖν Ἄχαβος θαρρήσας
So when, upon his smiting Micaiah, no harm happened to him, Ahab took courage, Antiquities 12:303 ὡς οὖν ἐν τῷ παρόντι κειμένων ὑμῖν ταύτην τε ἀπολαβεῖν
Since, therefore, you are in such circumstances at present
Antiquities 12:311 ὡς οὖν ταῦθ᾽ οὕτως ἔχοντα ἔμαθον οἱ σὺν Γοργίᾳ
When, therefore, those that were with Gorgias understood that things were in this posture, Life of Josephus 292 ὡς οὖν ἀνεχωρήσαμεν ἐπὶ τὰ ἑαυτῶν οἱ μὲν περὶ τὸν Ἰωνάθην γράφουσι τῷ Ἰωάννῃ
As soon, therefore, as we were gone home, Jonathan and his colleagues wrote to John [722] It is possible that one with a strong English preservation view of the KJV could allege that the italicized "so" in Colossians 2:6 demonstrates that one receives Christ by faith in the same way as one walks in Him. This contention fails, however, because: 1.) The word is in italics. It is not in Greek. One should not build his theology using words that are not in the New Testament but are helpful in translating it into English. Such words need to be interpreted in light of what the Greek words teach that were actually dictated by the Holy Ghost. Words not in Greek cannot be made normative for interpreting words that are in Greek. 2.) The idea of "so" in the English could very easily be "therefore," "consequently," "thus," or some other similar phrase that communicates the idea, "Since you received Christ at a moment in the past, therefore walk ye in Him," rather than "In the same way that you received Christ in the past, walk in Him now." As commentators have well said: "The particle 'so' is supplied by our translators. . . . No stress should be laid on it, as is often done. The meaning is, simply, 'Since you have received Christ as your Lord as he was preached to you, hold fast the doctrine which you have received, and do not permit yourselves to be turned aside by any Jewish teachers, or teachers of philosophy.'" (Albert Barnes). "Many persons lay a certain stress on the words as and so, and make various fine heads of discourses from them; viz. . . . as ye received him in a spirit of faith, so walk in him, &c., &c. This may be all proper in itself; but nothing of the kind was intended by the apostle. His meaning is simply this: Seeing ye have embraced the doctrine of Christ, continue to hold it fast, and do not permit yourselves to be turned aside by sophistical or Judaizing teachers." (Adam Clarke)

[723] In addition to the body of commentaries, the conclusions above are sustained in other exegetical resources. For example, S. Lewis Johnson, Jr., who is very sympathetic to the doctrinal conclusion erroneously derived from Colossians 2:6, nevertheless noted in the journal Bibliotheca Sacra:

> The Pauline exhortation to progress in the life of faith (2:6–7). The warning against defection through deception is followed by exhortation to advance in the life of faith. The oun (AV, "therefore") marks the transition. We meet with difficulty in this sixth verse, which revolves around the force of the adverb hōs (AV, "as").
>
> (1) Popular expositors have often explained the passages as if Paul were saying: You received Christ by the initial exercise of faith; now, therefore, continue your Christian life by a constant trust in Him. Life from Colossians 2:6-7 is not preaching what the Holy Spirit, the Author of sanctification, intended when He inspired the text. Since the Holy Spirit does not lead men to misinterpret Scripture, one who preaches Colossians 2:6-7 as a proof-text for a doctrine not found in the passage is not being led by the Spirit. Such a one is also not helping Christians to be genuinely sanctified, but is misleading them and hindering their growth in grace.

Not only does Colossians 2:6-7 fail to teach sanctification by faith alone, or that one must take Christ in a second work of grace for sanctification, but such doctrines are absent from the entirety of the Bible, contradicting the affirmations of some theologies of sanctification.[724] If the New Testament were filled with statements such as: "We begins and proceeds upon the principle of faith. The truth is most certainly a New Testament one, but does Paul have it in mind here?

---

(2) On the other hand, there is substantial support for a different interpretation, namely, that Paul is exhorting his readers to let their conduct accord with the truths they received. The hōs would then refer to the form in which they received Christ, i.e., the doctrines. By the first-mentioned view the hōs would refer to the principle upon which they received Christ, i.e., faith. As Moule points out, by this second view there is a virtual identification of the tradition of the facts about Christ with the believer's experience of the Lord Himself (cf. 1:7; Eph 4:20–21). This interpretation is supported by the use of paralambanō in Paul (AV, "received"), which almost always refers to the reception of truth through transmission (cf. 4:6; 1 Cor 11:23; 15:1, 3; Gal 1:9, 12). The expression in verse seven, "as ye have been taught," adds further support. But the context is most decisive. The apostle has been warning (vv. 4–5) and will continue (v. 8) to warn against the heretical teaching at Colosse. In the midst of the admonition there very appropriately is placed the exhortation to persist in the genuine teaching. Paul, then, means in verse six: As you Colossians received the Messiah, Jesus the Lord, in the preaching of Epaphras, in accord with the truth of his preaching, and not in accord with the enticing words of the heretics, continue your Christian life. The present tense in peripateite (AV, "walk") stresses the permanent character of this walk in the Lord. Keep walking in Him.

The details of the walk are described in the seventh verse. The contrast in the tenses of the participles should be noted. The erridsōmenoi (AV, "rooted") is in the perfect tense and, therefore, stresses the initial rooting of the Colossians' faith in Christ when the good news was preached to them and the derived and developing life resulting from it. The three following present participles set forth the specific ways in which the life is to continually express itself—in progressively greater stability amid thanksgiving. (pgs. 305-306, "Studies in the Epistle to the Colossians, Part VI: Beware of Philosophy." Bib Sac 119:476 (Oct 62) 302-311)

Colossians 2:6 simply does not affirm that a believer is sanctified by faith alone, just as he is justified by faith alone.

[724] For example, following the theology of Hannah W. Smith, the Keswick movement teaches that a believer "steps into . . . uniform sustained victory over known sin . . . not by . . . laborious effort, but by a deliberate and decisive act of faith. . . . According to Keswick, we are not sanctified by self-effort or by works, but by faith . . . [s]anctification, like justification, is by grace alone. . . . We are asked . . . to accept holiness by faith in the same way that we accept justification by faith. . . . Freedom from the dominion of sin is a blessing we may claim by faith, just as we accept pardon. . . . Deliverance is not attained by struggle and painful effort, by earnest resolutions and self-denial, but . . . is stepped into by simple faith. . . . The Keswick position is that in Scripture sanctification comes by faith, and not in another way. . . . The heart and core of Keswick teaching is its doctrine of sanctification by faith. . . . Sanctification is thus the result, not of attempts at suppression of the flesh, but of faith in the finished work of Calvary" (pgs. 84, 86, 89, 90, 97, 100, 107, So Great Salvation: The History and Message of the Keswick Convention, Steven Barabas). Were the Keswick affirmation simply one that believers walk by faith (2 Corinthians 5:7) and do not reject God's strength to depend upon their own independent efforts, the doctrine would be Biblical. However, the Keswick affirmation goes beyond these truths to deny that faith-based, God-dependent effort and struggle conclude that a man is sanctified by faith without the deeds of the law," or "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be sanctified in his sight," or "Knowing that a man is not sanctified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be sanctified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for by the works of the law shall no flesh be sanctified," (compare Romans 3:28, 20; Galatians 2:16), the conclusion that Scripture teaches sanctification by faith without works in the same way that justification is by faith without works would be justified. However, there are no such verses in the New Testament.[725] Furthermore, the Bible contains commands in relation to sanctification such as 2 Peter 1:5-11: "[G]iving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity," so that these holy character traits "abound" in the believer. Believers are never told that, to advance their justification, they must add virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity, and have these traits of holiness abound in them—but they do advance their sanctification in this manner. Justification is by faith without works, but are involved in progressive sanctification, affirming instead that sanctifying faith ceases from working in the same manner that justifying faith does (Romans 4:5). The only passage Barabas ever cites to provide alleged support for this Keswick doctrine of sanctification by faith alone is Romans 6, which says nothing about it. Keswick may affirm that both justification and sanctification are by faith alone, but it cannot prove the latter doctrine from Scripture.

---

[725] Acts 26:18, "To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me" (ἀνοῖξαι ὀφθαλμοὺς αὐτῶν, τοῦ καὶ ἐπιστρέψαι ἀπὸ σκότους εἰς φῶς καὶ τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ Σατανᾶ ἐπὶ τὸν Θεόν, τοῦ λαβεῖν αὐτοὺς ἄφεσιν ἁμαρτιῶν, καὶ κλῆρον ἐν τοῖς ἡγιασμένοις πίστει τῇ εἰς ἐμέ.), is about the only verse in the Bible that one could attempt to establish a doctrine of progressive sanctification by faith from. The verse teaches that at the moment every believer turns from darkness to light and from Satan to God through repentant faith in Christ, he receives forgiveness of sins and positional sanctification. Since the sanctification mentioned in the verse is the positional sanctification of all believers, which they receive at the same moment that they "receive forgiveness of sins," the text establishes absolutely nothing in favor of a doctrine of progressive sanctification by faith alone. Furthermore, the sanctification in the verse is the possession of all the regenerate, not of a select minority that have entered into a Higher Life by means of a post-conversion discovery of a doctrine of progressive sanctification by faith alone. Note also that Acts 20:32, which is not only the single other reference to the verb hagiadzo, "to sanctify," in Acts but even shares the same perfect passive substantival participle as Acts 26:18, contains a similar reference to an "inheritance" (κλῆρος/ κληρονομία), and is also on the lips of the Apostle Paul, likewise refers to the positional sanctification possessed by all the people of God. Compare the perfect passives in Romans 15:16; 1 Corinthians 1:2; 7:14; Hebrews 10:10; Jude 1.

while faith is absolutely necessary for sanctification (Hebrews 11:6),[726] progressive growth in holiness involves not faith alone, but also effort and works, in a way justification does not.[727]

The fact that neither Colossians 2:6-7, nor any other text in Scripture, teaches that the believer is sanctified by faith alone just as one is justified by faith alone should not be employed to minimize the essential role of living by faith for progressive sanctification. The truth of 2 Corinthians 5:7, "we walk by faith, not by sight," and the fact that "without faith it is impossible to please . . . God" (Hebrews 11:6) must not be neglected. Believers must live by faith and grow in their faith.[728] They should not misinterpret Colossians 2:6-7 and adopt a doctrine of sanctification by faith alone that is absent from the Bible, and so hinder their growth in holiness, nor react against this misinterpretation of Colossians 2:6-7 to minimize the importance of living by faith, and so hinder their growth in holiness.

D. Excursus II: Romans 7:14-25: A Depiction of Part of the Normal Christian Life

In Romans 7:14-25, Paul refers to the normal state of his Christian life as representative of believers in general. He does not speak of his unconverted state. Unbelievers do not hate sin (Romans 7:15) and have nothing within themselves that is against it (7:16-17, 19-20[729]), nor do they will to do right (7:18; cf. 3:11), nor do they 726 Anyone who would argue that sanctification must be by faith alone because a verse such as Hebrews 11:6 affirms that it is impossible to please God without faith would likewise have to argue that 1 Corinthians 13 establishes that sanctification is by love alone, since it is impossible to please God without love. Such an argument is a obvious example of a logical converse fallacy.

---

727 "A servant of Jesus does the trusting in no other sense than he does the loving, the hoping, the watching, the praying, the striving. To all these the Lord moves him by the joint agency of his Spirit and his Word. The idea of a simple passive trust springing from the human heart, as the God-appointed condition of sanctifying grace from Christ, is foreign to the Word of God" (pg. 127, Doctrine of the Higher Christian Life Compared With the Teaching of the Holy Scriptures, by Alvah Hovey).

728 Sometimes those who incorrectly make Colossians 2:6-7 into a proof-text for sanctification by faith alone likewise deny that faith can grow, affirming that Scripture teaches only that one either has faith or that one does not. Such an assertion is false. See the discussion in the chapter "The Just Shall Live By Faith."

729 "[When Paul writes in Romans 7:19], 'The good that I would (θέλω), I do not, but the evil which I would not (οὐ θέλω), that I do (πράσσω),' [he means that by] reason of his regeneration and the implanting of the new life he is centrally and steadily inclined to holiness and disinclined to sin, but in a particular instance, under the stress of a temptation addressed to the remainders of his sinful inclination derived from his fall in Adam, he commits by a volition or choice, a single sin. His inclination is right, but his volition is wrong. And, be it observed, the volition in this instance gets its sinful quality from the

"delight in the law of God," nor do they possess a holy "inner man" (7:22), nor do they have a godly mind that wants righteousness (7:23, 25; cf. 1:28; 8:5, 7; Ephesians 2:3; Colossians 1:21; 2:18; Titus 1:15) and "thank God through Jesus Christ" because of freedom from the bondage of sin (Romans 7:25). Francis Turretin[730] effectively demolishes the position that Romans 7:14-25 deals with Paul in his unregenerate state:

> Socinus [believes] that Romans 7 does not treat of Paul as renewed, but as constituted under the law. . . . Arminius agrees with him. . . . [However,] we cannot recede from the opinion commonly received among the orthodox, which is that Paul speaks of himself as renewed and that this severe struggle (often occuring between the old and new man, the flesh and spirit) is here described by him.
>
> There are various reasons which prove it: (1) from the notation of time.[731] Paul does not speak in a past tense (as before in v. 9), but in a present tense—"I am carnal" (v. 14); "I do not the good I would, I delight in the law of God" (v. 19, 22). Now when he wrote this, he was no more under the law, but under grace. (2) He treats of him to whom the willing of good and the nilling of evil (or a hatred of sin) belongs: "For what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I" (v. 15) and "For to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not" (v. 18). Now this belongs only to the renewed, in whom God works both "to will and to do" (to thelein kai to energeini) although they are not always allowed to carry out what they wish (for us, to others who can think nothing good, how can they be said to will it?). (3) He treats of him who consents to the law of God in the inner man and who delights in it (v. 22), from which delight arises service—"With the mind I serve God" (v. 25). But who would say that any other than a believer delights in the law of God and according to it serves God; or that the inner man is any other than the new man?[732] He is frequently designated as such (Ephesians 3:16; 2 Corinthians 4:16; 1 Peter 3:4). (4) remainders of sinful inclination, of which it is the executive, and not from the holy inclination, of which it is not the executive and with which it conflicts." (Dogmatic Theology: Anthropology, William G. T. Shedd, Chapter 3, "The Human Will," Supp. Help #31. Elec. acc. in Christian Library Series, vol. 17: Systematic Theologies, AGES Library, Rio, WI: 2006). The statement of Romans 7:19 simply does not describe the state of an unregenerate person.

---

730 Pgs. 697-699, Institutes of Elenctic Theology, vol. 2, Topic 17:11-15. Trans. George Musgrave Giger, ed. James T. Dennison, Jr. Philippsburg, NJ: Presbyterian and Reformed, 1994). Further evidence is examined in "Romans 7:14-25: Pauline Tension in the Christian Life," David S. Dockery. Grace Theological Journal 2:2 (Fall 1981) 239-258; see also J. I. Packer's incisive article, "The 'Wretched Man' in Romans 7." Studia Evangelica 2:1 (1964) 621-627.

731 "The first section [of Romans 7 under consideration] (vss. 7-13) is all in the past tense, and the natural way to understand it is as autobiography. . . . The second section (vss. 14-25) is written entirely in the present tense. Grammatically, therefore, the natural way to read it would be as a transcript fo Paul's self-knowledge at the time of writing[.] . . . [T]here is no recognized linguistic idiom which will account for the change of tense, [so] it follows that the only natural way for Paul's readers to interpret the present tenses of vss. 14ff. is as having a present reference, and as going on to describe something distinct from the past experience which the previous verses have recalled; and we must suppose that Paul knew this when he wrote them. [The idea that v. 14ff. continue to describe Paul's previous state as unconverted must] accuse Paul of wantonly obscuring his own meaning, and laying himself open to needless misunderstanding, by a change of tense for which there is no reason at all" (pgs. 622, 624, "The 'Wretched Man' in Romans 7," J. I Packer).

732 While some writers deny it, Scripture does in fact parallel the outward/inward man (ὁ ἔξω ἄνθρωπος/ὁ ἔσω/ἔσωθεν ἄνθρωπος; Romans 7:22; 2 Corinthians 4:16; Ephesians 3:16) and the old/new man (ὁ παλαιὸς ἄνθρωπος/ὁ καινὸς/νέος ἄνθρωπος; Romans 6:6; Ephesians 4:22-24 (cf. 2:15); Colossians 3:9-10). The outward man is corrupting/perishing (present passive of διαφθείρω, 2 Corinthians 4:16), and the old man is corrupting likewise (present passive of φθείρω, Ephesians 4:22). The verb διαφθείρω, employed for the corruption of the outward man, speaks not merely of physical decline but sinful corruption, as it does likewise in the reference to men of "corrupt minds"

He speaks of him in whom are distinguished two principles: one according to which he does the evil which he would not; the other according to which he does not perpetrate evil, but sin dwelling in him perpetrates it, and according to which he serves God (v. 17-19). Now it is evident that this can be said only of the believer, who has within him the old man and the new man, the flesh and the Spirit. (5) He treats of him who groans on account of his misery and who seeks and wishes for deliverance and congratulates himself and gives thanks when he has obtained it (v. 24-25)—which refer to no one except the renewed person. (6) A middle state between the regenerate and unregenerate is a pure invention, as if there were a middle ground between the child of God and the child of the Devil, between a living and a dead man. Nor can this be referred to the state under the law because those who lived under it were either reprobates (who were under it as a covenant and so under its curse, Galatians 3:10); or renewed (who were under it as a dispensation, in which although more sparingly and obscurely, still the grace of the regenerating Holy Spirit was granted to them).

Paul ascribes nothing here to himself which cannot be found in the renewed. Not his saying that "he is carnal and sold under sin" (v. 14), because this is not to be understood absolutely, but comparatively and relatively;[733] as Paul calls the Corinthians "carnal, and not spiritual" (1 Corinthians 3:1) because they still exhibited in their actions many remains of the flesh and the old man. Not a universal sale and captivity as to state, as if he were still under the dominion of sin, because thus he would neither delight in the law of God according to the inner man, nor could he be said to serve God with his mind; rather a particular captivity and selling as to certain acts, in which sense the flesh is said to lust against the Spirit, so that we do not what we would (Galatians (διεφθαρμένων ἀνθρώπων τὸν νοῦν, 1 Timothy 6:5). The verb φθείρω, used for the corruption of the old man, is almost always employed for sinful corruption in the New Testament (1 Corinthians 3:17 (in this verse, the sole NT instance where φθείρω does not refer to sinful corruption is paralleled with an instance where the verb does do so); 15:33; 2 Corinthians 7:2; 11:3; Ephesians 4:22; Jude 1:10; Revelation 19:2). Also, φθείρω and διαφθείρω are employed comparably not only in Ephesians 4:22 and 2 Corinthians 4:16, but also in Revelation 19:2 and Revelation 11:18. Furthermore, the only two texts with the verb ἀνακαινόω in the New Testament refer, once, to the inward man being renewed (present tense, 2 Corinthians 4:16) and once to the new man being renewed (present tense, Colossians 3:10). An examination of the outward/inward man texts clearly indicates that the contrast involved is not merely one between the bodily human organism and a man's inner being, but one between the sinful and the holy in believers. This contrast is very obvious in the old/new man texts as well. Note, finally, the parallel to the inward man/new man in 1 Peter 3:4's reference to the incorruptible (ἀφθαρτός) hidden man of the heart (ὁ κρυπτὸς τῆς καρδίας ἄνθρωπος).

---

The fact that the outward/inward man is employed of spiritual corruption and renewal does not mean that there is no association at all between the outward man and the physical decay of the human body. The existence of decay in the current world-system is a result of the entrance of sin with the fall of man. In the antelapsarian universe, as in the new heavens and new earth to come, physical decay, the concomittant of sin, is not present. The spiritual new creation in the believer is associated with the physical new creation to come, as the spiritual and physical outward man are associated. One sees this old/new dynamic in the fact that references to the outward/inward, corruptible/incorruptible in the believer refer to both his spiritual and physical aspects, in the fact that the flesh refers to both indwelling sin in the saint and to his physical body in this age as contrasted with his spiritual body to come (cf. 1 Corinthians 15:42-50), and in other areas of the doctrine of sanctification.

733 Thomas Smith explains:

> When the apostle says, "I am carnal," we do not undersand him as denying that he is spiritual also. But could the apostle make the general statement, "I am carnal," if it were true that he was also spiritual? We are not left to conjecture upon this point; for just four verses further on he makes precisely the same statement, accompanying it with the explanation that it is in this sense that he makes it: "In me, that is, in my flesh, there dwelleth no good thing." That assuredly is not the languge of a carnal man, but of a spiritual man, to whom the remnants of a carnal nature still adhere. . . . [I]n the apostle's judgment, the unregenerate man has no "inward man." He is carnal inwardly as well as outwardly, all of a piece. He has not only flesh, but a "carnal mind," all flesh together. . . . [N]one but the spiritual man [truly] knows himself to be carnal[.] (pgs. 278-279, "Means and Measure of Holiness," Thomas Smith. The British and Foreign Evangelical Review (April 1876) 251-280)

5:17). Nor when he says "sin dwells in him," because it is one thing to dwell, another to reign. That denotes the presence of sin as it exists in the believer even unto the end, but this denotes its tyranny and dominion, which is overcome by the Spirit of Christ. Not that "he wishes for deliverance" from "the body of death," since the believer is freed from the law of sin and death. For an inchoate deliverance and a perfect deliverance differ: one is from the curse of the law and exposure to death; the other from the dominion of sin and mortality (which attends it). The believer has already obtained the first, but he as yet expects and wishes for the other.[734]

Although a struggle between the appetite and reason often occurs in the unregenerate, such as in the Medea of the poet, who said, "I see the good, approve it too, and yet the wrong pursue" (Ovid, Metamorphosis 7:20-21 [Loeb, 1:342-343]), still there is a great difference between this and the struggle of the flesh and the Spirit of the renewed (of which Paul speaks). (1) As to their causes, the struggle of the unrenewed arises from the dictation of the conscience (or the strictures of the natural light, which have their seat principally in the intellect) and from the fear of punishment; the struggle of believers arises from the new and supernatural quality or principle of the Holy Spirit, which is spontaneously borne along to those things which are good; not only from a slavish dread of punishment, but from a filial reverence of God. (2) As to their subject, the light of the unregenerate is merely theoretical, remaining in the intellect and not reaching to the heart. But the light of grace (granted to the renewed) not only inheres in the governing (to hegemoniko) or superior part of the soul, but passes also to the concupiscible (to epithymetikon) or its lower part. (3) As to their objects, the contest of the unregenerate is occupied only about the more gross sins, which all abominate by the natural light; while the contest of believers is occupied with those also which (in the external court of men) are neither subjected to punishment, nor to any rebuke. (4) As to their effects, the former struggle can consist with the daily practice of sin and if it sometimes causes that good be done or evil avoided, still it can never arise to this—that it should be well done—and so represses rather than destroys sin; hence at last the reason with its light yields and is conquered. But in the struggle of believers, the flesh is bruised and mortified to such a degree that even if it cannot be eradicated absolutely and as yet exerts itself in many acts, still it cannot prevail, but is at length overcome by the Spirit, who makes believers more than conquerors (hypernikan).

---

734 "The freedom from sin's power which Christ bestows in this world is less than the deliverance for which the 'wretched man' cries out. For what he desires is deliverance 'out of (ἐκ) the body of this death,' i. e. this mortal body, which is at present sin's place of residence (v. 23). But that deliverance will not come until 'this mortal shall have put on immortality' (1 Corinthians 15:53): a consummation for which, according to Romans 8:23, those who have the Spirit wait, groaning. And it is surely this groaning, in exact terms, which Romans 7:24 voices. What the 'wretched man' is longing for is what 8:23 calls 'the redemption of our body.' But if this is so, then what he gives thanks for in v. 25a must be the promise that through Christ this blessing will ultimately be his. And if v. 25a is a thanksgiving, not for a present deliverance from the condition described in vss. 15-23, but for a hope of future deliverance from it, then the juxtaposition of v. 25b ceases to be a problem [as it is on the view that Paul speaks of himself in v. 14-25 as unconverted]. On this exegesis, v. 25b is neither a non sequitur nor an anticlimax: it is simply a summing-up of the situation thus far described, a state of affairs which will last while mortal life lasts. The man in Christ serves the law of God with his mind, in the sense that he wants and wills to keep it perfectly, but with the flesh he serves the law of sin, as appears from the fact that he never is able to keep the law as perfectly and consistently as he wishes to do. The emphatic αὐτὸς ἐγώ, "I, even I," [of v. 25, KJV "I myself"] expresses Paul's sense of how painfully paradoxical it is that a Christan man like himself, who desires so heartily to keep God's law and do only good, should find himself under the constant necessity of breaking the law and doing what in effect is evil. But such is the state of the Christian till his body is redeemed" (pg. 626, "The 'Wretched Man' in Romans 7," J. I Packer). That is: "[A]s to the agonizing question, 'Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?' [t]he unregenerate, merely carnal, man does not regard his carnal self as a body of death, although it is such; but the spiritual man so regards the remnants of his carnal self. . . . The importance of the answer [to the question] depends upon the form of the question. Who shall deliver? I thank God, through Jesus Christ my Lord (I shall be delivered). And therefore, since such ultimate deliverance is in store for those who, while they have flesh, yet do not walk after the flesh, there is even now no condemnation" (pg. 279, "Means and Measure of Holiness," Thomas Smith. The British and Foreign Evangelical Review (April 1876) 251-280).

To make Romans 7:14-25 into a description of an unconverted sinner is more consistent with Pelagianism than with the Biblical picture of the depravity of man.[735]

Romans 7:14-25 also cannot be correctly understood as the life of a lower category of Christian who has not discovered the secret of sanctification by faith alone or of higher life theology but is trapped in legalistic bondage and attempts at self-dependent Christianity and so lives in perpetual sin and defeat. Lewis Sperry Chafer presents this view:

> Two extended passages bear upon the conflict which continues in every believer between the flesh and the Spirit, and therein is presented the only way of deliverance. In the first of these passages (Rom 7:15 to 8:4), the Apostle testifies, first, of his own complete failure and, second, of his victory. The failure is complete in spite of the fact that he has made his greatest possible effort to succeed. In Romans 7:15–25 the conflict is between the regenerate man (hypothetically contemplated as acting independently, or apart from, the indwelling Spirit) and his flesh. It is not between the Holy Spirit and the flesh. Probably there is no more subtle delusion common among believers than the supposition that the saved man, if he tries hard enough, can, on the basis of the fact that he is regenerate, overcome the flesh. The result of this struggle on the part of the Apostle was defeat to the extent that he became a "wretched man"; but, out of this experience, he learned a most vital and important lesson, namely, that there are two mighty tendencies always in the child of God, one aspiring to that which is good, and the other demanding that which is evil. This is the meaning of the conflict between "I," the old nature, and "I," the new nature, as recorded in Romans 7:15–25, and there could be no more conclusive verdict rendered at the end of this impotent effort than the Apostle sets forth in verse 25: "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh [I serve] the law of sin."
>
> The Apostle's testimony is not closed thus. He goes on to report the discovery of a new principle of procedure, and a new and sufficient power available. The "Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," quite apart from his own regenerate self which had so ignominiously failed, makes him free from the law or power of sin and death (8:2). He testifles further that "the righteousness of the law,"-meaning here vastly more than any written code, including, as it does, all the will of God as to every detail in every moment of the believer's life-is fulfilled in him, but never fulfilled by him. This marvelous experience, the Apostle goes on to state, is granted to those only "who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit" (8:4). Thus the Apostle prepares for the truth set forth in the second major passage (Gal 5:16–24) where the conflict is not between the regenerate man and his flesh with its inevitable defeat, but between the indwelling Holy Spirit and the flesh. We read: "This I say then, Walk in [or by dependence on] the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh (5:16). No greater promise of victory over the flesh could be extended to the child of God than this. Not, indeed, by self-crucifixion of the flesh, nor by a supposed second work of grace by which the flesh is eradicated, but by the immediate and unceasing, overcoming power of the 735 Snodgrass also notes concerning the idea that Romans 7:14-25 describes Paul in his unconverted state: "[T]o say nothing of the violence which is done to the understanding of the common reader, in supposing the apostle to describe past events in the use of the present tense—to say nothing of the absurdity of an unconverted sinner exclaiming, as he does in this passage, 'I delight in the law of God after the inward man'—to say nothing of the striking similarity between his language here and in other places in which he speaks, confessedly as a christian, of the flesh lusting against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh . . . all of these considerations apart, it is enough to decide the question, to bring it into the light of historical facts, concerning which there can be no dispute. Let any candid inquirer look back upon the character and life of this distinguished individual, before his conversion; and see whether, in the progress of his history, there is no place for such a scene as that which is here described [cf. Philippians 3:4-6]" (pgs. 38-42, The Scripture Doctrine of Sanctification).

---

> Spirit. The believer must learn the life of faith in which he depends upon the provided power of God. Apart from this faith there is only defeat; but with this faith there is blessed deliverance from the flesh and its lusts or desires.[736]

Without question, a believer who is self-dependent, who is not looking in faith to his Triune Sanctifier for strength and spritual life, is going to decline spiritually (cf. 2 Corinthians 1:9).[737] Believers must live by faith if they are to grow (cf. Hebrews 11:6). However, Romans 7:14-25 does not specifically deal with this fact, nor does Romans present Paul in a lower Christian life in 7:14-25 from which he allegedly passes, starting in Romans 8:1, into a higher life of faith. Romans 7:14-8:4ff. does not teach that there are two sorts of Christians, one type that lives in perpetual defeat and the other in perpetual victory. Chafer's view has a number of serious problems. First, while a distinction between believers who are in fellowship with God and drawing closer to Him, and those who are out of fellowship, is clearly present in Scripture (1 John 1:9; 1 Corinthians 11:29), nowhere does the Bible speak of regenerate people who are "complete[ly] failure[s]" and produce no fruit at all.[738] Second, it is impossible for a believer to make "his greatest possible effort to succeed" in living for God while wickedly rejecting the aid and assistance of the Holy Spirit. Third, while saints can certainly grieve and quench the Spirit, one must very seriously question if a regenerate man can totally and absolutely "act independently, or apart from, the indwelling Spirit." Where does the Bible clearly present such a possibility? On the other hand, if Chafer means that such rebellious absolute independent action by saints is merely "hypothetically contemplated" but never actually exists in the world, one would wonder why such an extended passage of Scripture would address a situation that never actually takes place, and wonder whether advocates of Chafer's position ought to preach from Romans 7:14-25, since nobody on earth is ever actually in the situation presented. Fourth, Romans 7:14-8:4ff. does not set up a contrast between two categories of Christians, one of which has a lower life of perpetual defeat and the second of which has a higher life of perpetual victory because they are in the sub-category of Christians "who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Romans 8 teaches that all who are "in Christ Jesus" will 736 Pgs. 404-406, "The Doctrine of Sin, Part 4," Bibliotheca Sacra 92:368 (Oct 35) 394-411.

---

737 "[W]e ought continually to wait and depend on God for supplies of his Spirit and grace, without which we can do nothing. . . . God is more the author, by his grace, of the good we do than we ourselves ("Not I, but the grace of God which was with me")[.] . . . [W]e ought to be careful that by our negligences and sins we provoke not the Holy Spirit to withhold his aids and assistances, and so to leave us to ourselves, in which condition we can do nothing that is spiritually good" (pgs. 458-459, A Discourse Concerning the Holy Spirit, John Owen. Book 4:2. Elec. acc. AGES Digital Software Library, Christian Library Series vol. 9. Rio, WI: 2005).

738 Compare Section III, "The Certainty of Practical Sanctification For All The Regenerate."

"walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit"[739] (8:1)—those who do not walk after the Spirit instead of the flesh are still unregenerate and under "condemnation" (8:1). Those who are still "after the flesh" rather than "after the Spirit" (8:5) are the enemies of God who are headed to spiritual death in hell, while all believers, all who are indwelt by the Spirit, are "after the Spirit" (8:6-12) and characteristically walk after the Spirit. Those who live after the flesh will die spiritually, while those who are "led by the Spirit of God"—led "through the Spirit [to] mortify the deeds of the body"—they, and they only, "are the sons of God" (8:13-14).

Sound exegesis demands that the death which those who walk after the flesh undergo in Romans 8 (and those who characteristically yield themselves to sin in Romans 6; cf. v. 16, 21) is spiritual death in hell, not just some sort of lack of fellowship with God experienced by regenerate people who are allegedly stuck in a Romans 7:14-25 type of Christian experience. The verb for death in Romans 8:13, apothnesko (ἀποθνῄσκω), used in the warning "if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die," is found 49 times in Paul's epistles and 111 times in the New Testament.[740] Among a variety of other categories of use, the word is clearly employed with a reference to spiritual death by both Paul (Romans 5:15; 1 Corinthians 15:22; 2 Corinthians 5:14) and other New Testament writers (John 6:50; 8:21, 24, 52; 11:25-26; Jude 12). Not one of the 111 instances of the verb clearly speaks of saved people suffering a "death" consisting of lack of fellowship with God because of a legalistic Christian life. Furthermore, the death promised the carnally minded in Romans 8:6, indicated by the noun thanatos (θάνατος), which appears 119 times in the New Testament[741] and which Paul employs 50 times in his epistles, is clearly used, among a variety of other ideas, for spiritual death by Paul (Romans 1:32; 5:12, 21;

---

739 The removal of the inspired μὴ κατὰ σάρκα περιπατοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ πνεῦμα in 8:1 in modern Bible versions that follow the corrupt modern critical Greek text, in opposition to the Textus Receptus and c. 95% of Greek MSS, to adopt one of a number of other readings that possesses only a tiny fraction of MSS evidence, is very unfortunate.

740 Matthew 8:32; 9:24; 22:24, 27; 26:35; Mark 5:35, 39; 9:26; 12:19-22; 15:44; Luke 8:42, 52-53; 16:22; 20:28-32, 36; John 4:47, 49; 6:49-50, 58; 8:21, 24, 52-53; 11:14, 16, 25-26, 32, 37, 50-51; 12:24, 33; 18:32; 19:7; 21:23; Acts 7:4; 9:37; 21:13; 25:11; Romans 5:6-8, 15; 6:2, 7-10; 7:2-3, 6, 9; 8:13, 34; 14:7-9, 15; 1 Corinthians 8:11; 9:15; 15:3, 22, 31-32, 36; 2 Corinthians 5:14-15; 6:9; Galatians 2:19, 21; Philippians 1:21; Colossians 2:20; 3:3; 1 Thessalonians 4:14; 5:10; Hebrews 7:8; 9:27; 10:28; 11:4, 13, 21, 37; Jude 1:12; Revelation 3:2; 8:9, 11; 9:6; 14:13; 16:3.

741 Matthew 4:16; 10:21; 15:4; 16:28; 20:18; 26:38, 66; Mark 7:10; 9:1; 10:33; 13:12; 14:34, 64; Luke 1:79; 2:26; 9:27; 22:33; 23:15, 22; 24:20; John 5:24; 8:51-52; 11:4, 13; 12:33; 18:32; 21:19; Acts 2:24; 13:28; 22:4; 23:29; 25:11, 25; 26:31; 28:18; Romans 1:32; 5:10, 12, 14, 17, 21; 6:3-5, 9, 16, 21, 23; 7:5, 10, 13, 24; 8:2, 6, 38; 1 Corinthians 3:22; 11:26; 15:21, 26, 54-56; 2 Corinthians 1:9-10; 2:16; 3:7; 4:11-12; 7:10; 11:23; Philippians 1:20; 2:8, 27, 30; 3:10; Colossians 1:22; 2 Timothy 1:10; Hebrews 2:9, 14-15; 5:7; 7:23; 9:15-16; 11:5; James 1:15; 5:20; 1 John 3:14; 5:16-17; Revelation 1:18; 2:10-11, 23; 6:8; 9:6; 12:11; 13:3, 12; 18:8; 20:6, 13-14; 21:4, 8.

6:23; 7:5; 2 Corinthians 3:7), and other New Testament writers (Matthew 4:16; Luke 1:79; John 5:24; 8:51-52; 1 John 3:14). Indeed, thanatos is the word employed for "the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone . . . the second death" (Revelation 21:8; 2:11; 20:6). Not one clear New Testament text employs thanatos for a spiritual "death" experienced by the regenerate on earth when they are allegedly stuck in a Romans 7:14-25 type of life. Also, the verb live (ζάω) in Romans 8:13 promises eternal life to those who through the Spirit mortify the deeds of the body. The verb is used 71 times by Paul and 142 times in the New Testament.[742] It is never used for a sort of spiritual life possessed only by an elite group of Christians, while it is employed (among other uses, such as the common sense of physical life) for the everlasting life possessed by all God's people by Paul and other New Testament writers (Romans 1:17; Galatians 3:11; Hebrews 10:38-39; John 6:58; 11:25). The related noun for life (ζωή), which appears 39 times in Paul (cf. Romans 6:22-23; 8:2, 6) and 134 times in the New Testament,[743] is used the large majority of the time for eternal life[744] in Paul and the rest of the New Testament but is never used for a Christian life possessed only by some believers. Neither the words for death nor the words for life in Romans 6-8 are ever clearly used for a type of spiritual life possessed only by a certain group of higher-level Christians or for a type of death possessed only by a certain group of lower-level Christians.[745] Thus, all Christians, all

---

[742] Matthew 4:4; 9:18; 16:16; 22:32; 26:63; 27:63; Mark 5:23; 12:27; 16:11; Luke 2:36; 4:4; 10:28; 15:13; 20:38; 24:5, 23; John 4:10-11, 50-51, 53; 5:25; 6:51, 57-58, 69; 7:38; 11:25-26; 14:19; Acts 1:3; 7:38; 9:41; 10:42; 14:15; 17:28; 20:12; 22:22; 25:19, 24; 26:5; 28:4; Romans 1:17; 6:2, 10-11, 13; 7:1-3, 9; 8:12-13; 9:26; 10:5; 12:1; 14:7-9, 11; 1 Corinthians 7:39; 9:14; 15:45; 2 Corinthians 1:8; 3:3; 4:11; 5:15; 6:9, 16; 13:4; Galatians 2:14, 19-20; 3:11-12; 5:25; Philippians 1:21-22; Colossians 2:20; 3:7; 1 Thessalonians 1:9; 3:8; 4:15, 17; 5:10; 1 Timothy 3:15; 4:10; 5:6; 6:17; 2 Timothy 3:12; 4:1; Titus 2:12; Hebrews 2:15; 3:12; 4:12; 7:8, 25; 9:14, 17; 10:20, 31, 38; 12:9, 22; James 4:15; 1 Peter 1:3, 23; 2:4-5, 24; 4:5-6; 1 John 4:9; Revelation 1:18; 2:8; 3:1; 4:9-10; 5:14; 7:2, 17; 10:6; 13:14; 15:7; 16:3; 19:20; 20:4.

[743] Matthew 7:14; 18:8-9; 19:16-17, 29; 25:46; Mark 9:43, 45; 10:17, 30; Luke 1:75; 10:25; 12:15; 16:25; 18:18, 30; John 1:4; 3:15-16, 36; 4:14, 36; 5:24, 26, 29, 39-40; 6:27, 33, 35, 40, 47-48, 51, 53-54, 63, 68; 8:12; 10:10, 28; 11:25; 12:25, 50; 14:6; 17:2-3; 20:31; Acts 2:28; 3:15; 5:20; 8:33; 11:18; 13:46, 48; 17:25; Romans 2:7; 5:10, 17-18, 21; 6:4, 22-23; 7:10; 8:2, 6, 10, 38; 11:15; 1 Corinthians 3:22; 15:19; 2 Corinthians 2:16; 4:10-12; 5:4; Galatians 6:8; Ephesians 4:18; Philippians 1:20; 2:16; 4:3; Colossians 3:3-4; 1 Timothy 1:16; 4:8; 6:12, 19; 2 Timothy 1:1, 10; Titus 1:2; 3:7; Hebrews 7:3, 16; James 1:12; 4:14; 1 Peter 3:7, 10; 2 Peter 1:3; 1 John 1:1-2; 2:25; 3:14-15; 5:11-13, 16, 20; Jude 1:21; Revelation 2:7, 10; 3:5; 11:11; 13:8; 17:8; 20:12, 15; 21:6, 27-22:2; 22:14, 17, 19.

[744] See Matthew 7:14; 18:8-9; 19:16-17, 29; 25:46; Mark 9:43, 45, 10:17, 30; Luke 10:25; 18:18, 30; John 1:4; 3:15-16, 36; 4:14, 46; 5:24, 26, 29, 39, 40; 6:27, 33, 35, 40, 47, 48, 51, 53, 54, 63, 68; 8:12; 10:10; 11:25; 12:25, 50; 14:6; 17:2-3; 20:31; Acts 2:28; 3:15; 5:20; 11:18; 13:46, 48; Romans 2:6; 5:17, 21; 6:4, 22-23; 7:10; 8:2, 6, 10; 11:15; 2 Corinthians 2:16; 4:10-12; 5:4; Galatians 6:8; Ephesians 4:18; Philippians 2:16; 4:3; Colossians 3:3-4; 1 Timothy 1:16; 4:8; 6:12, 19; 2 Timothy 1:1, 10; Titus 1:2; 3:7; James 1:12; 1 Peter 3:7, 10; 2 Peter 1:3; 1 John 1:1-2; 2:25; 3:14-15; 5:11-13, 16, 20; Jude 21; Revelation 2:7, 10; 3:5; 13:8; 17:8; 20:12, 15; 21:6, 27; 22:1-2, 14, 16, 19.

[745] The affirmation of this sentence is not that, in every one of the hundreds of verses discussed, independently considered, such a sense, were it already clearly established, is impossible. Some—indeed, many—of the verses neither prove nor disprove the existence of such a sense. However, before one can who are "in Christ," not a certain portion only, are characterized by a walk that is "after the Spirit" and not "after the flesh" (Romans 8:1). Those who characteristically walk after the flesh are unsaved and headed to spiritual death in hell, while those whose lives are characterized by a walk after the Spirit will, because they have been justified by faith alone and been given a new nature, receive eternal life. This exegetical fact means that the idea that a certain portion of Christians is described in Romans 7:14-25, while another group is described in Romans 8:1ff., is impossible.

Futhermore, the statements of 8:1-4 are tied into 7:14-25. Romans 8:1ff. is not set in contrast to 7:14-25, but explains it. "Therefore"[746] (8:1)—because of the truth of 7:14-25—there is no condemnation to those in Christ, those who walk after the Spirit, not after the flesh, having been set free by regeneration (8:2ff.). Unbelievers have no struggle with sin, since they have no new principle in them through regeneration, but believers have a new spiritual life so that they hate sin, delight in the law of God, and serve Him (7:15, 22, 25). Those with this new principle of life in them will be saved (8:1, 6, 10-11, 13-14) and will be different (8:1-4, 13-15). The development of the argument in Romans 7:14-8:1ff. demonstrates that the idea that one category of Christians is described by the second half of chapter seven and another category by chapter eight is false. Romans 7:14-25 describes the struggle in every true believer, in those who are "in Christ Jesus" and therefore "who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit" (8:1), those who with their mind serve the law of God (cf. 12:2) and thank God through Christ Jesus for the progressive victory over sin the Spirit produces in them (7:25). Indeed, the closer a believer grows to God, the more the victory over sin described in Romans 6-8 is experientially manifest in his life, the more he will hate the indwelling sin that still remains in him, and the more passionately he will be able to concur with the lamentations of Romans 7:14-25 about what remains of his indwelling corruption. Romans 7:25-8:1ff.

---

conclude that a particular text speaks of a higher spiritual life that only some Christians possess, or a lower Christian life that is really "death" that an inferior sub-category of Christians possess, sound hermeneutics require that such an idea must be required and clearly established in at least one passage—otherwise eisegesis is being employed instead of correct exegesis. The ideas of eternal life and eternal death in hell very easily pass this test of required meaning in at least one passage (i. e., Romans 5:12-21). The higher life/lower "death" view does not, so it cannot be read into texts that, on their own, could go either way. A hermeneneutic that allows verses that do not disprove a particular notion to have that idea read into them would allow, not only a higher/lower Christian life/death notion, but the idea that the Bible employs "life" to speak of being alive when in a spaceshuttle orbiting the moon—after all, does, say, Luke 2:36 prove that Anna did not live with her husband for the seven years of their marriage in orbit?

[746] "ἄρα . . . marker of an inference made on the basis of what precedes . . . in declarative statement. . . . so, then, consequently, you see" (BDAG). "ἄρα: a marker of result as an inference from what has preceded . . . 'so, then, consequently, as a result.' οὐδὲν ἄρα νῦν κατάκριμα 'so, then, there is now no condemnation' Ro 8:1" (Louw-Nida, 89.46).

proves that 7:14-25 do not describe a hopeless,[747] flesh-controlled, sub-par Christian, but a Spirit-produced striving against indwelling sin, the normal Christian life of the apostle Paul and the rest of the regenerate.

---

747 Recognizing that all believers on earth experience Romans 7:14-25 does not lead to spiritual despair or to acceptance of a low level of Christian experience. Contrast the article on sanctification in The Baptist Encyclopedia (vol. 3; Elec. acc. Baptist History Collection, ver. 1. Paris, AK: Baptist Standard Bearer, 2005) by William Cathcart:

> Sanctification. — Sanctification (ἁγιασμός) is separation from the world, purity of heart and life, holiness. The inspired truth of God is the instrument by which the soul is sanctified, and the Spirit of God is the author of that blessed work. It commences in the soul when the Comforter gives a new heart, and when he imparts that faith in Jesus which enables the believer to shake off the allurements and power of sin. Its nature is often misunderstood by Christians. In the unconverted man there is but one bent, one inclination, and it always points to some form of selfishness or sin. He forgets God, or only thinks of him to resist him. And though his conscience may occasionally remonstrate with him, yet he has but one purpose in life. The Christian has two dispositions: the controlling one is governed by love to Christ and hatred of sin; the inferior one is composed of the remains of his corrupt nature, and it is full of hatred to Jesus and a holy life. These opposite inclinations are found in some measure in every regenerated member of Christ's family, from the most perfect disciple, ready for heaven, to the most defective believer, just born of the Spirit. There never was a true believer on earth entirely free from the abiding evil of which Paul speaks in Romans 7:23: "But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members." This law of sin needs continual watching, and it needs resistless grace; and it only perishes in a child of God when death destroys the life of the body. Sanctification, after it is commenced by the new birth and a firm reliance upon Christ, consists in a constant growth in faith and in love to Christ; these developments of the religious life impose increased restraints upon our evil tendencies, and give additional power to our earnest and frequent prayers for grace to overcome every foe of Jesus within and around us. We should aim at complete consecration to God. . . . Paul says, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." When any creature was given to a Jewish priest to be offered up to God in sacrifice, nothing was retained by the worshiper, not even a portion of the hair or of the wool. A Jewish altar must be built not of hewn, but of whole stones (Joshua 8:31); the priest must not be deformed or injured: he must be a perfect physical man; and the sacrifice must be without blemish, and must be given whole to the priest. And we are required to present our bodies a living sacrifice, an enduring and complete offering to God. Sanctification is a progressive work. Paul says, "Leaving the principles (rudiments) of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection;" that is, unto the full development of Christian graces. An intelligent patriot, in a time of war, enlists; but though he loves his country, and has a strong body and a vigorous mind, he needs drilling to make him useful. Five thousand veterans could chase one hundred thousand warriors of his order. But let him be drilled for six months, and pass through two or three battles, and he is fitted for anything which the experienced and brave patriot can achieve. So the believer, as he journeys along the narrow way, learns more every day of the cunning and perseverance of sin, and of the power of grace to resist it; and while he may never be freed from the attacks of the tempter, nor from his internal weaknesses, till death, yet he may become a powerful veteran in watching, fighting, and routing sin; and he may become strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, so that sin shall never have dominion over him. A holy heart and life give the richest pleasure. When the believer falls he prepares for the most miserable doubts, and for bitter repentance. Soon he will be crying, "Has God forgotten to be gracious?" "Cast me not away from thy presence and take not thy Holy Spirit from me." "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation and uphold me with thy free Spirit." And, besides, the chastising hand of God may fall heavily upon him and his, to make him renounce sin. But if he is only faithful to Jesus, grace equal to every trial will be given him; Jesus will walk with him in every furnace of affliction, and give him joy when the most acute anguish shall scourge others. So Paul was blessed in his sorrows, and as a result, he says, "We glory in tribulations also;" and so the martyrs have been favored as their bodies were subjected to the worst woes that human cunning could invent; the Saviour filled them with his love, and they had overflowing pleasures in their agonies. Holiness of heart pleases God. The sin of the angels drove them from heaven. The guilt of our first parents expelled them from Paradise. The sinful pride of Moses, when he smote the rock for water, shut him out of the earthly Canaan. We should follow after holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord, and without which our prayers will not be heard, for David says, "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me." It gives the world the noblest testimony to the power of Christ. A community of holy persons attracts the attention of all around them. Their purity of life and love to Jesus become proverbial, and with the greatest eloquence and success they preach

J. I. Packer discusses and critiques the Keswick position[748] set forth by Hannah W. Smith[749] and advocated by Steven Barabas[750] and others,[751] which is very similar to the Cross of Jesus, even when they do not utter a word. In this way they keep the Saviour's words, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven."

---

Cathcart's recognition of the applicability of Romans 7:14-25 to all believers did not lead him to despair, or to a low level of Christian life, nor stop him from calling Christians to "complete consecration to God." Similarly, in a critique of Higher Life theology, Dr. Alvah Hovey wrote: "[T]he Christian is not left to contend with his evil nature by the simple force of holy purpose in his renewed heart, but . . . is assured of victory by the presence and power of the Spirit of Christ. Left to himself he would be no match for the strength of sin in his old nature; but by union with Christ he is not only set free from condemnation, but also strengthened with might by the Spirit, and set forward every day on the way to complete victory over sin" (pg. 68, Doctrine of the Higher Christian Life Compared With the Teaching of the Holy Scriptures). Such statements, by those who maintain the classic view of Romans 7:14-25 and of sanctification in general, are hardly the sentiments of hopeless despair.

[748] John Murray also points out a number of serious problems with the Keswick view of Romans 7:14-25:

> It is to be appreciated that the Keswick leaders, as a rule, interpret Romans 7:14-25 as depicting the experience of one who is a believer. But when they maintain that 'the experience of struggle and defeat here described is not the God-intended normal experience of Christians, but shows what happens when any person, regenerate or unregenerate, tries to conquer the old nature by self-effort' (p. 77 [Barabas, So Great Salvation]), then we must dissent on several grounds. It is a bold assertion to describe the struggle of Romans 7:14ff. as one of defeat and that categorically and without qualification. And where is the evidence to support the inference that this depicts the struggle which ensues when a person 'tries to conquer the old nature by self-effort' or that it 'is descriptive of a Christian regarded in himself, apart from active faith in Christ' (p. 78)? Are such protestations as 'I delight in the law of God after the inward man' (v. 22) and 'Consequently then I myself with the mind serve the law of God' (v. 25), the language of a Christian 'apart from active faith in Christ'? Finally, if, even on Keswick assumptions, we properly estimate the implications of the sin which still dwells in the believer, then the conflict, indeed the contradiction, delineated in Romans 7:14ff. is inevitable. Granting the presence of sin in any form or to any degree and granting that the person is regenerate, it is futile to argue that this conflict is not normal. Anyone imbued with sensitivity to the demands of holiness and who yearns to be holy as the Father in heaven is holy must experience the contradiction which Romans 7:14ff. portrays. A believer without this tension would be abnormal. The more sanctified the believer is, the more conformed he is to the image of his Saviour, the more he must recoil against every lack of conformity to the holiness of God. If we take seriously the contradiction which resides in the believer between the flesh and the Spirit, between sin and righteousness, between unholiness and holiness, how could it be otherwise? As long as sin remains there is contradiction within the saint, and it is contradiction without reservation. It is only by ignoring the reality of the contradiction that we can get away from the necessity of this inward conflict. The holier a regenerate person is the more conscious will he be of the gravity of the sin that remains and the more poignant will be his detestation of it. There is no need or place for a contrast between the exultant confidence of Romans 8 and the struggle of Romans 7:14ff. The more intense the conflict of Romans 7, the more the apostle gloried in the triumphing grace and hope of Romans 8 and of Romans 7 itself. And the more he gloried in the certitudes of Romans 8 and 7, the more he would be conscious of the contradiction which rested in his own bosom. It is only by evading the realities of sin and grace that we can escape from the stern realism of the conflict of Romans 7. There is a grand candour in this passage, the candour of inspired utterance. (pgs. 285-286, Collected Writings of John Murray, vol. 4, review of So Great Salvation, Barabas)

Both Murray and Packer effectively demonstrate that the Keswick view of Romans 7:14-25 is certainly false.

[749] Hannah W. Smith considered Romans 7:14-25 as a description of "the wearying and unsuccessful conflict with sin" from which one escapes in Romans "eight" (Letter, 1866, reproduced in the entry for February 14 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter; see also Letter to Miss Beck, August 25, 1878, reproduced in the entry for September 5). However, Mrs. Smith, as she meditated on the subject intending to write on it in the Quaker Friend's Review, recognized: "The Scriptures certainly say very little about there being two experiences in the Christian life. For the most part the Christian is evidently spoken of and looked upon as one who has actual possession of all the fullness of Christ's salvation." To deal with those who reject the Higher Life and second blessing theology because of this lack of Scriptural evidence, she recommended: "The way to meet the arguments of those who say there is only one experience, is to ask them whether they individually and experimentally are enjoying the fullness of the gospel, whether they have habitual victory and uninterrupted peace . . . ask them . . . what are those Christians to do who don't possess this fullness, whose peace is not uninterrupted, and whose victories are alternated with defeats. . . . The experimental argument is the only one that will meet these opposers. 'Have you got it? If not, how are you going to get it; or if you have it, how am I to get it?'" The "wilderness," where Israel was "neither in Egypt nor in the Promised Land," represents the "7th of Romans, the wilderness experience of the Christian." This view cannot be proven by exegeting Scripture, but experience proved that it was true: "The truth is we have got to deal with facts, and the fact is that the majority of Christians do need and must have a second experience . . . It is hardly worthwhile for any one to tell those of us who have taken these two steps, that there is but one. We know better; and our own experience is far more convincing to us than a thousand theories" (Letter to Miss Beck, reproduced in the entries for September 5-6 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). Thus, Hannah W. Smith recognized that only experience could establish the Higher Life theology—its opponents could not be answered with Scripture. It was clear, however, that the classical view of Romans 7 could not be correct, for it would lead to self-examination, watchfulness, and an abhorrance of remaining indwelling sin, while such feelings were not consonant with the end of the Higher Life—feeling happy—which required that one be careless about indwelling sin or ignorant of its presence by opposition to self-examination. Rather, one must practice the Quietism of Fenelon. Hannah wrote: "Give up all future self-reflective acts. . . . It is the rule of my life never to think over any past action. This . . . enables me to live continually in the present moment with God. Fenelon says, 'Make it a rule to put an end, at the close of every action, to all reflections upon it, whether of joy or sorrow. When we are no longer embarrassed by these restless reflections of self, we begin to enjoy true liberty. False wisdom, on the other hand, [is] always on the watch . . . [and] suffers severely whenever it is permitted to perceive the smallest speck of imperfection in self. The chagrin we feel at our own defects is often a greater fault than the original defect itself[.'] . . . Nothing so decidedly [contributes to] solid spiritual progress, as when one is able to view one's own failures without being disturbed" (Letter to Priscilla, January 22, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 9 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). Surely the fact that Mrs. Smith's carefree happiness was hindered by the old view of Romans 7 indicated that it must be in error.

Hannah Smith advocated what became the Keswick view of Romans 7:14-25 in "the first article she ever published, in the Friends Review," proving that "George Fox" recognized that Romans 7:25a was the key to escape from the life of Romans 7:14-24, and that Christ "must live" the Christian life "for us" (excerpt from the Friends Reivew reproduced in the entry for February 17 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). The Keswick and Higher Life theology was good Quaker teaching, and Hannah W. Smith delighted to meditate upon and reference the writings of George Fox and other Quakers in her writings (e. g., Letter to Mother, March 18, 1867; Letter to Frank, April 4, 1871; Letter to Father and Mother, June 9, 1875, Letter to a Friend, May 18, 1879 reproduced in the entries for March 7, June 1, July 26 & September 14 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

750 "'Keswick' and the Reformed Doctrine of Sanctification." The Evangelical Quarterly, vol. 27 (1955) 153-167. Packer is reviewing the book So Great Salvation: The History and Message of the Keswick Convention by Steven Barabas. Note the analysis of this book in Appendixget the number!!) Packer's article is a devastating critique of Barabas' position overall: "There was thus no response from the Keswick faction which rebuffed the critique offered by Packer. It is widely agreed that Packer's review marked the end of the dominance of the Keswick approach among younger evangelicals . . . the theological weight of Packer's critique seemed to many to prove unanswerable." (pg. 79, J. I. Packer: A Biography, A. McGrath. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker, 1997). However, Packer's rebuttal has the serious weakness that Packer rejects (pgs. 160-161) what he calls "a mystical doctrine of personal communion with the Holy Ghost" and likewise opposes the idea that a "life in which the Holy Spirit plays no conscious part is sub-normal Christianity." Packer gives no verses from the Bible for his rejection of personal communion with the Holy Ghost (contra 2 Corinthians 13:14), but simply blows fellowship with Him off as being "magic" by a quote from B. B. Warfield. Packer's acceptance of a life in which the Holy Spirit plays no conscious part is a dangerous error in his doctrine of sanctification. One wonders if his vehement opposition to the doctrine of conscious fellowship with the Holy Ghost stems from the incredible amount of quenching and grief the Spirit recieves from the liturgical and lifeless Anglican communion in which Packer ministers, a denomination that is filled to the brim with unregenerate people and apostasy. The serious error of Packer in downplaying the communion of the Holy Ghost, while widespread in modern Reformed circles, and recognized as a danger by some modern writers among the Reformed themselves (e. g., Bruce Waltke, professor of Old Testament at Westminster Theological Seminary, wrote: "Reformed doctrine . . . may lead to spiritual deadness by reducing Christianity to a rational system of thought rather than maximizing and realizing the essential ministry of the Holy Spirit in life" (pg. 22, "Evangelical Spirituality: A Biblical Scholar's Perspective." Journal of the Evangelical Theological Society 31:1 (March 1988).) does not represent the uniform position of classical Reformed authors. When John Owen wrote Of Communion with God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and spent many pages detailing the believer's personal fellowship with the Holy Spirit, he embraced a theology of sanctification notably different from Packer. Consider also the warm embrace of communion with the Spirit by the Dutch Second Reformation Calvinist Wilhelmus á Brakel:

> [T]he Holy Spirit . . . transmi[ts] . . . the image of God [and] imprint[s] [it] upon the heart of man, who is re-created in this image. . . . The transmission of this image occurs by the operation of the Spirit of God, who imprints the image of God upon man, causing Christ to be formed in them. . . . This sealing, which confirms believers and assures them that they are partakers of the covenant of grace, occurs in various ways.
>
> First, this occurs when the Spirit reveals to believers that He dwells in them as in a temple. The bride requested, "set me as a seal upon Thine heart" (Song 8:6); that is, let me thus be imprinted upon Thy heart, that Thou wouldest continually think upon me and that my appearance would continually be before Thy eyes. In like manner the Holy Spirit sets Himself as a seal upon the heart of believers, making them conscious of His presence and indwelling, whereby He assures them as clearly and powerfully that they are partakers of the covenant of grace as if they were sealed with a seal. . . . Secondly, the Holy Spirit seals them by imprinting the image of God upon them, as well as by showing and revealing to them that the image of God is in them. He convinces them of the genuineness of their initial change, of their being ingrafted into Christ, of their faith whereby they truly received Christ and still do so daily both unto justification and sanctification. He convinces them of the genuineness of their insatiable desire to continually enjoy communion with God, of their spiritual life which, though feeble, is nevertheless genuine, and of their hatred for sin. He makes them aware how it wounds and grieves them when they perceive internal sin, imperfection in their performance of duty, as well as their failure to perform that which is good. He shows them that it is not only all their desire to be holy, but that their utmost effort is to do everything in faith, to be motivated by the love and fear of God, to live in childlike obedience, etc. The Spirit makes them conscious of all this, so that they perceive it in such a manner that they can neither deny it nor be deprived of its inherent comfort. "Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God" (1 Corinthians 2:12).
>
> Having on the one side revealed this to them, He leads them, in the consciousness of this received grace, not only to the Word of God but also to the promises which are made to such persons as they are. He sheds light upon such texts and causes them to acknowledge the infallible truth expressed in them. In this condition He ushers them into the presence of God and by virtue of two propositions—one being deduced from the grace they possess and the other from the Word of God—causes them to come to the conclusion that they are most certainly the children of God and thus will become partakers of eternal salvation. By way of such reasoning, the Holy Spirit not only labors to give clarity and assurance concerning both God's grace in them and the promises of Scripture for them, but also takes an active part in the formulation of this conclusion. By granting much light, He causes them to be steadfast and assured in this conclusion. By His sealing power He impresses this reality so deeply upon their heart that they believe it with such certainty as if they saw it with their eyes and touched it with their hands—yes, as if they were already in possession of salvation itself. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God" (Romans 8:16).
>
> Thirdly, the Holy Spirit also occasionally seals in an immediate manner by means of clear and powerful declarations within the heart, such as: "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; Thy sins are forgiven thee; Thou art an heir of eternal life," and similar passages. Such declarations occasionally occur by means of a Scripture passage which is powerfully applied. At other times this can occur without a specific text, bearing in mind that such a declaration will always be in agreement with Scripture, it being the touchstone for such a declaration. This immediate sealing does not only result in the confirmation of their spiritual state, but the Holy Spirit grants them the immediate enjoyment of the matter itself, which results in peaceful serenity, a pleasant and sweet frame of mind, and an exhilarating joy. This causes such a person to be saturated with love, be in a holy frame of mind, be lifted up in the ways of the Lord, be ready to heroically do battle with the enemy, and walk in the way of God's commandments. The bride refers to this as being kissed. "Let Him kiss me with the kisses of His mouth: for Thy love is better than wine" (Song 1:2). She further testifies, "He brought me to the banqueting house, and His banner over me was love," etc. (Song 2:4-6). Such was David's desire, "say unto my soul, I am thy salvation" (Psalm 35:3). It is this blessing which Christ promises to believers. "I will love him, and will manifest Myself to Him. We will come unto him, and make our abode with him" (John 14:21, 23).

One should know, however, that, although all believers are sealed, [they do not enjoy experiential fellowship with the Spirit] with equal clarity. (pgs. 187-190, The Christian's Reasonable Service, vol 1. It should be noted that experiential communion with God the Father, Son, and Spirit is not a doctrine that requires allegorization of the Song of Solomon for Scriptural support.)

Indeed, Warfield himself, whom Packer quotes for his opposition to communion with the Holy Ghost, makes many affirmations affirming the reality and centrality of such communion. For example, Warfield affirmed:

> For the right interpretation of Scripture there are, of course, requisite all sorts of human preparations, knowledges, fitnesses (general and spiritual training, knowledge of languages and history, etc.); but the essential qualification is, nevertheless, faith and life in communion with the Holy Ghost, who teaches us to understand the complete harmony of Scripture, even in the apparent contraditions of Scripture[.] . . . For the Holy Spirit leads all those who are of believing heart, and who call. on Him for the purpose of receiving enlightenment only from Him, into all truth. ("The Westminster Doctrine of Holy Scripture," in The Westminster Assembly and Its Work, vol. 6 of Works)

Warfield similarly wrote:

> We may of course speak of a mystical aspect of Christianity, and we may even speak of the doctrine or rather the experience of the Holy Ghost, as the real truth of mysticism. The term "Christ-mysticism" may have a good meaning . . . [although it] may also be gravely misleading. . . . [H]ad only all Christians understood, and lived up to their belief in the Holy Ghost, they would all have been mystics[.] . . . All Christians . . . actually are "mystics" in the sense [that] . . . communion with God is of the very essence of Christianity: Paul tells us in so many words, that "if any man hath not the Spirit of Christ he is none of His." No man is a Christian who has not the experience of the indwelling Christ. (Review of Mysticism and Modern Life, John Wright Buckham, in Critical Reviews, vol. 10 of Works. Quote marks have been removed.)

Enjoyment of the communion of the Holy Ghost (2 Corinthians 13:14), contrary to the affirmations of Packer, is not only characteristic of better Reformed writers, but it indubitably characterizes historic Baptist theology as well, for conscious, experiential communion with the Trinity is not "magic," but the plain teaching of Scripture. When "the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us" (Romans 5:5), conscious, experiential fellowship is in view. "God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father" (Galatians 4:6; Romans 8:15)—what is this but experiential fellowship? The Apostles could say, "truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," a fellowship as experiential as their fellowship one with another (1 John 1:3). Christ promises: "[H]e that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. . . . I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you. . . . If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him" (John 14:18-23). Does Christ manifest Himself to the believer, and come with His Father to abide with the believer, without conscious, experiential fellowship with his beloved redeemed one? To "know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge" (Ephesians 3:19) cannot be merely intellectual, but also experiential. When Christ comes in to the believer, to sup with him, experiential fellowship is clearly in view (Revelation 3:20). Packer's affirmation that a life in which the Holy Spirit plays no conscious part is not sub-normal Christianity is extremely dangerous and entirely erroneous.

It is also amazing that Packer will oppose Keswick with tremendous vehemence, while employing far softer language for the by any reasonable measure far more serious errors of charismatic fanaticism and soul-damning Romanism and theological modernism. Packer will hope that he has heard the "last gasp" (pg. 124, Keep In Step With The Spirit) of the Keswick doctrine, but never expresses such a hope for modernism, Romanism, or the charismatic movement. He indicates that "hatred of the cruel and tormenting realities of overheated holiness teaching [Keswick] remains in his heart to this day" (pg. 129), but expresses no such sentiments about the doctrines of modernists and Romanists, calling such non-evangelicals "other Christians" (pg. 126), and speaks of a "world church—Roman Catholic, Orthodox, Anglican, and nonepiscopal Protestant" (pg. 139) all together. When asked if he is "for or against the charismatics," he will not say he is against them (pg. 141), but will call the charismatic movement "evangelicalism's half-sister" (pg. 141) declare that his "experiences in fellowship with charismatics have almost all been good" (pg. 143), praise fleshly and worldly charismatic "worship" as "deeply cleansing and invigorating" (pg. 146), affirm that charismatic tongues should not be condemned as a private prayer language (pg. 152) but are a "good gift of God" (pg. 169), and that their alleged exorcism ministries are "salutary for many" (pg. 158). Packer will state his certainty that "charismatic renewal is certainly central at present in God's purposes of revitalizing his church . . . it [is] plain at once that God is in it" (pg. 147, 150) although Packer knows full well that "current charismatic phenomena do not fully correspond to those of 1 Corinthians 12-14" (pg. 149), their "tongues" are "not language" (pg. 168) and "cannot be confidently equated from any point of view with New Testament tongues" (pg. 179), and, indeed, "the theology most commonly professed within the movement to account for its own claimed distinctives is deeply unbiblical" (pg. 161) and "cannot be established from Scripture" (pg. 163), and their "healings" and "prophetic" gifts are not those of the New Testament (pgs. 171-174). Although Packer knows charismatic doctrines are deeply unbiblical, they should not be "dismiss[ed] as eccentric, neurotic, or even demonic" (pg. 150). Indeed, Packer affirms, all "stand condemned" who do not "thank God for all the new life . . . of which the charismatic movement has been the human channel," for we should "not [move] away from . . . the charismatic renewal" (pg. 194). Charles F. Parham, "father of the modern Pentecostal movement," (pg. 23, Tongues in Biblical Perspective, Charles R. Smith), although a fanatic, false prophet (e. g., pgs. 33ff., 60, 77, etc., The Everlasting Gospel, Parham), hell-rejector (pgs. 51ff, 92ff, ibid), and Ku Klux Klan commendor (pg. 190-191, Vision of the Disinherited: The Making of American Pentecostalism, Robert Anderson), who although "arrested for the grossest immorality, a form of immorality for which we have no name in our English language, though it is described in the first chapter of Romans" (pg. 34, The Tongues Movement, Louis S. Bauman, rev. ed. Winona Lake, IN: Brethren Missionary Herald, 1963; cf. pgs. 140, 142, 272-273, Vision of the Disinherited: The Making of American Pentecostalism, Robert Anderson, where Torrey and others affirmed that Parham was guilty of sodomy), had greater discernment about the tongues movement than J. I. Packer. Ten years after Parham initiated modern "tongues" in 1901, he wrote:

> Two-thirds of this tongue stuff over the country is not Pentecost. . . . [there are] no real languages, [but] fleshly controls of spiritualistic origin[.] . . . the real Pentecost [is] not chattering or jabbering . . . Hear this: three-fourths of the so-called Pentecosts in the world are counterfeits, the devil's imitation to deceive the poor earnest souls. . . . Many hundreds, in seeking Pentecost . . . were ripe for hypnotic influence. . . . Two-thirds of the people professing Pentecost are either hypnotized or spook-driven, being seized in the first place by a false spirit or coming under the control of one afterward . . . [many are] demon-controlled. . . . They plead the blood, and claim to be Jesus, giving messages, and imitate every gift of the Holy Spirit and Pentecostal tongues[.] (The Everlasting Gospel. Baxter Springs, Kansas: Apostolic Faith Bible College, 1911, pgs. 31, 55, 72, 120-121)

While Parham is too low, by a third or a fourth respectively, in his estimate that two-thirds or three-fourths of modern Pentecostalism's supernatural experiences are fakes or demonic, he has far more wisdom than Packer, who recognizes that modern charismatic phenomena are not those of Scripture but nonetheless claims that they are from God. Packer should also have considered the testimony of Pentecostal historians that tongues speech had its roots in demon possession as practiced in pagan African religions:

> [I]t is far easier not to deal with the fact that the tradition of violent possession, (which is the same as spirit-possession) associated with the earliest camp meetings is far more African that European, and hence there is reason to hold that, in part at least, it was inspired in the whites by their contact with Negroes. . . . [T]he phenomenon of spirit possession [i]s a type of highly emotionalized religions and ecstatic experience commonly designated by such terms as "filled with the Holy Ghost," "lost in the Spirit," speaking in tongues and rolling." Spirit possession by a deity is the outstanding manifestation of West African religion[.] . . . [T]he slaves were not completely stripped of their culture upon their arrival in America. A number of "Africanisms" survived . . . such as spirit possession, the dance, and shout songs[.] . . . It may be categorically stated that black pentecostalism emerged . . . [with a] view of religion that had its roots in African religion. . . . William J. Seymour . . . was to contemporary pentecostalism what Luther was to the Reformation, a major catalyst . . . Seymour's Azusa Street revival was the torrential downpour that created a major worldwide flood. . . . [B]lacks initiate[d] the Azusa Street meeting . . . [d]irectly or indirectly, practically all of the Pentecostal groups in existence can trace their lineage to the Azusa Mission. . . . Seymour, W. E. Fuller, first overseer of the black wing of the Fire-Baptized Holiness Church of the Americas, C. H. Mason, founder of the Church of God in Christ, and G. T. Haywood fo the Pentecostal Assemblies of the World, were the sons of emancipated slaves. Their . . . view of religion had its roots in African religion. . . . [T]he influence of African spirit possession on those black pentecostal pioneers who were born as slaves in the American South . . . is a much-neglected and often misunderstood phase of the story (pgs. 123-124, 137-139, "Black Origins of the Pentecostal Movement," Leonard Lovett, pgs. 123-141 of Aspects of Pentecostal-Charismatic Origins, ed. Vinson Synan. Lovett "served as the pioneer dean of the . . . official seminary for . . . the Church of God in Christ . . . the largest black pentecostal denomination" (pg.

123). Some quotations by Lovett of other sources have had their quotation marks removed; see the Lovett's article for documentation and further source material).

If Keswick theology is a stovetop worth of "overheated holiness teaching," charismatic fanaticism is a city-engulfing inferno of it, but Packer treats its demonic character with the sinful gentleness of David toward murderous Absalom. He will condemn Keswick "quietism" (pg. 127) which he notes developed in connection with the Romanist mystical Quietist "Madame Guyon" (pg. 230), yet will positively comment on pagan Romanist "mystical prayer" (pg. 180) which developed from Quietists and "mystic writers . . . including the Anglican William Law, the Roman Catholics Molinos, Fénélon, Gaston de Renty, Francis de Sales, and Madame Guyon" (pg. 111). Packer will manifest no vehement opposition, but quote positively, unregenerate modernists and neoorthodox writers such as "Karl Barth" (pg. 54) or "J. V. Taylor," who Packer affirms has "finely said" that "it does not matter . . . whether the Christ who fills our vision is the historical Jesus" (pgs. 35-38). Packer praises "profound and perceptive treatments of the spiritual life . . . [with qualities of] spiritual sensitiveness and moral integrity that modern evangelical writing on holiness has not begun to match" by "Roman Catholics, high Anglicans, and medievalists of all persuasions" (pg. 85). Paul, writing under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, was more in step with the Spirit than is J. I. Packer when the Apostle anathematized (Galatians 1:8-9) those who hold to the heresies espoused by modernism and Romanism. "Packer had no doubts about what needed to be done with the old Keswick teaching . . . he wanted 'to kill it dead,'" (pg. 77, J. I. Packer: A Biography, McGrath), yet he repudated the plain Biblical doctrine of separation (Romans 16:17; 2 Thessalonians 3:6) for "the merits of collaborating with other Christians [?] who were not evangelicals" (pg. 158, ibid.), he wrote a book with Anglo-Catholics (pg. 155, ibid.), said: "I cannot see that anything Scripture says, in the first chapters of Genesis or elsewhere, bears on the biological theory of evolution one way or the other . . . [to be a] theistic evolutionist . . . [does not make one] not an evangelical" (pg. 200, ibid.), affirmed that "non-charismatic evangelicals . . . [should] relate to . . . charismatics . . . in strongly positive terms" and make a "strong affirmation of the divine authenticity of characteristic charismatic experiences" (pgs. 245, 247 ibid.), "invited . . . evangelicals and Catholics . . . to ally themselves for the work of Christian mission" since "on both sides of the Reformation" Protestants and Papists "trust and love the Lord Jesus Christ" (pgs. 271, ibid.), and consequently to "Protestantism, Eastern Orthodoxy, and Roman Catholicism . . . Packer offered . . . a vision of a 'transcendent new togetherness['] . . . in the face of opposition from fundamentalists" (pg. 272, ibid.). Since good Roman Catholics are "true Christians," Packer believes in bringing "together on the same platform catholics [both Anglo-Catholics and Roman Catholics], charismatics, and evangelicals, all united" (pg. 277, ibid.). While such a union involves the abandonment of the necessity of Paul's doctrine of justification by faith alone, "Packer insisted that it is not 'any theory about faith and justification' which brings salvation to people," since requiring "notional soundness and precision" on justification by faith alone is "near to being a cultic heresy" (pg. 273, ibid.), a view of justification closer to that of Paul's anathematized opponents in Galatians than that of the Apostle (Galatians 1:8-9).

Packer does not do well at all to call the militant defense of and separation over justification by faith alone "near to a cultic heresy," nor does he well when he wants Keswick theology dead but will appraise positively or not condemn and certainly not separate over far more serious charismatic, modernist, and Romanist heresies.

751 Andrew Murray wrote: "A good many Christians are living a low life, a life of failure and of sin, instead of rest and victory . . . they give way to despair. . . . It is the state of the regenerate man in Romans 7. There you will find the Christian man trying his very utmost to live a holy life. God's law has been revealed to him as reaching down into the very depth of the desires of the heart, and the man can dare to say: 'I delight in the law of God after the inward man. To will what is good is present with me. My heart loves the law of God, and my will has chosen that law.' Can a man like that fail, with his heart full of delight in God's law and with his will determined to do what is right? Yes. That is what Romans 7 teaches us. . . . a wretched Christian life, without joy, or strength, or victory. . . . [I]n this passage (Rom. 7:6-25) the name of the Holy Spirit does not occur once, nor does the name of Christ occur. The man is wrestling and struggling to fulfill God's law. Instead of the Holy Spirit and of Christ, the law is mentioned nearly twenty times. In this chapter, it shows a believer doing his very best to obey the law of God with his regenerate will. Not only this; but you will find the little words, I, me, my, occur more than forty times. It is the regenerate I in its impotence seeking to obey the law without being filled with the Spirit." (pgs. 29-31, 36, Absolute Surrender, Andrew Murray).

the position of Chafer,[752] and which Pentecostalism took over from its Keswick parent,[753] and argues against it:

One notes that Romans 6 also contains no mention of the Holy Spirit, nor, for that matter, do Romans 2-4, 10, 13, or 16, but Andrew Murray and other advocates of the Keswick theology would hardly affirm that sanctification as described in Romans 6 is possible without the Holy Spirit, and nobody who believes the gospel would affirm that justification is possible, as described in Romans 3-4, without the convicting and drawing work of the Spirit. Very few would draw any conclusions from the fact that the title "Christ" is absent from Romans 4 & 11, or "Jesus" absent in Romans 9, 11-12. Furthermore, it simply is false when Murray says: "[I]n this passage (Rom. 7:6-25) the name of . . . Christ . . . does not occur." Was Paul's conclusion to his discussion in Romans 7:25 too obscure, or too hard to notice? The summation of the whole matter in Romans 7:14-25 is progressive deliverance through Jesus Christ, who is specifically named: "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin" (Romans 7:25). Did Murray read the passage to which he referred? However, Murray is not at all alone in exegetical gymnastics among Higher Life advocates in Romans 7. Many Keswick and Higher Life writers treat Romans 7:25a as the conclusion of Romans 7:14-25, as Paul's actual conclusion in Romans 7:25b is very difficult for the Keswick view of the passage to explain. Thus, e. g., William Boardman spends an entire chapter of his The Higher Christian Life (pgs. 264-280) explaining how one escapes from Romans 7 and enters into Romans 8 when one passes into the Higher Life, making Romans 7:25a the centerpiece of his argument (although he does not exegete the passage, just proof-texts Romans 7:25a and argues from testimonials). Boardman even makes the astonishing affirmation that advocates of the orthodox view of Romans 7 "always clip this graphic chapter . . . to make it suit their experience" (pg. 277, ibid) because they, Boardman claims, view Romans 7:24 as the end of the chapter, while in truth 7:25a "closes" the chapter "with the exultant note of deliverance" (pg. 277, ibid)—the fact that Romans 7:25b actually is the end of Romans 7 is not even mentioned! Likewise, Romans 7:25a is treated as the end of Romans 7 in the preaching at the Oxford Convention (pg. 129, pg. 291, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874).

W. H. Griffith Thomas quotes, as paradigmatic of the Keswick position on Romans 7:14-25, Evan Hopkins making the same argument about Paul referring to himself but not to Christ or the Holy Spirit on pgs. 275-276 of "The Victorious Life" (I.)." Bibliotheca Sacra (76:303) July 1919, 267-288, referencing pg. 49 of Hopkins' The Law of Liberty in the Spiritual Life. William Boardman also taught that "the mass of Christians were quite satisfied to go on in the usual way, and live in the seventh of Romans, instead of stepping on into the eighth," as the minority do who have entered the Higher Life; these have discovered the secret that "one may step out of the 'wretched man' experience, in which the mass of God's people are living, under bondage to law, into the glorious liberty of the eighth of Romans" (pg. 93, 139, Life and Labours of the Rev. W. E. Boardman, Mrs. Boardman; cf. also pgs. 182-183, 263ff., The Higher Christian Life, Boardman). The traditional view of Romans 7:14-25 "involves one in endless difficulty and monstrous absurdity" (pg. 140, ibid). On the contrary, the alleged Keswick contrast between a flesh-dependent person who has not learned the secret of the Higher Life in Romans 7:14-25 and one who has found out the Keswick secret in Romans 8 simply does not fit the development of the book of Romans, but is an arbitrary idea that must be read into and which distorts the text.

[752] Absolute unity on the doctrine of sanctification among speakers at the Keswick convention from its origin until the present time does not exist, although certain historical trajectories can certainly be traced. Assertions by Packer, Barabas, and any other writer on sanctification should be evaluated based on the accuracy of their Scriptural content. Neither the Reformed position as represented by Packer nor the Keswick position as represented by Barabas presents a doctrine of sanctification wholly correct or wholly in error. One major danger in Packer's Reformed doctrine is a neglect of the the Biblical fact of a distinction between the believer who is right with God and the one who is not so (cf. 1 Corinthians 11:27-29), while a major danger of the Keswick position as presented by Barabas is its neglect of the actual change within the believer's nature through Spirit-produced mortification and vivification.

[753] See, e. g., pgs. 261-262 of Myer Pearlman's Pentecostal classic, Knowing the Doctrines of the Bible. Springfield, Gospel Publishing House, rev. ed., 1981. Following his Keswick progenitors, Pearlman

Keswick scouts the Augustininan[754] view that Romans vii reflects Paul's normal, everyday experience, on the ground that it records only "heart-breaking defeat" (p. 76), "ineffectual struggle" (pg. 81), "spiritual stalemate," (p. 82).[755] This, Keswick affirms—rightly—is not the New Testament picture of healthy Christian life. Dr. Barabas quotes with approval the remark that "if normal Christian experience does not rise any higher than that, then we must change our Lord's invitation to read, 'Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will tell you how to be wretched . . . !'" Instead, Keswick affirms that verses 7-25 show "what happens when any person, regenerate or unregenerate, tries to conquer the old nature by self-effort" (p. 77), i. e. without the use of the Keswick technique of consecration and faith. "The key to the interpretation," it is suggested, "is found in the frequent repetition of 'I,' while there is not a single mention of the Holy Spirit. . . . In chapter viii, however, where there are at least twenty references to the Holy Spirit and the 'I' drops out, there is a triumphant note throughout." Normal Christian living, therefore, is not in Romans vii, but in Romans viii, "and is experienced as the Holy Spirit by His counteractive power is permitted to have His way" (p. 82).[756] concludes that with the "cry of triumph" of Romans 7:25a Paul "enter[s] the wonderful eighth chapter" of Romans, entirely ignoring Paul's actual conclusion in Romans 7:25b.

---

[754] Augustine of Hippo taught baptismal regeneration, that outside of the visible institution of the Catholic denomination there is no salvation, and many other damnable heresies. Biblical sanctification should not be termed "Augustinian," since it did not originate with a man who taught a false gospel and consequently could not possibly have the right doctrine of sanctification. Modern evangelical defences of an allegedly Augustinian view of sanctification should consider if it is wise to associate with Augustine's sacramentalism and other errors, such as his denial of the possibility of assurance of salvation: "In the treatise On Rebuke and Grace Augustine postulated that the number of the elect was fixed in such a way that it could neither be increased nor diminished, though the identity of the elect was hidden. This led him to conclude that no one could be sure of his own salvation: 'for who of the multitude of believers can presume,' he asked, 'so long as he is living in this mortal state, that he is in the number of the predestinated?' [pg. 39-40, On Rebuke and Grace; Chapter 40, "No One is Certain and Secure of His Own Predestination and Salvation," in Church Fathers — The Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, First Series, vol. 5, "Augustin: Anti-Pelagian Writings, ed. Philip Schaff]" (pg. 189, The True Image, Philip E. Hughes). Augustine tied his denial of the possibility of assurance to an affirmation that a true believer can lose salvation and fall out of a state of saving grace: "For on account of the usefulness of this secrecy, lest, perchance, any one should be lifted up, but that all, even although they are running well, should fear, in that it is not known who may attain, — on account of the usefulness of this secrecy, it must be believed that some of the children of perdition, who have not received the gift of perseverance to the end, begin to live in the faith which worketh by love, and live for some time faithfully and righteously, and afterwards fall away, and are not taken away from this life before this happens to them. If this had happened to none of these, men would have that very wholesome fear, by which the sin of presumption is kept down, only so long as until they should attain to the grace of Christ by which to live piously, and afterwards would for time to come be secure that they would never fall away from Him" (Chapter 40, "No One is Certain and Secure of His Own Predestination and Salvation," ibid).

[755] [Packer states in a footnote:] So Moule, who characterizes it as "a stern but on the whole disappointing conflict[.]" . . . Moule, The Epistle to the Romans, ad vii. 7-25.

[756] Packer, earlier in his article (pgs. 161-162), dealt with the idea of sanctification merely as counteraction which can be turned on or off instantaneously and completely by an act of faith and consecration or a lapse thereof:

> When . . . Keswick teachers turn to the question, how we may do God's will, what they say amounts to this: that we must pass back to the Spirit the duty He has shown us to be ours, for Him to do it in our place. . . . [I]nstead of working through our conscious personal life, the Spirit stands over against it. . . . [The Keswick] doctrine is that the Spirit's power . . . is placed at the Christian's disposal, to "use" (by an act of renewed consecration and faith) whenever temptation arises. Energetic resistance to sin is decried, for "deliverance is not attained by struggle and painful effort, by earnest resolution and self-denial" (p. 90); instead, the Christian "is to hand over the fleshly deeds of the body to the Spirit for mortification. . . . He is then to stand in faith. . . . It is the Holy Spirit's responsibility to do the rest" (pg. 107). If I do anything to defeat sin, sin will defeat me; but if I do nothing beyond appealing to the Spirit to defeat it for me, instantaneous victory is assured. The Spirit's work of repelling the assaults of sin in my heart is thus vicarious in exactly the same

It seems impossible to pronounce this exegesis a success. It is arbitrary and gratuitous. There is nothing in the text or context to suggest it. It has to be read into Paul's words, for it cannot be read out of them. "So then," Paul sums up (vii. 25), "with the flesh [I serve] the law of sin." He means, glosses Moule (Comm[entary on Romans, on 7:14-25]), "wherever and whenever I 'revert' to the life of self." But this limiting gloss is nowhere in the text. Again, the Keswick "key" to the passage is quite unplausible; for Paul, so far from opposing the Christian's working to the Spirit's, as if the one excluded the other, constantly treats the second as the ground of, and incentive to, the first (Philippians ii. 12-13, etc.). Moreover, Keswick, on this showing, completely misrepresents the . . . view [that Romans 7:14-25 is a description of the normal Christian life] which it rejects. There is nothing in the passage to warrant the description of Paul's conflict with sin as heart-breaking defeat, stalemate, or inffectual striving. These epithets could be justified only if it were true that there are no degrees of deliverance, so that anything less than complete victory is complete defeat. But this is just what is in dispute, and ought not to be taken for granted. The truth plainly is, that Keswick exegetes were already prepossessed with the idea that healthy Christian life is a "maintained condition" (pp. 72, 83) of complete victory over known sin before they came to study Romans vii; and it was this cramping assumption that compelled them to read the chapter statically instead of dynamically. Hence they found in it nothing more than a confession of failure; for their preconception exluded from it altogether the idea of progress, in which [other] expositors find the real key to its meaning. In actual fact, writes Dr. Warfield, this passage "depicts for us the process of the eradication of the old nature . . . what is really in the chapter is divine grace warring against, and not merely counteracting but eradicating, the natural evil of sin . . . the working of grace is by process, and therefore reveals itself at any given point of observation as conflict."[757] The deliverance which grace effects is never final in sense as was Christ's work of bearing the penalty of sin on His cross. In each case what I was bound to do is done in my stead by Another, and in each case my cooperation is absolutely excluded. This is express quietism, but it differs from other forms of quietism in that the whole process is represented as being under my control. . . . In this doctrine of "power" . . . [Packer cites Warfield, Perfectionism, II, p. 609, as stating that] the analogy of a material force is most unpleasantly suggested. . . . God stands always helplessly by until man calls him into action by opening a channel into which his energies may flow. It sounds dreadfully like turning on the steam or the electricity. [Packer continues,] [t]here is no question that this is a true bill. Yet it is not easy to see how else Keswick teachers could express themselves; for this is how, on their own premises, they must think of the matter. If I regulate the sanctifying process by the degree of my own willingness to be sanctified, and if the Spirit in sanctification works, not through my own conscious working but apart from it, so that my part is not to work with Him, but to cease working and set Him to work alone, then it is exactly like turning on the steam or the electricity. We do not, therefore, overstate the difference between the [true] and the Keswick doctrines when we contrast them thus: according to the first, the Holy Spirit uses my faith and obedience (which He Himself works in me) to sanctify me; according to the second, I use the Holy Spirit (whom God puts at my disposal) to sanctify myself. It should be superfluous to point out that such doctrine is . . . unscriptural [and] irreligious.

---

In a footnote (pg. 161), Packer deals with Dr. Barabas' denial that his position teaches quietism, "on the ground that intense activity in using the means of grace is necessary to keep up one's consecration and to maintain faith. But such activity, as is explicitly stated in the passage from Bishop Moule which he quotes, is merely preparatory: "the temptation of the hour will be met less by direct efforts of the will than by indirect"—i. e., by handing the matter over to the Spirit and ceasing to act in it oneself. This is the quietism of Keswick teaching. Moule knew very well what he was teaching, and in Veni Creator (p. 197) describes the believer's part in sanctification as "a blessed and wakeful Quietism." In a second footnote (pg 162), Packer states that "it is worthy of remark that even so able a . . . theologian as Moule could not, having once adopted Keswick thought-forms, avoid expressing himself in [the] Pelagian way [where God stands helplessly by until the believer decides to turn on His power like the steam or electricity]. . . .[Moule wrote,] "It is not that God is not sufficient. . . . But the man does not always adequately use God" (The Epistle to the Romans, ad vii. 7-25). Note that the analogy of the Higher Life as "making the junction between the machinery and the steam-engine," so that with the steam connected, one "goes easily and without effort," was explicitly employed at the Oxford Convention (pg. 291, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874).

[757] [Packer cites] Perfectionism, II, pp. 583f. [by B. B. Warfield].

> this world, but is continuous and progressive. And all that Paul actually says in verses 14-25 is that at present his intention always exceeds his achievement,[758] that though he would be perfect he is always something less than perfect, and that he longs for the day when by Christ's power sin will have been rooted out of hiim completely and his reach will no more exceed his grasp (vii. 24; cf. vii. 23).
>
> The new exegesis, then, is not preferable to the old. It appears to be the result of reading Romans vii in the light of a preconceived and unproven theory which excludes any sense of imperfect attainment from the healthy Christian consciousness. And its rejection means the rejection of [the Keswick conscept of sanctification as] complete counteraction as doubly erroneous; for our examination of Romans vii confirms us in the belief that the Christian's sanctification, while far less than complete, is far more than counteraction. It is nothing less than the progressive uprooting of sin within him by the conquering energy of the Spirit of God.[759]

Romans 7:14-25 is not a description of Paul before his conversion, nor of the Apostle in some sort of state of legal bondage from which he is delivered in Romans 8 to enter into a higher Christian life. The second half of Romans 7 depicts an aspect of Paul's normal Christian life, the aspect that relates the normal Christian life to the holy law of God, [760] and is in this respect a paradigm for the Christian life and growth of all believers.[761]

---

758 [Packer cites A. Nygren, Romans [1952], p. 243 as follows:] "He has in mind the tension which exists, in the Christian life, between will and action, between intention and performance."

759 "'Keswick' and the Reformed Doctrine of Sanctification," pgs. 164-166. Packer concludes his article by stating: "It has become clear how profoundly unsatisfactory the new [Keswick] tecahing is in comparison with the old. It is Pelagian; for, in effect, it makes the Christian the employer, and the Holy Spirit the employee, in the work of sanctification. It is shallow; for it externalizes sanctification, reducing the Spirit's work to the mere preventing of sinful acts and excluding from it altogether the positive renewal of the agent's person. As such, it is a depressing message for the Christian; for what a regenerate man, as such, desires most of all for himself is, not freedom from conflict and tension as an end in itself, but freedom from the pollution and defilement of sin in his heart. ["]Oh for a heart to praise my God,/ A heart from sin set free!["] . . . is [the believer's] constant cry. And this, Keswick assures him, is precisely what he cannot even begin to have in this world. The law of sin can be counteracted in his life, but not in the slightest degree eradicated from his heart. On his dying day, his heart will be no purer than on the day of his new birth. We may suspect that the salvation proclaimed by Reformed theology [and other non-Keswick positions on sanctification that also avoid the errors of Reformed theology], which centers round a real, progressive purifying and renewing of his heart, will impress him as far greater and infinitely more desirable than its Keswick counterpart, which extends only to his actions and leaves his corrupt heart exactly as it was. Moreover, the Keswick message is delusive; for it offers a greater measure of deliverance from sin than Scripture anywhere promises or the apostles themselves ever attained. This cannot but lead either to self-deception, in the case of those who profess to have entered into this [post-conversion second] blessing, or to disillusionment and despair, in the case of those who seek it but fail to find it. In the latter case, according to Keswick, the reason for the failure is not that there is no such blessing to be had, but that the seeker's acts of consecration and faith were defective; and he is therefore directed to repeat them more thoroughly. It is unnecessary to dwell on the bondage and frustration to which such advice must lead.

"The Convention," Dr. Barabas assures us, "is not interested in academic discussions of theology and ethics, or even in adding to the store of Bible knowledge of those who attend, but simply and only in helping men to be holy." (p. 108). Perhaps it is this very unconcern that has caused the trouble. After all, Pelagianism is the natural heresy of zealous Christians who are not interested in theology. May we venture to suggest that the Convention would more effectively promote its avowed aim by reforming its tradition according to the Word of God?

760 Romans 7:14-25 "reproduces Paul's present theological self-knowledge as a Christian: not all of it, but just that part of it which is germane to the subject in hand—namely, the function of the law in giving knowledge of sin. (The other side of Paul's self knowledge, that given him by the gospel, is set out in

Application of the Exegesis of Romans 7:14-25

Since Romans 7:14-25, continuing into chapter 8, is a description of the normal Christian life, as seen in the godly Apostle Paul, a number of conclusions necessarily follow.

1.) You should beware of claims of Christian experience that allegedly are different and higher than Romans 7:14-8:4. A believer who affirms that he has reached a higher plane where he never has to struggle with sin is surely either self-deceived or a hypocrite, for he makes a claim to a level of Christian experience that exceeds any promised in the Bible for the believer's earthly pilgrimage. Any Christian on earth who thinks he has risen to a plane above one where he can regularly follow the model prayer's request, "forgive us our sins" (Luke 11:4), has allowed the deceitfulness of sin to very greatly lead him astray.

2.) While focusing on Christ, strive at all times to be aware of, on guard against, and strenuously opposing the motions of indwelling sin. To be unware of your remaining corruption is very dangerous and an indication of serious spiritual deficiency. Furthermore, if you convince yourself that you have reached a higher plane where you no longer struggle against sin, and where your desire for righteousness no longer exceeds the measure to which you have arrived at (Romans 7:15), you will seriously hinder your further progress in grace. The Lord Jesus promised: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled" (Matthew 5:6). You should be filled with a boundless hunger for greater holiness than you possess, and hate the fact that you still have such awful remains of corruption within you. God will bless such hunger chapter 8.) The thesis of the paragraph [consisting of Romans 7:14-25], 'I am carnal, sold under sin,' is stated categorically and without qualification, not because this is the whole truth about Paul the Christian, but because it is the only part of the truth about himself that the law can tell him. What the law does for the Christian is to give him knowledge of the sin that still remains in him. When he reviews his life by the light of the law, he always finds that he has done less than the good that he wanted to do; thus he 'finds' and 'sees' that sin is still in him, and that he is still to a degree being taken captive by it (vss. 21-23). The wretchedness of the 'wretched man' thus springs from the discovery of his continuing sinfulness, and the knowledge that he cannot hope to be rid of indwelling sin, his troublesome inmate, while he remains in the body. He is painfully conscious that for the present his reach exceeds his grasp, and therefore he longs for the eschatological deliverance through which the tension between will and achievement, purpose and performance, plan and action, will be abolished" (pgs. 626-627, "The 'Wretched Man' in Romans 7," J. I. Packer).

---

[761] Many other views of Romans 7:14-25 have been invented. It is beyond the scope of this analysis to deal with every one of the unusual ideas people have thought up to explain the passage. It is sufficient to present the true view that Romans 7:14-25 speaks of Paul in his normal Christian life, as a paradigm for Christians in general, and compare this position with the common contrary views that the pericope deals with Paul as unregenerate or with someone living based on law apart from faith.

and thirst after righteousness by filling you ever the more with His holiness. Thinking that you have entered a state where you no longer need to hunger and thirst for greater holiness than you have will cause this blessed hungering and thirsting, and the Divine holiness that is imparted by means of it, to abate. Do not make the mistake of confusing a proper desire to resist and not hold on to any sin—a proper Christian sincerity and upright walk—with freedom from all conscious sin. How will becoming unconscious that your flesh is constantly lusting against the Spirit (Galatians 5:17) be of any spiritual benefit, rather than of certain spiritual weakness? Rather, you should grow in your hatred for your indwelling sin, and in your understanding of its lusting. Your ability to mortify indwelling corruption will be hindered if you pretend that it is perfectly counteracted or that its actions are in any way different from what they truly are.

3.) Humble yourself greatly because of your own vileness, wickedness, and worthlessness. Will you add, on top of all the sin you have already, that of pride and blindness to your own sinful condition?

4.) Recognize that it is a certain principle that, especially when you seek to do good, evil is then present with you (Romans 7:21).[762] Be especially on your guard against sin when you are engaged in especially spiritual activities, from public worship to personal devotions.

5.) Recognize that the closer you are to the Lord, and the more the Holy Spirit conforms you to the image of Christ, the greater this conflict against sin will become. Isaiah was especially conscious of his sin (Isaiah 6:4) when he saw Jehovah on His throne, high and lifted up (Isaiah 6). "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all" (1 John 1:5). The more His light shines upon you, the more you will see, hate, and strive against what darkness remains within you.

6.) Focus on the promise of spiritual victory that the Lord has given to you. The promise is not that you will, on earth, reach a place where spiritual warfare is no longer necessary, but that you can make continued and constant progress in the eradication of indwelling sin and growth in holiness. When Joshua and the armies of Israel were promised victory in the land of Canaan, they were not promised that all the heathen would be eliminated in a day, but that "the LORD thy God will put out those nations before thee by little and little, until thou be increased, and inherit the land" (Deuteronomy 7:22; Exodus 23:30). Nor was the Lord's covenant with Israel that all the Canaanites would remain, unweakened and defiant as ever, in the land, but simply be supressed so that Joshua could forget that they were there, which would be no true victory at all. Rather, the promise was that Israel would, strengthened by Jehovah, win battle after battle and take into actual possession more and more of the land that was all already legally deeded to them. "There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life" (Joshua 1:5; cf. 1:1-9), for "[y]e are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world" (1 John 4:4). As none of the strongholds of the heathen in Canaan could stand against Joshua, strengthened and led by Jehovah, so there is not a sin that you cannot make ever consistent progress against—indeed, the New Covenant in Christ's blood makes your progressive victory now, and ultimate victory in the future, an absolute certainty. So do not despair if the warfare is long, nor delude yourself into thinking that you can put down your weapons and rest at any point in this life. Rather, take to heart the promise made to Joshua: "Be thou strong and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law, which Moses my servant commanded thee: turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest. This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success. Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the LORD thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest" (Joshua 1:7-9).

---

762 Note the classic experiential exposition and application of this verse by John Owen in his The Nature, Power, Deceit, and Prevalency of the Remainders of Indwelling Sin in Believers.

7.) Let the reality of your continued battle with sin in this life make your thoughts of and longing for heaven all the sweeter. Oh, to be free from even the presence of sin! "We shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is" (1 John 3:2). How wonderful will it be to find yourself perfectly conformed to the moral likeness of Christ, and enjoying unbroken fellowship with Him for all eternity! How glad you will be, then, for every battle fought, for every victory won! Press on, oh Christian pilgrim—victory is coming, and victory is secure. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus" (Revelation 22:20).

E. Excursus III: Does Galatians 2:20, Or Any Other Text of Scripture, Teach that Christ Lives the Christian Life Instead of the Believer?

Some have employed Galatians 2:20 to affirm that Christ lives the Christian life instead of the believer, or at least the believer who enters into[763] the Higher Life[764] or the [763] None of the texts that are alleged as support for the doctrine that Christ lives the Christian life instead of the believer distinguish between an upper class of Christians who have entered into a Higher Life or second blessing and a lower class who have not done so. Galatians 2:20 is true for every Christian, and every Christian has Christ as his life, is legally dead to sin, and has his life hid with Christ in God (Colossians 3:3, 4).

[764] For example, Hannah W. Smith, in line with her Quaker quietism, mysticism, and doctrine of the Inner Light and Voice, followed this view of Galatians 2:20, writing: "[H]ow few realize that as to themselves they are dead, and it is only Christ who is alive, and they in Him!" and affirming that the Inner Voice only gives "certain guidance" when one has recognized this secret (Letter to Abby, August 20, 1865, cf. Journal, July 22, 1859, reproduced in the entries for February 3 & January 19 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). "[W]e Quakers" can say to one another, "do not expect . . . ever to find yourself any better . . . [y]ou yourself will always be utterly vile, and ignorant, and corrupt, but Jesus is your life now. It is with you 'no more I' but Christ who lives in you. And isn't this glorious to lose your own life and find Christ's divine life put in its place" (Letter to Frank, May 30, 1871, reproduced in the entry for June 6 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). She knew that Christ was "not only the One who gives me life, but the one who lives it too . . . it is no more I who live but Christ who lives in me," so that since "Jesus is our life, of course our only work must be to keep from living our own life and let[ting] His life work in us. . . . [We are to] reckon ourselves dead and alive only in Christ. . . . Is our new nature anything more than Christ in us?" Thus, "I am dead, and . . . the only life I have now is His life," as she "by faith claim[s] His life as [her] own" and became "passive of choice and willingly" (Journal, 1867; Letter to Sister Mary, 1867; Letter to Mary, March 8, 1867, Letter to Priscilla Mounsey, March 15, 1874; Letter to Daughter, May 25, 1878, reproduced in the entries for February 24, 26, 27, July 10, & August 26 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter; cf. also the entries for March 1, 3). Thus, that "He would live my life for me" is "a genuine Quaker experience I am sure . . . a truth which the early Friends, and especially George Fox, rejoiced in . . . the secret of all their lives of devotedness and power . . . the secret of holiness" (Letter to Mother, March 18, 1867, reproduced in the entry for March 7 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). "[W]e are dead, really and truly dead, and the only life we have is 'Christ living in us.' . . . [W]e have no more independence of being . . . apart from Christ" (Letter to a Friend, March 27, 1867, reproduced in the entry for March 8, ibid). "I am sure the early Friends understood this, and when they spoke of 'the Seed' & 'the Light' etc. they meant Christ" (Letter to a Friend, Mary 28, 1867, reproduced in the entry for March 9, ibid; cf. the entry for March 10 & April 1). Thus, Mrs. Smith preached her Quaker quietism in sanctification based on her view of Galatians 2:20: "It is your own trying to live your life that is the greatest hinderance. Stop this, and let His life live in you . . . let Him be your indwelling life[.] . . . Then it will be easy to live right . . . no effort to live. . . . You are trying to live, and your life is nearly strangled with the effort. Give up trying, and let Christ, who is your life, live in you, and you will live easily and without effort" (pgs. 70-71, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874).

Hannah W. Smith's teaching on Galatians 2:20 became that of the Broadlands Convention and its successors, the Oxford, Brighton, and Keswick Conventions; thus, those at the first Broadlands Convention heard: "I know that Christ lives in me] . . . recognize that it is Christ and not I that lives in the soul" (pg. 121, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple). Broadlands knew that "the Christ-life" is present in all men because "Christ is the life of men, the Divine seed in every one" (pg. 178, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910); the Christ-life is simply the Quaker doctrine of the Divine Seed. An important proclamation of Broadlands from the first was that "it is Christ and not I that lives in the soul" (pg. 134, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910). At Broadlands Mr. and Mrs "Temple [experienced] great joy as the result of this meeting [where] many [came to live] . . . the heavenly life . . . Christ's life . . . Christ Himself . . . living in these [bodily] tabernacles a supernatural life" (pgs. 130, 125, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple). The Keswick and Higher Life leader Evan Hopkins relates that he learned from the catalyst of the Keswick Higher Life movement, Hannah W. Smith's husband Robert Pearsall Smith, that "Christ . . . would live in him His own holy life" (pg. 159, So Great Salvation, by Steven Barabas; pg. 15, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention, Polluck). Mr. Smith taught Hopkins that Christ "would do all, and would live in [the Christian] His Own Holy Life—the only Holy Life possible to us" (pgs. 52-55, Evan Harry Hopkins: A Memoir, Alexander Smellie; italics in original.). Indeed, as Robert P. Smith preached at the Brighton Convention, "Christ . . . is living His life in us . . . Christ's own glorious life in Heaven is to be lived down here in these poor, mortal bodies," based on Galatians 2:20—a doctrine which Mr. Smith associated with the Faith Cure. Thus, Smith taught that those who experience the Christ-life "will have power to work all [their] days for the Lord Jesus" and "will not wear . . . out" but "live as children do," their "youth . . . renew[ed] . . . like the eagle's" (pg. 338, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875; cf. pg. 84 for Mrs. Smith's preaching of the Christ-life; cf. also pgs. 118, 152, 220, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.). William Boardman likewise taught that Galatians 2:20 teaches that "Christ . . . [is] dwelling in [the believer] to do His work, and to live His life in and by them," and since Christ is the one who is living, not the believer, and Christ is perfectly holy and healthy, based on Galatians 2:20 "[m]en and women [can be] . . . so used by the Spirit, that He can use them as the Father used the Son, and as the Son used His apostles," so "that He might use them in defeating the devil in the souls and bodies of all who are willing to hear and heed the Word," in a flourishing ministry of Higher Life sanctification and Pentecostal healing (pgs. 225-226, Life and Labours of the Rev. W. E. Boardman, Mrs. Boardman), a belief which permeated the later Keswick and Pentecostal movements. Jessie Penn-Lewis wrote: "Galatians 2:20 . . . 'No longer I' is the very central point of deliverance . . . the man himself retiring . . . to make room for the Risen Christ to dwell in him and live his life for him! . . . This is the deliverance of Calvary . . . it draws the believer . . . out of sight into the crucified Lord, making way for the Christ Himself to possess the earthen vessel and manifest His life and power" (pgs. 66-70, Pg. 74, The Warfare With Satan, Jessie Penn-Lewis). A. B. Simpson wrote: "[The believer's] life has been superseded by the very life of Christ Himself. 'Not I,' nay, not even the new and heaven-born I, but 'the Christ that liveth in me.' . . . [T]he Christ who lived of old is living again in me, thinking in my thoughts; choosing in my will; trusting in my faith; loving in my heart; triumphing in my victories, and covering my insufficiency with His glorious all-sufficiency. . . . Are we living the Christ life rather than trying to live a Christian life?" ("Spiritual Talismans" (Alliance Weekly, June 14, 1919, 178-179). Watchman Nee preached that "the secret of the overcoming life . . . is to let Christ live in our stead, according to Paul's testimony in Galatians 2:20" (pg. 131, Watchman Nee: A Seer of the Divine Revelation in the Present Age, by Witness Lee); indeed, Nee went to the point of affirming that Christ is the one who not only lives instead of the believer, but that Christ believes instead of the believer: "When we believe and receive the Son of God, not only His life but His faith too enters into us. Hence we may live by His faith" (pg. 29, God's Plan and the Overcomers, Watchman Nee. New York, NY: Christian Fellowship Publishers, 1977). Modern Keswick advocate John R. Van Gelderen writes:

> Keswick . . . was for the deepening of spiritual life. To accomplish this purpose a definite theological position was taught—sanctification by faith, sometimes called holiness by faith. The focus of the theology was on Christ as one's life. This was sometimes called 'The Higher Life' or 'The Deeper Life' or 'The Victorious Life.' . . .[T]he 'Higher Life' . . . is a Life. That Life is a Person, and His name is Jesus! Jesus is the 'Higher Life.' Jesus is the 'Deeper Life.' Jesus is the 'Victorious Life.' How can it be otherwise? Sanctification or holiness by faith is simply accessing the 'Holy Life' by faith. It is 'I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me . . . by faith' (Gal. 2:20). Holiness by faith is accessing the Holy Life of Jesus to empower holy living and serving. . . . Keswick teaches that just as justification is by faith, so also sanctification is by faith. . . . Faith for victory means you are depending on the victorious Life of Christ to enable you to obey. It is not a matter of you trying to live the Christian life . . . Jesus Christ is the only one who can live the Christian life! Jesus is the Christian Life. . . . Jesus is the Victorious Life, the Higher Life, the Deeper Life, the Spirit-filled Life, the Revived Life, the Hidden Life,—the Christ-Life! To us, when holiness by faith—the Holy Life accessed by faith—is attacked, the attack is ultimately on the indwelling Life of Christ" ("Keswick: A Good Word or a Bad One?" http://www.bcmedu.org/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=73&Itemid=138).

VanGelderen wrote elsewhere:

> Receiving the Holy Life of Jesus opens the way for accessing the Holy living of Jesus. . . . The Lord Jesus, the Holy One, moved into you at salvation to live His life, not yours. . . . The Christian life is a life—a person—and His name is Jesus. Jesus Christ is the Christian Life. Therefore, no one can live the Christian life but Christ. . . . Christ [is] the Christian Life Himself . . . [and He] moved in to impart to you that very life so that you can live, yet not you, but Christ in you, the Christian life. . . . [T]here is hope for holiness by means of the Holy One living out His holy life in and through you. . . . [H]oliness is not something you accomplish but rather that which you allow . . . a matter of dependence on the one whom you are allowing to work His holiness in and through you. . . . Faith is the one thing you can do . . . faith is not a work[.] . . . Personal holiness is not imitating moral motions. Personal holiness is accessing the Person of holiness by Christ-life.[765] It is difficult to figure out what the meaning is of such an affirmation; it would seem to lead to either the heresy of the absolute perfection of the believer in his will, nature and in all his acts, for Christ considered in His human nature is absolutely perfect in His will, nature and His acts, or to the heresy that Christ fails and Christ sins when the believer sins,[766] since, allegedly, Christ, not the believer, is living the believer's life.[767] Happily, since Galatians 2:20 never states that Christ lives the Christian life instead of the believer, neither heresy has any support whatsoever from the text. The verse affirms that 1.) Paul was crucified with Christ, 2:20a. 2.) Nevertheless, he was spiritually alive; the apostle had spiritual life, that he "might live unto God," Galatians 2:19; 2:20b. 3.) The "I" who was now alive was not the same "I" as before Paul's conversion (cf. Romans 7:17), in that Paul was no longer an ungodly, unregenerate person, a natural man and a slave of the old covenant, as he was when he was under the > faith to live His holy life through your personality. . . . The provision for holiness is perfect. It has to be—His name is Jesus. It is our consistent access of Him that is sadly imperfect. (pg. 14, "Holiness by Faith in Jesus," by John R. Van Gelderen. Revival magazine, Issue 12 (2011). Germantown, WI: Revival Focus Ministries, Inc.)

---

The Keswick affirmation that when one is "filled with the Holy Spirit . . . the Holy Spirit has absolute possession and control of our spirit. . . . [The] human personality . . . is . . . controlled by a divine personality; . . . the human personality is brought under the domination and control of the Holy Spirit" (pgs. 143-144, So Great Salvation, Barabas) appears to provide the third Person of the Trinity the same sort of "absolute . . . control" of the human personality that is ascribed to Christ when it is affirmed that the Son of God lives the Christian life instead of the believer.

765 In the Higher Life movement, the doctrine that Christ lives the Christian life, while the believer simply passively trusts or abides, is the "Christ-life"; "The Christian life is a large, generous Christ-life that lives itself" (pg. 181, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874; cf. pgs. 158, 168).

766 Hannah W. Smith, while usually restricting sinless perfection to the human spirit, so that she did not quite reach a claim of the literal perfection of Christ that was the necessary consequence of her Higher Life theology, did nevertheless affirm that those who have had the "definite experience" of "a heart made pure by faith" are "created pure and holy" so that "temptations will come" only "from without," not from within—an idea, however contrary to the Bible, that makes it much easier to follow the guidance and revelations of an Inner Voice—at least until they cease the moment-by-moment Higher Life walk, at which time, somehow, "nothing but impurity remains," although "the carnal nature" had "been cast out" at the time of the second blessing. She did, however, have to confront the question, "How can we sin if we are made and kept pure in heart?" a question to which she had only a very unsatisfactory answer (see Letter to Anna, September 6, 1871, reproduced in the entries for June 17-18 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter; cf. the entry for June 22).

767 One cannot avoid these heretical implications by simply affirming that the believer fails to perfectly access the Lord Jesus' personal life, and for this cause the Christian still sins, for this accessing of Christ must be part of the Christian life—indeed, according to the advocates of the view that the Lord Jesus lives the Christian life, accessing the Savior is the essence of Christian life. How then, can Christ fail to do this accessing for the believer, but be the One who lives the Christian life? Yet further, what can such a notion possibly mean—is Christ accessing Himself as He allegedly lives the Christian life? The idea that Jesus Christ lives the Christian life, not the Christian, has other severe problems as well; for example, the Lord Jesus, as He is in heaven, does not live by faith, as He has personal sight of all the glory of God, so the Christian on earth would not have to live by faith. Indeed, the idea that the Lord Jesus lives the Christian life instead of the believer is either abominable heresy or mystical gobbledygook that cannot be given any clear propositional content. It certainly does not help the believer live a holy life.

law (Galatians 2:19). He was now dead to sin and alive to God (Romans 6:10-11). The good in his life was not sourced in himself, but in the grace of God (1 Corinthians 15:10). He now had a new principle within him and was a new man, Galatians 2:20c. 4.) Christ now indwelt Paul, and was the source of spiritual life and strength for him, 2:20d. 5.) The Apostle now lived his natural life in his body by faith in Christ, 2:20e. 6.) Christ loved Paul, and died for him, 2:20f.

The "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me"[768] in Galatians 2:20 does not mean that Paul actually did not live the Christian life and the Lord Jesus lived it instead of him. Such a conclusion would neglect the fact that Paul specifically says "I live." Furthermore, Paul does not say, "Christ liveth instead of me," but "Christ liveth in me."[769] The "yet not I" clause means simply that Paul did not have strength sourced in himself to follow the Lord, but he received grace from Christ to enable him to "work out [his] own salvation with fear and trembling [since] it is God which worke[d] in [him] both to will and to do of his good pleasure" (Philippians 2:12-13). Paul personally "strived" to serve the Lord, but nonetheless his service was what "Christ hath . . . wrought by [him]" (Romans 15:20, 18). Parallel Pauline texts shed much light on the "not I, but Christ" portion of Galatians 2:20:

1.) "And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, (οὐκ ἐγώ, ἀλλ᾽ ὁ Κύριος) Let not the wife depart from her husband." (1 Corinthians 7:10). Paul certainly did command the wife not to depart from her husband. He was very active in making this command. However, more importantly, it was God Himself who made the command through Paul. It would be poor exegesis to conclude from this verse that Paul himself did not really command wives not to leave their husbands because the command was sourced in God.

2.) But by the grace of God I am what I am: and his grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all: yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me (οὐκ ἐγὼ δέ, ἀλλ᾽ ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ σὺν ἐμοί)" (1 Corinthians 15:10). Obviously God's enabling grace strengthened Paul to work, and all the glory for Paul's labor was given to the grace of God, as is evidenced by the "yet not I, but the grace of God" affirmation. Nonetheless, Paul labored very actively and fervently, indeed, "more abundantly than . . . all." It would be poor exegesis to conclude from this verse that Paul really did not labor at all because his ability to labor came from God.

---

768 ζῶ δέ, οὐκέτι ἐγώ, ζῇ δὲ ἐν ἐμοὶ Χριστός.

769 That is, the preposition ἐν, rather than ἀντί or ὑπέρ, is employed.

3.) "Now then it is no more I that do it (transgress; νυνὶ δὲ οὐκέτι ἐγὼ κατεργάζομαι αὐτό), but sin that dwelleth in me . . . . Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me (οὐκέτι ἐγὼ κατεργάζομαι αὐτό, ἀλλ᾽ ἡ οἰκοῦσα ἐν ἐμοὶ ἁμαρτία)." (Romans 7:17, 20; cf. Romans 7:14-25). Before Paul was converted, his entire being consented to and produced nothing but sin. His statement in Romans 7:17, 20 means that the sins that he did as a regenerate person no longer proceeded from the unified desire of his whole person. Rather, Paul's transgressions were now sourced in the remnants of sinfulness that remained within him. Nonetheless, whenever Paul sinned, the Apostle was by no means passively employed by some exterior agent moving him unconsciously to transgress—he still chose to do so himself.

4.) The Old Testament, and other New Testament texts,[770] present a similar picture. Joseph tells his brothers in Genesis 45:8: "So now it was not you that sent me hither, but God (עַתָּה לֹא־אַתֶּם שְׁלַחְתֶּם אֹתִי הֵנָּה כִּי הָאֱלֹהִים; LXX, νῦν οὖν οὐχ ὑμεῖς με ἀπεστάλκατε ὧδε ἀλλ᾽ ἢ ὁ θεός): and he hath made me a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house, and a ruler throughout all the land of Egypt." Joseph's "not you . . . but God" statement does not mean that Joseph's brothers did not sell him into slavery (cf. 45:5, "ye sold me hither"), but simply that God was the ultimate sovereign source of his being sold. In Exodus 16:8, "Moses said . . . [T]he LORD heareth your murmurings which ye murmur against him: and what are we? your murmurings are not against us, but against the LORD,"[771] but the affirmation that Israel's grumbling was ultimately against Jehovah certainly did not mean that when "the whole congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron in the wilderness" (Exodus 16:2) they did not really murmur against Moses and Aaron.

---

770 For example, Christ tells persecuted believers: "But when they shall lead you, and deliver you up, take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate: but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye: for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost" (ὅταν δὲ ἀγάγωσιν ὑμᾶς παραδιδόντες, μὴ προμεριμνᾶτε τί λαλήσητε, μηδὲ μελετᾶτε· ἀλλ᾽ ὃ ἐὰν δοθῇ ὑμῖν ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ὥρᾳ, τοῦτο λαλεῖτε· οὐ γὰρ ἐστε ὑμεῖς οἱ λαλοῦντες, ἀλλὰ τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ Ἅγιον. Mark 13:11; cf. Matthew 10:19-20; Luke 12:11-12; 21:14-15). The Lord Jesus' statement, "it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost," did not mean that the persecuted saints in question did not actually open their mouths and consciously speak; rather, they indeed spoke, but the Spirit directed them and guided them. Thus, the Lord could command, "speak ye," for the very reason ("for") that their words did not originate in themselves ("it is not ye that speak") but in God the Spirit. Note the following related texts: Matthew 10:40; Mark 9:37; Luke 10:16; John 12:44; 13:20; Romans 13:2; 1 Thessalonians 4:8.

771 וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה . . . בִּשְׁמֹעַ יְהוָה אֶת־תְּלֻנֹּתֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר־אַתֶּם מַלִּינִם עָלָיו וְנַחְנוּ מָה לֹא־עָלֵינוּ תְּלֻנֹּתֵיכֶם כִּי עַל־יְהוָה׃

καὶ εἶπεν Μωυσῆς . . . διὰ τὸ εἰσακοῦσαι κύριον τὸν γογγυσμὸν ὑμῶν ὃν ὑμεῖς διαγογγύζετε καθ᾽ ἡμῶν ἡμεῖς δὲ τί ἐσμεν οὐ γὰρ καθ᾽ ἡμῶν ὁ γογγυσμὸς ὑμῶν ἐστιν ἀλλ᾽ ἢ κατὰ τοῦ θεοῦ.

Similarly, Paul's "not I, but Christ" statement in Galatians 2:20 means that the source of the Christian life that Paul lived was not his own inherent ability or strength, but Christ's grace and power. The Apostle's declaration models the pattern set by his Savior, that Son of Man who stated "I can of mine own self do nothing" (John 5:30) and "The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise" (John 5:19). The Lord Jesus, in His human nature, was entirely submissive to and dependent upon the enablement He received beyond measure from God. One sees, however, extremely active labor for the Lord in the incarnate Christ. The Divine Person of the Son also did not work independently of the Person of the Father, but nonetheless the Son of God actively did whatsoever He saw the Father do.

In Galatians 2:19-21 Paul is proving that he is dead to the law (2:19a) and not trusting in the law for salvation and frustrating the grace of God by so doing (2:21) but instead is living unto God (2:19b, 2:20). He is not proving that somehow he does not live the Christian life but Christ lives it instead. Paul and all Christians are given strength and grace from Christ, apart from whom they can do nothing good, John 15:5, and they are to live by faith. Certainly the facts of the saint's union with Christ, the Savior's indwelling presence, the spiritual life that is derived from Him, and the power He gives believers to will and do of His good pleasure are glorious truths worthy of that joyful acceptance and humble meditation that results in loving, faith-based obedience. However, to go beyond the actual declarations of Galatians 2:20 to say that the believer does not live the Christian life but Christ Himself does it instead is to make the verse affirm what it does not say and thus grieve the Spirit and displease Christ. Such an affirmation also confuses the Christian who believes it, hinders his sanctification, and opens the way to serious Christological error. The glorious truths of Galatians 2:20 should neither be minimized and ignored nor turned into something other than they are by illegitimate extrapolation.

A few other passages can be employed to attempt to support the doctrine that the Lord Jesus Christ lives the Christian life instead of the believer. However, no text in Scripture actually affirms such a proposition. 2 Corinthians 4:10-11 refers to "the life . . . of Jesus." However, the reference is to spiritual life produced by and sourced in the Lord Jesus, not to the Lord Jesus Himself personally living the Christian life instead of the Christian. Paul speaks of the spiritual life produced by the Lord Jesus in him in connection with the renewing of his inner man (2 Corinthians 4:16)[772] and associated with the physical suffering and persecution through which he was troubled, distressed, and persecuted (4:8-9), was being always delivered to death (4:11), had his outward man perishing because of affliction (4:16-17), and thus bore in his body "the dying of the Lord Jesus" (4:10).[773] The believer's spiritual life is unquestionably produced, sustained, and increased by Jesus Christ. The Lord Jesus, and the entire Godhead, alone receive the glory for all the believer's spiritual life and growth, as the Author and Sustainer of all; "the excellency of the power [is] of God, and not of us" (2 Corinthians 4:7). This fact is weighty and wondrous truth. It differs, however, from the unscriptural affirmation that the Lord Jesus Christ actually lives the Christian life instead of the Christian living the Christian life.

[772] Similarly, the "life of God" (Ephesians 4:18) for the believer is freedom from the sins of the unregenerate (4:16-18), putting off the old man and putting on the new man, having God renew the spirit of his mind, living a holy and righteous life, telling the truth and having holy speech instead of lying and

Colossians 3:4 speaks of "Christ, who is our life." Again, the passage makes no reference whatsoever to Christ living the Christian life instead of the Christian living the Christian life. The verse indicates that all believers, not a minority only that have found a secret Higher Life, but all who will "appear with Him in glory" (3:4),[774] are in union with and identified with Christ, have their lives hid with Christ in God (3:1-3), and will consequently be with Him when He returns to bring in the Kingdom. The Lord Jesus is the One who guarantees them eternal life, and is the Author of all spiritual life and blessings to them, and, indeed, the One who gives them all blessings and good things of every kind whatsoever. However, Colossians 3:4 does not teach that Jesus Christ lives the Christian life instead of the believer, much less that Christ lives the Christian life for an elite minority of believers that have discovered a Higher Life.

---

having ungodly speech, and so on (4:20ff.). The believer does not have the personal life of the eternal Trinity living the Christian life instead of him.

[773] Note that one who wished to make "the life . . . of Jesus" (ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, 4:10-11) into the personal life of the Lord Jesus Christ would have great difficulty in making Paul's experience of "always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus" (πάντοτε τὴν νέκρωσιν τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματι περιφέροντες, 2 Corinthians 4:10) into the Apostle enduring the physical and personal death of the Lord Jesus.

[774] None of the texts that indicate that the believer's spiritual life is derived from the Lord Jesus, and abused to affirm that Christ Himself lives the Christian life, support the notion that a certain higher class of Christians lives a "Christ-life" at a higher plane, while another mass that have not learned the alleged spiritual secret live a life at a lower plane. Colossians 3:4 and Galatians 2:20 are true for all believers, not a special few. It is true that only some believers experience the kind of persecution that the Apostle Paul mentioned in 2 Corinthians 4, but this fact provides no assistance to those who affirm that Christ lives the Christian life, as they generally study devotional literature promulgating their theological notions to leap to the higher plane of the "Christ-life" rather than seeking to be persecuted.

It is also noteworthy that Colossians 3 also says nothing about a single faith decision whereby certain believers allegedly access Christ to live the Christian life for them. Rather, the truth of Colossians 3:4 produces commands to think on heavenly things (3:2), put sin to death (3:5), cease from anger and dishonesty (3:8-9), practice holy deeds (3:12), forgive (3:13), love (3:14), be thankful (3:15), fill oneself up with Scripture (3:16), and so on.

Parallel passages illustrate the sort of eisegesis required to make Colossians 3:4 teach the doctrine that Christ lives the Christian life while the Christian does not. Deuteronomy 30:20 states: "The LORD thy God . . . is thy life, and the length of thy days, that thou mayest dwell in the land which the LORD sware unto thy fathers." Does this passage affirm that the Lord lived the Jewish life instead of the children of Israel, and that He also lived out the length of their days in Canaan instead of them (whatever that could possibly mean)? Or does the passage rather teach the obvious truth that God was the One who gave the children of Israel life and length of days? Deuteronomy 32:46-47 commands: "Set your hearts unto all the words which I [Moses] testify among you this day, which ye shall command your children to observe to do, all the words of this law. For it is not a vain thing for you; because it is your life: and through this thing ye shall prolong your days in the land." Does this passage mean that the children of Israel did not live the Jewish life, but the law lived the Jewish life instead of them, because the text says "this law . . . is your life"? Does it prove that the Jew cannot and must not live the Jewish life, but only the Pentateuch can live the Jewish life? Or does the text, rather, obviously mean that obedience to the Law of God would lead Israel to live a long time in the land of Canaan? What exegesis fits the obvious meaning of texts such as Psalm 27:1 ("The LORD is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the LORD is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?") and Psalm 42:8 ("Yet the LORD will command his lovingkindness in the daytime, and in the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life.")? The ideas read into—not out of—Colossians 3:4 about Christ living the Christian life are impossible in other Biblical texts that contain similar phraseology.

It is an inexpressibly glorious truth that Christ, as God, possesses self-existent life, and that He as the God-Man[775] is the fountain and source of the believer's derived eternal spiritual life.[776] Life supplied by Christ and in union with Him (Colossians 3:1-4)

---

[775] Compare John 6:57; 14:19; the Theanthropic life of Christ as Mediator is derived from the Father, and, as the Theanthropos, He communicates life to His own.

[776] "When our Lord said, 'I am the vine, ye are the branches: he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing' (John 15:5), He certainly meant that the vital union between Him and his people is something more than that which may subsist between disciples and their master, — a union including merely trust, congeniality, and affection. The influence to which the fruitfulness of the believer is attributed is something more than the influence of the truth which He taught; however that truth may be applied or enforced. Their abiding in Him, and He in them, is something more than abiding in the profession and belief of the truth. Christ is the head of the Church not merely as its ruler, but as the source of its life. It is not I, says the Apostle, that live, 'but Christ liveth in me' (Galatians 2:20). 'Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?' (2 Corinthians 13:5). It is from Him, as the same Apostle teaches us, that the whole body derives those supplies by which it lives and grows (Ephesians 4:16). 'Because I live, ye shall live also' (John 14:19). 'I am the resurrection, and the life' (John 11:25). 'I am that bread of life' (John 6:48). 'He that eateth my is the basis for the mortification of indwelling sin (Colossians 3:5). It is certainly true that the Lord Jesus is the Author, Preserver, Upholder, and Finisher of the Christian's spiritual life. Such life is communicated to the believer by Christ, with whom the saint has come into an intimate mystical union. Furthermore, the believer must trust in and obey Christ if he wishes to grow in grace. However, it is false and dangerous to pure doctrine and a holy life to teach that Christ lives the Christian life instead of the believer. Benjamin B. Warfield correctly wrote:

> [T]he believer . . . is made alive in Christ—and it is he that is made alive. It is not only that he has Christ in him and Christ is living, but it is he himself that is living, for Christ has made him alive: yes, he has life in himself (John 6:53). It is not true that [t]he believer is portrayed as a man in himself spiritually dead, indwelt through the Spirit by Jesus Christ, who is his spiritual life[.] [Rather, he] is portrayed as a man who is spiritually alive, in whom Jesus Christ the source of all his life, dwells by His Spirit. The man himself is saved, and his new holiness is his holiness. It is a grave error to suppose that the living Christ can dwell within us without imparting life to us. He quickens whom He will: and he whom He quickens, lives."[777]

Biblical and historic Baptist truth recognizes the glorious fact of union with Christ and the need to seek strength from Him by faith. The Christian grows in personal holiness as he is quickened by that Divine-human Savior with whom he has been united. Such truth must not be corrupted by unscriptural additions or subtractions, such as the idea that the believer does not personally become holy as he lives for God, but that Christ Himself actually lives the Christian life instead of the believer.[778] flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me and I in him' (John 6:56). 'This is that bread which came down from heaven: … he that eateth of this bread shall live forever' (John 6:58). 'We shall be saved by his life' (Romans 5:10). 'The first man Adam was made a living soul, the last Adam was made a quickening spirit" (1 Corinthians 15:45). 'As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself' (John 5:26). 'Thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him' (John 17:2). 'Your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.' (Colossians 3:3, 4). The Scriptures, therefore, plainly teach that there is a vital union between Christ and his people; that they have a common life analogous to that which exists between the vine and its branches, and between the head and members of the body. The believer is truly partaker of the life of Christ" (Systematic Theology, by Charles Hodge, part. 3, Soteriology. Chapter 14, "Vocation.").

F. Excursus IV: Hebrews 3-4 As An Alleged Evidence For Perpetually Sinning Christians

---

777 pg. 557, Perfectionism, vol. 2, Chapter 4, "The 'Higher Life' Movement." Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Books, 2003; reprint of 1932 Oxford ed.

778 The idea that Christ's own personal holiness is imparted to Christians has properly been rejected by Baptists as unbiblical. In the words of the London Baptist Association in 1704, "It is the opinion of this Assembly that the doctrine of sanctification by the impartation of the holiness of Christ's nature does, in its consequences, render inherent holiness by the Holy Spirit unnecessary, and tends to overthrow natural, as well as revealed religion" (pg. 171, Chapter 8, Bye-Paths in Baptist History, J. J. Goadby. Elec. acc. Baptist History Collection CD, ver. 1. Paris, AK: Baptist Standard Bearer, 2005).

Some affirm that when Hebrews 3-4 speaks of unbelieving Israel wandering in the wilderness for forty years, so that their "carcases fell in the wilderness" (Hebrews 3:17), the text pictures people who are saved but never begin the process of Christian growth, which is alleged to originate typologically only with Israel's crossing the Jordan River into Canaan.[779] Thus, Hebrews 3-4 is alleged to demonstrate that some saved people live and die in perpetual carnality and sin, acting in every way like the unconverted. Such a conclusion faces severe problems.

First, typology should never be used to question or overthrow plain passages of Scripture. The many plain texts that affirm that all believers will be progressively sanctified cannot be overthrown because of conclusions derived from typology.

Second, Jude indicates that the Israelites who died in the wilderness do not picture perpetually carnal saved people, but lost people who are eternally damned. Speaking of unconverted false teachers who are "ordained to . . . condemnation" (v. 4), Jude writes: "I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not" (v. 5). He continues by comparing these people who are "ordained to . . . condemnation" and who "believed not" to "the angels which kept not their first estate, 779 For example, Hannah W. Smith described "Hebrews 3 and 4" as "the rest of faith, now in this present life" (Letter to Sister, 1867, reproduced in the entry for February 15 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter), and she "long[ed] unspeakably to show . . . every child of God whose feet are still wandering in the wilderness . . . the way to the promised land" by means of the Higher Life (Letter to Anna, November 10, 1871, reproduced in the entry for June 24 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). The "wilderness," where Israel was "neither in Egypt nor in the Promised Land," represents the "7th of Romans, the wilderness experience of the Christian. . . . It is hardly worthwhile for any one to tell those of us who have taken these two steps, that there is but one. We know better; and our own experience is far more convincing to us than a thousand theories," that is, experience is better than the conclusions of grammatical-historical exegesis (Letter to Miss Beck, reproduced in the entry for September 6 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). The two experiences in my own life have been equally marked." Similarly, "American Higher Life writer, Miss Ruth Paxson, who addressed the women's meetings at Keswick on a number of occasions, compares, as Keswick speakers have often done, the defeat and failure of . . . Christians . . . making no advance or increase at all . . . to the wilderness wanderings of the children of Israel. 'The vast majority of Christians stop short in their experience of the blessings of salvation with the joy of forgiveness of past sins and with the hope of Heaven in the future. But the present is a forty-year wilderness experience full of futile wanderings, never enjoying peace and rest, never arriving in the promised land.' This . . . is a legitimate conclusion. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews draws such an analogy. 'Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. . . . Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief' (Hebrews 4:1, 11)" (pg. 68, So Great Salvation: The History and Message of the Keswick Convention, by Steven Barabas; cf. also pgs. 59-60). Compare Boardman's belief that those who are justified but have not yet entered the Higher Life are experiencing "the wanderings of the wilderness life . . . before reaching the Land," so that they must enter into "a present rest remaining for the people of God; a rest from burdens and cares," based on Hebrews 3:15 (pgs. 56, 167, Life and Labours of the Rev. W. E. Boardman, Mrs. Boardman; also pgs. 140-142, The Higher Christian Life, Boardman).

---

but left their own habitation, [who are] reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day" (v. 6) and to the sodomites who, "giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire" (v. 7). The people who did not believe and who died in the wilderness are suffering in eternal fiery torment with demons and sodomites. They are not saved people who just never started living for Christ. What the context of Jude 4-7 requires also receives support from the fact that the unbelievers of v. 5 are "destroyed" (ἀπόλλυμι). This verb, while it does not absolutely require eternal damnation in hell (cf. Romans 14:15; 1 Corinthians 8:11; also Matthew 9:17; 8:25; 2:13, etc.), is very commonly used for the everlasting perdition of the lost (Matthew 10:28; Luke 13:3, 5; John 3:15-16; 10:28; 11:50; 17:12; Romans 2:12; 1 Corinthians 1:18; 2 Corinthians 2:15; 4:3; 2 Thessalonians 2:10; 2 Peter 3:9, and many other texts, including, notably, Jude 11).

Finally, in Hebrews 3-4, those who died in the wilderness picture lost people, not saved people who just never grew. First, God has "wrath" (ὀργή) against those who die in the wilderness (Hebrews 3:11; 4:3). The lost face the wrath (ὀργή) of God, the "wrath to come" (Matthew 3:7; Luke 3:7), since "the wrath of God abideth" on them (John 3:36), and they treasure up to themselves "wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God" (Romans 2:5; cf. 1:18; 2:8; 3:5) as the "vessels of wrath fitted to destruction" (Romans 9:22), the "children of wrath" (Ephesians 2:3; cf. 5:6; Colossians 3:6), facing the coming "wrath of the Lamb . . . the great day of his wrath" (Revelation 6:16-17; cf. 11:18), for they "shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and . . . be tormented with fire and brimstone . . . the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever" (Revelation 14:10-11), facing "the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God" (Revelation 19:15; 11:18; also 1 Thessalonians 2:16). In contrast, believers, "being now justified by [Christ's] blood . . . shall be saved from wrath through him" (Romans 5:9), since "Jesus . . . delivered [them] from the wrath to come" (1 Thessalonians 1:10), and "God hath not appointed [them] to wrath, but to obtain salvation by [the] Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thessalonians 5:16). God's wrath against the people who die in the wilderness in Hebrews 3-4 indicates that they were unconverted lost sinners.

Second, the individuals in question in Hebrews 3-4 had "an evil heart of unbelief" (καρδίᾳ πονηρὰ ἀπιστίας) (Hebrews 3:12). Evil, unconverted men have evil hearts, while saved people have renewed hearts (Matthew 12:35; Luke 6:45; cf. Ezekiel 36:26). Furthermore, while the rest of the New Testament does sometimes employ ἀπιστία in connection with Christ's disciples (e. g. Matthew 17:20), Paul uses the noun only for the unconverted (Romans 3:3; 4:20; 11:20, 23; 1 Timothy 1:13; the other two references are those in question, Hebrews 3:12, 19). The "evil heart of unbelief" that the individuals discussed in Hebrews 3-4 possessed led them to departing, to apostasy from (ἀποστῆναι, Hebrews 3:12) God. The verb depart/apostatize in Hebrews 3:12 is also employed in 1 Timothy 4:1: "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils" (cf. also Luke 8:13; 13:27). While the verb can be used for believers who depart from or fail to complete a task (cf. Acts 15:38), nowhere does the New Testament state that saved people depart from God. Thus, to affirm that regenerate individuals have "an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God" (Hebrews 3:12) is extremely problematic. Nor is the problem alleviated by the fact that the warning of Hebrews 3:12 is addressed to "brethren" (3:12)—Paul was a Jew, and he wrote Hebrews to his Jewish brethren (cf. Acts 1:16; 2:29, 37; 3:17, 22; 7:2, 37; 13:15, 26, 38; 22:1; 23:1, 5, 6; 28:17, 21; Romans 9:3). Clearly, just as many of Moses' Jewish brethren in the wilderness were unregenerate, so many of Paul's Jewish brethren warned in the book of Hebrews were unregenerate, and thus had evil hearts, were in unbelief, and departed from the living God.

Third, the individuals in Hebrews 3-4 were warned about being "hardened through the deceitfulness of sin" (Hebrews 3:13; cf. 3:8, 15; 4:7). In the texts outside of the book of Hebrews, however, those who are hardened are unsaved Christ-rejectors (Acts 19:9) whom God will not show mercy (Romans 9:18). The hardening terminology in Hebrews suits the unconverted, those who "after [their] hardness [σκληρότης] and impenitent heart treasurest up unto [themselves] wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God" (Romans 2:5).[780] It does not suit the regenerate.

Fourth, Hebrews 3:18 states, "to whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not?" The verb employed in Hebrews 3:18 for unbelief (ἀπειθέω) appears sixteen times in the New Testament (John 3:36; Acts 14:2; 17:5; 19:9; Rom 2:8; 10:21; 11:30-31; 15:31; Hebrews 3:18; 11:31; 1 Peter 2:7-8; 3:1, 20; 4:17), and always of the unregenerate. Those who are in unbelief have the wrath of God on them (John 3:36). No New Testament text states or implies that believers are in apeitheo, in unbelief or disobedience. Similarly, the related noun unbelief or disobedience (ἀπείθεια) found in Hebrews 4:6, 11 is employed in the New Testament for the unregenerate alone (Romans 11:30, 32; Ephesians 2:2; 5:6; Colossians 3:6;

[780] Note also σκληροτράχηλος, Acts 7:51. The force of this particular argument is weakened, however, by the clear application of σκληροκαρδία to believers (Mark 16:14), not just to unbelievers; cf. also Matthew 19:8; Mark 10:5.

Hebrews 4:6, 11). Likewise, the related adjective unbelief or disobedience (ἀπειθής) limits such unbelief and rebellion to the unregenerate (Luke 1:17; Acts 26:19; Romans 1:30; 2 Timothy 3:2; Titus 1:16; 3:3). The adjective apeitheis, the noun apeitheia, and the verb apeitheo, "unbelief," all demonstrate that those who do not enter the rest of Hebrews 3-4 are unregenerate.

Fifth, Hebrews 4:2 states that "the gospel preached . . . did not profit [those who died in the wilderness], not being mixed with faith in them that heard it," indicating that those the people in question did not have "faith" (πίστις). The noun pistis appears 244 times[781] in the New Testament. Huge numbers of verses with the word refer to the saving faith of the regenerate (Romans 3:28; 5:1; Galatians 2:16; etc.). Only three of the 244 texts refer to the unsaved possessing pistis, each of them contrasting the saving faith that produces works with a dead "faith" that produces nothing (James 2:17, 20, 24).[782] None of the 174 instances of pistis in the Pauline epistles speaks of it as a possession of an unsaved person.[783] Since faith is the possession of the regenerate, the people who had no faith in Hebrews 3-4 are not saved people who just never grew and need revival; they are lost people who are dead in trespasses and sins.

Sixth, when Hebrews 4:3 states, "we which have believed do enter into rest" (εἰσερχόμεθα γὰρ εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσιν οἱ πιστεύσαντες), the aorist participle believed naturally speaks of the single act of saving faith, through which all the saved enter into spiritual rest, rather than a moment-by-moment continuing faith decision to possess a post-conversion higher Christian life that allegedly enables a believer to begin

---

781 The complete list is: Matthew 8:10; 9:2, 22, 29; 15:28; 17:20; 21:21; 23:23; Mark 2:5; 4:40; 5:34; 10:52; 11:22; Luke 5:20; 7:9, 50; 8:25, 48; 17:5-6, 19; 18:8, 42; 22:32; Acts 3:16; 6:5, 7-8; 11:24; 13:8; 14:9, 22, 27; 15:9; 16:5; 17:31; 20:21; 24:24; 26:18; Romans 1:5, 8, 12, 17; 3:3, 22, 25-28, 30-31; 4:5, 9, 11-14, 16, 19-20; 5:1-2; 9:30, 32; 10:6, 8, 17; 11:20; 12:3, 6; 14:1, 22-23; 16:26; 1 Corinthians 2:5; 12:9; 13:2, 13; 15:14, 17; 16:13; 2 Corinthians 1:24; 4:13; 5:7; 8:7; 10:15; 13:5; Galatians 1:23; 2:16, 20; 3:2, 5, 7-9, 11-12, 14, 22-26; 5:5-6, 22; 6:10; Ephesians 1:15; 2:8; 3:12, 17; 4:5, 13; 6:16, 23; Philippians 1:25, 27; 2:17; 3:9; Colossians 1:4, 23; 2:5, 7, 12; 1 Thessalonians 1:3, 8; 3:2, 5-7, 10; 5:8; 2 Thessalonians 1:3-4, 11; 2:13; 3:2; 1 Timothy 1:2, 4-5, 14, 19; 2:7, 15; 3:9, 13; 4:1, 6, 12; 5:8, 12; 6:10-12, 21; 2 Timothy 1:5, 13; 2:18, 22; 3:8, 10, 15; 4:7; Titus 1:1, 4, 13; 2:2, 10; 3:15; Philemon 1:5-6; Hebrews 4:2; 6:1, 12; 10:22, 38-11:1; 11:3-9, 11, 13, 17, 20-24, 27-31, 33, 39; 12:2; 13:7; James 1:3, 6; 2:1, 5, 14, 17-18, 20, 22, 24, 26; 5:15; 1 Peter 1:5, 7, 9, 21; 5:9; 2 Peter 1:1, 5; 1 John 5:4; Jude 1:3, 20; Revelation 2:13, 19; 13:10; 14:12.

782 Note, however, the statements in Matthew 17:20; Mark 4:40; Luke 8:25; 17:6. None of these texts, though, speak of unsaved people possessing pistis.

783 Romans 1:5, 8, 12, 17; 3:3, 22, 25-28, 30-31; 4:5, 9, 11-14, 16, 19-20; 5:1-2; 9:30, 32; 10:6, 8, 17; 11:20; 12:3, 6; 14:1, 22-23; 16:26; 1 Corinthians 2:5; 12:9; 13:2, 13; 15:14, 17; 16:13; 2 Corinthians 1:24; 4:13; 5:7; 8:7; 10:15; 13:5; Galatians 1:23; 2:16, 20; 3:2, 5, 7-9, 11-12, 14, 22-26; 5:5-6, 22; 6:10; Ephesians 1:15; 2:8; 3:12, 17; 4:5, 13; 6:16, 23; Philippians 1:25, 27; 2:17; 3:9; Colossians 1:4, 23; 2:5, 7, 12; 1 Thessalonians 1:3, 8; 3:2, 5-7, 10; 5:8; 2 Thessalonians 1:3-4, 11; 2:13; 3:2; 1 Timothy 1:2, 4-5, 14, 19; 2:7, 15; 3:9, 13; 4:1, 6, 12; 5:8, 12; 6:10-12, 21; 2 Timothy 1:5, 13; 2:18, 22; 3:8, 10, 15; 4:7; Titus 1:1, 4, 13; 2:2, 10; 3:15; Philemon 1:5-6; Hebrews 4:2; 6:1, 12; 10:22, 38-11:1; 11:3-9, 11, 13, 17, 20-24, 27-31, 33, 39; 12:2; 13:7.

doing good works. The other aorist participles of believe in Paul refer to the point action of the exercise of saving faith (Ephesians 1:13; 2 Thessalonians 2:12; cf. Jude 5), as do the significant majority of the aorists of pisteuo in Paul generally (Romans 3:2; 4:3, 17-18; 10:9, 14, 16; 13:11; 1 Corinthians 3:5; 15:2, 11; 2 Corinthians 4:13; Galatians 2:16; 3:6; Ephesians 1:13; 1 Thessalonians 2:4; 2 Thessalonians 1:10; 2:11-12; 1 Timothy 1:11; 3:16; Titus 1:3; Hebrews 4:3; 11:6).

Seventh, the references in Hebrews 3-4 to Psalm 95:7-11 prove that those that hardened their hearts and died in the wilderness typify the unconverted, as do other portions of the psalter where such people are affirmed to have "believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation" (Psalm 78:22, 32). In Psalm 95:8, the warning is given: "Harden not your heart, as in the provocation, and as in the day of temptation in the wilderness." When the Old Testament speaks of those who harden (קָשָׁה) their hearts, or employs similar phraseology ("hardened their necks," etc.), the phrases regularly refer to the unconverted, and not one text clearly deals with saved people hardening (קָשָׁה) their hearts (cf. Exodus 7:3; Deuteronomy 2:30; 10:16; 2 Kings 17:14; 2 Chronicles 30:8; 36:13; Nehemiah 9:16-17, 29; Job 9:4; Proverbs 28:14; 29:1; Jeremiah 7:26; 17:23; 19:15. Note that each instance is in the Hiphil). Furthermore, the verb rendered "grieved" (קוּט) in Psalm 95:10 could also be translated "loathed" (cf. Ezekiel 6:9; 20:43; 36:31; Psalm 95:10; 119:158; 139:21; Job 8:14; 10:1); it is difficult to think that Jehovah loathes, possesses deep-seated abhorrance and detestation of, His beloved saints. Those who tempt God in the Psalter, as those did who perished in the wilderness (95:9), are unconverted (Psalm 78:18, 41, 56; 106:14). Similarly, the statement that those who perished "have not known [God's] ways" (לֹא־יָדְעוּ דְרָכָי) (Psalm 95:10) indicates that those in view are lost sinners, not saints (cf. Exodus 18:20; 33:13; Joshua 3:4; Judges 18:5; Job 21:14; 23:10; Psalm 25:4; 67:3; 95:10; 103:7; 143:8; Proverbs 3:6; 4:19; Isaiah 42:16; 59:8; Jeremiah 5:4-5). In Hebrews 3-4, those to whom God swore in His wrath that they would not enter His rest (Psalm 95:11; Numbers 32:10) are pictured as lost men, not saved people who do not produce fruit or who are not revived.

Anyone who employs Hebrews 3-4 to evidence that some saved people never grow, based on the example of the Israelites who did not believe God and wandered in the wilderness for forty years, errs seriously in his exegesis. Proper hermeneutics does not employ typology to mitigate or overthrow plain didactic statements in Scripture. Furthermore, Hebrews 3-4 presents the people who died in the wilderness as unbelievers under the wrath of God and headed for hell. Nothing in Hebrews 3-4 favors the idea that saved people can be perpetually ungodly and be dominated by sin, or that sanctification does not begin in the regenerate until a post-conversion second blessing takes place.

G. Excursus V: "And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit" (Ephesians 5:18)[784]

Ephesians 5:18 states: "And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit." In the context of Ephesians 5:15-17, Paul instructs the Christians at Ephesus to live wisely: to walk circumspectly, avoiding sin, while at the same time redeeming opportunities to serve the Lord. The "and" (καί) beginning v. 18 shows the connection of v. 18 to v. 15–17; the verse marks a transition from a general fact to a particular instance of walking wisely in daily life.

The first command of Ephesians 5:18 prohibits intoxication.[785] "Be not drunk" (μὴ μεθύσκεσθε) is a present imperative, a general precept forbidding growing drunk, as the prohibition of being unwise in v. 17 was also a general precept. As verse 17 did not indicate that the Ephesians were already unwise, so verse 18 does not indicate that the Ephesians were already getting drunk, which would have been a matter for church discipline. The root of the verb for drunkenness in v. 18, μεθύσκω, is one of a number of words that are related to inebriation. This particular verb not only prohibits the state of being drunk, but it also denounces here the process leading to drunkenness.[786] The verse does not allow any room for being intoxicated, since it prohibits the entire process which leads to becoming drunk, including the first glass and the first sip of alcohol.[787] The first drink a person takes puts him on that poisonous path toward becoming fully intoxicated. Furthermore, Scripture never states that one becomes drunk after a certain number of alcoholic beverages. Rather, after one drink, one is drunk to a certain degree; after two, one is drunk twice as much; after three, one is drunk that much more, and so on. The first drink affects one's understanding and actions. Even in things that are lawful, unlike alcoholic beverages (Proverbs 20:1), believers are not to be "brought under the power of any" (1 Corinthians 6:12); how much the more must they never give control of their minds and bodies to alcohol, rather than always retaining a "sound mind" (2 Timothy 1:7)? As in the Wisdom books of the Old Testament (Proverbs 23:29-35; 20:1),[788] abstinence from alcohol is enjoined.

---

784 καὶ μὴ μεθύσκεσθε οἴνῳ, ἐν ᾧ ἐστὶν ἀσωτία, ἀλλὰ πληροῦσθε ἐν Πνεύματι,

785 For the possible background of the command of Ephesians 5:18a in the pagan worship of Dionysius, see "The Dionysian Background of Ephesians 5:18," Cleon L. Rodgers, Jr., Bibliotheca Sacra 136:543 (July 1979) 249-258.

786 As BDAG notes, μεθύσκω is the "causal [form] of μεθύω," to be drunk, and signifies "to cause to become intoxicated," a process that begins with the first sip of an alcoholic beverage. A number of texts in the NT, LXX, and other Koiné writings are consistent with μεθύσκω involving the process of becoming drunk in addition to the state of drunkenness itself. Note, e. g., the three present infinitives in Luke 12:45; also Proverbs 4:17; 23:21, LXX; in the Apocrypha, Sirach 1:16; 32:13; also Josephus, War 2:29 (2.2.5.29); Sibyl 7:18-21; however, compare also Philo, Alleg 2:29; in favor of moderate drinking, note the Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs, Judah 14:1-8.

787 While this is the teaching of Ephesians 5:18, it is not affirmed that to avoid μεθύσκω Koiné speakers of Greek universally understood the verb as requiring total abstinence from alcohol.

788 Note Proverbs 23:31, LXX: μὴ μεθύσκεσθε οἴνῳ ἀλλὰ ὁμιλεῖτε ἀνθρώποις δικαίοις καὶ ὁμιλεῖτε ἐν περιπάτοις ἐὰν γὰρ εἰς τὰς φιάλας καὶ τὰ ποτήρια δῷς τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς σου

In modern English vernacular, wine solely indicates a fermented drink made from grapes. However, the Greek word οἶνος can be used to describe any form of the grape and does not always indicate that which is fermented;[789] the English word wine was also a generic term that could be used of both fermented and unfermented beverages in 1611 when the Authorized Version was translated.[790] Sometimes context indicates that oinos is grape juice (cf. Matthew 9:17; John 2:3; 1 Timothy 5:23), while at other times the word refers to that which is fermented (Mark 15:23). In Revelation 19:15, the phrase "the winepress of wine" (τὴν ληνὸν τοῦ οἴνου) appears, but it certainly is difficult to think that the wine was alcoholic the moment it was pressed out of the grapes (cf. Revelation 14:20). The oinos of Revelation 19:15 is immediately drunk by the nations as they immediately face the wrath of the Lord Jesus Christ and are destroyed upon His return, so oinos in this passage necessarily refers to a beverage which is immediately pressed out of a winepress and is immediately drunken—there is no time for fermentation, since the Lord Jesus Christ does not wait some period of time at His second coming to allow His enemies to successfully fight against Him, but He destroys them all immediately. The context of Ephesians 5:18a clearly indicates that the verse refers to fermented and intoxicating oinos which the Bible always forbids. The believer is to make no gateway for the consumption of any type of alcoholic beverage.

The next phrase of Ephesians 5:18a, "wherein is excess" (ἐν ᾧ ἐστὶν ἀσωτία), is often misunderstood as an explanation of what level of consumption of alcohol is permissible. One is allegedly permitted to drink fermented wine so long as it is not consumed to the point of drunkenness, which is assumed to be a fixed point, rather than a developing process. However, the idea "do not drink to excess" is not at all the teaching of the passage. First, the meaning of μεθύσκω undermines such an idea; the verb not only forbids the state of intoxication but also the process of becoming intoxicated, as ὕστερον περιπατήσεις γυμνότερος ὑπέρου Be not drunk with wine; but converse with just men, and converse with them openly.

---

789 See pgs. 368ff., The Use of Wine in the Old Testament, Robert Teachout (Th. D. Diss., Dallas Theological Seminary, 1979; elec. acc. http://sites.google.com/site/thross7), for clear examples from classical and Koiné Greek where oinos is an unfermented beverage, contra BDAG. Teachout provides a powerful exegetical defense of the view that Biblical "wine" could be either unfermented or fermented and that Scripture requires total abstinence.

790 Thus, Bailey's New Universal English Dictionary of Words, and of Arts and Sciences (1730) stated: "Natural wine, is such as it comes from the grape, without any mixture or sophistication." (pg. 658). Juice does not come "from the grape" fermented. Thus, wine had the meaning of unfermented, as well as fermented grape juice. Likewise, John Kersey's Dictionarium Anglo-Britannicum, or A General English Dictionary (1708) declared: "Wine [is] a Liquor made of the Juice of Grapes, or other fruit. Liquor or Liquour, anything that is liquid: Drink, Juice, etc. Must, sweet Wine, newly press'd from the grape." (verify quote at Google Books). Wine was made of the juice of grapes and must is defined as "sweet wine, newly pressed from the grape." Further, B. N. Defoe's A Complete English Dictionary (1735) defined: "WINE, a Liquor made of the Juice of Grapes or other fruit. LIQUOR, anything that is liquid: Drink, Juice, Water, &c." verify quote Wine was not defined as fermented drink, but simply "the juice of grapes." Benjamin Martin's Lingua Brittanica Reformata, or A New English Dictionary (1748) stated: "WINE, 1. the juice of the grape. 2. a liquor extracted from other fruits besides the grape. 3. the vapours of wine, as wine disturbs his reason. LIQUOR, or LIQUOUR, any liquid thing, as water, juice, drink, etc." (pg. 1045).

The translators of the KJV, by uniformly rendering the Greek word oinos as wine, replicated the Greek word's reference to both fermented and unfermented juice with an English word that, in their day, was similarly general in reference.

noted above. Second, ἐν ᾧ modifies οἴνῳ, not, as advocates of "moderate" drinking affirm, the entire clause. The affirmation is not that there is excess in being drunk with wine, but that there is ἀσωτία in the oinos itself. In the only truly parallel syntactical structures to Ephesians 5:18 in the NT, the noun after the ἐν ᾧ + εἰμί describes the specific noun before it, not an entire clause.[791] Parallel texts in the LXX,[792] Josephus, and Philo support this view of the ἐν ᾧ.[793] Clear examples of the syntactical structure in [791] John 1:47 Jesus saw Nathanael coming to him, and saith of him, Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile! εἶδεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς τὸν Ναθαναὴλ ἐρχόμενον πρὸς αὐτόν, καὶ λέγει περὶ αὐτοῦ, Ἴδε ἀληθῶς Ἰσραηλίτης, ἐν ᾧ δόλος οὐκ ἔστι.

---

Acts 19:16 And the man in whom the evil spirit was leaped on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded.

καὶ ἐφαλλόμενος ἐπ᾽ αὐτοὺς ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἐν ᾧ ἦν τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ πονηρόν, καὶ κατακυριεύσας αὐτῶν, ἴσχυσε κατ᾽ αὐτῶν, ὥστε γυμνοὺς καὶ τετραυματισμένους ἐκφυγεῖν ἐκ τοῦ οἴκου ἐκείνου.

[792] Genesis 7:15: went in to Noe into the ark, pairs, male and female of all flesh in which is the breath of life.

Gen. 7:15 εἰσῆλθον πρὸς Νωε εἰς τὴν κιβωτόν δύο δύο ἀπὸ πάσης σαρκός ἐν ᾧ ἐστιν πνεῦμα ζωῆς

Deut 17:1 Thou shalt not sacrifice to the Lord thy God a calf or a sheep, in which there is a blemish, or any evil thing; for it is an abomination to the Lord thy God.

οὐ θύσεις κυρίῳ τῷ θεῷ σου μόσχον ἢ πρόβατον ἐν ᾧ ἐστιν ἐν αὐτῷ μῶμος πᾶν ῥῆμα πονηρόν ὅτι βδέλυγμα κυρίῳ τῷ θεῷ σού ἐστιν

Jer 23:28 The prophet who has a dream, let him tell his dream; and he in whom is my word spoken to him, let him tell my word truly: what is the chaff to the corn? so are my words, saith the Lord.

ὁ προφήτης ἐν ᾧ τὸ ἐνύπνιόν ἐστιν διηγησάσθω τὸ ἐνύπνιον αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐν ᾧ ὁ λόγος μου πρὸς αὐτόν διηγησάσθω τὸν λόγον μου ἐπ᾽ ἀληθείας τί τὸ ἄχυρον πρὸς τὸν σῖτον οὕτως οἱ λόγοι μου λέγει κύριος

Eze 24:6 Therefore thus saith the Lord; O bloody city, the caldron in which there is scum, and the scum has not gone out of, she has brought it forth piece by piece, no lot has fallen upon it.

διὰ τοῦτο τάδε λέγει κύριος ὢ πόλις αἱμάτων λέβης ἐν ᾧ ἐστιν ἰὸς ἐν αὐτῷ καὶ ὁ ἰὸς οὐκ ἐξῆλθεν ἐξ αὐτῆς κατὰ μέλος αὐτῆς ἐξήνεγκεν οὐκ ἔπεσεν ἐπ᾽ αὐτὴν κλῆρος

Judith 5:23 For, say they, we will not be afraid of the face of the children of Israel: for, lo, it is a people that have no strength nor power for a strong battle

Judith 5:23 οὐ γὰρ φοβηθησόμεθα ἀπὸ υἱῶν Ισραηλ ἰδοὺ γὰρ λαὸς ἐν ᾧ οὐκ ἔστιν δύναμις οὐδὲ κράτος εἰς παράταξιν ἰσχυράν

Dan. 14:21 Then the king was enraged, and he seized the priests and their wives and children; and they showed him the secret doors through which they were accustomed to enter and devour what was on the table. [note here there is some difference between the RSV Apocrypha translation given and the LXX text below]

Dan. 14:21 καὶ ἐπῆλθεν ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον ἐν ᾧ ἦσαν οἱ ἱερεῖς καταγινόμενοι καὶ εὗρε τὰ βρώματα τοῦ Βηλ καὶ τὸν οἶνον καὶ ἐπέδειξε Δανιηλ τῷ βασιλεῖ τὰ ψευδοθύρια δι᾽ ὧν εἰσπορευόμενοι οἱ ἱερεῖς ἐδαπάνων τὰ παρατιθέμενα τῷ Βηλ

[793] Josephus, Contra Apion 1:198 (1.22.198) There is about the middle of the city, a wall of stone, the length of which is five hundred feet, and the breadth a hundred cubits, with double cloisters; wherein there is a square altar, not made of hewn stone, but composed of white stones gathered together, having each side twenty cubits long, and its altitude ten cubits. Hard by it is a large edifice, wherein there is an altar and a candlestick, both of gold, and in weight two talents; ἐνταῦθα δ᾽ ἐστὶ κατὰ μέσον μάλιστα τῆς πόλεως περίβολος λίθινος μῆκος ὡς πεντάπλεθρος εὖρος δὲ πηχῶν ρ΄ ἔχων διπλᾶς πύλας ἐν ᾧ βωμός ἐστι τετράγωνος ἀτμήτων συλλέκτων ἀργῶν λίθων οὕτως συγκείμενος πλευρὰν μὲν ἑκάστην εἴκοσι πηχῶν ὕψος δὲ δεκάπηχυ καὶ παρ᾽ αὐτὸν οἴκημα μέγα οὗ βωμός ἐστι καὶ λυχνίον ἀμφότερα χρυσᾶ δύο τάλαντα τὴν ὁλκήν

Philo: Alleg 3:4 And let us in the next place consider how any one is said to be concealed from God; but unless any one receives this as an allegorical saying it would be impossible to comprehend what is here stated. For God has completed everything and has penetrated every thing, and has left no one of all his Ephesians 5:18 where the ἐν ᾧ modifies the entire previous clause rather than the noun immediately preceeding it are lacking. Furthermore, BDAG defines ἀσωτία as "reckless abandon, debauchery, dissipation, profligacy." The word appears elsewhere in Titus 1:6 (where the elder is not to be even accusable of asotia (KJV, "riot"), and 1 Peter 4:4, where large amounts of "riot" are in view. The word excess thus means to have a shameful abundance or to be indifferent to moral restraint. Fermented wine, in any amount, has passed the limits; it has gone too far. The KJV wherein is an English prepositional phrase in which, the antecedent being the word wine. People who take this word to mean "getting drunk is excessive" are misinterpreting it. The phrase is therefore describing the noun wine, not the verb be drunk. The understanding is this: "in wine is profligacy/excess."

The view that the ἐν ᾧ refers specifically to οἴνῳ has precedent in the Latin Vulgate and in the patristic period in the history of interpretation. The Vulgate in Ephesians 5:18 reads: et nolite inebriari vino in quo est luxuria sed implemini Spiritu. The connection between vino ("with wine") and quo ("which") is unmistakable in Latin, because the relative quo has the same neuter gender as vino, upon which it depends. Tertullian (A. D. 160-225) renders the text in exactly the same way: et nolite inebriari vino, in quo est luxuria ("And be not inebriated with wine, in which is voluptuousness."[794] Compare Jerome (who, of course, translated the Latin Vulgate), and identified the object "wine" as the item that has in it the "excess/riot": "She called to mind the cave in which Lot found refuge, and with tears in her eyes warned the virgins her companions to beware of 'wine wherein is excess;' for it was to this that the Moabites and Ammonites owe their origin."[795] works empty or deserted. What kind of place then can any one occupy in which God is not? And Moses testifies to this in other passages, when he says, "God is in the heaven above, and in the earth beneath; and there is nothing anywhere but he."4 And in another place he speaks in this manner, "I stood here before you did."5 For God is of older date than any created being, and he will be everywhere, so that it cannot be possible for any one to be concealed from him: and what need we wonder at?

---

Leg 3:4 ἴδωμεν δὲ ἑξῆς, πῶς καὶ ἀποκρύπτεσθαι τις θεὸν λέγεται. εἰ δὲ μὴ ἀλληγορήσειέ τις, ἀδύνατον παραδέξασθαι τὸ προκείμενον· πάντα γὰρ πεπλήρωκεν ὁ θεὸς καὶ διὰ πάντων διελήλυθεν καὶ κενὸν οὐδὲν οὐδὲ ἔρημον ἀπολέλοιπεν ἑαυτοῦ. ποῖον δή τις τόπον ἐφέξει, ἐν ᾧ οὐχὶ θεός ἐστι; μαρτυρεῖ δὲ καὶ ἐν ἑτέροις λέγων· "ὁ θεὸς ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ ἄνω καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς κάτω, καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἔτι πλὴν αὐτοῦ." καὶ πάλιν· "ὧδε ἕστηκα πρὸ τοῦ σέ·" πρὸ γὰρ παντὸς γενητοῦ ὁ θεός ἐστι, καὶ εὑρίσκεται πανταχοῦ, ὥστε οὐκ ἂν δύναιτό τις ἀποκρύπτεσθαι

Laws 3:60 And when all these things are previously prepared, the woman with her head uncovered, bearing the barley flour in her hand, as has been already specified, shall come forward; and the priest standing opposite to her and holding the earthenware vessel in which are the water and the earth, shall speak thus:

Spec 3:60 τούτων δὲ προευτρεπισθέντων ἡ μὲν ἀκατακαλύπτῳ τῇ κεφαλῇ τὸ κρίθινον ἄλευρον κομίζουσα, καθάπερ ἐλέχθη, παρίτω, ὁ δὲ ἱερεὺς ἀντικρὺ τὸ κεραμεοῦν ἀγγεῖον, ἐν ᾧ ὕδωρ ἐστὶ καὶ γῆ, ἀντικρὺ στὰς ἐπιλεγέτω τάδε·

794 Tertullian, On Modesty 17, cited pg. 163, Wine in the Bible: A Biblical Study on the Use of Alcoholic Beverages, by Samuele Bacchiocchi. Berrien Springs, MI: Biblical Perspectives, 2001. Compare also Tertullian, Against Marcion, Book V:18: "(The apostle says further:) "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess," — a precept which is suggested by the passage (of the prophet), where the seducers of the consecrated (Nazarites) to drunkenness are rebuked: "Ye gave wine to my holy ones to drink." This prohibition from drink was given also to the high priest Aaron and his sons, "when they went into the holy place."

795 To Eustochium, Letter 108, Jerome.

In light of Ephesians 5:18, believers must totally abstain from consumption of alcohol. They must also abstain from selling it, giving it to others, owning companies that produce or distribute alcohol through stock or mutual funds, or providing any other support whatsoever to alcohol (Habakkuk 2:15). Furthermore, faithful churches must warn against and separate from those who hold to the error of the "moderate" consumption of alcohol. The position of Scripture—total abstinance—must be strongly set forth and contended for along with the rest of the faith (Jude 3).

After affirming that the consumption of alcohol in any degree is forbidden in Ephesians 5:18a, Paul sets up a contrast being made between being filled with wine and with the Spirit. Believers were not to be controlled by wine, but "filled with the Spirit" (5:18b).[796] The passive voice of "be filled" also indicates the supernatural Divine initiative in Spirit filling—the believer does not fill himself. The verb "filled" (πληρόω) indicates that believers are to be "fill[ed] to the full . . . fill[ed] up to the top . . . so that nothing shall be lacking to full measure"[797] with the Spirit. "Lit[erally] the term means 'to fill something completely' . . . [n]on-lit[erally] it means 'to fill with a content.' Pass[ively] [it means] 'to be filled with' something; the content may not be specified, the subj. itself is the content, "to fill completely."[798] The mind-altering control of alcohol was a model to be rejected by saints, sanctified ones. Nothing must control a believer's mind except God; an emphatic contrast between the control of wine and the control of the Spirit is established. To "be filled" can connote the idea of being "completely controlled and stamped by the powers which fill him."[799] One who is filled is characterized by that which fills him. One is controlled by Satan when the evil one fills a person's heart (Acts 5:3).[800] When "sorrow hath filled [one's] heart" (John 16:6),[801] or 796 Note the contrast between the accusation that the Spirit-filled believers in Acts 2 were filled with wine and the fact that they were actually filled with the Spirit, although the verb in Acts 2:13 for the filling with wine is not πληρόω but μεστόω. Note also Luke 1:15.

---

The Greeks likewise spoke of being "filled with wine" (cf. "ἐς ἄγγος ... βακχίου μέτρημα πληρώσαντες having poured wine into the vessel till it was full, E.*IT*954," pleroo, Liddell-Scott). Compare Jeremiah 13:13 (LXX): καὶ ἐρεῖς πρὸς αὐτούς τάδε λέγει κύριος ἰδοὺ ἐγὼ πληρῶ τοὺς κατοικοῦντας τὴν γῆν ταύτην καὶ τοὺς βασιλεῖς αὐτῶν τοὺς καθημένους υἱοὺς Δαυιδ ἐπὶ θρόνου αὐτοῦ καὶ τοὺς ἱερεῖς καὶ τοὺς προφήτας καὶ τὸν Ιουδαν καὶ πάντας τοὺς κατοικοῦντας Ιερουσαλημ μεθύσματι, "Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will fill [in judgment] the inhabitants of this land, and their kings the sons of David that sit upon their throne, and the priests, and the prophets, and Juda and all the dwellers in Jerusalem, with strong drink."

797 πληρόω, Thayer's Greek Lexicon, Henry Thayer. Compare BDAG.

798 πληρόω, Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, ed. Kittel, Bromiley, Friedrich.

799 "πληρόω also implies that a man is completely controlled and stamped by the powers which fill him[.] . . . There is in the term a strong element of exclusiveness or totality. The joy, knowledge etc. which fill the Christian shape his whole existence and imperiously claim his whole being" (πληρόω, Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, ed. Kittel, Bromiley, Friedrich).

800 εἶπε δὲ Πέτρος Ἀνανία, διατί ἐπλήρωσεν ὁ Σατανᾶς τὴν καρδίαν σου, ψεύσασθαί σὲ τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ Ἅγιον καὶ νοσφίσασθαι ἀπὸ τῆς τιμῆς τοῦ χωρίου;
But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land?

801 But because I have said these things unto you, sorrow hath filled your heart. ἀλλ᾽ ὅτι ταῦτα λελάληκα ὑμῖν, ἡ λύπη πεπλήρωκεν ὑμῶν τὴν καρδίαν.

evil fills one's heart (Ecclesiastes 9:3, LXX),[802] such exercise control over one's life. The result of being filled with wine is the surrender of control to the wine. The result of being filled with the fruits of righteousness is a life directed by righteousness instead of by unrigheousness (Philippians 1:11). The result of being filled with the Spirit is control by the Spirit in the believer's life.

Commonly, the Spirit is the content of the filling. One can see this by a comparison of the language of Acts 2:2, 4, where the filling of a house with wind (v. 2, ἐπλήρωσεν ὅλον τὸν οἶκον) is paralleled to the filling of people (the church, the house of God) with the Spirit (v. 4, καὶ ἐπλήσθησαν ἅπαντες Πνεύματος Ἁγίου). Filling for content is the use when the verb πίμπλημι is used of filling (Luke 1:15, 41, 67; Acts 2:4; 4:8; 6:3, 5; 7:55; 11:24),[803] when the noun πλήρης is used for filling (Luke 4:1; Acts 6:3, 5; 7:55; 11:24),[804] and in the only verse other than Ephesians 5:18 where πληρόω is used, Acts 13:52: οἱ δὲ μαθηταὶ ἐπληροῦντο χαρᾶς καὶ Πνεύματος Ἁγίου. One should also consider Acts 5:3, εἶπε δὲ Πέτρος Ἀνανία, διατί ἐπλήρωσεν ὁ Σατανᾶς τὴν καρδίαν σου, ψεύσασθαί σὲ τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ Ἅγιον καὶ νοσφίσασθαι ἀπὸ τῆς τιμῆς τοῦ χωρίου; "But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land?" where the idea is that Ananias was controlled by Satan by means of the fallen angel's filling Ananias' heart with evil things. Thus, one would expect the same thing in Ephesians 5:18, namely, that the Spirit is the content of the filling.

Certain writers, especially advocates of Reformed theology, affirm that Ephesians 5:18 does not, like the texts in Acts, refer to the Holy Spirit as the content of the filling, concluding rather that the text should be rendered as "filled by the Spirit." Some affirm that every believer is, to one extent or another, Spirit-filled. For example, Daniel Wallace argues: "[W]e know of no clear examples in biblical Greek in which ἐν + the dative indicates content. We should, therefore, seek some other nuance in such instances, as in Eph 5:18. . . . To see ἐν πνεύματι here as indicating content is grammatically suspect (even though it is, in many circles, the predominant view). Only if the flow of argument and/or the lack of other good possibilities strongly point in the direction of content would we be compelled to take it as such. There are no other examples in biblical Greek in which ἐν + the dative after πληρόω indicates content."[805] Similarly, William Combs

---

802 τοῦτο πονηρὸν ἐν παντὶ πεποιημένῳ ὑπὸ τὸν ἥλιον ὅτι συνάντημα ἓν τοῖς πᾶσιν καί γε καρδία υἱῶν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐπληρώθη πονηροῦ καὶ περιφέρεια ἐν καρδίᾳ αὐτῶν ἐν ζωῇ αὐτῶν καὶ ὀπίσω αὐτῶν πρὸς τοὺς νεκρούς. There is this evil in all that is done under the sun, that there is one event to all: yea, the heart of the sons of men is filled with evil, and madness is in their heart during their life, and after that they go to the dead.

803 The complete list of NT texts is: Matthew 22:10; 27:48; Luke 1:15, 23, 41, 57, 67; 2:6, 21–22; 4:28; 5:7, 26; 6:11; John 19:29; Acts 2:4; 3:10; 4:8, 31; 5:17; 9:17; 13:9, 45; 19:29.

804 The complete list of texts is: Matthew 14:20; 15:37; Mark 4:28; 6:43; 8:19; Luke 4:1; 5:12; John 1:14; Acts 6:3, 5, 8; 7:55; 9:36; 11:24; 13:10; 19:28; 2 John 1:8.

805 Pgs. 374-5, Greek Grammar Beyond the Basics, Wallace. Cf. pg. 94. Wallace neglects to mention on these pages (although he discusses the category of dative of content on pg. 170) that πληρόω + a simple dative is used for content in Romans 1:29; 2 Corinthians 7:4. These examples, furthermore, are actually in Paul's writings, like Ephesians 5:18, and so they are more relevant syntactically than the examples in Luke-Acts for the syntax of Ephesians 5:18. Interestingly, Wallace himself translates Ephesians 5:18b as "be filled with the Spirit" on pg. 441 of his Grammar, despite his extensive argumentation elsewhere in his book that such a translation is incorrect.

argues: "[Ephesians 5:18] would be the only example we have in Greek literature if this really is 'filled with the Spirit,' and that is the content . . . there is no filling with the Spirit."[806] However, these conclusions are erroneous.

First, if one were to concede that ἐν + dative does not explicitly express content, but an instrumental/means idea, and thus expresses a parallel idea to the dative οἴνῳ, namely, means or instrumentality (cf. the instrumental/means ἐν Πνεύματι structures in Ephesians 2:18, 22; 3:16; cf. also Eph 6:18), it would not eliminate the possibility that one is filled with the content of the Spirit in Ephesians 5:18. While one is not to be drunk with wine, that is, by means of wine, but be filled by means of or with the Spirit, the person who is drunk is not simply drunk by means of wine, but is filled with wine in content. Furthermore, the category, using πληρόω, of dative of content, is employed by Paul in Romans 1:29 and 2 Corinthians 7:4.[807] Likewise, one is filled with the fulness of Christ by means of the Spirit, but one is also filled with the content of the Spirit. While "[b]elievers are to be filled by Christ by means of the Spirit with the content of the fullness of God,"[808] such a fact does not mean that believers are not also to be filled with the content of the Holy Spirit.[809] Indeed, being filled with the Holy Spirit is, since the Spirit is Himself God and in possession of the fulness of Deity, being filled with the fulness of God. Thus, even if one were to concede to the Reformed argument that πληροῦσθε ἐν in Ephesians 5:18 cannot syntacally signify content with a following dative, the conclusion that one is not to be filled with the Spirit does not follow.

However, there is no need to concede that πληροῦσθε ἐν + dative cannot be used to signify content. First, it is not especially significant to affirm that πληρόω + ἐν is not content elsewhere in the New Testament. A search for the verb followed by the preposition will only yield 7 verses (Luke 9:31; 22:16; John 17:13; Romans 8:4; Galatians 5:14; Ephesians 5:18; Colossians 4:12), six references other than Ephesians 5:18. In five of the six, πληρόω means "fulfilled" and thus is not especially related to the question of Ephesians 5:18.[810] The structure in Colossians 4:12 is also quite different. Thus, New Testament texts that truly parallel the πληρόω + ἐν of Ephesians 5:18 are very limited. Furthermore, Colossians 2:9-10 supports a content idea for filling in the believer, employing πληρόω + ἐν, by a comparison with the way that the content of the fulness of the Godhead dwells in Christ.[811] Second, the category exists, using πληρόω, of dative of content, which is employed by Paul, Romans 1:29; 2 Corinthians 7:4.[812] Similarly, the Liddell-Scott lexicon indicates that πληρόω is used with the "dat. [as] to

---

806 "Filling of the Holy Spirit," Dr. William W. Combs, Detroit Baptist Seminary lecture, Mid-America Conference on Preaching 2003 "The Ministry of the Holy Spirit," http://www.dbts.edu/5-1/5-12.asp#03.

807 Cf. Wallace, Greek Grammar, pg. 170.

808 Pg. 375, Wallace, Greek Grammar.

809 Compare the conclusion of the Word Biblical Commentary on Ephesians 5:18: "Believers are to be filled by the Spirit and thus also filled with the Spirit."

810 πληρόω possesses the "fulfilled" idea from the idea of something being completely filled or completed; the step from being completed to being fulfilled was small.

811 ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ κατοικεῖ πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τῆς θεότητος σωματικῶς, καὶ ἐστε ἐν αὐτῷ πεπληρωμένοι, ὅς ἐστιν ἡ κεφαλὴ πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας; For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power.

812 See pg. 170, Greek Grammar Beyond the Basics, Wallace.

fill with." This category supports "filled with" in Ephesians 5:18. The use of πληρόω with the naked dative for content supports the use of πληρόω + ἐν + dative in Ephesians 5:18 as content.[813] While it is true that naked case usage and case usage after a preposition are not absolutely identical, they usually have substantial semantic overlap.

Third, in related Greek literature πληρόω + ἐν is followed by the content of the filling, parallel to Ephesians 5:18 as "be filled with the Spirit." Note Sirach 26:2: "A virtuous woman rejoiceth her husband, and he shall fulfil the years of his life in peace," γυνὴ ἀνδρεία εὐφραίνει τὸν ἄνδρα αὐτῆς καὶ τὰ ἔτη αὐτοῦ πληρώσει ἐν εἰρήνῃ. Here the peace is the content of the filling, so parallel Greek syntax to Ephesians 5:18 specifying content is found in the LXX. Furthermore, the only usage of πληρόω + ἐν in the earliest patristic writers is found in Ignatius:

> Ignatius, who is also called Theophorus, to the church of God the Father and of the beloved Jesus Christ at Smyrna in Asia, mercifully endowed with every spiritual gift, filled with faith and love, not lacking in any spiritual gift, most worthy of God, bearing holy things: heartiest greetings in a blameless spirit and the word of God. Ἰγνάτιος, ὁ καὶ Θεοφόρος, ἐκκλησίᾳ θεοῦ πατρὸς καὶ τοῦ ἠγαπημένου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἠλεημένῃ ἐν παντὶ χαρίσματι, πεπληρωμένῃ ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀγάπῃ, ἀνυστερήτῳ οὔσῃ παντὸς χαρίσματος, θεοπρεπεστάτῃ καὶ ἁγιοφόρῳ, τῇ οὔσῃ ἐν Σμύρνῃ τῆς Ἀσίας, ἐν ἀμώμῳ πνεύματι καὶ λόγῳ θεοῦ πλεῖστα χαίρειν (Ignatius to the Smyrnaeans 1:0).

Thus, the only documented instance in the earliest documents of Christiandom has πληρόω + ἐν expressing content, specifically being filled with the content of faith and love, which is reminicient of New Testament texts that parallel being filled with the Spirit and being filled with Spirit-produced virtues (cf. Acts 13:52; 6:3, 5). It is therefore not surprising that BDAG, on πληρόω, comparing Ignatius' statement to Ephesians 5:18: "With ἐν and dat. of thing ἐν πνεύματι with the Spirit Eph 5:18. ἐν πίστει καί ἀγάπῃ ISm ins." Thus, the standard Greek lexicon indicates that Ephesians 5:18b is properly rendered "filled with the Spirit."[814] Furthermore, later patristics also taught that Ephesians 5:18 speaks of being filled with the content of the Spirit.[815] The contention

---

[813] In the words of the Expositor's Greek Testament (ed. W. Robertson Nicoll, vol. 3. Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, reprint ed., pgs. 362-363—some editing below in brackets):

In NT Greek . . . verbs that are followed by the simple dative sometimes vary it by a prepositional form, e. g., [ὕδατι βαπτίζω] (Luke iii. 16) and ἐν ὕδατι (Matt. iii:11), παντὶ τρόπῳ (Phil i. 18) and ἐν παντὶ τρόπῳ (2 Thess ii[i]. 16), etc.; and the formula πληροῦν or πληροῦσθαι ἐν is not wholly without analogy; cf. τοῦ πάντα ἐν πᾶσι πληρουμένου, [Eph] i. 23 above; and [πεπληρωμένοι] ἐν παντὶ θελήματι τοῦ Θεοῦ [Note: the CT has eliminated the πληρόω in this verse] Col iv. 12, ,]" . . . The ἐν may be taken, therefore, as the instrumental, and the sense will be "filled with or by the Spirit." Some (e. g., Ell., Alf.) . . . combine the ideas of in and by, supposing the unusual phrase to be chosen with a view to convey the fact that the Holy Spirit is not only the instrument by which the Christian man is filled, but that also in which he is so filled."

[814] The article on πληρόω in the Exegetical Dictionary of the New Testament likewise renders Ephesians 5:18b as "filled with the Spirit," while the Theological Dictionary of the New Testament notes: "πληρόω ἐν == "with" . . . is also attested," citing as support BDF §172.

[815] Thus, note Chrysostom, Homily XIX on the Epistle of St. Paul to the Ephesians:

> "But be filled," says [Paul], "with the Spirit."
>
> And is then this Spirit within us? Yes, indeed, within us. For when we have driven away lying, and bitterness, and fornication, and uncleanness, and covetousness, from our souls, when we are become kind, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, when there is no jesting, when we have rendered ourselves worthy of it, what is there to hinder the Holy Spirit from coming and lighting upon us? And not only will He come unto us, but He will fill our hearts; and when we have so that πληρόω + ἐν cannot mean "filled with the Spirit" in Ephesians 5:18 because it "would be the only example we have in Greek literature"[816] is, therefore, very unconvincing. As in the book of Acts people were filled with the content of the Spirit, so in Ephesians 5:18 all saints are commanded to be filled with the Spirit.

Having the Spirit's presence in a special way is the idea behind the Old and New Testament doctrines of Spirit filling—each believer has God the Holy Ghost with and in him, and is to be full of His presence. The full presence of God the Spirit gives the believer His personal influence and enablement to walk wisely (Ephesians 5:15-17). Likewise, as a congregation grows to be made up of Spirit-filled individuals, so the assembly corporately grows to be full of holiness and of the special presence of God the Spirit, and thus is filled with the fulness of God Himself (Ephesians 3:19),[817] resulting in both a personal and corporate holy walk.[818]

As in sanctification there is the all-or-nothing aspect of an upright and sincere Christian walk that is free from any desire to consciously hold on to sin, so that some Christians are right with God while others are backsliding, and there is also the aspect of progressive renewal into the image of God, so the Spirit's special presence—His filling—is on one way all or nothing, and in another way something that can progressively increase or decrease. A backsliding believer is disobeying completely the present imperative,[819] requiring continuing and customary action, of "be filled" (πληροῦσθε) in great a light kindled within us, then will the way of virtue be no longer difficult to attain, but will be easy and simple.

---

It would have been very surprising to patristics such as Chrysostom or Ignatius to discover that although they preached, taught, wrote, spoke, and thought in Greek, they did not have enough understanding of Greek syntax to know what modern English thinking and speaking critics of being filled with the Spirit know, namely, that πληρόω + ἐν does not indicate content.

816 "Filling of the Holy Spirit," Dr. Combs, Detroit Baptist Seminary lecture, Mid-America Conference on Preaching 2003 "The Ministry of the Holy Spirit," http://www.dbts.edu/5-1/5-12.asp#03.

817 Consider, in this regard, the imagery in Ephesians of the church as the "an holy temple in the Lord" in whom the individual members of the congregation "are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit" (Ephesians 2:21-22, ἐν ᾧ πᾶσα ἡ οἰκοδομὴ συναρμολογουμένη αὔξει εἰς ναὸν ἅγιον ἐν Κυρίῳ, ἐν ᾧ καὶ ὑμεῖς συνοικοδομεῖσθε εἰς κατοικητήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν Πνεύματι.). In keeping with the New Testment picture of both indivdual believers (1 Corinthians 6:19-20) and the corporate congregation (1 Corinthians 3:16-17; 1 Timothy 3:15) as the temple of the Triune God, including God the Spirit, consider the Old Testament language of Jehovah "filling" His institution of worship, whether the tabernacle, the Solomonic temple, or the coming Millennial temple, with His special presence (Exodus 40:34-35; 1 Kings 8:10-11; 2 Chronicles 5:13-14; 7:1-2; Ezekiel 10:4; 43:5; 44:4; cf. also Haggai 2:7, where the temple of Herod would have the presence of the God-Man, Christ within it, and thus be filled with the glory of God). The Old Testament predicted also the eschatological filling of the whole earth with Jehovah's special presence (cf. Numbers 14:21; Psalm 72:19; Isaiah 6:3; 11:9; Habakkuk 2:14), as Ephesians indicates that "in the dispensation of the fulness of times [God the Father will] gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him" (Ephesians 1:10).

818 Thus, note the corporate aspect of Ephesians 5:19-21. However, Spirit filling does not affect actions in the congregation only, but also proper fulfillment of other roles in life by individuals as fathers, wives, children, masters, and servants (Ephesians 5:22-6:9).

819 Contrast the aorist imperatives in Matthew 22:32, "Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers" (καὶ ὑμεῖς πληρώσατε τὸ μέτρον τῶν πατέρων ὑμῶν), which the Jews did by their single culminating act of rebellion in crucifying the incarnate Messiah; cf. also Philippians 2:2, πληρώσατέ μου τὴν χαράν. There are no present imperatives of πληρόω besides Ephesians 5:18 in the New Testament, while only one present imperative (in the active voice) is found in the LXX (Jeremiah 51:11/28:11) along with a handful of aorist imperatives (Genesis 1:22, 28; 9:1, 7; Psalm 70:8; 82:17).

Ephesians 5:18, while the believer who is right with God is enjoined to be continually filled all the more. In the context of Ephesians 5:18a, one is either entirely free from the control of wine or one is not, but for those who are not, there are degrees of drunkenness where control is more and more surrendered to intoxicants. The error that Ephesians 5:18a only prohibits excessive alcohol consumption, but allows "moderate" drinking that tolerates, to a lesser degree, the influence of alcohol over the believer, produces confusion in the command to be filled with the Spirit in Ephesians 5:18b. While the progressive aspect of Spirit filling, through which believers are to be ever the more full of the presence of the Holy Ghost and consequently ever the more under His control, can, to a certain extent, although improperly, be maintained against an alleged prohibition of excessive drinking that nevertheless allows some control by alcohol, the important all-or-nothing aspect of Spirit filling and consequent control is very poorly set in contrast with allegedly allowable degrees of control by alcohol. The command for total abstinence from wine in Ephesians 5:18a is excecedingly important context for the command in Ephesians 5:18b for believers to be filled with the Spirit.

In Acts 13:52,[820] the spiritual grace of joy, which is part of the fruit of the Spirit (Galatians 5:22), and the presence of the Spirit Himself, are connected; believers were "filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost." In one way, a believer is either full of spiritual joy, or he is not—a believer who is overtaken by sin loses fulness of joy as he loses the smiling face of his Redeemer. At the same time, the disciples of Acts 13:52 could grow yet more full of joy than they already were as they experienced yet sweeter communion with the God of joy—indeed, such was the prayer of Paul for the members of the church at Rome: "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost" (Romans 15:13). The consequence of such filling was that the Roman Christians would be "full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another" (Romans 15:14).[821] God would, Paul prayed, fill these saints with more and more joy and peace so that they would ever more abound in spiritual graces, until perfected at glorification and completely filled "with all joy and peace." Sanctification includes believers being "filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ" (Philippians 1:9-11)[822] and "filled with the knowledge of [God's] will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding" with the result that they "walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and

---

The μὴ μεθύσκεσθε of Ephesians 5:18a is also certainly a customary present imperative indicating a general precept—Christians are not to be getting drunk, and are to do so by totally abstaining from alcohol—although entire freedom from control by wine is certainly possible in this life in a way that being filled to the uttermost extent with the Spirit is not in this life (cf. Galatians 5:17), while predominant fulness and control and a state of being progressively filled is the current blessedness of all sincere and upright Christians.

[820] And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost. οἱ δὲ μαθηταὶ ἐπληροῦντο χαρᾶς καὶ Πνεύματος Ἁγίου.

[821] 13 ὁ δὲ Θεὸς τῆς ἐλπίδος πληρῶσαι ὑμᾶς πάσης χαρᾶς καὶ εἰρήνης ἐν τῷ πιστεύειν, εἰς τὸ περισσεύειν ὑμᾶς ἐν τῇ ἐλπίδι, ἐν δυνάμει Πνεύματος Ἁγίου. 14 Πέπεισμαι δέ, ἀδελφοί μου, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐγὼ περὶ ὑμῶν, ὅτι καὶ αὐτοὶ μεστοί ἐστε ἀγαθωσύνης, πεπληρωμένοι πάσης γνώσεως, δυνάμενοι καὶ ἀλλήλους νουθετεῖν. (Romans 15:13-14)

[822] 9 καὶ τοῦτο προσεύχομαι, ἵνα ἡ ἀγάπη ὑμῶν ἔτι μᾶλλον καὶ μᾶλλον περισσεύῃ ἐν ἐπιγνώσει καὶ πάσῃ αἰσθήσει, 10 εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν ὑμᾶς τὰ διαφέροντα, ἵνα ἦτε εἰλικρινεῖς καὶ ἀπρόσκοποι εἰς ἡμέραν Χριστοῦ, 11 πεπληρωμένοι καρπῶν δικαιοσύνης τῶν διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, εἰς δόξαν καὶ ἔπαινον Θεοῦ.

increasing in the knowledge of God" (Colossians 1:9-10;[823] cf. Colossians 4:12, 17; 2 Thessalonians 1:11; 2 Timothy 1:4) as they are filled and completed as they receive of the Divine fulness (cf. Colossians 2:9-10a).[824] In contrast, the unregenerate, as they "wax worse and worse" (2 Timothy 3:13), progress to new bottoms in their universally possessed total depravity, as they are "being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness" and grow "full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity" and other sins (Romans 1:29).[825] Thus, all in Acts 13:52 were filled with the Spirit because they were saved and right with God, but they could grow even more full as that same Spirit drew them yet closer to God and transformed them the more into the likeness of Christ, who, as the perfect Man, was perfectly right with God and perfectly sinless, and thus "full of the Holy Ghost" to the highest degree (Luke 4:1).

Acts 6:3, 5, in a fashion similar to Acts 13:52, connects Spirit-produced spiritual graces with being Spirit filled.[826] The spiritual servant-leaders of the passage, the model for all deacons, are "full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom" and "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 6:3, 5, 7:55[827]). They are to follow the pattern of Barnabas, who was "a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith" (Acts 11:24). As with the possession of full spiritual joy, Spirit-wrought faith (Galatians 5:22) and wisdom (Ephesians 1:17; 5:18-19; Colossians 1:9; 3:16; Exodus 31:3) either fill the Christian or not in one sense, but, in another, they are capable of growth and development.

Spirit filling may be illustrated by containers holding various amounts of water.[828] Unlike a glass full of water, one with only a small amount of water at the bottom, or one that is one-fourth full and is slowly leaking, certainly has water in it, but it is hardly filled with water. Similarly, a backsliding believer has the holy Spirit—for all believers are indwelt by Him (Romans 8:9)—but he is hardly filled with the Spirit. Likewise, all believers love Jesus Christ (1 Corinthians 16:22), but a backslider is hardly filled with Spirit-produced love (Galatians 5:22). On the other hand, some water storage vessels designed for camping trips or other similar purposes have the ability not only be filled to the brim but can, like an accordion, expand in their capacity when stretched, so that they have the ability not only be full to one level but, by the continued addition of water,

---

[823] Διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ἡμεῖς, ἀφ᾽ ἧς ἡμέρας ἠκούσαμεν, οὐ παυόμεθα ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν προσευχόμενοι, καὶ αἰτούμενοι ἵνα πληρωθῆτε τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ καὶ συνέσει πνευματικῇ, 10 περιπατῆσαι ὑμᾶς ἀξίως τοῦ Κυρίου εἰς πᾶσαν ἀρεσκείαν, ἐν παντὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ καρποφοροῦντες καὶ αὐξανόμενοι εἰς τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τοῦ Θεοῦ·

[824] ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ κατοικεῖ πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τῆς θεότητος σωματικῶς, καὶ ἐστε ἐν αὐτῷ πεπληρωμένοι.

[825] πεπληρωμένους πάσῃ ἀδικίᾳ, πορνείᾳ, πονηρίᾳ, πλεονεξίᾳ, κακίᾳ· μεστοὺς φθόνου, φόνου, ἔριδος, δόλου, κακοηθείας· ψιθυριστάς, [826] The noun πλήρης, instead of the verb πληρόω (Ephesians 5:18; Acts 13:52), is employed in Luke 4:1; Acts 6:3, 5; 7:55; 11:24.

[827] Acts 7:55 appears to involve the close presence of the Spirit that led the martyr to boldly preach the Word (Acts 7) so that the Spirit cut Stephen's hearers to the heart (7:54), as well as the Spirit's giving Stephen his dying vision of the exalted Christ, in addition to his generally being full of faith and the Spirit in his daily life (Acts 6:5).

[828] Compare 2 Kings 4:4 (LXX): καὶ εἰσελεύσῃ καὶ ἀποκλείσεις τὴν θύραν κατὰ σοῦ καὶ κατὰ τῶν υἱῶν σου καὶ ἀποχεεῖς εἰς τὰ σκεύη ταῦτα καὶ τὸ πληρωθὲν ἀρεῖς, "And thou shalt go in and shut the door upon thee and upon thy sons, and thou shalt pour forth into these vessels, and remove that which is filled."

expand to hold even more than they did before. In such a manner believers are to be filled with the Holy Spirit, and with the love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, and faith that He supernaturally produces within them.[829]

As God produces, through the Theanthropic Mediator and applied directly by the Holy Spirit, ever greater degrees of Christlikeness in believers who are right with God, they enjoy ever greater degrees of the special presence of the Triune God with them and are thus the more filled with the fulness of the one God who is Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. The Word made flesh, who is Himself "full of grace and truth"[830] (John 1:14), and who thus also receives from God the Father a measureless portion of the Spirit (John 3:34),[831] communicates to those who are united to Him by faith ever fuller measures of the Divine presence and moral attributes (John 1:17), so that they can testify, "of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace" (John 1:16).[832] It was the Father's ordination that in the God-Man should "all fulness dwell"; therefore in Christ "dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily," and He can communicate of His Theanthropic fulness to those united to Him (Colossians 1:19; 2:9-10).[833] The Father grants (Ephesians 3:14) that, by means of the supernatural efficacy of the Spirit (Ephesians 3:16) sent by the ascended Christ (Ephesians 4:10; John 16:7), Christ dwells in an ever greater way in the hearts of those who are in His church (Ephesians 3:17),[834] they gain experiential knowledge of the love of God in Christ, and in this way they are "filled with all the fulness of God" (Ephesians 3:19)[835] by Christ who, anointed King in His mediatorial kingdom,[836] "ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things" (Ephesians 829 Compare Romans 15:29; Paul did not just want to come to the Romans in the indubitable "the blessing of the gospel of Christ," but in "the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ, ἐν πληρώματι εὐλογίας τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐλεύσομαι.

---

830 πλήρης χάριτος καὶ ἀληθείας.

831 ὃν γὰρ ἀπέστειλεν ὁ Θεός, τὰ ῥήματα τοῦ Θεοῦ λαλεῖ· οὐ γὰρ ἐκ μέτρου δίδωσιν ὁ Θεὸς τὸ Πνεῦμα.

832 καὶ ἐκ τοῦ πληρώματος αὐτοῦ ἡμεῖς πάντες ἐλάβομεν, καὶ χάριν ἀντὶ χάριτος.

833 ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ εὐδόκησε πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα κατοικῆσαι . . . ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ κατοικεῖ πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τῆς θεότητος σωματικῶς, καὶ ἐστε ἐν αὐτῷ πεπληρωμένοι.

834 "[F]aith is . . . living and active . . . which immediately appropriates the whole Christ. It can indeed increase and grow in that appropriation, but it nevertheless always has for its object the whole Christ and can never isolate him from his benefits nor can it isolate one benefit from the others. Sanctification, accordingly, both from the divine and the human side, is an organic process. The more Christ indwells us, the more we are strengthened in faith; and the more our faith increases, the more Christ communicates himself to us" (pg. 264, Reformed Dogmatics, Herman Bavink, vol. 4).

835 πληρωθῆτε εἰς πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ.

836 "The mediatorial kingdom may be defined . . . as the rule of God through a divinely chosen representative who not only speaks and acts for God but also represents the people before God; a rule which has especial reference to the human race (although it finally embraces the universe); and its mediatorial ruler is always a member of the human race" ("The Greatness of the Kingdom," Part I, Alva J. McClain, Bibliotheca Sacra 112:445 (Jan 1955) p. 18). In the eternal state, "When the last enemy is put down by our Lord as the mediatorial king, when even death itself is abolished and complete harmony is established, then the purpose of his mediatorial kingdom will have been fulfilled. Then the Son will deliver up his kingdom to God the Father, to be merged into the eternal kingdom, thus being perpetuated forever, but no longer as a separate entity (1 Cor 15:24–28). This does not mean the end of the rule of our Lord Jesus Christ. He only ceases to reign as the mediatorial King in history. But as the only begotten Son, very God of very God, He shares with the other Persons of the Triune God the throne of the eternal kingdom. In that final and eternal city of God, center of a redeemed new heaven and earth, there is but one throne. It is

4:10).[837] The church, the assembly of immersed believers,[838] is Christ's "body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all" (Ephesians 1:22-23),[839] and the ascended God-Man communicates the Trinitarian Divine fulness to His body (Ephesians 4:15-16) by the Spirit. The ascended Mediator and Head of the church communicates to His body of the Divine fulness and full measure of the Spirit that He possesses, so that, by the Father's ordination and will and through the incarnate and ascended Son, the saints are filled by called. 'the throne of God and of the Lamb' (Rev 22:3–5)" ("The Greatness of the Kingdom, Part IV: The Mediatorial Kingdom from the Acts Period to the Eternal State," McClain, Bibliotheca Sacra 112:448 (Oct 55) p. 310]. The four parts of McClain's series on the Kingdom in Bibliotheca Sacra (12:445 (Jan 55) p. 11-27; 112:446 (Apr 55) p. 107-124; 112:447 (Jul 55) p. 209-224; 112:448 (Oct 55) p. 304-311) are very helpful in understanding the concept of the mediatorial kingdom and its distinction from the eternal kingdom of God.

---

John Darby comments:

> When He has put all His enemies under His feet, and has given back the kingdom to His Father (for it is never taken from Him, nor given to another, as happens with human kingdoms), then the Son Himself is subject to Him who has put all things under Him, in order that God may be all in all. The reader should observe, that it is the counsels of God with regard to the government of all things which is here spoken of, and not His nature; and moreover it is the Son, as man, of whom these things are said. This is not an arbitrary explanation: the passage is from Psalm 8, the subject of which is the exaltation of man to the position of head of all things, God putting all things under His feet. Nothing, says the apostle, is excepted (Hebrews 2:8) save, as he adds here, that He is necessarily excepted who put all things under Him. When the man Christ, the Son of God, has in fact accomplished this subjugation, He gives back to God the universal power which had been committed to Him, and the mediatorial kingdom, which He held as man, ceases. He is again subject, as He was on earth. He does not cease to be one with the Father, even as He was so while living in humiliation on the earth, although saying at the same time "Before Abraham was, I am." But the mediatorial government of man has disappeared — is absorbed in the supremacy of God, to which there is no longer any opposition. Christ will take His eternal place, a Man, the Head of the whole redeemed family, being at the same time God blessed for ever, one with the Father. In Psalm 2 we see the Son of God, as born on earth, King in Zion, rejected when He presented Himself on earth; in Psalm 8 the result of His rejection, exalted as Son of man at the head of all that the hand of God has made. Then we find Him here laying down this conferred authority, and resuming the normal position of humanity, namely, that of subjection to Him who has put all things under Him; but through it all, never changing His divine nature, nor — save so far as exchanging humiliation for glory — His human nature either. But God is now all in all, and the special government of man in the Person of Jesus — a government with which the assembly is associated (see Ephesians 1:20-23, which is a quotation from the same Psalm) is merged in the immutable supremacy of God, the final and normal relationship of God with His creature. We shall find the Lamb omitted in that which is said in Revelation 21:1-8, speaking of this same period.
>
> Thus we find in this passage [1 Corinthians 15] resurrection by man — death having entered by man; the relationship of the saints with Jesus, the source and the power of life, the consequence being His resurrection, and theirs at His coming; power over all things committed to Christ, the risen Man; afterwards the kingdom given back to God the Father, the tabernacle of God with men, and the man Christ, the second Adam, eternally a man subject to the Supreme — this last a truth of infinite value to us (the resurrection of the wicked, though supposed in the resurrection brought in by Christ, not being the direct subject of the chapter). (Synopsis of the Books of the Bible, part 2; the New Testament; comments on 1 Corinthians, pgs. 46-49 (598ff.); elec. acc. in Christian Library Series, vol. 15: Classic Commentary Collection, AGES Library, Rio, WI: 2006)

[837] ὁ καταβάς, αὐτός ἐστι καὶ ὁ ἀναβὰς ὑπεράνω πάντων τῶν οὐρανῶν, ἵνα πληρώσῃ τὰ πάντα). The "filling all things" of Ephesians 4:10 relates to Christ's victory and rule over creation in His mediatorial kingdom as He puts all enemies beneath His feet and spreads the reign of God throughout the whole creation, and thus fills the creation with the special Divine presence and blessing, bringing it to its fulfillment and completion in God through Christ.

[838] Since justifying faith is a prerequisite to Scriptural baptism, no unregenerate person is truly a church member, even if he has been dipped in water upon profession of his (spurious) faith, and so only regenerate persons are genuinely part of the body of Christ.

[839] τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, ἥτις ἐστὶ τὸ σῶμα αὐτοῦ, τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ πάντα ἐν πᾶσι πληρουμένου.

the Spirit with the fulness of the Trinity, and thus are also filled with the Spirit Himself (Ephesians 5:18), as the Holy Ghost is Himself true God, in full possession of the undivided Divine essence by virtue of His eternal procession from the Father and the Son. This spiritual union, communion, and participation with God results in the believer's growing inward and outward holiness; being filled with the fulness of God results in the Christian becoming a holy being filled with holy attributes and "full of good works" (Acts 9:36; cf. Colossians 1:9; 4:12). Such is the glorious fruit of being filled by and with the Holy Spirit.

The New Testament also associates being filled with and therefore controlled by the Spirit with the Spirit's giving supernatural enablement for specific tasks, both through miraculous abilities in the first century and supernatural enablements for the entirety of the dispensation of grace, although the employment of a different Greek verb[840] for this sort of supernatural endowment sets this type of Spirit filling apart from that of Ephesians 5:18 and the texts in Acts discussed above. Ordained to be a prophet, John the Baptist was filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb (Luke 1:15) for the work of his prophetic ministry. The Spirit filled Elizabeth (Luke 1:41) and Zecharias (Luke 1:67) in association with their giving forth inspired prophecy, and after Christ baptized the church with the Holy Spirit in Acts 2, her members were filled with the Spirit and thus enabled to miraculously speak foreign languages (Acts 2:4). Not only were specifically miraculous abilities given through this type of Spirit filling, but the Spirit filled and thus supernaturally empowered non-miraculous Christian work by believers who were right with God. Thus, believers were filled with the Spirit to boldy preach the gospel (Acts 4:8), the entire congregation at Jerusalem was supernaturally empowered to be preaching the Word with boldness because of Spirit filling for that purpose (Acts 4:31), and Paul was filled with the Spirit (Acts 9:17) in connection with Christ's ministerial call to him to boldly preach the gospel to many nations as the Apostle to the Gentiles (9:15-16). Miraculous and non-miraculous supernatural filling could also be connected, as the Spirit-filled Paul both to non-miraculously rebuke and preach with boldness, and also to miraculously prophesy (Acts 13:9-12).

The connection of Spirit filling with supernatural ability to perform specific tasks stands in direct continuity with the Old Testament doctrine of Spirit filling.[841] God "filled" Bezaleel and those helping him "with the spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship" so that they could complete the Divinely ordained task of building the tabernacle and all the rest of the "service of the sanctuary" (Exodus 31:1-6; 36:1-2). Both builders and those designing priestly garments were "filled with the spirit of wisdom" (Exodus 28:3; 35:25-35). Similarly, when Moses consecrated Joshua as the new leader of the children of Israel, "Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him: and the children of Israel hearkened unto him, and did as the LORD commanded Moses" (Deuteronomy 34:9).[842]

In conclusion, the New Testament does indeed command believers to be "filled with the Spirit" in Ephesians 5:18. Rather than being filled with and consequently 840 That is, πίμπλημι.

---

841 The relevant Old Testament passages employ the verb מָלֵא in conjunction with רוּחַ.

842 Micah 3:8 is similar to the passages in the text; however, in it the prophet does not specifically affirm that he is filled with the Spirit, but filled with power by means of the Spirit.

controlled by wine, believers are to totally abstain from alcohol, which inherently contains within it the quality of riotousness, and instead be filled with the Spirit, which results in His Divine control in the believer's life. In continuity with examples in the Old Testament, New Testament examples indicate that there is a type of Spirit filling that provides supernatural enablement for specific tasks, most notably, for the course of the church age after the cessation of miraculous gifts, ability to boldly preach the Word and gospel of God. Believers appropriately look to the Lord for such repeated fillings and consequent enablement as they seek to advance the work of Christ's kingdom. However, Ephesians 5:18 speaks specifically not of the Spirit's enablement for specific tasks, but of believers being continuously filled in an ever greater measure with the Holy Spirit. The backslidden believer is not filled with the Spirit any more than he is filled with Spirit-produced joy, faith, love, or other graces, while every surrendered believer, all Christians who are right with God, are filled with the Spirit, and, as they draw ever closer and are transformed ever the more into the image of God, can expect to be ever the more abundantly filled with and consequently controlled by that Holy Ghost who Himself possesses, with the Father and the Son, the very undivided fulness of the Triune God.

Being filled with the Spirit is essential for obedience in the Christian life of the sort explained in Ephesians 5:19-6:9.[843] Edifying speaking and singing of psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs (5:19), giving thanks (5:20),[844] and the mutual submission and obedience to family and social roles (5:20, 5:21-6:9) are based on being filled with the Spirit. Husbands, wives, children, parents, employers, and employees must be filled with the Spirit to properly fulfill their roles. Furthermore, the Spirit filled believer will also "let the word of Christ dwell in [him] richly in all wisdom" (Colossians 3:16). Scripture dwelling richly in the believer will also bring him the rich presence of the indwelling Spirit (Romans 8:11; 2 Timothy 1:14) and whole Trinity (2 Corinthians 6:16),[845] for the rich dwelling of the Spirit in the Christian is being filled with the Spirit, and the rich dwelling of the Trinity in the believer is being filled with the fulness of God.

The necessity of being filled with the Spirit is part of historic Baptist doctrine and practice. Describing the pre-Reformation Baptist group, the Paterines, Jarrel wrote: "In the midst of a people thus professing to be filled with the spirit, and whose pope was the Holy Ghost himself, none of the existing officers of the [Roman Catholic] church could 843 Thus, the participles λαλοῦντες, εὐχαριστοῦντες, and ὑποτασσόμενοι of 5:19-21 are dependent upon the πληροῦσθε of 5:18, and the teaching of 5:22-6:9 is connected by the ὑποτάσσεσθε of 5:22 with the ὑποτασσόμενοι of 5:21, so that the entire passage flows out of the πληροῦσθε ἐν Πνεύματι of 5:18. Ephesians 5:22-6:9 is not introduced by a conjunction, as are previous divisions of Ephesians back to 1:3, supporting the continuitiy of thought of 5:22-6:9 with the requirement and development of walking in wisdom in 5:15-19.

---

844 Compare Ephesians 5:18, 20 and 1 Thessalonians 5:18, 19: "be filled with the Spirit . . . giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ"/"In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you. Quench not the Spirit." Quenching the Spirit and being filled with the Spirit are opposites.

845 Thus, ἐνοικέω is found in Colossians 3:16; Romans 8:11; 2 Timothy 1:14; 2 Corinthians 6:16. All believers are indwelt, but not all have the Godhead's presence "richly," even as all believers have the Word of Christ in them (cf. John 5:38), but not all let it dwell in them richly (Colossians 3:16). The rich presence of the indwelling Trinity will also produce a believer having "unfeigned faith" dwelling in him (2 Timothy 1:5, the final ἐνοικέω text in the NT).

exercise any of their hierarchal prerogatives."[846] After the Reformation, in 1653, the Baptist church in Leith, England, wrote to the Baptist church at Hexham, "Dearly beloved Brethren, — We salute you in our Lord Jesus Christ, wishing grace, mercy, and peace may be multiplied unto you, through the knowledge of the Father, that you may have the full communications of grace and of the love of God shed abroad in your hearts, being filled with the Spirit of truth; and may grow up in all things into him who is your head, and may approve yourselves to be persons making it your great study to honour God in your generations; that so you may be [the occasion] of joy unto all God's people, and may indeed appear to be trees of righteousness of the Lord's own planting." The letter was written because the Leith church was "refreshed to hear of that eminent work of God that hath sprung up amongst you in these parts, in that he has pleased to add unto his church daily such as shall be saved."[847] The great American Baptist pastor John Leland connected "Christian piety" and being "filled with the spirit."[848] G. W. Joiner, who pastored a variety of American Baptist churches in the mid to late 19th century, considered it his "great joy" to be "filled with the Spirit."[849] In the same time period, the Baptist "Dr. Webb . . . [b]eing filled with the Spirit . . . preached with much power."[850] B. H. Carroll, Baptist pastor, professor of theology and Bible at Baylor University and Seminary from 1872-1905 and professor and president of the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary from 1908-1914, wrote: "[In Ephesians] 5:18 . . . [t]here are two kinds of intoxication, one of wine and one of the Holy Spirit. I have seen people under the intoxication of the Spirit. . . . Whenever we want to be stimulated, we should go off and pray. As we are infilled with the Spirit, we become enthusiastic; a divine afflatus rests upon us, enabling us to think thoughts that breathe, to speak words that burn and to sing songs that have more convincing power than the sermon. That is spiritual intoxication."[851] Modern Baptists should follow the godly example of their forefathers and continue to preach and experience the glorious truth of Spirit filling today.

The command, "be filled with the Spirit," and the fact that God deigns to fill His people with the Spirit, should drastically change your life. Be amazed, oh heavens, and be awestruck, oh earth—the infinite God—the high and holy One who inhabits eternity—wishes for men to partake of Himself! He blesses His people with all spiritual blessings now, works all things together for their good, and guarantees them the infinite happiness of an eternity with Him, and He wills that they know His special presence even while, 846 Pg. 107, Chapter 13, Baptist Church Perpetuity, W. A. Jarrel. Elec. acc. Baptist History Collection, ver. 1. Paris, AK: Baptist Standard Bearer, 2005.

---

847 Pgs. 232-233, Records of the Churches of Christ, by Edward B. Underhill. Elec. acc. Baptist History Collection, ver. 1. Paris, AK: Baptist Standard Bearer, 2005.

848 Pg. 479, Chapter 40, "Which Has Done the Most Mischief in the World, the Kings-Evil or Priest-Craft?" in The Writings of the late Elder John Leland, by L.F. Greene. Elec. acc. Baptist History Collection, ver. 1. Paris, AK: Baptist Standard Bearer, 2005.

849 Pg. 250, "Biographical Sketches," in the "Texas Historical and Biographical Magazine," vol. 2, by J. B. Link. Elec. acc. Baptist History Collection, ver. 1. Paris, AK: Baptist Standard Bearer, 2005.

850 Pg. 94, Chapter 13, The Baptist History of South Dakota, by T.M. Shanafelt. Elec. acc. Baptist History Collection, ver. 1. Paris, AK: Baptist Standard Bearer, 2005. The event recorded took place during a preaching meeting in 1874.

851 Pgs. 89-90, An Interpretation of the English Bible: Colossians, Ephesians, and Hebrews, by B. H. Carroll, ed. J. B. Cranfill. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Books, 1948. Elec. acc. AGES Christian Library Series, Vol. 11, B. H. Carroll Collection. Rio, WI: 2006.

sinners though they are, they walk upon this fallen and rebellious earth. Indeed, He not only makes His fulness available to them, but positively enjoins them to be full of His presence, to be filled with His Spirit and the fulness of God. Who would refuse this? What awful evil it is to not be filled with the Spirit! Is it not immeasurable ingratitude, stubbornness, pride, rebellion, and wickedness to refuse to be filled with the Spirit? Is it not to exalt one's self and own way against God, and by preferring self and sin to God and His presence, an act of the most awful idolatry and creature worship? What crimes are these that you have committed, oh Christian, by your refusal, so often, to be filled with the Spirit? And how great is your sin of not pursuing an ever greater fulness of the Spirit and the Triune God! Why are you not much further along than you are now? Why is your communion with Him and knowledge of His presence so miserably feeble? Will you not, in tears, greatly humble yourself and seek to be filled with the Spirit? For—despite all your crimes—your Triune God yet loves you with an infinite and unchangeable love, and still offers and bids you to be filled with the Spirit and the fulness of God. His provision has not been taken away, but is provided for you still.

You should diligently search your heart and be sure that you are right with God, so that you can enjoy the wonderful provision of being filled with the Spirit, as commanded in Ephesians 5:18. Since Spirit filling results in Spirit control, you should also detest and flee from alcohol and any and every other thing that would displace the control of the Lord the Spirit from mind-controlling video media, to worldly and fleshly contemporary "Christian" music, to the false spirits and false, mindless, fanatical, Spirit-quenching worship associated with Pentecostalism and the charismatic movement. Do you want the Spirit of God, or the spirits of devils? Be filled with the Spirit, and reject with horror such productions of evil spirits. Do not be decived by whatever high talk of the Spirit such pseudo-Christianity employs. Do not let anything contest the control of the Holy Spirit over your life. You must not only abstain from consuming wine yourself, but abstain from selling, commending, or giving it to others (Habakkuk 2:15), and rather warn about its evil nature, as a substance that has within its very nature riotousness and wickedness. Be wise, and understand the will of the Lord. Abstain from beginning the process that leads to drunkeness, and be filled with the Spirit.

Furthermore, you should trust the Lord for supernatural enablement to boldy preach the gospel and engage in spiritual work in general. Be filled with the Spirit, both as a mark of your Christian life, and also by being empowered for His specific assistance in the advancement of the Kingdom. Will you seek to defeat the world, the flesh, and the devil in your own strength? Pray for boldness, and trust God to give you the special enablement of the Holy Ghost as you open your mouth to pointedly preach the Word, fearing God alone, not man (Acts 4:31). Do not fear persecution and opposition—rather, rejoice if you are counted worthy to suffer for Christ's name (Acts 5:41). Do not disobey God and fail to boldly confess Christ (Matthew 10:32) because of what appears to be insuperable hardship. Do not those who have stood firm in such trials tell you that they enjoyed the special presence of the Lord with them at that time? Did they not tell you that they experienced the blessed reality of the special guidance of the Holy Ghost (Mark 13:11)? Indeed, if you have endured such tribulations yourself, do you not know by experience how wonderfully true the special presence of the Spirit is? Will you miss such a glorious blessing out of fear of mortal men?

What is more, let those in particular who are pastors and teachers recognize the absolute necessity of Spirit filling and enablement for their successful ministry. The souls of Christ's flock, those of countless unconverted people, and the future of the kingdom of God advances or falls as the ministers of Christ either have or lack a Spirit-empowered ministry. The stakes are incomprehensibly high. A pastor who is not Spirit-filled is an awful spiritual disaster. Oh Christian worker, oh man of God, called to preach the Word and the gospel of Christ—will you not, of all men, be filled with the Spirit?

Furthermore, a pastor who is filled and thus empowered will boldly preach all the truth, emphasizing the specific sins of those in his audience (John 7:26; Acts 2:36-37; 4:1-13; 7:51-55). He will not hold back for pragmatic considerations, or out of the fear of man. He will not tickle ears, but will be able to testify of himself what was true of Christ: "I have preached righteousness in the great congregation: lo, I have not refrained my lips, O LORD, thou knowest. I have not hid thy righteousness within my heart; I have declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation: I have not concealed thy lovingkindness and thy truth from the great congregation" (Psalm 40:9-10). The truly Spirit-filled preacher will not conceal or refrain from setting forth one tittle of God's truth.

Finally, treasure the church—the congregation of Christ, His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. God has not designed you to be filled with the Spirit and grow in experiencing the special presence of the Trinity on your own (Ephesians 5:19-21). The fulness of Christ's presence is not experienced by listening to a preacher on T. V. or on the radio, by attending a parachurch Bible study, or by attending the services of a denominational system other than the church Christ started in the first century. No, Christ's temple—the place where His glory is especially manifested and His presence known—is your local, visible, Bible-believing and practicing Baptist church. Are there some people there who are harder to get along with than others? It is no matter—Jesus is there in a special way. Are the leaders, although admittedly godly and spiritually qualified men (1 Timothy 3), less than perfect? So were the Apostles themselves—fit into the church, and let Christ nourish and strengthen you as Head of His body, the assembly (Ephesians 4:15-17; Colossians 2:19). You have the glorious privilege and command of being filled with the Spirit—fulfill your personal and corporate responsibility, that it might be so.

H. Excursus VI: Is Fallen Man's Obligation To Obey God Limited To His Ability To Do So?

Various perfectionistic theologies of sanctification affirm that man's obligation to obey God is limited to his ability to do so.[852] They argue that God would not be fair were [852] Examples of this idea include Wesley's argument: "Christian perfection . . . [is a state in which people] love God with all their heart, and all men as themselves, [and thus] are Scripturally perfect. And surely such [people on earth] there are; otherwise the promise of God would be a mere mockery of human weakness. Hold fast to this" (cited pg. 123, "The Brighton Convention and Its Opponents." London Quarterly Review, October 1875). Likewise in the Oberlin theology: "The sinner has all the faculties and natural attributes requisite to render perfect obedience to God. All he needs is to be induced to use these powers and attributes as he ought" (pgs. 271-272, Finney's Systematic Theology, Charles Finney). Indeed, "Finney's theology and 'new measures' rested on 'a doctrine of plenary ability'—the notion that all that is

He to require of man more than he has the ability to perform. Consequently, fallen men have the ability to obey all that God requires of them. This plenary ability to obey is often ascribed to both unregnerate and regenerate individuals, but is sometimes limited to the latter by certain of its advocates.

Is it true that God would be unjustly mocking fallen man if He demanded and obliged him to obey beyond his ability? No text in the Bible teaches such a doctrine.[853] obligated of us we are able to perform and that obligation is limited by ability'" (pg. 466, The Theology of B. B. Warfield, Fred G. Zaspel). Likewise, "in the seventeenth century . . . the Socinians argued that God cannot require of human beings something that he does not provide," (pg. 279, Post-Reformation Reformed Dogmatics, by Richard Muller, vol. 1) an affirmation that led them to affirm that heathen with no knowledge of Christ could be saved (contra John 14:6; Acts 4:12) since they were not able to hear the gospel (pgs. 279, 285, ibid.). The Wesleyan and Oberlin perfectionist argumentation equating obligation and ability carried over into the Keswick theology through the teaching at the Broadlands Conference and its successors. As Hannah W. Smith taught at Broadlands: "God commands us to believe, and we can and must believe. God's commands are not grievous, but they would be if He commanded what we could not do. He always provides the power to obey" (pg. 128, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910). Thus, Broadlands consistently taught that "God gives us power to fulfill what we owe" (pg. 188, ibid). At the Oxford Convention Scriptural commands were "pressed upon us as a command, and therefore a promise" (pg. 333, Pg. 291, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874); consequently, "God's commandment is His enablement. Whatever is believed or suspected to be opposed to His will and to our well-being should be, and can be, renounced, and abandoned at once and for ever. Because it should be, it may be. This is essentially Keswick teaching" (pg. 92, The Keswick Convention: Its Message, Its Method, and Its Men, ed. Harford, emphasis in the original).

---

[853] One might allege that Philippians 4:13 supports the idea the idea that man's obligation and ability are coextensive. In the verse, Paul states: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." The fact that that the verse is not absolutely unlimited in its significance is obvious from the fact that Paul is not making a claim to either independent omnipotence or an omnipotence derived from Christ. Omnipotence is an incommunicable Divine attribute. The nature of the limitation of the "all things" is apparent from the context of v. 10-14; Paul is claiming that he can stand, by Christ's strength, whatever "affliction" (v. 14) the Lord allows to come his way; he can be "content" in whatever state of "want" he is in (v. 11), for he says: "I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound: every where and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need" (v. 12). Philippians 4:13 teaches the blessed fact that Christ strengthens believers to endure whatever afflictive circumstances He allows in their lives. The verse does not establish the unbiblical notion that man's obligation to obey God is limited to his fallen ability to do so.

Matthew Poole commented on Philippians 4:13: "Having written of the great things he had learned, that it might not be attributed to his proud conceit, or give occasion to any others' vanity to boast, (as he had recourse before to the Divine efficiency to will and do, Philippians 2:13), [Paul] rests solely for power upon Christ, being found in whom, when he saith he can do all things, we are not to understand it absolutely, but restrictively to the subject matter he had before mentioned in the precedent verses, intimating he could by the Lord's help use well both prosperity and adversity: or, all those things the Lord called him to and put him upon. Not, as the papists urge, that any mere man since the fall is able in this life perfectly to keep the commandments of God; but that he by faith being united to Christ, by the power of his Spirit dwelling in him, hath in the Lord righteousness and strength, Isaiah 45:24; and thereupon hath a sincere respect to all God's commands, as David had, Psalm 119:6; so also had Zacharias and Elisabeth, Luke 1:6; in opposition to Pharisaical obedience: not by any power he had of himself, but through Christ strengthening of him, so that God would accept of his sincere performance (though not every way perfect) of what was incumbent on him."

The fact that mankind, by its own fault, has sinned in Adam and has a sinful nature, and is thus unable on earth to meet the Divine standard of perfect holiness required by God, illustrates and aggravates human fault rather than providing any ground to ascribe fault to the Holy One, the just Judge of all the earth.[854] The idea that human obligation is limited to ability is clearly unscriptural. Were this idea true, Pelagianism would necessarily follow—lost men would, contrary to the affirmations of Scripture (John 6:44, 65), not be enslaved to sin but have the ability to turn to God of themselves. The fact that the unregenerate can commit the unpardonable sin, that is, resist the Holy Spirit to the point that He will no longer draw them to Christ, so that it becomes thenceforth "impossible to renew them again unto repentance" (Hebrews 6:4-6; John 12:32; Matthew 12:31-32) would have to be removed from the realm of Biblical doctrine. Since God's standard is absolute sinless perfection (Matthew 5:48; 1 Peter 1:15-16), both the unregenerate and the regenerate would have the ability to instantly become, at any given moment, literally sinless in their nature, words, thoughts, and acts. The fact that the saints are commanded universally to pray for the forgiveness of their sins (Matthew 6:12-13), that if anyone affirms that he has no sin he is deceived and not of the truth (1 John 1:8-10),[855] that 854 "[L]et it be pointed out that this impotency to measure up to the requirements of God is no mere innocent infirmity, but a highly culpable thing, which greatly aggravates our vileness and adds to our guilt. Our inability to measure up to the standard of personal piety which God has appointed, lies not in a lack of executive power or the needful faculties, but in the want of a willing mind and a ready heart to practice true holiness. If men in a natural state had a hearty love and liking to true holiness, and a fervent and sincere endeavor to practice it, and yet failed in the event, then they might under some pretense plead for this excuse (as many do), that they are compelled to sin by an inevitable necessity. But the fact is that man's impotency lies in his own obstinacy—"Ye will not come to Me" (John 5:40) said the Lord Jesus. Inability to pay a debt does not excuse a debtor who has recklessly squandered his estate; nor does drunkenness excuse the mad or violent actions of a drunkard, but rather aggravates his crime. God has not lost His right to command, even though man through his wickedness has lost his power to obey. Because the flesh "lusteth against the Spirit" (Galatians 5:17), that is far from an extenuation for not being in subjection to Him. Because "every one that doeth evil hateth the light," that is far from justifying them because they "loved darkness" (John 3:19, 20); yea, as the Savior there so plainly and solemnly states, it only serves to heighten their criminality—"This is the condemnation." Then "How much more abominable and filthy is man, which drinketh iniquity like water?" (Job 15:16) that cannot practice holiness because he will not" (pgs. 43-44, Doctrine of Sanctification, Arthur W. Pink).

---

855 "It has, indeed, been suggested to the writer by a professor of 'the higher life,' that John may have referred in verse eigh[t] to a self-righteous person, who might say, 'I have no sin to be forgiven,' meaning, 'I have never sinned.' But it is evident that this letter of the apostle was written to those who were Christians by profession at least, while the language just used would have been an utter and outspoken rejection of Christianity. There is no evidence that any were admitted to the apostolic churches save those who trusted, or professed to trust, in Christ for the pardon of their sins; but there is evidence that some in the churches adopted the Antinomian view, that as Christians they were not under law, but under grace, and therefore could not sin. Against this perversion of the truth Paul had to contend earnestly; but against such a doctrine as the one supposed, namely, that some in the churches claimed that they had never sinned, there is no warning or argument in his letters" (pg. 90, Doctrine of the Higher Christian Life Compared With the Teaching of the Holy Scriptures, by Alvah Hovey).

"there is no man that sinneth not" (1 Kings 8:46),[856] including every one of the people of God on earth, and vast numbers of other Biblical declarations, including the commands a believer obeys partially but not completely (cf. Colossians 3:16),[857] would have to be ignored or twisted.[858]

---

856 Note that the affirmation of 1 Kings 8:46, and its parallel passage 2 Chronicles 6:36, is not merely that all men, some of whom never consciously or willfully sin, have some remnant of indwelling sin in them. The sin which the passages affirms all men possess, is such that they can say: "we have done perversely, we have committed wickedness," or "we have sinned, we have done amiss, and have dealt wickedly," (1 Kings 8:47; 2 Chronicles 6:37), so that all men, including the people of God, actually sin and commit "transgressions wherein they have transgressed against" the Lord (1 Kings 8:50). All men on the earth, including the holiest believers, commit the sort of sins that make them worthy of the Deuteronomic curses, including, for Israel, exile from the promised land (1 Kings 8:47-48; Deuteromony 28:63-68), and, for all men, horrific earthly judgment and eternal damnation (Deuteronomy 27:11-28:68; Galatians 3:10). Nor was Solomon alone in his view of the universal transgression of men, including the people of God—Ezra affirmed that all the saints, to a man, committed acts worthy of the Deuteronomic curses (Ezra 9:6-7), as did Daniel (9:7-11). The Solomonic affirmation in prayer that all the people of God commit serious acts of sin is a model for the prayer of later believers through history, as evidenced not only by the examples of Ezra and Daniel, but by the Lord Himself (Matthew 6:12-13; Luke 11:4). Scripture does not teach the possibility of believers living a life without any sin or without any acts of known transgression.

857 "The answer that is made again and again [by perfectionists to the doctrine that sanctification is progressive, and many commands in the Bible are obeyed partially and in a progressively greater way, is]: Is not Christ able to sanctify us immediately as well as progressively? But it is manifest that the question simply brings us to the . . . problem of accounting for the origin and permitted continuance of evil in the world. Has not Christ power enough to prevent every man and woman and child now in the world, and every man and woman and child that shall be in it till the end of time, from every committing a sin in thought or word or deed? Doubtless he has sufficiency of power. But his infinite wisdom sees reasons, which are to us inscrutable, for not putting forth his power that that effect. And then our opponents should consider that even they do not venture to say that the sanctification of the believer is absolutely complete" (pg. 266, "Means and Measure of Holiness," Thomas Smith. The British and Foreign Evangelical Review (April 1876) 251-280).

858 "The [true] doctrine . . . is, that sanctification is never perfected in this life; that sin is not in any case entirely subdued; so that the most advanced believer has need as long as he continues in the flesh, daily to pray for the forgiveness of sins.

The question is not as to the duty of believers. All admit that we are bound to be perfect as our Father in heaven is perfect. Nor is it a question as to the command of God; for the first, original, and universally obligatory commandment is that we should love God with all our heart and our neighbour as ourselves. Nor does the question concern the provisions of the Gospel. It is admitted that the Gospel provides all that is needed for the complete sanctification and salvation of believers. What can we need more than we have in Christ, his Spirit, his word and his ordinances? Nor does it concern the promises of God; for all rejoice in the hope, founded on the divine promise, that we shall be ultimately delivered from all sin. God has in Christ made provision for the complete salvation of his people: that is, for their entire deliverance from the penalty of the law, from the power of sin, from all sorrow, pain, and death; and not only for mere negative deliverance, but for their being transformed into the image of Christ, filled with his Spirit, and glorified by the beauty of the Lord. It is, however, too plain that, unless sanctification be an exception, no one of these promises besides that which concerns justification, is perfectly fulfilled in this life. Justification does not admit of degrees. A man either is under condemnation, or he is not. And, therefore, from the nature of the case, justification is instantaneous and complete, as soon as the sinner believes. But the question is, whether, when God promises to make his people perfectly holy, perfectly happy, and perfectly glorious, He thereby promises to make them perfect in holiness in this life? If the promises of happiness and glory are not perfectly fulfilled in this life, why should the promise of sanctification be thus fulfilled? It is, however, a mere question of fact. All admit that God can render his people perfect before death as well as after it. The only question is, Has He promised, with regard to

The Baptist professor and college president Alvah Hovey[859] commented on the idea that the obligation of sinful man is limited to his ability as follows:

> [M]oral weakness does not reduce moral obligation. If it did, Satan would be under almost infinitely less obligation to love God than Gabriel, and, the farther any being advanced in sin, the less of service would be due from him to his Maker. The law, as a standard of right and duty, has not been modified by the work of Christ: it has rather been honored and sustained. The theory of one law for angels, another for Adam before the fall, and still another for believers in Christ, is without any foundation in the Word of God. It is impossible to doubt that the law for all moral beings, in all worlds, is one and the same. To love God with all the spiritual ardor and energy of their undivided being is their simple duty. . . . Do any Christians live without sin in this world? All are commanded to do so by an authority inseparable from their moral being[.] . . . This voice forbids every feeling, purpose, and act that is wrong, and enjoins perfect and perpetual rectitude in heart, as well as in life. . . . [T]he law of God, as set forth in the Bible, require[s] of all a life without sin. . . .
>
> Of what use are precepts and exhortations, it is asked, if Christians are never to comply with them? [The perfectionist argues that] [t]he law was given to Christians to be obeyed, and it is surely safe to conclude that it will be obeyed by some in this life.[860] . . . To this it must be answered that it is manifestly unsafe to infer the moral perfection of even a few Christians from the circumstance that all are commanded or exhorted to be perfect. It would be quite as logical to assume that all Christians obey the law completely from the hour of their conversion, as to assume that some obey it thus for a month or a year. But the premise warrants neither conclusion. If a moral law be given by the Most High, it must naturally be a perfect rule of right, whether it be sanctification alone, that it shall be perfected on this side of the grave? and, Do we see cases in which the promise has been actually fulfilled? The answer given to these questions by the Church . . . is in the negative. So long as the believer is in this world, he will need to pray for pardon." (Systematic Theology, Charles Hodge, 3:18:7)

---

859 Dr. Hovey pastored a Baptist church in New Gloucester, Maine, and then taught Hebrew, church history, theology, and Christian ethics at the Newton theological institution, a Baptist college, for a number of decades, starting in 1849. He became the president of the college in 1868, the year he also became a member of the executive committee of the American Baptist missionary union, a position he held until 1883. He was also the general editor of the American Commentary on the New Testament series.

860 Thomas Smith discusses this particular argument, as made by Oberlin perfectionst Asa Mahan:

> Dr. Mahan argues from the precepts and the prayers of Scripture that perfection must be attainable in this life. He finds, for example, such a precept as [Matthew 5:48], and such a prayer on behalf of Christias as that of the apostle, "The God of peace . . . make you perfect in every good work, to do his will." [Hebrews 13:20-21; note that the progressive nature of the perfecting, indicated in the "working in you that which is wellpleasing in His sight" (ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν τὸ εὐάρεστον ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ) clause, is overlooked.] Is it conceivable, [Mahan] asks, that our Lord would have given such a precept [as Matthew 5:48], unless in some way it could be fulfilled by those to whom he addressed it; or that the apostle should have been inspired to utter such a prayer, unless He that inspired the prayer had been willing to answer it? In answer to this, it may probably be enough to say that surely God's right to require is not impaired by the inability that we have brought upon ourselves to render the service that is due to him. Dr. Mahan is well enough acquainted with the ordinary view of such texts, that the Chrsitian has set before him the standard of absolute perfection, and that he is required to strive to come ever nearer and nearer to it; and that he shall assuredly, by the grace of God, ultimately attain to it. Now, will he have the goodness, without admitting that this view is correct, to make the supposition that [if] it were correct[,] would not all such precepts and prayers be easily explicable in accordance with that supposition? But now let us, on the other hand, suppose that his view is correct, what follows, but that a great portion of the Scriptures is wholly inapplicable to a large, and ever enlarging [as more people achieve perfection through the teaching of Mahan and other perfectionists], number of beleivers? As the law is for the disobedient, surely precepts and exhortations are for the imperfect. Was there no one amongst the disciples on the mount, no one among those Hebrews who had been illuminated, and had endured a great fight of afflictions, who knew in themselves that they had in heaven a better and an enduring substance,--no one amongst all these who had attained such perfection as Dr. Mahan and his friends have attained? If there were but one such, he might have said, he must have felt, O Lord, this precept is not for me; O Paul, this prayer is not for me. (pgs. 275-276, "Means and Measure of Holiness," Thomas Smith. The British and Foreign Evangelical Review (April 1876) 251-280) kept by many or by none. Nor can it be pronounced useless, though it be kept by none, It may be of great service because it reveals the right, or what Christians ought to be and to do, and because it shows to those who are saved by Christ the degree of sin in their hearts and lives, together with the wonderous grace of God to his wayward children. . . . [Nor is it valid when it is] suggested that, if none of them are sanctified fully before the hour of death, it must be because God is either unable or unwilling thus to sanctify them . . . [in light of the fact that 1 Thessalonians 4:3 states,] "This is the will of God, your sanctification."[861] . . . [For] are we not assured by the same apostle that it is the will of God that "all men should be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Timothy 2:4)? And would it not be hasty reasoning to conclude from this language that all men will be saved? Besides, it may be truly said, that God wishes not only that some Christians, but that all Christians, and indeed all moral beings in the universe, should be wholly free from sin, from this instant onward through eternal ages; nay, that he has always wished this in respect to all such beings; but we do not therefore conclude that there will be no more sin, or that there never has been sin. . . . [Texts such as 1 Thessalonians 4:3] se[t] forth what Christians ought to do in obedience to the will of God, not what he proposes to do in their hearts [at some instant in this life]. Yet in doing this they have the gift and aid of the Holy Spirit."[862]

Likewise, B. B. Warfield explained the necessary consequences of the doctrine that human moral obligation is limited to his fallen ability:

To be perfect, [according to the doctrine that obligation is limited to ability, a sinner] does not [need] to love as God loves — in whose love all righteousness is embraced — or as the angels love, or as Adam loved, or even as any better man than he loves. He only requires to love as he himself, being what he is, and in the condition in which he finds himself, can love. If he loves all he can love in his present condition, he is perfect. No matter how he came into his present condition; suppose if you will that he came into it by a long course of vice, or by some supreme act of vice, it makes no difference. His obligation is limited by his ability; we cannot say, he ought to do more than he can do; if he does all he can do, he has no further obligation, he is perfect. The moral idiot . . . is as perfect as God is: being a moral idiot, he has no moral obligation; when he has done nothing at all he has done all that he ought to do: he is perfect. God Himself cannot do more than all He ought to do; and when He has done all He ought to do, He is no more perfect than the moral idiot is—although what He has done is to fulfil all that is ideally righteous and the moral idiot has done nothing.

In this conception the law of God, complete obedience to which is perfection, is made a sliding scale. It is not that perfect rule, which as the Greeks say, like a straight-edge, straight itself, measures both the straight and the crooked; but a flexible line which follows the inequalities of the surface on which it is laid, not molding it, but molded by it. Obligation here is interpreted in terms of ability with the result that each man becomes a law to himself, creating his own law; while the objective law of God, the standard of holiness in all, is annulled, and there are as many laws, as many standards of holiness, as there are moral beings. . . . There is no such thing as a universal obligation of the law . . . or indeed as a universal law, binding on all alike, to create a universal obligation. Each man's obligation is exhausted in the law which his own ability creates for him; . . . the requirements of the law [being reduced] to the moral capacity of sinful men, [and] adjust[ed] in detail [down] to the moral capacity of each individual sinner . . . has the effect of making our [861] Snodgrass further observes concerning 1 Thessalonians 4:3: "That full provision is made for consummating the work of sanctification, as well as for its commencement and progress, is not doubted by any. All evangelical Christians agree that when the Apostle says, 'This is the will of God, even your sanctification,' he has in view the entire deliverance of those who embrace the Gospel from the power and pollution of sin. . . . But the certainty of an event, and the time at which we are authorized to expect it, are two different things. And the question now arises, Are we authorized to believe that God will ever consummate the sanctification of his people within the limits of the present life [rather than at their glorification?]" (pgs. 18-19, The Scripture Doctrine of Sanctification). Snodgrass rightly answers this question in the negative.

---

[862] Pgs. 62, 73-75, Doctrine of the Higher Christian Life Compared With the Teaching of the Holy Scriptures, by Alvah Hovey.

sin the excuse for our sin, until we may cease to be sinners altogether by simply becoming sinful enough. . . . [T]he acquisition of unconquerable habits of evil, by progressively destroying obligation, renders perfection ever easier of acquisition by constantly reducing the content of the perfection to be acquired; and [thus] one of the surest roads to salvation [and perfection] is therefore to become incurably wicked.[863]

Similarly, William G. T. Shedd wrote:

The foundation of man's obligation to perfectly obey the Divine law, was the holiness and plenary power to good with which he was endowed by his Creator. Because God made man in his own image, he was obliged to sinless obedience. Moral obligation rested upon the union and combination of the so-called "natural ability" with the "moral." It did not rest upon the first alone. Not a will without any inclination, but a will with a holy inclination, was the basis of the requirement of sinless obedience. The possession of a will undetermined would not constitute man a moral agent. God did not make man without moral character, and then require perfect obedience from him. When man was created and placed under law, he was endowed not only with the faculties of a man, but with those faculties in a normal condition. The understanding was spiritually enlightened, and the will was rightly inclined. He had both "natural" and "moral" ability. He had real and plenary power to obey the law of God. In the beginning of man's moral existence, ability must equal obligation. And the ability did equal it. Kant's dictum: "I ought, therefore I can," was true of holy Adam and his posterity in him. If at the instant man came from the hand of God he had been unable to obey, he would not have been obligated to obey.

> "The law was not above man's strength when he was possessed of original righteousness, though it be above man's strength since he was stripped of original righteousness. The command was dated before man had contracted his impotency, when he had a power to keep it, as well as to break it. Had it been enjoined to man only after the fall, and not before, he might have had a better pretence to excuse himself, because of the impossibility of it; yet he would not have had sufficient excuse, since the impossibility did not result from the nature of the law, but from the corrupted nature of the creature. It 'was weak through the flesh' (Romans 8:3), but it was promulged when man had a strength proportioned to the commands of it." (Charnock: The Holiness of God.)

Obligation being thus founded upon the Creator's gifts, cannot be destroyed by any subsequent action of the creature. If he destroys his ability, he does not destroy his obligation. If man by his own voluntary action loses any or all of the talents entrusted to him, he cannot assign this loss as a reason why any or all the talents, together with usury, should not be demanded of him in the final settlement. [Note] Christ's parable of the talents. . . . Does not God, then, wrong man by requiring of him in his law that which he cannot perform? . . . No; for God so made man that he could perform it; but man through the instigation of the devil, by wilful disobedience deprived himself and all his posterity of this power.

1.) It is objected, that if man is unable to keep the law, he is not obligated to keep it. This depends upon the nature of the inability, and its cause. If man were destitute of reason, conscience, will, or any of the faculties of a moral being, he would not be obligated. If he were internally wrought upon by an almighty being, and prevented from obeying, he would not be obligated. If he were prevented by any external compulsion, he would not be obligated. If he had been created sinful, he would not be obligated. If he had been created indifferent either to holiness or sin, he would not have been obligated. None of these conditions obtain in the case of man. He was created holy, with plenary power to keep perfectly the moral law, and therefore was obligated to keep it. At the point of creation, ability and obligation were equal. But if after creation in holiness and plenary power, any alteration be made in the original ratio between ability and obligation by the creature's voluntary agency, this cannot alter the original obligation. If ability is weakened by an act of self-determination, obligation is not weakened. If ability is totally destroyed by self-determination, obligation is not destroyed. The latter is the fact in the case. There is a total inability, but it is not an original or created inability. It came to be by man's act, not by God's. "Man's inability to restore what he owes to God, an inability brought upon himself, does not excuse man from paying the satisfaction due to justice; for the result of sin cannot excuse the sin itself." (Anselm: Cur deus

863 Pgs. 42-43, Perfectionism, vol. 2, Warfield.

homo, I. xxiv.)

The principle, that if a moral power once possessed is lost by the voluntary action of the possessor he is not thereby released from the original duty that rested upon it, is acknowledged by writers upon ethics. Aristotle (Ethics, III. v.) remarks that it is just in legislators[:]

> to punish people even for ignorance itself, if they are the cause of their own ignorance; just as the punishment is double for drunken people. For the cause is in themselves; since it was in their own power not to get drunk, and drunkenness is the cause of their ignorance. And they punish those who are ignorant of anything in the laws which they ought to know, and which it is not difficult to know; and likewise in all other cases in which they are ignorant through negligence; upon the ground that it was in their own power to pay attention to it. But perhaps a person is unable to give his attention? But he himself is the cause of this inability, by living in a dissipated manner. Persons are themselves the causes of their being unrighteous, by performing bad actions; and of being intemperate, by passing their time in drunken revels and such-like. When a man does those acts by which he becomes unjust, he becomes unjust voluntarily [that is by the action of his own will]. Nevertheless, he will not be able to leave off being unjust and to become just, whenever he pleases. For the sick man cannot become well whenever he pleases, even though it so happen that he is voluntarily sick owing to an incontinent life, and from disobedience to physicians. At the time indeed, it was in his own power not to be sick; but when he has once allowed himself to become sick, it is no longer in his power not to be sick; just as it is no longer in the power of a man who has thrown a stone to recover it. And yet the throwing of it was in his own power; for the origin of the action was in his own power. In like manner, in the beginning it was in the power of the unjust and the intemperate man not to become unjust and intemperate; and therefore they are so voluntarily. But when they have become so, it is no longer in their power to avoid being unjust and intemperate… And not only are the faults of the soul voluntary, but in some persons those of the body are so likewise, and with these we find fault. For no one finds fault with those who are disfigured and ugly by birth; but only with those who are so through neglect of gymnastic exercise, or through carelessness. The case is the same with bodily weakness and mutilation. For no one would blame a man who is born blind, or who is blind from disease or a blow; but would rather pity him. But everybody would blame the man who is blind from drunkenness, or any intemperance. For those faults of the body which are incur[red] [by our] own power originally, and which result from our own action, we are blamable." . . .

In secular commercial life, the loss of ability does not release from obligation. A man is as much a debtor to his creditors after his bankruptcy, as he was before. The loss of his property does not free him from indebtedness. He cannot say to his creditor, "I owed you yesterday, because I was able to pay you, but to-day I owe you nothing, because I am a bankrupt." It is a legal maxim, that bankruptcy does not invalidate contracts.

That obligation remains fixed and immutable under all the modifications of ability introduced by the action of the human will, is proved by the case of the drunkard, and the habit which he has formed. The drunkard is certainly less able to obey the law of temperance than the temperate man is. But this law has precisely the same claim upon him that it has upon the temperate. The diminution of ability has not diminished the obligation. If obligation must always keep pace with the changes in the ability, then there are degrees of obligation. The stronger the will is, the more it is obliged; the weaker it is, the less is it bound by law. In this case, sin rewards the sinner by delivering him from the claims of law. The most vicious man would be least under obligation to duty.[864]

Both the unregenerate and the regenerate are obligated to be as holy as God Himself, and no unconverted person, neither any believer before his glorification, will meet this Divine standard of absolute perfection. The idea that the sinner's obligation to God is limited to his ability is entirely contrary to Scripture.

---

[864] Shedd, Anthropology Chapter 5, pgs. 52-56. W. D. Snodgrass also effectively demolishes what he calls the "radical error, that the extent of our powers, fallen as we are, is the ground and measure of our obligation" (pgs. 21-27, 49-52, The Scripture Doctrine of Sanctification).

I. Excursus VII: Are All Believers Disciples?

Some affirm that only certain believers are disciples. Discipleship is said to be a status that certain believers chose to enter into at some point after their conversion, so that, within the larger class of believers, a smaller, elite group of believers are disciples.[865] Others affirm that, while there are such things as false believers (cf. John 2:23-3:3; 12:42; Acts 8:13) and false disciples (John 6:60, 66; 12:4),[866] and neither all believers nor all disciples are equally spiritually strong (cf. Acts 14:22; 18:23), the Bible

---

[865] For example: "A primary reason, Keswick tells us, why so little progress in sanctification is made by Christians, is that so many of them have never really faced and yielded to the conditions of Christian discipleship our Lord lays down" (pgs. 123-124, So Great Salvation, by Steven Barabas; cf. A Critical Analysis of the Discipleship Motif in the Keswick Movement, Randall L. Von Kanel. Th. D. Diss., New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, 1989.). Victorious Life writer Mark Trumbull, in his "tract called 'Subdued,'" affirms that "not more than one in a thousand of converted men attain to 'victory'—that is to say to the status of 'disciples.' The rest are satisfied to live on a lower plane" ("The Victorious Life," B. B. Warfield, in Perfectionism vol. 2. Warfield demolishes Trumbull's argument.). The Keswick and Victorious Life movements received their disjunction between believers and disciples from the Broadlands and Oxford Conventions led by Robert and Hannah Smith with the patronage of Lord and Lady Mount-Temple. After all, Lord Mount Temple was "not only a 'believer,' but a 'disciple'" (pg. 149, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890; also pg. 44, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910). "Reference was made [at the Oxford Convention] to the difference between a believer of doctrines and a disciple . . . [some] called believers, could not be counted among th[e] disciples. Christians are called to be Christ's disciples," and believers at Oxford who had not yet taken that second step were urged to "become disciples" by post-conversion consecration (pgs. 293-294, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874. Italics in original.). The Oxford appeal assumes that those who "believe [Christian] doctrines, but still . . . have their own separate interests and pursuits," were saved by such an unrepentant and unsubmissive "faith"; believing doctrines is sufficient to make one a Christian. Such affirmations were natural for the Smiths, since they were both unregenerate, as were the Mount-Temples, and Mrs. Smith's "conversion" testimony was simply assent to a certain set of doctrinal formulations.

[866] Note that Simon the sorceror not only had a kind of belief, but he also assumed the mark of a disciple by getting baptized (Acts 8:13). Baptism is the outward mark of a disciple (Matthew 28:18-20), that is, of a believer (Mark 16:15-16). Nonetheless, he was still "in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity" and was going to "perish" eternally unless he came to "repent" and was "forgiven" (Acts 8:20-23). Judas Iscariot is another example of a false disciple (Matthew 10:1, 4; John 12:4), and those "disciples" in Acts 19:1-7 were unregenerate until Paul preached the gospel to them and they were converted and baptized (contrast the practice with the already regenerate man Apollos, 18:25-28). The reality of professing believers who are still lost is presented throughout the Bible (cf. 1 Corinthians 15:34; 2 Corinthians 13:5; Titus 1:16; Hebrews 12:15; 2 Peter 2:1).

John 6:60-68 equates false believers with false disciples, and contrasts them with true believers or true disciples. The genuine people of God believe and are sure that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and cannot forsake Him, but false disciples can and do cease to follow Him.

nevertheless equates the categories of believer and disciple, so that all saved people, all believers, are disciples. This second position is the one taught in Scripture.

The Greek noun translated disciple appears 269 times in 253 verses in the New Testament,[867] while related words that shed further light on the nature of a disciple appear a number of additional times.[868] Generally, a disciple is a learner (Mark 9:31; Luke 11:1)[869] or follower, and a disciple of Christ is one who follows the Lord Jesus and follows or keeps His commandments (cf. Matthew 21:6; 26:19).[870] Scripture thus repeatedly records that Christ's "disciples follow him" (Mark 6:1; Matthew 8:23; Luke 22:39; John 18:15; 21:20). While, as is expected, not all of the 269 references to disciples specifically define the word, very strong exegetical evidence from many passages establish that one becomes a true disciple of Christ at the same moment that one becomes a true believer, so that discipleship begins at regeneration, and all the people of God, not some elite minority, are identified as disciples in Scripture. No verse in Scripture teaches that believers become disciples at a post-conversion crisis or that only some of the regenerate are disciples. Rather, it was the "disciples [who] were called Christians" (Acts 11:26). Disciples are Christians, and Christians are disciples.[871]

---

867 Μαθητής appears in Matthew 5:1; 8:21, 23, 25; 9:10–11, 14, 19, 37; 10:1, 24–25, 42–11:2; 12:1–2, 49; 13:10, 36; 14:12, 15, 19, 22, 26; 15:2, 12, 23, 32–33, 36; 16:5, 13, 20–21, 24; 17:6, 10, 13, 16, 19; 18:1; 19:10, 13, 23, 25; 20:17; 21:1, 6, 20; 22:16; 23:1; 24:1, 3; 26:1, 8, 17–19, 26, 35–36, 40, 45, 56; 27:64; 28:7–9, 13, 16; Mark 2:15–16, 18, 23; 3:7, 9; 4:34; 5:31; 6:1, 29, 35, 41, 45; 7:2, 5, 17; 8:1, 4, 6, 10, 14, 27, 33–34; 9:14, 18, 28, 31; 10:10, 13, 23–24, 46; 11:1, 14; 12:43; 13:1; 14:12–14, 16, 32; 16:7; Luke 5:30, 33; 6:1, 13, 17, 20, 40; 7:11, 18–19; 8:9, 22; 9:1, 14, 16, 18, 40, 43, 54; 10:23; 11:1; 12:1, 22; 14:26–27, 33; 16:1; 17:1, 22; 18:15; 19:29, 37, 39; 20:45; 22:11, 39, 45; John 1:35, 37; 2:2, 11–12, 17, 22; 3:22, 25; 4:1–2, 8, 27, 31, 33; 6:3, 8, 11–12, 16, 22, 24, 60–61, 66; 7:3; 8:31; 9:2, 27–28; 11:7–8, 12, 54; 12:4, 16; 13:5, 22–23, 35; 15:8; 16:17, 29; 18:1–2, 15–17, 19, 25; 19:26–27, 38; 20:2–4, 8, 10, 18–20, 25–26, 30; 21:1–2, 4, 7–8, 12, 14, 20, 23–24; Acts 1:15; 6:1–2, 7; 9:1, 10, 19, 25–26, 38; 11:26, 29; 13:52; 14:20, 22, 28; 15:10; 16:1; 18:23, 27; 19:1, 9, 30; 20:1, 7, 30; 21:4, 16.

868 The verb μαθητεύω appears four times (Matthew 13:52; 27:57; 28:19; Acts 14:21), and the nouns μαθήτρια and συμμαθητής appear once each (Acts 9:36; John 11:16).

869 See BDAG, Liddell-Scott, & Louw-Nida.

870 Similarly, a disciple of John the Baptist would follow him and his commands, Matthew 9:14; 11:2; 14:12; Luke 7:18-19; a disciple of the Pharisees would follow them and their commands, Matthew 22:15-16; cf. Mark 2:18; Luke 5:33; and a disciple of other false teachers would follow them and their commands, Acts 20:30. John sought to have those who followed him, who were his disciples, become followers or disciples of Christ, John 1:35-39; 3:26-30. The Lord Jesus organized His church before Pentecost in Acts 2 (Matthew 16:18; 18:17) out of those of John's disciples who had been saved and immersed by the Baptist, and then became His disciples. Christ's congregation of immersed saints practiced the ordinances of baptism (John 3:22; 4:1-2) and the Lord's Supper (Matthew 26:26-29; cf. Matthew 26:30 & Hebrews 2:12) before the descent of the Spirit in Acts 2.

871 In Acts 11:26, χρηματίσαι τε πρῶτον ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ τοὺς μαθητὰς Χριστιανούς explicitly equates the category Christian and disciple. Μαθητὰς functions as the subject of the infinitive χρηματίσαι, and Χριστιανούς is a predicate accusative in the construction (cf. pgs. 190-197, Greek Grammar Beyond the Basics, Wallace). Since this syntactical pattern is "similar [in function] to the nominative subject and predicate nominative construction, following the same principles for distinguishing [the subject and predicate words]" (pg. 190, ibid.), and the equivalent subject-predicate nominative Disciples are not an elite order of especially consecrated believers because disciples are too often sadly lacking in consecration. Disciples can be chastened as those of "little faith" (Matthew 8:23-27) and can fail to have the kind of faith that is associated with God's powerful working (Matthew 17:14-21; Mark 9:14-29; Luke 9:18-19). They can act in pride (Mark 9:31-34). They can require Christ's correction (Matthew 19:13-14; 26:8-10) and rebuke (Luke 9:54-55), because they make Him "much displeased" (Mark 10:13-14). Disciples can fear to boldly confess Christ (John 19:38) although their faith does not stay perpetually hidden (19:39-40). Disciples can sleep instead of pray, give in to temptation and fear, and fail to unflinchingly stand for Christ (Matthew 26:40, 45, 56; Luke 22:45-46; John 18:15-27), although their faith does not fail and their repentant return to their Redeemer is as certain as are the answers to Christ's prayers for His own as High Priest (Luke 22:32) since Christ powerfully works in them through His Word to bring them back to Himself when they sin (22:60-62). Disciples can fail to grasp spiritual truth as they ought (Mark 7:18-19; 8:16-21; 9:32; John 4:31-35; 9:2-3; 11:11-13; 12:16) and even fail to pursue understanding as they ought when they fail to grasp it (Luke 9:45). While disciples—since they are believers and are therefore the recipients of a new heart—are going to be different from the unregenerate, they are not an elite subcategory of especially consecrated Christian. No text indicates that a special post-coversion act of consecration makes a believer into the higher category of disciple, nor that a certain amount of sin makes a disciple lose his status and return to a lower subcategory of believer. Rather, all believers, with both their Spirit-wrought change and their remaining indwelling sin, are identified as disciples.

Furthermore, disciples are never distinguished from the regenerate who are at a lower plane, but are regularly distinguished from hell-bound lost people. Disciples are contrasted with publicans and sinners (Matthew 9:9-13; Mark 2:13-17) from perishing multitudes (Matthew 9:35-38; Luke 19:36-38) and from the persecuting ungodly, (Matthew 10:22-27). Disciples are those who have been given spiritual truth and enter the kingdom of heaven, in contrast with the lost, who do not do so (Matthew 13:10-12; Mark 4:33-34; Luke 8:9-11). Disciples will feast with Christ in the consummation (Mark 2:18-19). Disciples inherit the kingdom of God (Luke 6:20) and their names are written in heaven (Luke 10:20-24). Disciples are Christ's spiritual brethren (Matthew 12:49-50; 28:7-10) and those who recognize Jesus as the Christ (Matthew 16:14-16, 20). Disciples construction is a convertible, not a subset proposition, because μαθητὰς is articular and Χριστιανούς is a proper noun (pgs. 40-46, ibid.), the two categories disciple and Christian are explicitly equated as convertible terms. The "construction indicates an identical exchange . . . both nouns have an identical referent. The mathematical formulas of A=B, B=A are applicable in such instances. . . . There is complete interchange between the two [nouns]" (pg. 41, ibid.). Disciple = Christian, and Christian = disciple.

---

are Christ's little ones (Matthew 10:42); His little children (John 13:33) who cannot come into condemnation (13:33) are disciples (13:35), believers (14:1) who will have heavenly mansions (14:2-3) with the Lord Jesus. Disciples are those who bear fruit (John 15:8) and consequently are not burned eternally in the fires of hell (15:6). Disciples (John 16:7) are believers (John 16:27) and are therefore those who are promised the indwelling Holy Spirit (John 16:7-17; 14:16-18; cf. 20:19-22). Christian "brethren" are "disciples" (Acts 6:1-3; 9:17, 26-30; 14:28-15:1). Disciples are those who are not unsaved, but are "obedient to the faith" (Acts 6:7). When Paul preached the gospel message that "by [Christ] all that believe are justified from all things, from which [they] could not be justified by the law of Moses" (Acts 13:39), those who "believed" received "eternal life" (13:48) and thus became "disciples" (13:50; cf. 14:1, 21-23). People who have had God "purif[y] their hearts by faith . . . disciples . . . through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ . . . shall be saved" (15:9-11). When people heard the gospel, they either became "disciples" or they rejected the Savior and "believed not" (Acts 19:9). Disciples (Acts 9:1) are those who are of the Christian "way" (9:2). Saul received a commission to persecute Christ's disciples (9:1-2), and he consequently persecuted all believers, all who "call on [Christ's] name" (9:14; cf. 9:19, 21, 25-27). Scripture clearly and regularly equates the categories of believer and disciple, promises those who are in these categories the same eternal felicity, and warns of eternal damnation for all who do not become disciples or believers.

The act of making disciples is expressed with the Greek verb matheteuo.[872] Making disciples (Matthew 28:19) takes place by preaching the gospel and having people come to repent (Luke 24:47) and believe (Mark 16:15-16), and thus receive the remission of sins (Luke 24:47; Mark 16:16; John 20:23), after which the believers or disciples

---

872 Discussing the verb μαθητεύω, BDAG comments:

μαθητεύω (s. μαθητής) . . . 1. *to be a pupil, with implication of being an adherent of the teacher a. intr., be or become a pupil or disciple (Plut., Mor. 832b; 837c; Ps.-Callisth. 2, 4, 4 τινί; Iambl., Vi. Pyth. 23, 104 μ. τῷ Πυθαγόρᾳ; schol. on Apollon. Rhod. Proleg. A a) τινί (Orig., C. Cels. 2, 9, 60) of someone (Ἰωσὴφ) ἐμαθήτευσεν τῷ Ἰησοῦ Joseph had become a disciple of Jesus Mt 27:57 v.l. [the word appears in the TR but not the critical Greek text]. Likew. as

b. pass. dep. (Just., A I, 15, 6; Hippol., Ref. 1, 2, 16) μαθητεύομαι become a disciple τινί: (Ἰ.) ἐμαθητεύθη τῷ Ἰησοῦ Mt 27:57. γραμματεὺς μαθητευθεὶς τῇ βασιλείᾳ τ. οὐρανῶν a scribe who has become a disciple of the kgdm. of heaven or who has been trained for the kgdm. Mt 13:52 (γραμματεύς 2b). Abs. IEph 3:1. μᾶλλον μαθητεύομαι I am becoming a disciple more and more IRo 5:1. This gave rise to a new active form (B-D-F §148, 3; Rob. 800) should be baptized (Matthew 28:19; Mark 16:16). The response to the preaching of the gospel is people becoming disciples by the new birth (Acts 14:21), for one is discipled "unto the kingdom of heaven" (Matthew 13:52). As with the noun mathetes, the verb matheteuo indicates that one becomes a disciple by becoming a believer.[873] No text teaches or implies that disciples are an elite subcategory within a larger group of Christians.

2. to cause one to be a pupil, teach, trans. (AscIs 3:18 καὶ μαθητεύσουσιν πάντα τὰ ἔθνη καὶ πᾶσαν γλῶσσαν εἰς τὴν ἀν[ά]στασιν τοῦ ἀγαπ[η]τοῦ; Just., D. 53, 1 Χριστὸς . . . ἐμαθήτευσεν αὐτούς) make a disciple of, teach τινά someone Mt 28:19. ἱκανούς make a number of disciples Ac 14:21. Abs. ἃ μαθητεύοντες ἐντέλλεσθε what you command when you are instructing or winning disciples IRo 3:1.—ὑμῖν μαθητευθῆναι become your disciples, be instructed by you IEph 10:1 (cp. pres. subst. ptc. οἱ μαθητευόμενοι = οἱ μαθηταί Did., Gen. 69, 24; 245, 17; aor. ptc. αἱ δὲ τοῦ θεοῦ Χριστῷ μαθητευθεῖσαι ἐκκλησίαι Orig., C. Cels. 3, 29, 24; Πολύκαρπος . . . ὑπὸ ἀποστόλων μαθητευθείς Iren. 3, 3, 4 [Harv. II 12, 4]).—DELG s.v. μανθάνω. M-M. EDNT. TW. Sv.

John 8:30-32 indicates that disciples are those who have believed on the Lord Jesus Christ. The discourse of John 8 takes place in the Jerusalem temple (v. 2, 20, 59), where Christ debates and refutes the Pharisees in front of a watching audience. In 8:12-13 Christ addresses "the Pharisees" and they reply. He then responds in v. 14-18, they answer Him in v. 19, and He responds in v. 19, making it clear that they are lost in their sins (v. 19). This interaction between the Pharisees and the Lord continues in v. 20-29. Although now called "the Jews" (v. 22), Christ still debates the same Pharisaic opponents, for v. 21 ("then said Jesus again unto them") indicates He still speaks to the Pharisees of v. 13. Verse 24 ("therefore") also shows the interaction continues through v. 29. It is very apparent that these Pharisees are lost (v. 21, 23, 24); indeed, they will be responsible for Christ's crucifixion (v. 28). As the Lord preaches to and answers the Pharisees, many of those listening to His public disputation with them savingly believe on Him (v. 30-32).[874] The Lord then tells those who have now believed on Him that their initial justifying faith will evidence itself in perseverance (v. 31-32). In v. 33, the Pharisees ("they," as in v. 27) challenge Christ's address to His new disciples. The speakers in v. 33 are not the new converts—their words are nowhere recorded in the chapter—rather, the public disputation with the Pharisees found in the rest of John eight is continued from v. 33 through the end of the chapter. Thus, John chapter eight records a conversation between Christ and the Pharisees with others looking on and listening in. Some of the onlookers believed on the Savior and received His exhortation in v. 30-32, 873 The like is true of the related nouns μαθήτρια and συμμαθητής. However, these words appear only in Acts 9:36 and John 11:16 and consequently make only a rather limited contribution to the question of the equation of the category of believer and disciple. The verb μανθάνω, "to learn," is naturally employed with frequency for Christian growth (Philippians 4:11; 1 Corinthians 14:31) and for the acquisition of other sorts of information (Acts 23:27), but it likewise indicates that one becomes a "learner" or disciple of Christ at the moment of conversion (Matthew 11:26; John 6:45), and makes no division between Christians who learn of Christ and a supposed category of Christians who do not learn of Him.

---

874 The perfect tense form of "believe" in v. 31 (πεπιστευκότας) demonstrates that the aorist "believed" (ἐπίστευσαν) in v. 30 denotes saving faith in many of those hearing Christ speak. Those who "believed" or received what Christ said in v. 30 as true were the same group as those who savingly believed in v. 31-32. The perfect tense of πιστεύω is never used for spurious "faith" in unsaved people (John 3:18; 6:69; 8:31; 11:27; 16:27; 20:29; Acts 15:5; 16:34; 18:27; 19:18; 21:20, 25; 1 Corinthians 9:17; Galatians 2:7; 2 Timothy 1:12; Titus 3:8; 1 John 4:16; 5:10).

the only break in the dialogue, and one which occurs without a record of the response of those addressed. Christ said to those who had "believed," "ye . . . are my disciples" (John 8:31). The identification of the categories believer and disciple is explicit.[875] The specification that those the Lord Jesus addressed would evidence their status as true converts[876] by perseverance[877] does not undermine the His identification of believers as disciples. Christ does not say that those who believe would "become" disciples by continuing in His Word, but that those who "are" currently disciples because they have truly believed will evidence their regeneration by perseverance—they "are" saved people "if" they continue.[878] The "if . . . then" clause is an evidence/inference construction, so "the relation the protasis[879] [has] to the apodosis[880] is that of ground, or evidence . . . for example, 'If she has a ring on her left hand, then she's married.' Notice that the protasis is not the cause of the apodosis. In fact, it is often just the opposite."[881] Those who had become the Lord's disciples at the moment they believed in Christ would persevere; if someone did not do so, he never was a true convert.[882]

Mark 8:34-38[883] teaches that one who does not become a disciple of Christ will be eternally damned. In v. 34,[884] denial of self and taking up the cross is a representation of

---

875 Note further that John records in the following chapter that one who wished to become (thelo + ginomai) Christ's disciple came to believe on Him, John 9:25-30, 35-38.

876 ἀληθῶς μαθηταί.

877 Compare the section "The Certainty of Practical Sanctification For All The Regenerate" above.

878 Note also that John repeatedly refers to continuing faith in true disciples—they grow in faith as they continue to believe on Christ, John 2:11; 16:29-31; 20:8, 26-29. "[D]isciples . . . believed the scripture, and the word which Jesus had said" (John 2:22).

879 The protasis is the "if" portion of a conditional clause.

880 The apodosis is the "then" portion of a conditional clause.

881 Pg. 683, Greek Grammar Beyond the Basics, by Daniel Wallace.

882 A third class condition, rather than a first class condition, is employed in John 8:31-32 because the evidence of continuance was not yet present. Christ's admonition to those He had just brought to Himself accords with the greater framework of Biblical evangelistic methodology, so that His admonition to His new converts is good to give to any newly professed believer in the Lord. Those who profess faith should know what a "disciple indeed" looks like and have assurance of salvation promised to them if they evidence themselves as such (1 John 2:29; 3:7; 5:13). Christ's practice of telling new believers that true salvation will evidence itself in perseverance stands in radical contradistinction to the popular and totally unscriptural practice of a soulwinner providing immediate and unconditional assurance to all who have just professed faith. If the Lord Jesus conditioned assurance upon perseverance in His counsel to those whom He, in His omniscience, knew were genuinely converted, how much more should soulwinners, who are very far from omniscient, condition assurance upon perseverence when speaking to those who have newly professed Christ but may or may not have come to genuine faith!

883 34 And when he had called the people unto him with his disciples also, he said unto them, Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. 35 For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it. 36 For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? 37 Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? 38 Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation; of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he the sinner's coming to the point of saving repentance, with a resultant lifestyle of continued following of Christ.[885] As already indicated above, Christ's call to sinners to "follow me" (v. 34) was a call to discipleship, since the Lord's "disciples follow him" (Mark 6:1; Matthew 8:23; Luke 22:39; John 18:15; 21:20).[886] One who was bearing a cross in the land of Israel in Christ's day was on his way to the shameful and extremely painful death of crucifixion (John 19:17); thus, repentant faith in Christ involved losing one's life, that is, turning from his own way of living, exaltation of self and comfort, to surrender to Christ as unconditional Lord (Mark 8:35). The person who wishes to continue to live his own way, to "save his life," will eternally lose "both soul and body in hell" (Matthew 10:28, 39),[887] while one who turns from his own way, denying himself, taking up the cross, and losing his own life for the sake of Christ and the gospel, will save cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels. 34 καὶ προσκαλεσάμενος τὸν ὄχλον σὺν τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, εἶπεν αὐτοῖς, Ὅστις θέλει ὀπίσω μου ἐλθεῖν, ἀπαρνησάσθω ἑαυτόν, καὶ ἀράτω τὸν σταυρὸν αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἀκολουθείτω μοι. 35 ὃς γὰρ ἂν θέλῃ τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ σῶσαι, ἀπολέσει αὐτήν· ὃς δ' ἂν ἀπολέσῃ τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ ἕνεκεν ἐμοῦ καὶ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, οὗτος σώσει αὐτήν. 36 τί γὰρ ὠφελήσει ἄνθρωπον, ἐὰν κερδήσῃ τὸν κόσμον ὅλον, καὶ ζημιωθῇ τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ; 37 ἢ τί δώσει ἄνθρωπος ἀντάλλαγμα τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτοῦ; 38 ὃς γὰρ ἂν ἐπαισχυνθῇ με καὶ τοὺς ἐμοὺς λόγους ἐν τῇ γενεᾷ ταύτῃ τῇ μοιχαλίδι καὶ ἁμαρτωλῷ, καὶ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐπαισχυνθήσεται αὐτόν, ὅταν ἔλθῃ ἐν τῇ δόξῃ τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ μετὰ τῶν ἀγγέλων τῶν ἁγίων.

---

884 The Lord addresses "the people . . . with his disciples also" in v. 34. He teaches the unconverted multitudes, the "people" (ὄχλος), because v. 34-38 was a call for them to repent and receive salvation. He also addressed His disciples because believers should be reminded about the commitment to follow the Lord they made when they repented and believed the gospel, and because not only at the moment of conversion and regeneration, but "daily" believers are to take up the cross and follow Christ (Luke 9:23).

885 Note the aorists ἀπαρνησάσθω and ἀράτω, in contrast with the present imperative ἀκολουθείτω. Self-denial and cross-bearing certainly continues after the moment of saving faith, as the aorists are reasonably seen as ingressive (cf. Luke 9:23), but they nonetheless emphasize the point of the sinner's "turn[ing] to God from idols" (1 Thessalonians 1:9) as the command to "follow" in Mark 8 parallels the result of regeneration, "serv[ing] the living and true God; and . . . wait[ing] for his Son from heaven" (1 Thessalonians 1:9-10; note that the turning is similarly aorist, while serving and waiting are present tense forms).

886 Further texts that connect those who "follow" (ἀκολουθέω) Christ with the status of a disciple or of one who will have eternal life rather than eternal death are: Matthew 4:20, 22; 8:19, 22; 9:9; 10:38; 16:24; 19:21, 27–28; 20:34; Mark 1:18; 2:14; 9:38; 10:21, 28, 32, 52; 15:41; Luke 5:11, 27–28; 9:23, 49, 57, 59, 61; 18:22, 28, 43; John 1:37–38, 40, 43; 8:12; 10:4, 27; 12:26; 13:36–37; 21:19–20, 22; Revelation 14:4; 19:14. Many of the remaining texts, which speak of multitudes following Christ, including among them what was certainly a substantial number of unconverted persons (cf. Mark 2:15; Matthew 12:15; 19:2), describe those "disciples" (John 6:60, 66) who followed Christ for the wrong reasons (John 6:60-68) and thus were professedly His followers, although they "walked . . . with him" only for a time (John 6:66).

887 Compare the uses of ἀπόλλυμι in Matthew 10:28; Luke 13:3, 5; John 3:15-16; 10:28; 11:50; 17:12; Romans 2:12; 1 Corinthians 1:18; 2 Corinthians 2:15; 4:3; 2 Thessalonians 2:10; 2 Peter 3:9; Jude 5, 11. Note the following texts which, as in Mark 8:35, employ both ἀπόλλυμι and ψυχή: Matthew 10:28, 39; 16:25; Luke 17:33; John 12:25. While the ἀπόλλυμι and ψυχή combination does not of itself absolutely require a reference to eternal damnation (cf. Luke 6:9), the saying of Mark 8:35 is specifically tied to losing one's life in hell in Matthew 10:28, 39, and to gaining eternal life in heaven in John 12:25, so Mark 8:35 necessarily refers to eternal bliss or woe.

his life or soul (pseuche) by receiving eternal life. "He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal" (John 12:25). To encourage the lost to give up their own way and surrender to Christ's Lordship for salvation, Christ reminds them that it profits them nothing if they would gain the whole world, but lose their souls (Mark 8:36-37). Those who, rather than being ashamed of their sins (Romans 6:21; contrast Romans 1:16; 2 Timothy 1:8, 12, 16) are ashamed to follow Christ and His Words in the evil and adulterous world will have Christ be ashamed of them at His return and be damned—for Christ is "not ashamed to call [true believers] brethren" (Hebrews 2:11), and "God is not ashamed to be called their God: for he hath prepared for them a city" (Hebrews 11:16; Luke 9:26). No text in Scripture indicates that God will be "ashamed" of His people—He is not ashamed of them (Hebrews 11:16). Mark 8:34-38 clearly teaches that all saved people are disciples, and that one who refuses to become Christ's disciple will face an eternity in hell.

Mark 10:13-31 exemplifies the teaching of Mark 8:34-38. Christ told a man who wanted to "inherit eternal life" (10:17) to "take up the cross, and follow" Him (10:21). He refused to do so, because he was unwilling to forsake his riches, and so he did not inherit the kingdom of God (10:22-24). Indeed, the Lord Jesus taught that fallen man's attachment to sin is so strong that nobody will come to repentance and be saved apart from God's supernatural working (10:25-27). Those who do leave all to forsake all to follow Christ (10:28-29) become God's "children" (10:24) and will "receive . . . in the world to come eternal life" (10:30), having come to Christ as Lord and Savior with the faith of a little child (10:13-16). Matthew 19:16-30 supplements the record in Mark, indicating "eternal life" (19:16) is promised to those who "come and follow" Christ (19:21). Those who forsake all "inherit eternal life" (Matthew 19:29). Similarly, in Luke 14:15-35, Christ teaches that "whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath" (14:33, 26) to "bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple" (14:27, 33); those who refuse to put Christ before property (14:18-19) and people (14:20, 26) will not "eat bread in the kingdom of God" (14:15), but be "cast out" (14:35) of the eschatological feast of the saints (14:24) into hell,[888] while God rejoices over the repentance and salvation of those who become disciples in the way people rejoice over the recovery of a lost sheep, coin, or son (Luke 15). Parallel passages confirm the plain teaching of Mark 8:34-38—disciples get eternal life, and those who do not become disciples are damned. This fact requires the identification of believers and disciples as a single class, the people of God.

[888] The verb "cast out" (βάλλω) in Luke 14:35, out of 125 instances in the New Testament, is never employed for a judgment where believers are cast out by God, but the lost are, over and over again, said to be cast (βάλλω) into the fires of hell (note Matthew 3:10; 5:13, 25, 29-30; 7:19; 13:42, 48; 18:8-9; Mark 9:42 (cf. vv. 41-48), 45, 47; Luke 3:9; 12:58; 14:35; Revelation 2:22; 12:4, 9, 13; 14:19; 18:21; 19:20; 20:3, 10, 14-15). Note as well the βάλλω & ἔξω texts Matthew 5:13; 13:48; Luke 14:35; John 15:6, where the lost are those who are cast out each time (the only remaining text with βάλλω & ἔξω, 1 John 4:18, does not speak of anything eschatological, whether judgment or deliverance).

Scripture is clear that all believers are disciples. The notion that, after regeneration, a smaller, elite group of believers choose to become disciples is entirely absent from Scripture. Disciples are regularly contrasted with the unregenerate, but never with an underclass of truly saved people who have not yet become disciples. When disciples sin or backslide, they are never said to lose their status as disciples and return to a supposed larger unconsecrated Christian underclass. The usage of the noun and verb forms for disciple make the equation of believers and disciples exceedingly plain. Indeed, the terms Christian and disciple are explicitly equated (Acts 11:26). Numerous passages of Scripture teach and affirm the truth that one becomes a disciple at the moment of saving faith, and that those who do not become disciples are unbelievers who will be damned. If only some Christians are disciples, then only some Christians get eternal life and escape hell, are adopted into the family of God, enter the kingdom of God, have faith in Christ, and have a new nature—in short, if only some Christians are disciples, only some Christians are Christians. The Bible is clear—a believer is a disciple, and a disciple is a believer.

Excursus VIII: What Does It Mean To Abide in Christ?

A Study of Meno, "To Abide," in the New Testament,[889] for the purpose of ascertaining its sense in John 15, and seeing what it means to abide in Christ. The vine pericope in John 15 is examined at the conclusion of the study, after the 120 uses of meno in the NT have been cataloged and commented upon. The OT background to the vine image is also examined.

Mt 10:11 And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, enquire who in it is worthy; and there abide till ye go thence.

---

889 Abiding is not merely a New Testament doctrine. In the Mosaic economy, the saints sang in their inspired songbook, "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place [מָעוֹן] in all generations" (Psalm 90:1). Before the incarnation of the Messiah it was already true that "He that dwelleth [יֹשֵׁב] in the secret place of the most High shall abide [יִתְלוֹנָן] under the shadow of the Almighty" (Psalm 91:1). One could say to an Old Testament saint: "Because thou hast made the LORD, which is my refuge, even the most High, thy habitation [מָעוֹן]; there shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling" (Psalm 91:9-10; cf. 71:3). Jehovah had promised His Old Testament people: "For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones" (Isaiah 57:15). However, the analysis in this paper will be restricted to the New Testament doctrine of abiding revealed by the word μένω and expounded most fully in John 15.

εἰς ἣν δ᾽ ἂν πόλιν ἢ κώμην εἰσέλθητε, ἐξετάσατε τίς ἐν αὐτῇ ἄξιός ἐστιν· κἀκεῖ μείνατε, ἕως ἂν ἐξέλθητε.

Here the sense is "stay," or "dwell" there. This is consistent with a sense of "endure" or "remain" for meno in John 15.

Mt 11:23 And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day.
καὶ σύ, Καπερναούμ, ἡ ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ὑψωθεῖσα, ἕως ᾅδου καταβιβασθήσῃ· ὅτι εἰ ἐν Σοδόμοις ἐγένοντο αἱ δυνάμεις αἱ γενόμεναι ἐν σοί, ἔμεινεν ἂν μέχρι τῆς σήμερον.

Here the sense of "stay" or "endure" is very possible.

Mt 26:38 Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with me.
τότε λέγει αὐτοῖς, Περίλυπός ἐστιν ἡ ψυχή μου ἕως θανάτου· μείνατε ὧδε καὶ γρηγορεῖτε μετ᾽ ἐμοῦ.

Here "remain/stay" is the sense as well. Consider that this text contains an identical imperative to that in John 15. The disciples were to stay there, while, v. 39, Christ went away from them a little farther. The word, of itself, does not indicate that fellowship with Him is involved in remaining/abiding/staying. Certainly the necessity of fellowship with Christ is taught in many passages of Scripture, but if "abide" in John 15 possesses the same sense as "tarry ye" here, why cannot it be a command of Christian perseverance rather than a command for fellowship? Note that the Lord rebuked them for not "watching" (v. 40ff.) but not for not "tarrying" with Him, for they did stay there instead of going somewhere else, although they certainly had no sort of living fellowship with the Lord, for they were asleep.

Mr 6:10 And he said unto them, In what place soever ye enter into an house, there abide till ye depart from that place.
καὶ ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς, Ὅπου ἐὰν εἰσέλθητε εἰς οἰκίαν, ἐκεῖ μένετε ἕως ἂν ἐξέλθητε ἐκεῖθεν.

Here "remain/stay" in the sense of "dwell" is the idea. This use also is not one of living fellowship; one does not have fellowship with a house.

Mr 14:34 And saith unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death: tarry ye here, and watch.
καὶ λέγει αὐτοῖς, Περίλυπός ἐστιν ἡ ψυχή μου ἕως θανάτου· μείνατε ὧδε καὶ γρηγορεῖτε.

See the note on Mt 26:38.

Lu 1:56 And Mary abode with her about three months, and returned to her own house.

Ἔμεινε δὲ Μαριὰμ σὺν αὐτῇ ὡσεὶ μῆνας τρεῖς, καὶ ὑπέστρεψεν εἰς τὸν οἶκον αὐτῆς.

Mary remained/stayed/lived in Elizabeth's house. Certainly Mary and Elizabeth had good fellowship, but they were both abiding in Elizabeth's house, not abiding in one another. Note the last part of the verse.

Lu 8:27 And when he went forth to land, there met him out of the city a certain man, which had devils long time, and ware no clothes, neither abode in any house, but in the tombs.
ἐξελθόντι δὲ αὐτῷ ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν, ὑπήντησεν αὐτῷ ἀνήρ τις ἐκ τῆς πόλεως, ὃς εἶχε δαιμόνια ἐκ χρόνων ἱκανῶν, καὶ ἱμάτιον οὐκ ἐνεδιδύσκετο, καὶ ἐν οἰκίᾳ οὐκ ἔμενεν, ἀλλ᾽ ἐν τοῖς μνήμασιν,

The man stayed/remained in the tombs, rather than in houses. No fellowship aspect appears in this usage either.

Lu 9:4 And whatsoever house ye enter into, there abide, and thence depart.
καὶ εἰς ἣν ἂν οἰκίαν εἰσέλθητε, ἐκεῖ μένετε, καὶ ἐκεῖθεν ἐξέρχεσθε.

Here also, the command was to remain/stay in the house. Here, as in many of the previous references, location is in view.

Lu 10:7 And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give: for the labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house.
ἐν αὐτῇ δὲ τῇ οἰκίᾳ μένετε, ἐσθίοντες καὶ πίνοντες τὰ παρ᾽ αὐτῶν· ἄξιος γὰρ ὁ ἐργάτης τοῦ μισθοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐστι. μὴ μεταβαίνετε ἐξ οἰκίας εἰς οἰκίαν.

The preachers were to remain/stay in this house while they were in that city, rather than moving from one house to another and exploiting everyone's hospitality.

Lu 19:5 And when Jesus came to the place, he looked up, and saw him, and said unto him, Zacchaeus, make haste, and come down; for to day I must abide at thy house.
καὶ ὡς ἦλθεν ἐπὶ τὸν τόπον, ἀναβλέψας ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶδεν αὐτόν, καὶ εἶπε πρός αὐτόν, Ζακχαῖε, σπεύσας κατάβηθι· σήμερον γὰρ ἐν τ�ῳ οἴκῳ σου δεῖ με μεῖναι.

The Lord Jesus was going to remain/stay in Zacchaeus' house. The Savior would be his guest that day. Certainly fellowship would go on, but this fact is not required by the word itself.

Lu 24:29 But they constrained him, saying, Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them.
καὶ παρεβιάσαντο αὐτόν, λέγοντες, Μεῖνον μεθ᾽ ἡμῶν, ὅτι πρὸς ἑσπέραν ἐστί, καὶ κέκλικεν ἡ ἡμέρα. καὶ εἰσῆλθε τοῦ μεῖναι σὺν αὐτοῖς.

Both the command and the fulfillment are to remain/stay with someone, to continue in his physical presence.

Joh 1:32 And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him.
καὶ ἐμαρτύρησεν Ἰωάννης λέγων ὅτι Τεθέαμαι τὸ Πνεῦμα καταβαῖνον ὡσεὶ περιστερὰν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, καὶ ἔμεινεν ἐπ᾽ αὐτόν.

Here, and in v. 33, meno indicates a location. In v. 32 the Spirit came to abide on the Lord, and in v. 33 the Holy Ghost continued to remain on the Savior. Both of these designate a location, not fellowship.

Joh 1:33 And I knew him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost.
κἀγὼ οὐκ ᾔδειν αὐτόν· ἀλλ᾽ ὁ πέμψας με βαπτίζειν ἐν ὕδατι, ἐκεῖνός μοι εἶπεν, Ἐφ᾽ ὃν ἂν ἴδῃς τὸ Πνεῦμα καταβαῖνον καὶ μένον ἐπ᾽ αὐτόν, οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ βαπτίζων ἐν Πνεύματι Ἁγίῳ.

See the comments on John 1:32.

Joh 1:38 Then Jesus turned, and saw them following, and saith unto them, What seek ye? They said unto him, Rabbi, (which is to say, being interpreted, Master,) where dwellest thou?
στραφεὶς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς καὶ θεασάμενος αὐτοὺς ἀκολουθοῦντας, λέγει αὐτοῖς, Τί ζητεῖτε; οἱ δὲ εἶπον αὐτῷ, Ῥαββί (ὃ λέγεται ἑρμηνευόμενον, Διδάσκαλε), ποῦ μένεις;

Here meno is equivalent to remain/stay. The two disciples asked the Lord Jesus what house He was staying in.

Joh 1:39 He saith unto them, Come and see. They came and saw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day: for it was about the tenth hour.
λέγει αὐτοῖς, Ἔρχεσθε καὶ ἴδετε. ἦλθον καὶ εἶδον ποῦ μένει· καὶ παρ᾽ αὐτῷ ἔμειναν τὴν ἡμέραν ἐκείνην· ὥρα δὲ ἦν ὡς δεκάτη.

The uses in v. 39 are like those in v. 38; they remained/stayed with the Lord. Surely the disciples had fellowship with Christ while they stayed with Him, but this result is not involved in the verb meno on its own.

Joh 2:12 After this he went down to Capernaum, he, and his mother, and his brethren, and his disciples: and they continued there not many days.
Μετὰ τοῦτο κατέβη εἰς Καπερναούμ, αὐτὸς καὶ ἡ μήτηρ αὐτοῦ, καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ αὐτοῦ καὶ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἐκεῖ ἔμειναν οὐ πολλὰς ἡμέρας.

The people specified in the text remained or stayed in the city.

Joh 3:36 He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him.
ὁ πιστεύων εἰς τὸν υἱὸν ἔχει ζωὴν αἰώνιον· ὁ δὲ ἀπειθῶν τῷ υἱῷ οὐκ ὄψεται ζωήν, ἀλλ᾽ ἡ ὀργὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ μένει ἐπ᾽ αὐτόν.

The wrath of God stays or remains upon the unbelieving one.

Joh 4:40 So when the Samaritans were come unto him, they besought him that he would tarry with them: and he abode there two days.
ὡς οὖν ἦλθον πρὸς αὐτὸν οἱ Σαμαρεῖται, ἠρώτων αὐτὸν μεῖναι παρ᾽ αὐτοῖς· καὶ ἔμεινεν ἐκεῖ δύο ἡμέρας.

The Samaritans asked the Lord to remain/stay with them, and so He did.

Joh 5:38 And ye have not his word abiding in you: for whom he hath sent, him ye believe not.
καὶ τὸν λόγον αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἔχετε μένοντα ἐν ὑμῖν, ὅτι ὃν ἀπέστειλεν ἐκεῖνος, τούτῳ ὑμεῖς οὐ πιστεύετε.

Here, when the Word remains or stays in one, it produces effects (although perhaps the statement that the Word did not remain in them is simply an affirmation of their ignorance of Scripture entirely, explaining hence the command of v. 39). See 8:31, where endurance in the belief and practice of the Word is indicated. Enduring obedience is associated with love for God, v. 42.

Joh 6:27 Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you: for him hath God the Father sealed.
ἐργάζεσθε μὴ τὴν βρῶσιν τὴν ἀπολλυμένην, ἀλλὰ τὴν βρῶσιν τὴν μένουσαν εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, ἣν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ὑμῖν δώσει· τοῦτον γὰρ ὁ πατὴρ ἐσφράγισεν, ὁ Θεός.

Spiritual food will continue/remain/endure/abide, unlike physical bread, which will perish. In relation to John 15, note that here meno is even rendered endure. The Online Bible version of Thayer's Greek Lexicon provides the following statistics for the translation of meno: KJV - abide 61, remain 16, dwell 15, continue 11, tarry 9, endure 3, misc 5; 120 (total).

Joh 6:56 He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him.
ὁ τρώγων μου τὴν σάρκα καὶ πίνων μου τὸ αἷμα, ἐν ἐμοὶ μένει, κἀγὼ ἐν αὐτῷ.

Here it looks like the spiritual union of remaining or staying in Christ, en Christo, is in view. The one who has spiritual fellowship with Christ, who believes in Him, who eats His flesh and drinks His blood, is in Christ, and Christ is in him. The spiritual union here would, based on other passages of Scripture, be unbreakable; one cannot be in Christ and then no longer be so. There is no command here to remain in the en Christo position; it is a declarative statement. It looks like, contextually, this statement is something like, "He that believes in Me, remains in Me, and I in him."

Joh 7:9* When he had said these words unto them, he abode still in Galilee.
ταῦτα δὲ εἰπὼν αὐτοῖς ἔμεινεν ἐν τῇ Γαλιλαίᾳ.

The Lord remained/stayed in Galilee.

Joh 8:31 Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed;
Ἔλεγεν οὖν ὁ Ἰησοῦς πρὸς τοὺς πεπιστευκότας αὐτῷ Ἰουδαίους, Ἐὰν ὑμεῖς μείνητε ἐν τῷ λόγῳ τῷ ἐμῷ, ἀληθῶς μαθηταί μου ἐστέ· Christ commands the believing Jews to remain or stay in His Word. This appears to be perseverance in obedience to it. The verse does not establish any mystical idea in abiding. This is not to say that God does not do great things by His Spirit in His people through the Word, nor does it deny that He does in fact hold glorious communion with them (1 John 1:3); it is simply dealing with the much narrower question of whether John 8:31 proves that He does these things. One should note as well that this verse is a statement that only those who, having received a new nature by grace, continue to follow the Lord are truly converted; the verse does not make a distinction between some sort of higher Christian life as a disciple versus a lower "Christian" life of perpetual carnality is in view, rather than a distinction between the saved and the lost. Those who do not continue and are not "disciples indeed" do not "know the truth" and are not "free" (8:31-32). All believers know the truth, and no unbelievers know the truth (John 1:17; 14:6, 17; 17:17, 19; and this knowledge leads to a changed life as its certain result: "Every one that is of the truth heareth [Christ's] voice," John 18:37; and consequently becomes a true worshipper (John 4:23-24), follows Christ (John 10:27), and "doeth truth . . . that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God" (John 3:21). Furthermore, in the immediate context of John 8:31-32 (namely, in v. 36), and everywhere else in the New Testament, being made "free" is an event that takes place at the moment of regeneration (John 8:32, 36; Romans 6:18, 22; 8:2, 21; Galatians 5:1). While the believer is to renew his discipleship daily (Luke 9:23), the call of the Lord Jesus, "Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me" (Mark 8:34) is a call to repentance and faith, to conversion: "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it [eternally in hell]; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake [repent of his sin and his own life and way] and the gospel's, the same shall save it [will go to heaven]" (Mark 8:35). Those who do not become disciples lose their own souls eternally in the lake of fire (Mark 8:36). While there can certainly be false or unsaved disciples (John 8:31; 6:66) just like there can be false believers (John 2:23-25; cf. 3:1-21), every true believer is a true disciple, and every true disciple is a true believer.

The Lord Jesus Himself, who knew that He was speaking to true converts (John 8:30-31), gave them assurance based on the evidence of the new birth and new nature (John 8:31—a certainty in every truly converted person, John 17:17). How much the more should His people, who do not know infallibly what has gone on within a professed convert, follow His practice! Believers must not give assurance to those who claim conversion but manifest no change of life.

Joh 8:35 And the servant abideth not in the house for ever: but the Son abideth ever.
ὁ δὲ δοῦλος οὐ μένει ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα· ὁ υἱὸς μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα·

The servant does not remain or stay in the house, but the Son does.

Joh 9:41 Jesus said unto them, If ye were blind, ye should have no sin: but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth.
εἶπεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς, Εἰ τυφλοὶ ἦτε, οὐκ ἂν εἴχετε ἁμαρτίαν· νῦν δὲ λέγετε ὅτι Βλέπομεν· ἡ οὖν ἁμαρτία ὑμῶν μένει.

The Lord Jesus tells those who oppose Him that their sins were remaining or staying upon them.

Joh 10:40 And went away again beyond Jordan into the place where John at first baptized; and there he abode.
Καὶ ἀπῆλθε πάλιν πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου εἰς τὸν τόπον ὅπου ἦν Ἰωάννης τὸ πρῶτον βαπτίζων· καὶ ἔμεινεν ἐκεῖ.

Christ remained or stayed in a location beyond Jordan where John had at first baptized.

Joh 11:6 When he had heard therefore that he was sick, he abode two days still in the same place where he was.
ὡς οὖν ἤκουσεν ὅτι ἀσθενεῖ, τότε μὲν ἔμεινεν ἐν ᾧ ἦν τόπῳ δύο ἡμέρας.

After receiving the message mentioned, the Lord remained or stayed in His location for two further days.

Joh 12:24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.
ἀμὴν ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ἐὰν μὴ ὁ κόκκος τοῦ σίτου πεσὼν εἰς τὴν γῆν ἀποθάνῃ, αὐτὸς μόνος μένει· ἐὰν δὲ ἀποθάνῃ, πολὺν καρπὸν φέρει.

The grain of wheat remains or stays on its own.

Joh 12:34 The people answered him, We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth for ever: and how sayest thou, The Son of man must be lifted up? who is this Son of man?
ἀπεκρίθη αὐτῷ ὁ ὄχλος, Ἡμεῖς ἠκούσαμεν ἐκ τοῦ νόμου ὅτι ὁ Χριστὸς μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα· καὶ πῶς σὺ λέγεις ὅτι Δεῖ ὑψωθῆναι τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου; τίς ἐστιν οὗτος ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου;

The Christ remains or stays to rule forever.

Joh 12:46 I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness.

ἐγὼ φῶς εἰς τὸν κόσμον ἐλήλυθα, ἵνα πᾶς ὁ πιστεύων εἰς ἐμέ, ἐν τῇ σκοτίᾳ μὴ μείνῃ.

The believer will no longer remain in darkness, but will be in the light instead.

Joh 14:10 Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works.
οὐ πιστεύεις ὅτι ἐγὼ ἐν τῷ πατρί, καὶ ὁ πατὴρ ἐν ἐμοί ἐστι; τὰ ῥήματα ἃ ἐγὼ λαλῶ ὑμῖν, ἀπ᾽ ἐμαυτοῦ οὐ λαλῶ· ὁ δὲ πατὴρ ὁ ἐν ἐμοὶ μένων, αὐτὸς ποιεῖ τὰ ἔργα.

The Father has a position of being in the Son, and the Son is in the Father (see also v. 11). It is certain that the Father and Son have an ineffably deep fellowship, but what in the text indicates that "dwelleth" specifies this fellowship, rather than representing the ontological indwelling, the interpenetration of the three Persons in the Trinity?

Joh 14:16 And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever;
καὶ ἐγὼ ἐρωτήσω τὸν πατέρα, καὶ ἄλλον παράκλητον δώσει ὑμῖν, ἵνα μένῃ μεθ᾽ ὑμῶν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα,

The Spirit would come to remain/stay with the saints forever. See also v. 17.

Joh 14:17 Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.
τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς ἀληθείας, ὃ ὁ κόσμος οὐ δύναται λαβεῖν, ὅτι οὐ θεωρεῖ αὐτό, οὐδὲ γινώσκει αὐτὸ ὑμεῖς δὲ γινώσκετε αὐτό· ὅτι παρ᾽ ὑμῖν μένει, καὶ ἐν ὑμῖν ἔσται.

Here the Spirit is known because He dwells with, and shall be in, the saints. Dwelling or abiding is not synonymous with being known, but the Spirit's indwelling is the cause of fellowship. This verse does establish an explicit connection between fellowship and indwelling for the inward work of the Spirit. Perhaps a parallel to this in the earlier texts is found where the Lord Jesus stayed in someone's house; fellowship on that account would be a definite result. So knowing the Spirit because He dwells within is established here. "Ye know Him, because He dwelleth with you, and shall be dwelling in you." The Lord does not use meno of the relation of the Spirit within the Christian here; the Spirit who at that time was "with" them dwelt or abode with them; at the coming day when He would be within them, He would at that time dwell in them. The verse also supports the conclusion that believers also know the Father and the Son because both of them similarly dwell in the saints; cf. vv. 20, 23. Note the present tense use of meno in John 14:17.

Joh 14:25 These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you.
Ταῦτα λελάληκα ὑμῖν παρ᾽ ὑμῖν μένων.

While still remaining or continuing with the disciples on the earth, Christ said these things to them.

Joh 15:4 Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me.
μείνατε ἐν ἐμοί, κἀγὼ ἐν ὑμῖν. καθὼς τὸ κλῆμα οὐ δύναται καρπὸν φέρειν ἀφ᾽ ἑαυτοῦ, ἐὰν μὴ μείνῃ ἐν τῇ ἀμπέλῳ, οὕτως οὐδὲ ὑμεῖς, ἐὰν μὴ ἐν ἐμοὶ μείνητε.

This examination of each instance of the word meno in the New Testament is followed by a verse-by verse exposition of the vine pericope in John 15. Detailed comments on these verses will be found there. Here some general background to John 15 will suffice.

The Old Testament repeatedly presents the nation of Israel as Jehovah's vine, as well as comparing the nation to a vineyard (Isaiah 5), etc. The vine is to bring forth fruit—although Israel failed to do so, and thus was burned up, in contrast to those who abide in Christ as the vine in John 15. Israel's failure brought the nation into judgment. If all Israel was "in the vine," part of the metaphor, the metaphor was not limited to the genuinely converted. Consider:
Isaiah 5:1ff, then:
6 And I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned, nor digged; but there shall come up briers and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it. 7 For the vineyard of the LORD of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant: and he looked for judgment, but behold oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry. (Isaiah 5:6-7)
21 Yet I had planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed: how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me? (Jeremiah 2:21)
10 Many pastors have destroyed my vineyard, they have trodden my portion under foot, they have made my pleasant portion a desolate wilderness. (Jeremiah 12:10)
16 Ephraim is smitten, their root is dried up, they shall bear no fruit: yea, though they bring forth, yet will I slay even the beloved fruit of their womb. 17 My God will cast them away, because they did not hearken unto him: and they shall be wanderers among the nations. 1 Israel is an empty vine, he bringeth forth fruit unto himself: according to the multitude of his fruit he hath increased the altars; according to the goodness of his land they have made goodly images. (Hosea 9:16-10:1)
1 In that day the LORD with his sore and great and strong sword shall punish leviathan the piercing serpent, even leviathan that crooked serpent; and he shall slay the dragon that is in the sea. 2 In that day sing ye unto her, A vineyard of red wine. 3 I the LORD do keep it; I will water it every moment: lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day. 4 Fury is not in me: who would set the briers and thorns against me in battle? I would go through them, I would burn them together. 5 Or let him take hold of my strength, that he may make peace with me; and he shall make peace with me. 6 He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root: Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit. 7 Hath he smitten him, as he smote those that smote him? or is he slain according to the slaughter of them that are slain by him? 8 In measure, when it shooteth forth, thou wilt debate with it: he stayeth his rough wind in the day of the east wind. 9 By this therefore shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged; and this is all the fruit to take away his sin; when he maketh all the stones of the altar as chalkstones that are beaten in sunder, the groves and images shall not stand up. 10 Yet the defenced city shall be desolate, and the habitation forsaken, and left like a wilderness: there shall the calf feed, and there shall he lie down, and consume the branches thereof. 11 When the boughs thereof are withered, they shall be broken off: the women come, and set them on fire: for it is a people of no understanding: therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will shew them no favour. 12 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall beat off from the channel of the river unto the stream of Egypt, and ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel. 13 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the great trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, and shall worship the LORD in the holy mount at Jerusalem. (Isaiah 27:1-13)

21 Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified. (Isaiah 60:21)

1 And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, 2 Son of man, What is the vine tree more than any tree, or than a branch which is among the trees of the forest? 3 Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work? or will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon? 4 Behold, it is cast into the fire for fuel; the fire devoureth both the ends of it, and the midst of it is burned. Is it meet for any work? 5 Behold, when it was whole, it was meet for no work: how much less shall it be meet yet for any work, when the fire hath devoured it, and it is burned? 6 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; As the vine tree among the trees of the forest, which I have given to the fire for fuel, so will I give the inhabitants of Jerusalem. 7 And I will set my face against them; they shall go out from one fire, and another fire shall devour them; and ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I set my face against them. 8 And I will make the land desolate, because they have committed a trespass, saith the Lord GOD. (Ezekiel 15:1-8)

Note in Ezekiel 15 that the vine that is good for nothing is cast into the fire and burned up, so that it will be useful in some way. The vine here represents the inhabitants of Jerusalem, who are associated with the people of God, naturally. They are burned up, in the sense that they are given over to various awful judgments for their sins. While this writer believes these judgments fall upon unconverted Israelites who are given over to judgment, thus, with those who are not genuinely part of the people of God, although they are such in name, one could also argue that this passage deals with converted individuals who were disobedient.

Consider Psalm 80:

1 <<To the chief Musician upon Shoshannimeduth, A Psalm of Asaph.>> Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock; thou that dwellest between the cherubims, shine forth. 2 Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh stir up thy strength, and come and save us. 3 Turn us again, O God, and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved. 4 O LORD God of hosts, how long wilt thou be angry against the prayer of thy people? 5 Thou feedest them with the bread of tears; and givest them tears to drink in great measure. 6 Thou makest us a strife unto our neighbours: and our enemies laugh among themselves. 7 Turn us again, O God of hosts, and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved. 8 Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt: thou hast cast out the heathen, and planted it.

It would appear that this deliverance of the vine from Egypt is a physical deliverance, but the spiritual is tied in with the physical for the nation of Israel.

9 Thou preparedst room before it, and didst cause it to take deep root, and it filled the land. 10 The hills were covered with the shadow of it, and the boughs thereof were like the goodly cedars.

This speaks of the physical spread of the "vine" through the land in the conquest of Canaan. Of course, this was also a time of spiritual revival and blessing for Israel.

11 She sent out her boughs unto the sea, and her branches unto the river. 12 Why hast thou then broken down her hedges, so that all they which pass by the way do pluck her? 13 The boar out of the wood doth waste it, and the wild beast of the field doth devour it.

Here, of course, the Psalmist describes the contraction of the nation at the hand of her enemies. Although Jehovah is the Shepherd of Israel, now the wild beasts are Israel's "shepherd" (devour is from the same verb as to shepherd/feed). This is a physical contraction, but it is a result of a spiritual affliction, as one can see from v. 18ff.

14 Return, we beseech thee, O God of hosts: look down from heaven, and behold, and visit this vine; 15 And the vineyard which thy right hand hath planted, and the branch that thou madest strong for thyself.

God is to view the children of Israel with mercy; yet the nation is still Jehovah's ben, His son (this is the word here rendered branch.). This would seem to favor the interpretation of John 15 where the burning is considered as a physical judgment on the disobedient believer; however, it is not inconsistent with a spiritual view, for the unconverted are cut off out of the true Israel of God, and Judas, to whom the passage in John 15 seems to allude in the branch that is cast off, was certainly unconverted. Consider as well that here the branch is Israel, but it also alludes to the Son of Man, the Lord Jesus, as the vine, for Israel was in the Lord (Isaiah 45:17, 24, 25) in the OT, as the saints are in Christ in the NT; so a comparison to John 15 is the more apt, for there the Lord is explicitly said to be the vine, yet the text bears reference to the saints, or the company of professed saints, as the members of the vine. So in Psalm 80 we can consider Israel as the vine, yet the Lord, the Divine Messiah, is not out of view.

16 It is burned with fire, it is cut down: they perish at the rebuke of thy countenance.

This is physical judgment upon the nation, metaphorically represented as a vine. There is no specific mention here of a remnant in the nation who is faithful and a portion that is unfaithful; the nation is viewed as a whole. Nevertheless, such an idea is not excluded; it is simply not mentioned.

17 Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand, upon the son of man whom thou madest strong for thyself.

Through the Messiah, who was certain to become incarnate, the nation of Israel would find complete and ultimate deliverance, as they would in part through the human types of the Christ who sat on the throne of David.

18 So will not we go back from thee: quicken us, and we will call upon thy name.

The nation would find physical and spiritual deliverance when Jehovah would bless them for the sake of the Anointed One. Being quickened, they would receive spiritual blessing.

19 Turn us again, O LORD God of hosts, cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

Spiritual blessing and physical deliverance are intimately united here.

These many Old Testament chapters and verses employing the vine metaphor are very important general background information to the metaphor in John 15. The verse-by-verse exposition of the chapter, once again, is found after the remaining instances of meno in the New Testament are evaluated.

Joh 15:5 I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing.
ἐγώ εἰμι ἡ ἄμπελος, ὑμεῖς τὰ κλήματα. ὁ μένων ἐν ἐμοί, κἀγὼ ἐν αὐτῷ, οὗτος φέρει καρπὸν πολύν· ὅτι χωρὶς ἐμοῦ οὐ δύνασθε ποιεῖν οὐδέν.

Joh 15:6 If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned.
ἐὰν μή τις μείνῃ ἐν ἐμοί, ἐβλήθη ἔξω ὡς τὸ κλῆμα, καὶ ἐξηράνθη, καὶ συνάγουσιν αὐτὰ καὶ εἰς πῦρ βάλλουσι, καὶ καίεται.

Joh 15:7 If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.
ἐὰν μείνητε ἐν ἐμοί, καὶ τὰ ῥήματά μου ἐν ὑμῖν μείνῃ, ὃ ἐὰν θέλητε αἰτήσασθε, καὶ γενήσεται ὑμῖν.

Joh 15:9 As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love.
καθὼς ἠγάπησέ με ὁ πατήρ, κἀγὼ ἠγάπησα ὑμᾶς· μείνατε ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ τῇ ἐμῇ.

Joh 15:10 If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love.
ἐὰν τὰς ἐντολάς μου τηρήσητε, μενεῖτε ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ μου· καθὼς ἐγὼ τὰς ἐντολὰς τοῦ πατρός μου τετήρηκα, καὶ μένω αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ.

Joh 15:11 These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.
ταῦτα λελάληκα ὑμῖν, ἵνα ἡ χαρὰ ἡ ἐμὴ ἐν ὑμῖν μείνῃ, καὶ ἡ χαρὰ ὑμῶν πληρωθῇ.

All these instances in John 15:1-11 are examined at the end of this study.

Joh 15:16 Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you.
οὐχ ὑμεῖς με ἐξελέξασθε, ἀλλ᾽ ἐγὼ ἐξελεξάμην ὑμᾶς, καὶ ἔθηκα ὑμᾶς, ἵνα ὑμεῖς ὑπάγητε καὶ καρπὸν φέρητε, καὶ ὁ καρπὸς ὑμῶν μένῃ· ἵνα ὅ τι ἂν αἰτήσητε τὸν πατέρα ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου, δῷ ὑμῖν.

Your fruit, your good works, will continue; they will pass through the judgment. All truly converted individuals are changed by God and will bring forth good works (Ephesians 2:8-10). The fruit remaining for all the regenerate is a certain consequence of their election by God.

Joh 19:31 The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath day, (for that sabbath day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.
Οἱ οὖν Ἰουδαῖοι, ἐπεὶ Παρασκευὴ ἦν, ἵνα μὴ μείνῃ ἐπὶ τοῦ σταυροῦ τὰ σώματα ἐν τῷ σαββάτῳ (ἦν γὰρ μεγάλη ἡ ἡμέρα ἐκείνου τοῦ σαββάτου), ἠρώτησαν τὸν Πιλάτον ἵνα κατεαγῶσιν αὐτῶν τὰ σκέλη, καὶ ἀρθῶσιν.

The bodies were not to remain or stay on the cross.

Joh 21:22 Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me.
λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, Ἐὰν αὐτὸν θέλω μένειν ἕως ἔρχομαι, τί πρός σε; σὺ ἀκολούθει μοι.

The question is if the disciple will continue, remain, or stay on earth until Christ returns.

Joh 21:23 Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die: yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?
ἐξῆλθεν οὖν ὁ λόγος οὗτος εἰς τοὺς ἀδελφούς, ὅτι ὁ μαθητὴς ἐκεῖνος οὐκ ἀποθνήσκει· καὶ οὐκ εἶπεν αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, ὅτι οὐκ ἀποθνήσκει· ἀλλ᾽, Ἐὰν αὐτὸν θέλω μένειν ἕως ἔρχομαι, τί πρός σε;

Here it is the same thing—would that disciple continue, remain, or stay until Christ returns?

Ac 5:4 Whiles it remained, was it not thine own? And after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? Why hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart? Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God.
οὐχὶ μένον σοὶ ἔμενε; καὶ πραθὲν ἐν τῇ σῇ ἐξουσίᾳ ὑπῆρχε; τί ὅτι ἔθου ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου τὸ πρᾶγμα τοῦτο; οὐκ ἐψεύσω ἀνθρώποις, ἀλλὰ τῷ Θεῷ.

"While it remained, was it not remaining to you?"

Ac 9:43 And it came to pass, that he tarried many days in Joppa with one Simon a tanner.
ἐγένετο δὲ ἡμέρας ἱκανὰς μεῖναι αὐτὸν ἐν Ἰόππῃ παρά τινι Σίμωνι βυρσεῖ.

Here, Paul remained or stayed with Simon the tanner. Note that, although he was with him for many days, the aorist tense is used for his time with him. Of course, Paul also left later.

Ac 16:15 And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And she constrained us.
ὡς δὲ ἐβαπτίσθη, καὶ ὁ οἶκος αὐτῆς, παρεκάλεσε λέγουσα, Εἰ κεκρίκατέ με πιστὴν τῷ Κυρίῳ εἶναι, εἰσελθόντες εἰς τὸν οἶκόν μου μείνατε. καὶ παρεβιάσατο ἡμᾶς.

Here again the abiding, remaining, or staying is a aorist tense, yet it represents a stay of what was likely a significant period of time.

Ac 18:3 And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them, and wrought: for by their occupation they were tentmakers.
καὶ διὰ τὸ ὁμότεχνον εἶναι, ἔμενε παρ᾽ αὐτοῖς καὶ εἰργάζετο· ἦσαν γὰρ σκηνοποιοὶ τὴν τέχνην.

Here Paul's abiding with these people is expressed with an imperfect form, unlike in the previous instances, where an aorist is used.

Ac 18:20 When they desired him to tarry longer time with them, he consented not;
ἐρωτώντων δὲ αὐτῶν ἐπὶ πλείονα χρόνον μεῖναι παρ᾽ αὐτοῖς, οὐκ ἐπένευσεν·

Here again abiding is remaining/staying with people. It is aorist again.

Ac 20:5 These going before tarried for us at Troas.
οὗτοι προελθόντες ἔμενον ἡμᾶς ἐν Τρωάδι.

The brethren in Acts 20:4 were remaining or staying (imperfect tense) for Paul, Luke, and the rest of those coming from Troas.

Ac 20:15 And we sailed thence, and came the next day over against Chios; and the next day we arrived at Samos, and tarried at Trogyllium; and the next day we came to Miletus.
κἀκεῖθεν ἀποπλεύσαντες, τῇ ἐπιούσῃ κατηντήσαμεν ἀντικρὺ Χίου· τῇ δὲ ἑτέρᾳ παρεβάλομεν εἰς Σάμον· καὶ μείναντες ἐν Τρωγυλλίῳ, τῇ ἐχομένῃ ἤλθομεν εἰς Μίλητον.

Luke, Paul, and the rest of their missionary band remained or stayed at Trygyllium for one day.

Ac 20:23 Save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me.
πλὴν ὅτι τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ Ἅγιον κατὰ πόλιν διαμαρτύρεται λέγον ὅτι δεσμά με καὶ θλίψεις μένουσιν.

Bonds and afflictions are remaining, staying, or continuing yet for the Apostle.

Ac 21:7 And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.
Ἡμεῖς δὲ τὸν πλοῦν διανύσαντες ἀπὸ Τύρου, κατηντήσαμεν εἰς Πτολεμαΐδα, καὶ ἀσπασάμενοι τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς ἐμείναμεν ἡμέραν μίαν παρ᾽ αὐτοῖς.

The aorist tense expression means, “They remained or stayed with them for one day.”

Ac 21:8 And the next day we that were of Paul’s company departed, and came unto Caesarea: and we entered into the house of Philip the evangelist, which was one of the seven; and abode with him.
τῇ δὲ ἐπαύριον ἐξελθόντες οἱ περὶ τὸν Παῦλον ἦλθον ἤλθομεν εἰς Καισάρειαν· καὶ εἰσελθόντες εἰς τὸν οἶκον Φιλίππου τοῦ εὐαγγελιστοῦ, τοῦ ὄντος ἐκ τῶν ἑπτά, ἐμείναμεν παρ᾽ αὐτῷ.

Paul’s company remained or stayed with Philip the evangelist.

Ac 27:31 Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.
εἶπεν ὁ Παῦλος τῷ ἑκατοντάρχῃ καὶ τοῖς στρατιώταις, Ἐὰν μὴ οὗτοι μείνωσιν ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ, ὑμεῖς σωθῆναι οὐ δύνασθε.

Those trying to flee needed to remain, continue, or stay in the ship.

Ac 27:41 And falling into a place where two seas met, they ran the ship aground; and the forepart stuck fast, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves.
περιπεσόντες δὲ εἰς τόπον διθάλασσον ἐπώκειλαν τὴν ναῦν· καὶ ἡ μὲν πρῶρα ἐρείσασα ἔμεινεν ἀσάλευτος, ἡ δὲ πρύμνα ἐλύετο ὑπὸ τῆς βίας τῶν κυμάτων.

The forepart of the ship remained or stayed in the place where it had run aground.

Ac 28:16 And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard: but Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him.
Ὅτε δὲ ἤλθομεν εἰς Ῥώμην, ὁ ἑκατόνταρχος παρέδωκε τοὺς δεσμίους τῷ στρατοπεδάρχῃ· τῷ δὲ Παύλῳ ἐπετράπη μένειν καθ᾽ ἑαυτόν, σὺν τῷ φυλάσσοντι αὐτὸν στρατιώτῃ.

Paul was allowed to remain or stay by himself.

Ac 28:30 And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him,
Ἔμεινε δὲ ὁ Παῦλος διετίαν ὅλην ἐν ἰδίῳ μισθώματι, καὶ ἀπεδέχετο πάντας τοὺς εἰσπορευομένους πρὸς αὐτόν,

Paul remained or stayed at his own hired house for two years.

Ro 9:11 (For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth;)
μήπω γὰρ γεννηθέντων, μηδὲ πραξάντων τι ἀγαθὸν ἢ κακόν, ἵνα ἡ κατ᾽ ἐκλογὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ πρόθεσις μένῃ, οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων, ἀλλ᾽ ἐκ τοῦ καλοῦντος, God's elective purpose is to remain, continue, or abide unshaken.

1Co 3:14 If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward.
εἴ τινος τὸ ἔργον μένει ὃ ἐπῳκοδόμησε μισθὸν λήψεται.

The works remain, stay, or continue, that is, they pass through the fire of judgment.

1Co 7:8 I say therefore to the unmarried and widows, It is good for them if they abide even as I.
Λέγω δὲ τοῖς ἀγάμοις καὶ ταῖς χήραις, καλὸν αὐτοῖς ἐστιν ἐὰν μείνωσιν ὡς κἀγώ.

It is good for the widows and unmarried to remain or stay in their single state.

1Co 7:11 But and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away his wife.
(ἐὰν δὲ καὶ χωρισθῇ, μενέτω ἄγαμος, ἢ τῷ ἀνδρὶ καταλλαγήτω)· καὶ ἄνδρα γυναῖκα μὴ ἀφιέναι.

"Let her," says Paul, "remain or stay in an unmarried state."

1Co 7:20 Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called.
ἕκαστος ἐν τῇ κλήσει ᾗ ἐκλήθη ἐν ταύτῃ μενέτω.

Let that man continue, remain, or stay in the same state in which he was when he was designated an heir of everlasting life.

1Co 7:24 Brethren, let every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God.
ἕκαστος ἐν ᾧ ἐκλήθη, ἀδελφοί, ἐν τούτῳ μενέτω παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ.

In whatever state one finds himself, whether circumcised or not, in whatever job station, let him remain or stay in that position.

1Co 7:40 But she is happier if she so abide, after my judgment: and I think also that I have the Spirit of God.
μακαριωτέρα δέ ἐστιν ἐὰν οὕτω μείνῃ, κατὰ τὴν ἐμὴν γνώμην· δοκῶ δὲ κἀγὼ Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ ἔχειν.

The widow under consideration is happier if she remains or stays unmarried after the death of her first husband.

1Co 13:13 And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.
νυνὶ δὲ μένει πίστις, ἐλπίς, ἀγάπη, τὰ τρία ταῦτα. μείζων δὲ τούτων ἡ ἀγάπη.

These three things continue, remain, or stay—faith, hope, and charity. While it has not been specifically mentioned in the previous verses, the nature of the meno itself does not require any sort of fellowship aspect to it. If one states that abide in John 15 includes fellowship, this conclusion must be made because of the nature of being in Christ and of of true Christianity (and these things do require fellowship), not because of the anything inherent in the word meno.

1Co 15:6 After that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep.
ἔπειτα ὤφθη ἐπάνω πεντακοσίοις ἀδελφοῖς ἐφάπαξ, ἐξ ὧν οἱ πλείους μένουσιν ἕως ἄρτι, τινὲς δὲ καὶ ἐκοιμήθησαν·

The greatest part remain, abide, or continue alive to the point in time indicated.

2Co 3:11 For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious.
εἰ γὰρ τὸ καταργούμενον, διὰ δόξης, πολλῷ μᾶλλον τὸ μένον, ἐν δόξῃ.

Here the New Covenant, which remains, continues, or stays, is glorious.

2Co 3:14 But their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same vail untaken away in the reading of the old testament; which vail is done away in Christ.

ἀλλ᾽ ἐπωρώθη τὰ νοήματα αὐτῶν· ἄχρι γὰρ τῆς σήμερον τὸ αὐτὸ κάλυμμα ἐπὶ τῇ ἀναγνώσει τῆς παλαιᾶς διαθήκης μένει μὴ ἀνακαλυπτόμενον, ὅ τι ἐν Χριστῷ καταργεῖται.

The blinding still continues or abides.

2Co 9:9 (As it is written, He hath dispersed abroad; he hath given to the poor: his righteousness remaineth for ever.
καθὼς γέγραπται, Ἐσκόρπισεν, ἔδωκε τοῖς πένησιν· ἡ δικαιοσύνη αὐτοῦ μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα.

God's righteousness continues or stays.

Php 1:25 And having this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy of faith;
καθὼς γέγραπται, Ἐσκόρπισεν, ἔδωκε τοῖς πένησιν· ἡ δικαιοσύνη αὐτοῦ μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα.

In this passage, Paul's "abiding" with the Philippians was his continuing with them, "coming to" them, and "seeing" them again; it was his bodily presence with them, rather than his death. (Note, on the side, that the idea that he could intercede for them after his death as a Catholic saint allegedly could do is not found at all—were this the case then after Paul's death he could be much more useful to the Philippians than he was now, but such is not the case.) Paul abode with them so that he could disciple the Philippians, but those actions were not inherent in his abiding itself. This should be considered in analyzing John 15 and the nature of abiding in Christ.

1Ti 2:15 Notwithstanding she shall be saved in childbearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety.
σωθήσεται δὲ διὰ τῆς τεκνογονίας, ἐὰν μείνωσιν ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀγάπῃ καὶ ἁγιασμῷ μετὰ σωφροσύνης.

The children abiding in or following the right path is the sense of meno here.

2Ti 2:13 If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself.
εἰ ἀπιστοῦμεν, ἐκεῖνος πιστὸς μένει· ἀρνήσασθαι ἑαυτὸν οὐ δύναται.

The Lord continues or remains faithful to His threatenings against unbelievers, for He cannot deny His holy nature. He is certain to condemn those who do not believe.

2Ti 3:14 But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them;
σὺ δὲ μένε ἐν οἷς ἔμαθες καὶ ἐπιστώθης, εἰδὼς παρὰ τίνος ἔμαθες,

Timothy was to remain or stay faithful to what he had learned.

2Ti 4:20 Erastus abode at Corinth: but Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick.

Ἔραστος ἔμεινεν ἐν Κορίνθῳ· Τρόφιμον δὲ ἀπέλιπον ἐν Μιλήτῳ ἀσθενοῦντα.

Erastus remained or stayed in the city of Corinth, while Trophimus stayed at Miletum.

Heb 7:3 Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually.
ἀπάτωρ, ἀμήτωρ, ἀγενεαλόγητος, μήτε ἀρχὴν ἡμερῶν μήτε ζωῆς τέλος ἔχων, ἀφωμοιωμένος δὲ τῷ υἱῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ), μένει ἱερεὺς εἰς τὸ διηνεκές.

The Lord remains or continues to have the office of a priest continually.

Heb 7:24 But this man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood.
ὁ δέ, διὰ τὸ μένειν αὐτὸν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, ἀπαράβατον ἔχει τὴν ἱερωσύνην.

The Lord Jesus Christ remains forever; He will always exist.

Heb 10:34 For ye had compassion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance.
καὶ γὰρ τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου συνεπαθήσατε, καὶ τὴν ἁρπαγὴν τῶν ὑπαρχόντων ὑμῶν μετὰ χαρᾶς προσεδέξασθε, γινώσκοντες ἔχειν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς κρεῖττονα ὕπαρξιν ἐν οὐρανοῖς καὶ μένουσαν.

The heavenly substance will continue or remain forever.

Heb 12:27 And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain.
τὸ δε, Ἔτι ἅπαξ, δηλοῖ τῶν σαλευομένων τὴν μετάθεσιν, ὡς πεποιημένων, ἵνα μείνῃ τὰ μὴ σαλευόμενα.

The unshaken things may continue to be around.

Heb 13:1 Let brotherly love continue.
Ἡ φιλαδελφία μενέτω.

Let love abide or remain.

Heb 13:14 For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come.
οὐ γὰρ ἔχομεν ὧδε μένουσαν πόλιν, ἀλλὰ τὴν μέλλουσαν ἐπιζητοῦμεν.

Our city here does not remain.

1Pe 1:23 Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever.
ἀναγεγεννημένοι οὐκ ἐκ σπορᾶς φθαρτῆς, ἀλλὰ ἀφθάρτου, διὰ λόγου ζῶντος Θεοῦ καὶ μένοντος εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα.

The Word of God continues, remains, or endures forever. These are synonymns for "abide."

1Pe 1:25 But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you.
τὸ δὲ ῥῆμα Κυρίου μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα. τοῦτο δέ ἐστι τὸ ῥῆμα τὸ εὐαγγελισθὲν εἰς ὑμᾶς.

The Word remains, continues, or abides forever.

1Jo 2:6 He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked.
ὁ λέγων ἐν αὐτῷ μένειν ὀφείλει, καθὼς ἐκεῖνος περιεπάτησε, καὶ αὐτὸς οὕτω περιπατεῖν.

In the previous verse (v. 5), those en auto are those who are truly converted, those in whom the love of God is perfected (perfect tense). This would suggest that abiding in Him, v. 6, is synonymous with being en Christo, that is, with genuine conversion. Consider that this is a present tense abiding. Cf. in John 15 the contrasting aorist and present tense usage of meno.

1Jo 2:10 He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him.
ὁ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ φωτὶ μένει, καὶ σκάνδαλον ἐν αὐτῷ οὐκ ἔστιν.

Here again the contrast with v. 9, where he who hates his brother is now and always has been unconverted, indicates that abiding in the light (present tense again) is the mark of the converted individual.

1Jo 2:14 I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.
ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, πατέρες, ὅτι ἐγνώκατε τὸν ἀπ᾽ ἀρχῆς. ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, νεανίσκοι, ὅτι ἰσχυροί ἐστε, καὶ ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν μένει, καὶ νενικήκατε τὸν πονηρόν.

This verse also looks like the abiding of the Word of God in people is a characteristic of true conversion. They were clean (perfect tense) through the Word of God which Christ had spoken (John 15:3) and His Words abode (aorist) in them (John 15:7).

1Jo 2:17 And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever.
καὶ ὁ κόσμος παράγεται, καὶ ἡ ἐπιθυμία αὐτοῦ· ὁ δὲ ποιῶν τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα.

The one who does the will of God, the genuine convert, will continue to eternity in the presence of God, unlike the world and its lusts.

1Jo 2:19 They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us.
ἐξ ἡμῶν ἐξῆλθον, ἀλλ᾽ οὐκ ἦσαν ἐξ ἡμῶν· εἰ γὰρ ἦσαν ἐξ ἡμῶν, μεμενήκεισαν ἂν μεθ᾽ ἡμῶν· ἀλλ᾽ ἵνα φανερωθῶσιν ὅτι οὐκ εἰσὶν πάντες ἐξ ἡμῶν.

The pluperfect of meno here in this verse makes it clear that the elect do abide, remain, continue, or stay. They begin to do so at one point (conversion) with continuing results. The ones who do not abide are lost. This verse provides evidence that in John 15 abide is a synonym for persevere or continue. The evidence would only be undermined if one could prove from Scripture that people can genuinely abide and then cease to do so, be restored to doing so again, and cease to abide again, and continue to flip-flop back and forth, making abiding is an all-or-nothing matter rather than a matter of degree or a overall mark of believers. It is not possible to prove from the Bible that such flip-flopping takes place.

1Jo 2:24 Let that therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father.
ὑμεῖς οὖν ὃ ἠκούσατε ἀπ᾽ ἀρχῆς, ἐν ὑμῖν μενέτω. ἐὰν ἐν ὑμῖν μείνῃ ὃ ἀπ᾽ ἀρχῆς ἠκούσατε, καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐν τῷ υἱῷ καὶ ἐν τῷ πατρὶ μενεῖτε.

If the teachings given before this text remain or continue in the audience of 1 John, then they will continue or remain in the Son and in the Father, that is, they will be eternally saved, for they are en Christo. V. 24, "Let . . . abide," is a warning to avoid apostasy from the faith. Those who apostatize were never genuinely in Christ, but they had a certain sort of position in the Father and Son, it appears from the last clause here, as in John 15:2. Remaining or abiding in true faith and practice characterizes the audience; because they are those who abide, they will receive eternal life (v. 25).

1Jo 2:27 But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him.
καὶ ὑμεῖς, τὸ χρῖσμα ὃ ἐλάβετε ἀπ᾽ αὐτοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν μένει, καὶ οὐ χρείαν ἔχετε ἵνα τις διδάσκῃ ὑμᾶς· ἀλλ᾽ ὡς τὸ αὐτὸ χρῖσμα διδάσκει ὑμᾶς περὶ πάντων, καὶ ἀληθές ἐστι, καὶ οὐκ ἔστι ψεῦδος, καὶ καθὼς ἐδίδαξεν ὑμᾶς, μενεῖτε ἐν αὐτῷ.

The Spirit, who indwells the elect, remains or continues in them, and He makes it certain that the elect will remain, continue, or persevere in true doctrine and practice.

1Jo 2:28 And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

καὶ νῦν, τεκνία, μένετε ἐν αὐτῷ· ἵνα ὅταν φανερωθῇ, ἔχωμεν παρρησίαν, καὶ μὴ αἰσχυνθῶμεν ἀπ᾽ αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ αὐτοῦ.

This is a command to persevere in the faith; those who are ashamed before Him at His coming are lost people, not disobedient Christians, as v. 29 and the previous verses demonstrate.

1Jo 3:6 Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him.
πᾶς ὁ ἐν αὐτῷ μένων οὐχ ἁμαρτάνει· πᾶς ὁ ἁμαρτάνων οὐχ ἑώρακεν αὐτόν, οὐδὲ ἔγνωκεν αὐτόν.

Abiding in him is being regenerate; since in Him there is no sin, v. 5, the one who is in Him does not continue in sin (v. 6; and abide is present tense). The contrast is not with a disobedient Christian, but a lost man (v. 6bff.).

1Jo 3:9 Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.
πᾶς ὁ γεγεννημένος ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἁμαρτίαν οὐ ποιεῖ, ὅτι σπέρμα αὐτοῦ ἐν αὐτῷ μένει· καὶ οὐ δύναται ἁμαρτάνειν, ὅτι ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ γεγέννηται.

Because the Holy Spirit, given at the moment of regeneration, remains (present tense) in the elect, they are not able to continue to commit sin. Those who are born of God "cannot sin," that is, cannot continue to sin.

1Jo 3:14 We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death.
ἡμεῖς οἴδαμεν ὅτι μεταβεβήκαμεν ἐκ τοῦ θανάτου εἰς τὴν ζωήν, ὅτι ἀγαπῶμεν τοὺς ἀδελφούς. ὁ μὴ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἀδελφόν, μένει ἐν τῷ θανάτῳ.

The one who is not loving his brother is remaining, continuing, or persevering in a state of spiritual death, while the one who loves his brother abides in a state of spiritual life.

1Jo 3:15 Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.
πᾶς ὁ μισῶν τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ ἀνθρωποκτόνος ἐστί· καὶ οἴδατε ὅτι πᾶς ἀνθρωποκτόνος οὐκ ἔχει ζωὴν αἰώνιον ἐν αὐτῷ μένουσαν.

Eternal life is not staying or remaining in the murderer.

1Jo 3:17 But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?
ὃς δ᾽ ἂν ἔχῃ τὸν βίον τοῦ κόσμου, καὶ θεωρῇ τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ χρείαν ἔχοντα, καὶ κλείσῃ τὰ σπλάγχνα αὐτοῦ ἀπ᾽ αὐτοῦ, πῶς ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ μένει ἐν αὐτῷ;

The one who does not help his brother does not have love for God within him, and God does not love him with that love He has for the elect. Not having the love of God dwelling, remaining, or staying in one is being lost.

1Jo 3:24 And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.
καὶ ὁ τηρῶν τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ ἐν αὐτῷ μένει, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐν αὐτῷ. καὶ ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκομεν ὅτι μένει ἐν ἡμῖν, ἐκ τοῦ Πνεύματος οὗ ἡμῖν ἔδωκεν.

The one that keeps His commandments is a converted person. Scripture here equates "he who keeps His commandments" with "he who abides in Christ, and Christ abides in Him." Abiding is what all saved people do, then, and it is a synonym with the perseverance of the saints, with continuing, remaining, or enduring in true doctrine and practice. The evidence that He continues or remains with us is the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is not only the possession of Christians who are not backslidden. This fact indicates that the entire verse deals with a saved/lost contrast, not an obedient/disobedient Christian contrast.

1Jo 4:12 No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us.
Θεὸν οὐδεὶς πώποτε τεθέαται· ἐὰν ἀγαπῶμεν ἀλλήλους, ὁ Θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν μένει, καὶ ἡ ἀγάπη αὐτοῦ τετελειωμένη ἐστὶν ἐν ἡμῖν.

Here again, the previous and subsequent context indicates that this love, which is the certain mark of regeneration (v. 7), and so is characteristic of all believers, is the subject under consideration. All believers love, therefore, God abides or dwells in all of them, and His love has been completed or perfected in them.

1Jo 4:13 Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit.
ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκομεν ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ μένομεν καὶ αὐτός ἐν ἡμῖν, ὅτι ἐκ τοῦ Πνεύματος αὐτοῦ δέδωκεν ἡμῖν.

Here the believer's abiding in God, and God's abiding in him, is also a mark of conversion. All believers were given and continue to have (perfect tense) the Spirit, and He is the seal and testimony of that mutual indwelling or abiding. Abiding is not something that a special class of believers learn how to do, but a certain state of all of God's people.

1Jo 4:15 Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God.
ὃς ἂν ὁμολογήσῃ ὅτι Ἰησοῦς ἐστὶν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὁ Θεὸς ἐν αὐτῷ μένει, καὶ αὐτός ἐν τῷ Θεῷ.

Here again, the indwelling or abiding of God in the saint and of the saint in God is a mark of regeneration, not of subsequent progressive sanctification. The mutual association between the believer's dwelling in God and Christ and Christ's indwelling the believer is also most noteworthy; all en Christo have Christ abiding in them; if Christ dwells in us, then we abide or dwell in Christ.

1Jo 4:16 And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.
καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐγνώκαμεν καὶ πεπιστεύκαμεν τὴν ἀγάπην ἣν ἔχει ὁ Θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν. ὁ Θεὸς ἀγάπη ἐστί, καὶ ὁ μένων ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ, ἐν τῷ Θεῷ μένει, καὶ ὁ Θεὸς ἐν αὐτῷ.

Here again, it is extremely clear that genuine conversion means that one abides in God and in love, and God abides in him. Nor can the advocate of abiding in Christ as (solely) an instrumentality for progressive sanctification which some believers may never possess argue that abiding in God and in Christ are two different things, for one can easily demonstrate that if one is in the Son he is also in the Father; this is also a necessary consequence of a proper and sound Trinitarian theology. Note the perfect tense forms for "we have loved and believed."

2Jo 2 For the truth's sake, which dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever.
διὰ τὴν ἀλήθειαν τὴν μένουσαν ἐν ἡμῖν, καὶ μεθ᾽ ἡμῶν ἔσται εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα·

The truth abiding, remaining, or dwelling in the saints was not a temporary state or condition, or dependent upon the struggles in practical sanctification, but a continuing character received permanently at regeneration.

2Jo 9 Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.
πᾶς ὁ παραβαίνων καὶ μὴ μένων ἐν τῇ διδαχῇ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, Θεὸν οὐκ ἔχει· ὁ μένων ἐν τῇ διδαχῇ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, οὗτος καὶ τὸν πατέρα καὶ τὸν υἱὸν ἔχει.

Here it is obvious that the one who does not abide in correct doctrine is lost.

Re 17:10 And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space.
καὶ βασιλεῖς ἑπτά εἰσιν· οἱ πέντε ἔπεσαν, καὶ ὁ εἷς ἔστιν, ὁ ἄλλος οὔπω ἦλθε, καί, ὅταν ἔλθῃ, ὀλίγον αὐτὸν δεῖ μεῖναι.

The seventh king will stay or remain in power for a short time.

The significance of abide as a synonym of remain, continue, endure, or persevere appears clear from an examination of the texts. While continuing with a person may often be connected with fellowship, the word itself does not signify any necessary personal communion. This fact is confirmed by an examination of the lexica.

The standard classical Greek lexicon provides the following definitions for various constructions of meno:

> I. stand fast, in battle . . . of soldiers . . . 2. Stay at home, stay where one is . . . b. lodge, stay . . . c. stay away, be absent from . . . and so abs., to be a shirker, . . . 3.

stay, tarry . . . loiter, be idle . . . 4. of things, to be lasting, remain, stand . . . having no proper motion . . . b. remain in one's possession . . . 5. of condition, remain as one was, of a maiden . . . generally, stand, hold good . . . of circumstances . . . of prosperity . . . remain contented with . . . be content with . . . of wine, keep good . . . 6. abide by an opinion, conviction, etc. . . . the party which observes an engagement . . . 7. Impers. c. inf., it remains for one to do . . . II. Trans., of persons, await, expect . . . esp. await an attack without blenching . . . of a rock, bide the storm . . . reversely of things, awaits him . . . 2. c. acc. et inf., wait for, . . . [as in] wait ye for the Trojans to come nigh? . . . they waited for evening's coming on . . . why wait to go? . . . I wait, i. e., long, to hear (Liddell, H. G. & Scott, R. Greek-English Lexicon, 9th ed., New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 1996).

One notices that there is no definition for meno as "hold communion with" or the equivalent out of the many significations listed.

The complete definition in the standard New Testament lexicon reads:

μένω (Hom.+) impf. ἔμενον; fut. μενῶ; 1 aor. ἔμεινα, impv. μεῖνον (Hv 3, 1, 9); pf. ptc. pl. μεμενηκότας 2 Macc 8:1; plpf. μεμενήκειν 1J 2:19 (on the lack of augment s. B-D-F §66, 1; W-S. §12, 4; Mlt-H. 190).

1. remain, stay, intr.

a. a pers. or thing remains where he, she, or it is.

α. of a location stay, oft. in the special sense live, dwell, lodge (Horapollo 2, 49 μ. alternating w. οἰκέω) w. ἐν and the dat. (Ps.-Demosth. 43, 75 μ. ἐν τοῖς οἴκοις; Vi. Aesopi G 12 p. 259, 6 P.) ἐν οἰκίᾳ Lk 8:27; ἐν αὐτῇ τῇ οἰκίᾳ Lk 10:7; J 8:35a; ἐν τ. οἴκῳ σου Lk 19:5. ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ remain in the ship Ac 27:31. μ. ἐν τῇ Γαλιλαίᾳ J 7:9.—Ac 9:43; 20:15 v.l.; 2 Ti 4:20. κατὰ πόλιν remain in the city MPol 5:1 (Just., A I, 67, 3). W. an adv. of place ἐκεῖ Mt 10:11; Mk 6:10; Lk 9:4; J 2:12; 10:40; 11:54 (s. διατρίβω); Hs 9, 11, 7. ὧδε Mt 26:38; Mk 14:34; Hs 9, 11, 1. ποῦ μένεις; where do you live? J 1:38; cp. vs. 39 (Sb 2639 ποῦ μένι Θερμοῦθις; Pel.-Leg. 7, 27; Nicetas Eugen. 1, 230 H. ποῦ μένεις;). W. acc. of time (Demetr.: 722 fgm. 1, 11 Jac.; JosAs 20:8; Jos., Ant. 1, 299) J 1:39b; 4:40b; 11:6; Ac 21:7; D 11:5; 12:2. W. time-indications of a different kind ἕως ἂν ἐξέλθητε Mt 10:11. ὡς μῆνας τρεῖς Lk 1:56. εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα J 8:35b. ἐπὶ πλείονα χρόνον Ac 18:20. W. prep. παρά τινι μ. stay with someone (Cebes 9, 2; Jos., Ant. 20, 54) J 1:39b; 4:40a; Ac 18:3 (live with is also prob.: Lucian, Timon 10); 21:7, 8. παρ᾽ ὑμῖν μένων when I was (staying) with you J 14:25. πρός τινα with someone Ac 18:3 D; D 12:2. ἐπί τινα remain on someone J 1:32f. σύν τινι with someone (4 Macc 18:9) Lk 1:56; 24:29b. Also μ. μετά τινος (Gen 24:55) Lk 24:29a; Hs 9, 11, 1; 3; 6; 7. καθ᾽ ἑαυτόν live by oneself, in one's own quarters Ac 28:16 (of what is called in Lat. custodia libera; s. BAFCS III 276, 364f; 384f). Of a corpse μ. ἐπὶ τοῦ σταυροῦ stay (hanging) on the cross J 19:31. Of a branch: ἐν τῇ ἀμπέλῳ remain on the vine, i.e. not be cut off 15:4b. Of stones μ. ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ stay on the road Hv 3, 2, 9. Of stones that remain in the divine structure, and are not removed Hs 9, 13, 4; 9. Also in imagery τὸ κάλυμμα ἐπὶ τῇ ἀναγνώσει τῆς παλαιᾶς διαθήκης μένει the veil remains unlifted at the reading of the OT (and hinders the right understanding of it) 2 Cor 3:14. Abs. Ac 16:15.

β. in transf. sense, of someone who does not leave a certain realm or sphere: remain, continue, abide (Pla., Ep. 10, 358c μένε ἐν τοῖς ἤθεσιν, οἷσπερ καὶ νῦν μένεις; Alex. Aphr., An. II 1 p. 2, 15 μ. ἐν ταῖς ἀπορίαις=remain overcome by doubts; Jos., Ant. 4, 185; TestJos. 1:3 ἐν τ. ἀληθείᾳ; Just., D. 8, 3 ἐν . . . τῷ τῆς φιλοσωφίας τρόπῳ) ἐν ἀγνείᾳ IPol 5:2; cp. IEph 10:3. ἐν τῇ διδαχῇ τοῦ Χριστοῦ remain in the teaching of Christ 2J 9a; cp. vs. 9b (2 Macc 8:1 μ. ἐν τῷ Ἰουδαϊσμῷ). ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀγάπῃ 1 Ti 2:15. μένε ἐν οἷς ἔμαθες continue in what you have learned 2 Ti 3:14. ἐν τῷ λόγῳ τῷ ἐμῷ J 8:31. μείνατε ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ τῇ ἐμῇ continue in my love 15:9f; cp. 1J 4:16. ἐν τῷ φωτί 2:10. ἐν τῷ θανάτῳ 3:14. ἐν τῇ σκοτίᾳ J 12:46. Without ἐν AcPlCor 2:36. The phrase μ. ἔν τινι is a favorite of J to denote an inward, enduring personal communion. So of God in his relation to Christ ὁ πατὴρ ἐν ἐμοὶ μένων the Father, who abides in me J 14:10. Of Christians in their relation to Christ J 6:56; 15:4ac, 5–7; 1J 2:6, 24c. Of Christ relating to Christians J 15:4a, 5 (Goodsp., Probs. 112–15). Of Christians relating to God 1J 2:24c, 27f; 3:6, 24a; 4:13. Of God relating to Christians 1J 3:24; 4:12f, 15.—Vice versa, of someth. that remains in someone; likew. in Johannine usage: of the word of God 1J 2:14. Of the words of Christ J 15:7b; cp. 1J 2:24ab. Of the anointing fr. heaven vs. 27. Of the love of God 1J 3:17. Of the seed of God 3:9. Of truth 2J 2. The possession is shown to be permanent by the expr. ἔχειν τι μένον ἐν ἑαυτῷ have someth. continually, permanently 1J 3:15; the word of God J 5:38. Instead of μ. ἔν τινι also μ. παρά τινι remain with someone: of the Spirit of truth J 14:17. Also of the wrath of God, μένει ἐπ᾽ αὐτόν it remains upon him 3:36.—GPercorara, De verbo ‘manere’ ap. Jo.: Div. Thomas Piac. 40, ’37, 159–71.

b. a pers. or thing continues in the same state (ParJer 7:37 ἔμεινε διδάσκων; ApcSed 11:13 ἀκίνητοι μένετε; Just., D. 90, and Lucian, Laps. 16 ἐν τῇ τάξει μ.) 1 Cor 7:20, 24. μένει ἱερεὺς εἰς τὸ διηνεκές he remains a priest forever Hb 7:3. αὐτὸς μόνος μένει it remains alone J 12:24. μενέτω ἄγαμος 1 Cor 7:11. ἀσάλευτος Ac 27:41. πιστός 2 Ti 2:13. ἀόρατος Dg 6:4. (μ̣ε̣ί̣νατε νικηταί· μεί̣ν̣[α]τ̣ε Ox 1602, 30f is a misreading; difft. AcPl Ha 8, 22//BMM recto 28=HTR 31, 79 n. 2, ln. 10; s. CSchmidt mg. on AcPl Ha 8, 22 [μ]ε̣γ̣ας ἐπ̣ίκειται πιρασμός; Borger GGA 137). ἀσκανδάλιστος μείνῃ ἡ . . . ἐκκλησία AcPlCor 1:16. μ. μετά τινος remain in fellowship w. someone 1J 2:19. Of one who has divorced his wife remain by himself, remain unmarried Hm 4, 1, 6; 10; 4, 4, 2. οὐχὶ μένον σοὶ ἔμενεν; was it (the piece of ground) not yours, as long as it remained (unsold)? Ac 5:4 (cp. 1 Macc 15:7 and s. OHoltzmann, ZKG 14, 1893, 327–36).—W. adv. (Just., A I, 29, 3, D. 58, 3 βεβαίως) οὕτως μ. remain as one is (i.e., unmarried) 1 Cor 7:40. ἀγνῶς B 2:3. μ. ὡς ἐγώ remain as I am 1 Cor 7:8.

2. to continue to exist, remain, last, persist, continue to live, intr.

a. of pers. (Ps 9:8 ὁ κύριος εἰς τ. αἰῶνα μ.; 101:13; Da 6:27; Just., D. 128, 4 ἄγγελοι . . . ἀεὶ μένοντες) ὁ Χριστὸς μ. εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα Christ remains (here) forever J 12:34; cp. Hb 7:24; 1J 2:17. Of God AcPl Ha 2, 28; 9, 11. Pregnant remain (alive), be alive (Epict. 3, 24, 97; Diog. L. 7, 174; Achilles Tat. 8, 10. μένειν ἐν τῷ ζῆν Plut., Mor. 1042d; Eccl 7:15; Just., A I, 63, 17) J 21:22f; 1 Cor 15:6; Phil 1:25; Rv 17:10.

b. of things (Maximus Tyr. 4, 8b and Polyaenus 7, 34: γῆ μένει; Socrat., Ep. 31 [=33]; Hierocles 15, 454 ὁ πόνος παρῆλθεν, τὸ καλὸν μένει; Just., A I, 18, 2 αἴσθησις . . . μένει; Ath. 19, 2 μένει σύστασις) of a city ἔμεινεν ἂν μέχρι τῆς σήμερον it would have lasted until today Mt 11:23. μένουσα πόλις a permanent city Hb 13:14.—ἡ φιλαδελφία μενέτω continue 13:1 (JCambier, Salesianum 11, '49, 62–96).—J 9:41; 15:16. εἰ τὸ ἔργον μενεῖ if the work survives 1 Cor 3:14. ὕπαρξις Hb 10:34. δικαιοσύνη 2 Cor 9:9 (Ps 111:9). ἡ κατ' ἐκλογὴν πρόθεσις τοῦ θεοῦ Ro 9:11 (of God's counsel Ps 32:11). λόγος θεοῦ endure 1 Pt 1:23 (Just., D. 61, 2; cp. 1 Esdr 4:38 ἡ ἀλήθεια μένει). τ. ῥῆμα κυρίου μένει εἰς τ. αἰῶνα vs. 25 (Is 40:8). ἡ βρῶσις ἡ μένουσα εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον J 6:27. τὴν δύναμιν σου τὴν μένουσαν Rv 11:7 v.l. ζώσης φωνῆς καὶ μενούσης Papias (2:4). τὸ μένον what is permanent (Philo, Leg. All. 3, 100.—Opp. τὸ καταργούμενον) 2 Cor 3:11. μένει πίστις, ἐλπὶς, ἀγάπη 1 Cor 13:13 (WMarxsen, D. 'Bleiben' im 1 Cor 13:13, OCullmann Festschr., '72, 223–29; on the eschatology cp. En 97:6–10 and s. the lit. on ἀγάπη 1a.—For the contrast πίπτει [vs. 8]—μένει cp. Pla., Crat. 44, 440a εἰ μεταπίπτει πάντα χρήματα καὶ μηδὲν μένει). Opp. σαλευόμενα Hb 12:27.

3. wait for, await, trans.

a. of pers.: wait for someone who is arriving (Hom.; Thu. 4, 124, 4; X., An. 4, 4, 20; Pla., Leg. 8, 833c; Polyb. 4, 8, 4; Tob 2:2 BA; 2 Macc 7:30; TestJob 11:1; Jos., Ant. 13, 19) τινά w. the place indicated ἔμενον ἡμᾶς ἐν Τρῳάδι they were waiting for us in Troas Ac 20:5.

b. of things, such as dangers or misfortunes that await or threaten someone (trag.; Kaibel 654, 9 κἀμὲ μένει τὸ θανεῖν; SibOr 4, 114 v.l. σὲ) θλίψεις με μένουσιν Ac 20:23.—Of the 118 passages in which μένω occurs in the NT, 67 are found in the Johannine writings (40 in the gosp.; 24 in 1J; 3 in 2J).—JHeise, Bleiben: Menein in d. Johan. Schr., '67; FHauck, TW IV 578–93: μένω and related words.—B. 836. DELG. M-M. TW (Danker, Frederick William (ed.), A Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament and other Early Christian Literature, 3rd. ed. (BDAG), Chicago, IL: University of Chicago Press, 2000).

BDAG gives many objective definitions and analyses of the word, along with the interpretive statement that the word "is a favorite of J[ohn] to denote an inward, enduring personal communion." While meno is unquestionably associated with communion, personal relationship is not an inherent part of the word itself. For example, when the disciples abode in a house on their evangelistic journeys (Luke 9:4) or the Lord Jesus abode in Zaccheus' house (Luke 19:5), there doubtless was fellowship with the owners of the respective places of abode. Nonetheless, the word itself does not directly require the fellowship.[890] One thus notes that other lexica, such as The Greek-English Lexicon of the [890] Compare the noun μονή, found in John 14:23: "Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode [μονή] with him." It is very clear that fellowship with the Father and the Son will take place for the person who loves Them. Nevertheless, the word itself does not require this meaning, as in John 14:2 (the only other NT reference) it is the word for the "mansions" that believers will inhabit in heaven, and, while their abodes will doubtless be glorious dwellings, they will not have fellowship with their dwelling places,

New Testament Based on Semantic Domains by Johannes P. Louw & Eugene A. Nida, define meno as "to continue to exist — 'to remain, to continue, to continue to exist, to still be in existence. . . . to continue in an activity or state — 'to continue, to remain in, to keep on.' . . . to remain in the same place over a period of time — 'to remain, to stay. . . . to remain in a place and/or state, with expectancy concerning a future event — 'to await, to wait for.'" (13:89; 68:11; 85:55; 85:60). No definition of the word as fellowship or communion is listed. Thayer's Greek Lexicon[891] defines the word as "1. to remain, abide . . .1a) in reference to place . . . 1a1) to sojourn, tarry . . . 1a2) not to depart . . . 1a2a) to continue to be present . . . 1a2b) to be held, kept, continually . . . 1b) in reference to time . . . 1b1) to continue to be, not to perish, to last, endure . . . 1b1a) of persons, to survive, live . . . 1c) in reference to state or condition . . . 1c1) to remain as one, not to become another or different . . . 2) to wait for, await one." Here again, no definition of the word as a synonym for fellowship is listed.

Based on the study above, the exegesis of John 15:1-11 (cf. v. 16's use of meno) follows.

1 I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman.
Ἐγώ εἰμι ἡ ἄμπελος ἡ ἀληθινὴ, καὶ ὁ πατήρ μου ὁ γεωργός ἐστι.

The Lord here sets up the comparison He will maintain through the following pericope. As the vine is the source of life for its branches, so Christ is the exclusive source and fount of spiritual life and fruit-bearing. The Father, like a husbandman or vinedresser, ensures greater fruitfulness by removing some branches and pruning others (cf. v. 2).

2 Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.
πᾶν κλῆμα ἐν ἐμοὶ μὴ φέρον καρπόν, αἴρει αὐτό· καὶ πᾶν τὸ καρπὸν φέρον, καθαίρει αὐτό, ἵνα πλείονα καρπὸν φέρῃ.

The Lord's statement that branches "in me" can be removed is the best attempt in this text to affirm Arminianism. However, these branches are not those who have been regenerated and then fell away from that state—they are those who were never numbered among God's elect. All the elect will bring forth fruit, John 15:16, and, since they have the Holy Ghost in them, they will certainly abide, 1 John 2:27, or, employing two of the

---

although the bliss of heaven will center in communion with He who gave them their mansions. BDAG defines μονή as:

μονή, ῆς, ἡ (μένω; Eur., Hdt. et al.; ins, pap; 1 Macc 7:38; TestAbr s. below)

1. state of remaining in an area, staying, tarrying (Eur. et al.; OGI 527, 5; Philo, Mos. 1, 316) μονὴν ποιεῖσθαι live, stay (Thu. 1, 131, 1; BGU 742; Jos., Ant. 8, 350; 13, 41) J 14:23.

2. a place in which one stays, dwelling(-place), room, abode (Chariton 1, 12, 1 μονὴν ποιεῖν; Paus. 10, 31, 7; OGI 527, 5) of heavenly dwellings μοναὶ τῶν ἁγίων μου (TestAbr A 20 p. 104, 2 [Stone p. 56]) J 14:2 (OSchaefer, ZNW 32, '33, 210–17; understood in a transcendent sense: RGundry, ZNW 58, '67, 68–72). τῆς ἀμείνονος τυγχάνειν μονῆς attain a better abode ApcPt fgm. 2 p. 12, 22.—M-M. TW.

[891] Thayer's Greek Lexicon. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Books, 1981. elec. acc. Online Bible for Mac, Ken Hamel.

synonyms of abide in the New Testament, they will certainly continue or persevere in Christ and in obedience. The fact that the Lord refers to these unregenerate individuals as en emoi, "in me," does not necessitate their genuine regeneration. All the nation of Israel were the seed of Abraham, but the unbelievers were cut off from the nation (Exodus 30:33; Leviticus 19:8; 20:17), so that, while nationally "in the Lord," only the believing seed is "in the Lord" in a deeper sense (Isaiah 45:17, 24-25). One could compare the interplay in Isaiah's servant of the Lord image between national Israel, the Israel of God, and the Lord Jesus (Isaiah 41:8; 44:1, 21; 45:4; 49:3-7; 52:13-53:12) or the Lord Jesus as the elect One and Israel as elect in Him (Isaiah 42:1; 45:4; 65:9, 22). The entire nation of Israel constituted the people of God, but in a deeper sense, only the believing Israelites, only the Israel of God, constituted the genuine people of God (Romans 9:6ff.; cf. 11:20). In the same way, all those who are members of the church are, in a certain sense, associated with the people of God; but they are not all regenerate.

The church at Corinth was the body of Christ (1 Corinthians 12:27), but some members of the church were unregenerate (1 Corinthians 15:12, 34; 2 Corinthians 13:5). Since the institution of the local church is the body of Christ, unregenerate church members are part of Christ's body, and thus are, in a certain sense, in Christ. Such, however, are not truly in Him, not truly united to Him, not genuinely en Christo. Contextually in John 15, Judas has just gone into outward apostasy, having left to betray the Lord to His enemies (John 13:26-30). He had been part of the pre-Pentecost church, that first church established by the Lord when He called the first baptized disciples to be with Him (John 1:35ff.); indeed, Judas had been an apostle in the Lord's church (Mark 3:13-19), although he was never chosen to everlasting life (John 6:64, 70-71; 12:4-6; 13:2).

The unregenerate "branch" in the Lord cannot bear (pheron, present tense) fruit because it has never had a living connection to Christ (John 15:5). It had an outward, non-living, fruitless connection (and thus the utter pagan is not in view, but the false professor, the unconverted church member), but not a living, genuine connection. Union with Christ always results in a change of life, in sanctification and holiness.[892] Therefore the branch without this living union is "taken away," that is, it is eventually cut off from even its outward connection to the church and people of God, as Judas was, and is cast into hell. The reference is not to a true believer receiving some kind of judgment; while the verb "take away" is regularly connected to the judgment of unbelievers in Scripture (Matthew 13:12; 21:43; 22:13; 24:39; 25:28-29; Mark 4:15, 25; Luke 8:12, 18; 11:52; 19:24, 26), believers are never said to be "taken away" by God in any of the 102 verses 892 "Sanctification, then, is the invariable result of that vital union with Christ which true faith gives to a Christian. 'He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit' (John 15:5). The branch which bears no fruit is no living branch of the vine. The union with Christ which produces no effect on heart and life is a mere formal union, which is worthless before God. The faith which has not a sanctifying influence on the character is no better than the faith of devils. It is a "dead faith, because it is alone." It is not the gift of God. It is not the faith of God's elect. In short, where there is no sanctification of life, there is no real faith in Christ. True faith worketh by love. It constrains a man to live unto the Lord from a deep sense of gratitude for redemption. It makes him feel that he can never do too much for Him that died for him. Being much forgiven, he loves much. He whom the blood cleanses, walks in the light. He who has real lively hope in Christ, purifieth himself even as He is pure (James 2:17-20; Titus 1:1; Galatians 5:6; 1 John 1:7; 3:3)" (pg. 15, Holiness: Its Nature, Hinderances, Difficulties, and Roots, J. C. Ryle, part 1. Pensacola, FL: Chapel Library, 2001 (repr. of London, 1879 ed.)).

---

where the verb is found in the New Testament (contrast John 16:22). Those "taken away" are the lost. In contrast, the Father, the husbandman (v. 1, cf. 1 Corinthians 3:9; Isaiah 5:1-2; 27:2-3) works with the branch that is vitally connected to the vine, and by "pruning" him brings about the result of even greater fruit-bearing. The fruit-bearing for the one with genuine spiritual life is certain, as is the fact that the unconverted will not bear fruit and will be cut off. We can see in this verse the perseverance of the saints, by divine grace, and the inability of the unregenerate to persevere (1 John 2:19). Verse two contrasts the false believer, represented by Judas, and the true believer, represented by the other eleven apostles, in the church.

One can note as well that it is taking the metaphor beyond what can be justified when an Arminian affirms that the branch that is cast off, representing the person who goes to hell, shows that truly justified people can fall from a state of justification, for the branch that bears fruit—the truly regenerate person, is also "purged" or pruned—which involves cutting off leaves and branches! If the lost man fell away from salvation because he was cut off from the vine, would not the fruit-bearing person be lost as well, because he also is purged or pruned?

3 Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.
ἤδη ὑμεῖς καθαροί ἐστε διὰ τὸν λόγον ὃν λελάληκα ὑμῖν.

The Lord had stated in John 13:10 that His apostles were clean, but not all; but now Judas having been separated from the church, all to whom the Lord spoke were now clean. They were all washed (John 13:10, perfect tense) through the agency of the word spoken (here in v. 3, likewise perfect tense), so that they were justified by Christ's righteousness at the point of their faith in His promise, with continuing results in their eternal security. Consequently all that now remained was the work of progressive sanctification, of having their feet washed, 13:10, since they were clean every whit. Clean here and purge in v. 2 are the noun and verb forms, respectively, of katharos. There is a wordplay between the purging/cleansing of v. 2 and the cleansing of v. 3. This demonstrates that the instrumentality of the bearing of more fruit, as mentioned in v. 2, is the Word of God, v. 3, cf. John 17:17. The Word is the "pruning knife" (v. 2) which the Father employs to strengthen the believer to bear more fruit. Saints bear fruit as a result of their living, vital union to the Lord Jesus Christ, through the instrument of the Scriptures, the recorded, perfectly inspired and preserved record of Christ's Words. God the Father continues sanctifying (v. 2, purgeth) the one who has become clean (v. 3) through justification.

4 Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me.
μείνατε ἐν ἐμοί, κἀγὼ ἐν ὑμῖν. καθὼς τὸ κλῆμα οὐ δύναται καρπὸν φέρειν ἀφ᾽ ἑαυτοῦ, ἐὰν μὴ μείνῃ ἐν τῇ ἀμπέλῳ, οὕτως οὐδὲ ὑμεῖς, ἐὰν μὴ ἐν ἐμοὶ μείνητε.

The aorist imperative "abide" here indicates the characteristic of the whole life of the saint, not a momentary action, or repeated points of faith-decisions to surrender to Christ; cf. the aorists of meno in Matthew 10:11; 26:38; John 1:32. Commenting on the like form in v. 9, A. T. Robertson in his Word Pictures stated that meinate is a "Constative first aorist active imperative of meno, summing up the whole." A similar aorist for keeping Christ's commandments appears in John 14:15. Remaining, continuing, persevering, or abiding as a characteristic of the whole life is the mark of the genuine convert, John 8:31. He will abide because Christ and the Spirit dwell or abide in him, and thus make certain his continued perseverance or abiding, 1 John 2:24, 27. "Abide in me" means to continue in Christ's word and commandments, John 15:7 and 10, to remain united to Him. The true convert, because he is in Christ and Christ is in him, will persevere in unity with the Lord, and one would expect him to remain in unity with His church, which is His body, as well. There is also a connection between the second half of the command, "and I in you," v. 4, and Christ's words abiding in believers, v. 7. One notes that the imperative in v. 4 covers both halves of the abiding; saints are responsible for both the "abide in Me" and for the "and I in you." Advocates of the position that only Christians that have received the "higher life" abide typically do not say that Christ only indwells those on the higher plane—but here those that abide in Christ are those who Christ abides in Himself. It is noteworthy that the commands here are all plural, addressed to the corporate pre-Pentecost church. Is there not a corporate, assembly requirement here for the church to be abiding in Christ, and Christ in the assembly, and His Words in her, as well as an individual application to do the same? In any case, the individual aspect is certainly found in Scripture, 1 John 3:24—the individual who abides or dwells in Christ individually keeps His commandments by the power of the indwelling Spirit.

No spiritual fruit, no good works, are possible without a living union to Christ, without abiding or dwelling in Him, a state brought about by regeneration (cf. also Hosea 14:8; Galatians 2:20; Philippians 1:11). On its own, "the branch cannot bear fruit of itself," for the unregenerate man cannot in any way please God (Romans 8:7-8). However, saints can and do bear fruit, for they do abide or dwell in Christ.

That Christ commands His saints to abide or remain in Him does not require the possibility that they will fail to do so; rather, as has been demonstrated above, their continuing to abide is guaranteed by the Spirit's dwelling or abiding in them (1 John 2:24, 27). Only those who overcome will enter into life (Revelation 2:7, 10, 17, 26; 3:21), but all believers will overcome (1 John 5:5; 4:4). Their continuing to abide in Christ is as certain as Christ's continuing to abide or dwell in them.

Note that Christ was in them; contrast Judas, who had Satan in him (6:70; 13:27), and consequently went into open apostasy. Christ is in His saints, and there He controls them and leads them to do righteousness and continue faithful to His Words, so they will not go into apostasy, but will abide in Him. The Lord Jesus does this in part through His sending of the Spirit, the Paraclete, who is such a prominent part of the discourse of John 14-16 which surrounds the teaching of John 15:1ff. The Lord also guarantees the saints' perseverance through His high priestly ministry (John 17, the postcontext of John 15). Christ's High Priestly intercession guarantees believers both God's preservation of their souls unto eternal life (John 17:24) and their perseverance in obedience (John 17:17).

5 I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing.
ἐγώ εἰμι ἡ ἄμπελος, ὑμεῖς τὰ κλήματα. ὁ μένων ἐν ἐμοί, κἀγὼ ἐν αὐτῷ, οὗτος φέρει καρπὸν πολύν· ὅτι χωρὶς ἐμοῦ οὐ δύνασθε ποιεῖν οὐδέν.

The believer, who will abide (present tense) or remain faithful to Christ's Word and commandments as a pattern of his life, will bring forth much fruit; good works are the certain consequence of spiritual union with Christ (John 3:19-21; 8:31; 10:27; 12:24-26; Mark 8:34-36; Matthew 13:23; Romans 6:22; Galatians 5:18-24; Ephesians 2:10; Colossians 1:6). In contrast, the unregenerate man cannot bear any spiritual fruit or do any good works. The "much fruit" phrase is found here in v. 5 and in v. 8, as "more fruit" appears in v. 2 (and "fruit" with "more fruit" certainly looks like "much fruit"). The only previous appearance of the phrase in the New Testament is in John 12:24,[893] where "much fruit" is a result of Christ's death. Living union with the Christ who died and rose again, a position in the vine, results in the bearing of much fruit. Those who are united to Him bear much fruit and are disciples, saved people, John 15:8.

6 If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned.
ἐὰν μή τις μείνῃ ἐν ἐμοί, ἐβλήθη ἔξω ὡς τὸ κλῆμα, καὶ ἐξηράνθη, καὶ συνάγουσιν αὐτὰ καὶ εἰς πῦρ βάλλουσι, καὶ καίεται.

The one who does not, as a summary of his life, abide (aorist tense), or continue faithful to Christ, is cast into hell fire, where he will be continually burned (present tense) for all eternity. The branch without genuine connection to the Lord pictures an unregenerate person with only an outward profession of Christianity. John 15:6 does not picture a loss of reward for a disobedient believer. Other than John 15:6, the verbs "cast forth" (ballo)

---

893 It should be noted that in John 12:24 the "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die" clause clearly refers to conversion, as is evident from v. 25 and parallel passages. The text is not about post-conversion growth in sanctification or power for Christian ministry by the believer's greater surrender to Christ as taught by Keswick leaders such as Watchman Nee (see The Release of the Spirit; cf. pg. 83, The Latent Power of the Soul, Nee; pg. 183, Against the Tide, Angus Kinnear. Fort Washington, PA: Christian Literature Crusade, 1973; for other Keswick leaders, see pgs. 274-280, Keswick's Authentic Voice, ed. Stevenson; pg. 201, The Keswick Convention: Its Message, its Method, and its Men, ed. Harford). The Keswick misinterpretation of John 12:24 follows the view of Hannah W. Smith, who ties John 12:24 into Romanist mysticism, deification, and a rejection of the total depravity of man:

> I see your difficulty in regard to that pessimistic view of human nature, and I don't agree with it anymore than you do. That was the old-fashioned theology[.] . . . [What] attracted me . . . was the profound philosophy . . . concerning the death of the selfish life in us. . . . [W]e are created human beings but are called to become divine beings. It is a question of moving out of a lower form of being into a higher. It is as if the choice were deliberately put before a monkey whether he would like to become a man. He is good enough as a monkey perhaps, but if he is to develop into a man he must consent to let the monkey nature die and must receive the man nature in its place. He must lose his own lower life in order to find his own higher life. . . . . We are good enough perhaps as human beings . . . but we want to be more than human, we want to become "partakers of the Divine nature," and the only way out of one life into another must be by the way of death and resurrection. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone." . . . Fenelon's whole teaching is to show us how to let the lower life die, and the higher life take its place. Doesn't this give you the clue? And doesn't it also answer your question as to what the "Higher Life" so called is? It is the divine life lived out practically, to put it in short. I'll send you my "Christian's Secret," which . . . contains my "views" on the subject. (Letter to Mary, October 9, 1881, reproduced in the entry for October 30 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter)

Certainly believers should surrender in ever fuller ways to God, but John 12:24 does not deal with this truth, but refers to the moment of repentant faith and conversion. The Keswick Higher Life theology of Hannah W. Smith and those who followed her is entirely absent from the passage. Hannah Smith's rejection of total depravity and acceptance of Roman Catholic mystical quietism and deification are in the sharpest conflict with the entire Bible.

and "burned" (kaio) are found together only in Revelation 8:8 and 19:20. Neither reference speaks of believers being cast forth or burned. Revelation 19:20 (cf. 20:11-15; 21:8, "the lake which burneth (kaio) with fire and brimstone"), however, demonstrates that the lost will be "cast (ballo) . . . into a lake of fire burning (kaio) with brimstone." Furthermore, out of 125 instances of the verb "cast forth" (ballo) in the New Testament, believers are never once said to be cast forth by God, but the lost are, over and over again, said to be cast (ballo) into the fires of hell (note Matthew 3:10; 5:13, 25, 29-30; 7:19; 13:42, 48; 18:8-9; Mark 9:42 (cf. vv. 41-48), 45, 47; Luke 3:9; 12:58; 14:35; Revelation 2:22; 12:4, 9, 13; 14:19; 18:21; 19:20; 20:3, 10, 14-15). Thus, the verse indicates that a lack of fruit is evidence of a non-living connection to the vine. The present tense of ballo, in "cast" them into the fire, refers vividly (cf. the present tenses in Matthew 3:10; 7:19; Luke 3:9; Revelation 2:22) to the unconverted being cast into eternal torment. The judgment of the lost in hellfire is associated with a similar plant and fruit-bearing image in John 15 as in Matthew 3:10; 7:19; Luke 3:9. These unregenerate, apostate, "withered" and fruitless branches (cf. Jude 12; Job 8:11-13; James 1:11), of which Judas is the contextual example, are often "cast forth" (also ballo, here aorist, as in Mark 9:45, 47; Revelation 20:15) in a certain sense in this life, through outward apostasy from the church, to which they had been outwardly united (cf. Matthew 13:47), whether voluntarily or through church discipline, but their ultimate rejection and separation from the elect will take place at the day of judgment. At that time the wheat and chaff, the branches truly united to Christ and those only professedly so, will be "gathered" (sunago, cf. Matthew 3:12; 13:30; 25:32; Luke 3:17) to their respective destinies of eternal joy or torment. The branches without union to Christ will glorify God's justice in their miserable damnation; they will not glorify God here by good works, but they will glorify His justice by their being burned eternally (Ezekiel 15:2-5; Romans 9:22).

Christ in this verse says "if a man" abide not, rather than "if ye abide not," for, Judas having been separated from them, the remaining disciples were all genuine believers.

7 If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.
ἀν μείνητε ἐν ἐμοί, καὶ τὰ ῥήματά μου ἐν ὑμῖν μείνῃ, ὃ ἐὰν θέλητε αἰτήσασθε, καὶ γενήσεται ὑμῖν.

This verse helps provide an understanding of the character of abiding in Christ; it is related to Christ's words abiding in one. Christ's own receive His words (John 17:8). Here again the aorist verb tenses represent the characteristic of a whole life. The promise, "ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done," shows that the Lord will answer the prayers of His children, as their prayers are directed by His Word. Consider as well that while all believers have Christ's words abiding in them, there can be different degrees of this abiding. All believers have received the Word, as Christ prayed for them (John 17:8), but they continue in it to different degrees, resulting in different degrees of fruitfulness.

8 Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples.
ἐν τούτῳ ἐδοξάσθη ὁ πατήρ μου, ἵνα καρπὸν πολὺν φέρητε· καὶ γενήσεσθε ἐμοὶ μαθηταί.

They already were His disciples, having become such at the moment of their conversion, but their bearing much fruit would evidence this. Fruit bearing is not an uncertain event; by bearing fruit, they "shall" certainly be His disciples in the future, as they certainly were at that time. The Father is certain to receive such glory from them, because the ones He has chosen unto life He has also chosen unto fruitfulness, v. 16. All believers bring forth fruit, and "every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire" (Matthew 3:10). This is the consistent teaching of the entire Bible (Matthew 3:8, 10; 7:16-20; 12:33; 13:8, 26, 21:19, 34, 41, 43; Mark 4:7-8, 29; 11:14; 12:2; Luke 3:8-9; 6:43-44; 8:8; 13:6-7, 9; 20:10; John 4:36; 12:24; 15:2, 4-5, 8, 16; Romans 6:21-22; Galatians 5:22 (contrast 5:19-21); Ephesians 5:9; Philippians 1:11; Hebrews 12:11; 13:15; James 3:17-18). For this purpose of fruit-bearing the Father prunes His saints, v. 2. Since they were good trees, with living connection to Christ, they would bear good fruit as evidence thereof (Luke 6:43-45). Those who are "disciples indeed" will abide, persevere, or continue in His Word, John 8:31.

9 As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love.
καθὼς ἠγάπησέ με ὁ πατήρ, κἀγὼ ἠγάπησα ὑμᾶς· μείνατε ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ τῇ ἐμῇ.

They were to abide or continue faithful, continue to love Christ, for "if any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maranatha" (1 Corinthians 16:22). That the aorist of meno in this pericope represents a characteristic of what is true in general and at all times, rather than the simple action of a particular point in time, is evidenced in this verse. The Father's love for His Son is certainly something true always, not something restricted to a particular moment, but it receives an aorist in this verse, as does Christ's love for His elect, which is likewise unrestricted temporally; so we would expect the same sort of aorist for "continue/abide" here in relation to the action of the disciples.

10 If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love.
ἐὰν τὰς ἐντολάς μου τηρήσητε, μενεῖτε ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ μου· καθὼς ἐγὼ τὰς ἐντολὰς τοῦ πατρός μου τετήρηκα, καὶ μενω αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ.

Genuine converts will keep Christ's commandments, and thus evidence their continuing love for Christ, just as He continues to love them, John 14:21, 23. Christ's obedience manifested His love for the Father (cf. 14:31) and His Father's love for Him as the sinless Messiah and Mediator, and His eternal Son. The Savior showed He loved the Father by persevering or abiding obedience; so do the saints show their love. Saints abide in Christ (v. 4), in His love (v. 9), and keep His commandments (v. 10). Although these propositions are not strict equivalents, as the tense differentiations in vv. 9-10 between the keeping of the commandments and abiding in Christ's love, and the differentiation between the tenses for Christ's abiding in the Father's love and keeping His commandments demonstrate, they all go together. They are a package deal (cf. 1 John 3:24).

11 These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.
ταῦτα λελάληκα ὑμῖν, ἵνα ἡ χαρὰ ἡ ἐμὴ ἐν ὑμῖν μείνῃ, καὶ ἡ χαρὰ ὑμῶν πληρωθῇ.

This symbol of the vine was revealed by the Lord so that His joy might remain, continue, or abide in His saints, and they might have full joy. Both things are certain for the saint as a characteristic of life, for the aorist verbs are of the same sort as those earlier in the passage (cf. John 17:13; 16:24). Their abiding obedience and fellowship with their Lord would take place through the Comforter Christ would send upon leaving them, and as the Spirit would abide in them, He would bring them joy (Acts 13:52; Galatians 5:22).

All believers abide in Christ; they persevere in characteristic obedience to Him and fellowship with Him through His Word (John 17:17; Ephesians 5:26; 1 Peter 2:2). The glorious promise to saints, "ye shall abide in Him" (1 John 2:27), should motivate them to ever closer communion with their Lord. Being confident that He which began that good work of sanctification in them will continue it until they reach glory (Philippians 1:6), and that God will sanctify them, spirit, soul, and body (1 Thessalonians 5:23-24) and preserve them to the end (Jude 1; 1 Thessalonians 5:23; 2 Timothy 4:18), they can boldly plead the promises of God concerning their perseverance and sanctification with the Lord who has covenanted to perform those great works in them. Sanctification is their new covenant heritage and certainty (Hebrews 8:10-12)—the certainty of ultimate and absolute victory over sin in glory, and the certainty of God's working in them now both to will and do of His good pleasure (Philippians 2:13; Ephesians 2:10), provides them with a tremendous encouragement to strive for ever greater conformity to and communion with God (Philippians 2:12) and practical holiness of life.

J. Excursus IX: Regeneration and Sanctification Are Connected with the Renewal of the Whole Person, Body, Soul, and Spirit—Not With the Spirit Alone

Some have taught that in regeneration, the old human spirit is replaced with a new sinless human spirit, the old physical human body is entirely unchanged by regeneration, and progressive sanctification affects only the human soul, which is between the perfectly sinless human spirit and the perfectly sinful human body. This view typically reduces the terms "old man" and "new man" to "old human spirit" and "new human spirit."[894] The [894] For instance, charismatic Word-Faith leader Kenneth Copeland wrote: "When the man is born again, his spirit became a new creature in Christ Jesus, but his mind and body were unchanged" (pg. 3, Force of Faith, Kenneth Copeland. Fort Worth, TX: Kenneth Copeland Publications, 1992). Jessie Penn-Lewis, following Andrew Murray, taught this position in her book Soul & Spirit. John A. MacMillan wrote: "The new birth brings the life of God into [the] human spirit . . . [i]t is in the renewed spirit that the Holy Spirit dwells . . . the blessed Spirit of God dwells in the . . . surrendered believer, not as another Person but as part of the very nature of the saint . . . 1 Cor. 6:17[.]" (pgs. 6-7, The Adult Full Gospel Sunday School Quarterly, January 8, 1950). Watchman Nee "frequently shared that . . . the outer man must idea that the entire person is not changed by regeneration and sanctification, but the human spirit alone is affected, cannot at all be maintained by Scripture. First, there is no Biblical support whatever for the idea that the "man," whether old or new, is only the "spirit." The terms old and new "man," just like other uses of the term "man," refer to the entire person, body, soul, and spirit. Second, no verse whatever states that the Christian's spirit is totally sinless, the Christian's body is totally sinful, and the Christian's soul is what changes. Third, Scripture teaches that progressive sanctification pertains to the believer's spirit, soul, and body.[895] Sanctification affects the spirit, for the

---

be broken that the inner man (the human spirit with the Holy Spirit) might be released" (pg. 117, Watchman Nee: A Seer of the Divine Revelation in the Present Age, by Witness Lee. Anaheim, CA: Living Stream, 1997). "In regeneration we get a new spirit," Nee taught, rather than being made new in every part (pg. 43, The Latent Power of the Soul, Nee), and this new spirit is not able to sin (pg. 45, ibid). Some advocates of this position may enlarge the "old man" to include more than just the spirit. Nee also taught that "the new man . . . is the church" (pg. 162, ibid.). The position that only the spirit is regenerated passed into the Keswick theology, and from Keswick into the Word-Faith movement, from the doctrine of Deification affirmed as a corollary of the Quaker Divine Seed concept by Lord Mount Temple, founder of the Broadlands Conferences, and Hannah W. Smith. Mr. Mount-Temple prayed: "My Lord Jesus, as Thou didst take my humanity, I pray Thee impart to me Thy Divinity," and he stated that, as with the confession of Christ as one Person with a true Divine and a true human nature at Chalcedon: "I have to record my thanks . . . for deep Churchism at our Conferences . . . [and] for the knowledge that we are all two in one—two natures in one person . . . the Divine and the human" (pg. 183, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890). Hannah W. Smith in particular and Broadlands in general connected the sinless spirit, the idea that "[w]ithin us is an intense life which nothing can touch . . . [o]ur law of life within," with "the germ of the Christ-life . . . the Divine seed in every one" (pgs. 178-181, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910). At Broadlands, the idea that only "the human spirit," not the entire human person, was the "templ[e]" of God in which He dwelt, was associated with "Druidic philosophy" (pgs. 88-89, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910).

[895] "Sanctification . . . [is] real . . . not merely . . . imputed, as is righteousness. Holiness is not merely "accounted to men," so that they are treated as though holy, but they are made holy. Holiness becomes the characteristic of their natures. It is habitually exercised in their lives. It will eventually be possessed in perfection. It is real and in no sense only virtual. . . . It is of the whole nature. The renewed nature, given in regeneration, shows that sanctification includes the whole spiritual part of man. It is not to be confined to mere outward actions. God's spiritual nature demands not only spiritual worship, but holy spiritual emotions and affections; and these belong to the heart. Hence the need of inward conformity to his will and commands is so especially set forth in the New Testament, as to mark its teachings as essentially spiritual. We are also plainly taught that between the outward fruit, and the inward condition, is such a connection that the latter is the actual producing power of the former, and is manifested by it. Matthew 12:33-35; Luke 6:43-45.

But sanctification is to be extended to the body likewise. Its appetites and passions are to be controlled, wicked actions are to cease, and unholy habits to be put away, the members of the body are to be mortified, all filthiness of the flesh to be cleansed, good works are to be exhibited to mankind, and such high moral duties to be performed as are imposed upon Christians as obligatory towards each other and the world.

The Scriptures exhort to sanctification of the whole nature, both body and soul. See 2 Corinthians 7: 1; Ephesians 4:17-24; Colossians 3:5-10; 1 Thessalonians 5:23. That of the body alone is urged. [Likewise the] apostle tells the Ephesians about his prayers for their spiritual sanctification. Ephesians 1:17-19." (pgs. 3-4, Chapter 37, "Sanctification," Abstract of Systematic Theology, James Petigru Boyce. Elec. acc. in Christian Library Series, vol. 17: Systematic Theologies, AGES Library, Rio, WI: 2006)

Christian must be "renewed in the spirit" (Ephesians 4:22) and can properly sing David's psalm (cf. Ephesians 5:19), "renew a right spirit within me" (Psalm 51:10). Sanctification affects the body (cf. Psalm 63:1), for the body of the believer is the temple of the Spirit (1 Corinthians 6:19), so were the body absolutely and unchangeably sinful in this life, the Holy Spirit would have chosen as His temple a house that is absolutely and unchangeably sinful. The believer's body is to be "a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God" (Romans 12:1)—such a command is impossible if the body is unchangeably sinful. Paul tells the Thessalonian Christians that the "will of God, even your sanctification," is "that ye should abstain from fornication: that every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour; not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles which know not God" (1 Thessalonians 4:3-5), so sanctification is here defined as having a holy body, one that does not commit fornication but is holy and pure. Scripture refers to the believer seeking to be "holy both in body and in spirit" (1 Corinthians 7:34), which would be senseless if the Christian's spirit is already sinless and the Christian's body is entirely sinful and unchangeable. Similarly, Scripture commands believers to "cleanse [themselves] from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God," (2 Corinthians 7:1), indicating that progressive sanctification, the perfecting of holiness and cleansing of the saint, pertains to both the body and spirit. The progressive renewal that begins with regeneration pertains to both the body and the spirit.[896] Fourth, Paul's prayer that God would "sanctify" the Thessalonian church members "wholly," that their "whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless" (1 Thessalonians 5:23), makes no sense unless progressive sanctification renews the whole person.[897] Fifth, Scripture regularly relates sanctification

---

[896] "Present sanctification affects the body, as it serves at the behest of one's dominant motives. The body's members decrease as servants of sin and increase as servants of righteousness as the mind is continually renewed by the Holy Spirit (Rom 12:2). This is the theological basis of the Pauline injunction, "Let us cleanse ourselves from all defilement of the flesh and spirit" (2 Cor 7:1). The futility of the mind and its darkened understanding in its unsaved state led to "sensuality for the practice of every kind of impurity with greediness" (Eph 4:17–19). A depraved mind led the wicked to do those things which are not proper (Rom 1:28). Sanctification addresses both mind and body," although "the immaterial aspect of the Christian is the primary focus of present sanctification . . . because the immaterial aspect is the seat of the human personality." Furthermore, "[t]he promise of a transformed body [in ultimate or future sanctification] has as its underpinning the fact that just as we have borne the image of Adam in our unsaved state, we most assuredly will ultimately bear the image of Christ, the second man and last Adam—the Lord from heaven, in the resurrection (1 Cor 15:45, 47)" (pgs. 144, 149, A Systematic Theology of Biblical Christianity, Vol. 3: The Doctrines of Salvation, the Church, and Last Things, McCune).

[897] "There was probably a threefold reference in the apostle's request [in 1 Thessalonians 5:23]. First, he prayed that all the members of the Thessalonian church, the entire assembly, might be sanctified [which, one notes, presumes a regenerate church membership]. Second, he prayed that each individual member might be sanctified entirely in his whole man, spirit and soul and body. Third, he prayed that each and all of them might be sanctified more perfectly, moved to press forward unto complete holiness. 1 Thessalonians to the entire human person, body, soul, and spirit. The entire "new man" is being progressively[898] "renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him" (Colossians 3:10). Sanctification does not pertain to one part of man only, but to the entire person (John 17:17; Acts 20:32; 1 Corinthians 1:2; 6:11; 1 Thessalonians 5:23; Hebrews 2:11). Finally, while Scripture alone, not history, is authoritative, advocates of a sinless spirit are in the company of "the Gnostics . . . [who] held . . . that the πνεῦμα in man was part of the divine essence, and incapable of sin,"[899] and according to the "Manichaean[s] . . . the spirit . . . is that essential core of man which is already redeemed, which no longer needs redemption."[900]

5:23 is almost parallel with Hebrews 13:20, 21. The apostle prayed that all the parts and faculties of the Christian might be kept under the influence of efficacious grace, in true and real conformity to God; so influenced by the Truth as to be fitted and furnished, in all cases and circumstances, for the performance of every good work. Though this be our bounden duty, yet it lies not absolutely in our own power, but is the work of God in and through us; and thus is to form the subject of earnest and constant prayer.

Two things are clearly implied in the above passage. First, that the whole nature of the Christian is the subject of the work of sanctification, and not merely part of it: every disposition and power of the spirit, every faculty of the soul, the body with all its members. The body too is "sanctified." It has been made a member of Christ (1 Corinthians 6:15), it is the temple of the Holy Spirit (1 Corinthians 6:19). As it is an integral part of the believer's person, and as its inclinations and appetites affect the soul and influence conduct, it must be brought under the control of the spirit and soul, so that "every one of us should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honor" (1 Thessalonians 4:4), and "as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity, even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness" (Romans 6:19). Second, that this work of Divine grace will be carried on to completion and perfection, for the apostle immediately adds, 'Faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it' (1 Thessalonians 5:24). Thus the two verses are parallel with 'Being confident of this very thing, that He which hath begun a good work in you will finish it until the day of Jesus Christ' (Philippians 1:6). Nothing short of every faculty and member of the Christian being devoted to God is what he is to ever aim at. But the attainment of this is only completely realized at his glorification: 'We know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him" (1 John 3:2)—not only inwardly but outwardly: 'Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body' (Philippians 3:21)." Pgs. 70-71, Doctrine of Sanctification, chap. 9, Arthur Pink.

898 Note that the present participle renewed, ἀνακαινούμενον, specifies a continuing action.

899 pg. 51, Systematic Theology: Anthropology, Charles Hodge. Vol. 2; sec. 2:2. Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 2003 (repr. ed.). It is also interesting that through the "Gnostics . . . the word ψυχικός, originally the opposite of πνευματικός, came to denote a new category midway between the πνευματικός and the σαρκικός" (γινώσκω, γνῶσις, etc. Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, trans. & ed. F. Bromiley).

The Word of Faith heresy also advocates an extreme trichotomy in which "man's 'true inner self' [is] fundamentally divine, residing exclusively in his spirit, in radical contradistinction to his body and soul, transmuted by demonic powers . . . [which is] characteristic of gnostic mythology. . . . Man is not a spirit being who possesses a soul and just happens to live in a body, as the [Word of] Faith teachers claim; rather, man is an integrated being of spirit, soul, and body" (Pg. 121, A Different Gospel, McConnell). And certainly it is horrible blasphemy to say: "God is spirit, soul, and body. You are spirit, soul, and body" (pg. 136, God's Laws of Success, Robert Tilton).

900 Pg. 176, Christ in Christian Tradition, Reception and Contradiction: The development of the discussion about Chalcedon from 451 to the beginning of the reign of Justinian, vol. 2:1, Aloys Grillmeier, trans. Pauline Allen and John Cawte. Atlanta, GA: John Knox Press, 1987.

The affirmation in 1 Corinthians 6:17 that "he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit" would only prove that the believer literally has the sinless spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ if in the previous verse "he which is joined to an harlot is one body" means that, when one commits fornication with a prostitute, one's body disappears and is replaced with the harlot's body. Furthermore, if the phraseology of 1 Corinthians 6:17 proves that the believer literally has Christ's sinless spirit instead of his own personal human spirit, then it would seem that all the members of the church at Philippi would have had only one human spirit to share among them all, and only one human soul, since Paul stated that they "stand fast in one spirit, with one mind [pseuche, soul] striving together for the faith of the gospel" (Philippians 1:27). The believers at Jerusalem would likewise have had only one soul among them all, and only one heart, for "the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul" (Acts 4:32). For that matter, everyone in the tribe of Judah would have had only one physical heart, since "in Judah the hand of God was to give them one heart" (2 Chronicles 30:12). Similarly, the believers at Rome were to have among them all only "one mind and one mouth" (Romans 15:6). How they all were able to eat if they only had one mouth to share among them is hard to understand.

The fact is that the old man refers to the entirety of the unregenerate individual, and the new man refers to the entirety of the regenerate individual. The believer is changed in his entire being, body, soul, and spirit. Furthermore, while he unquestionably has a glorious spiritual union with Jesus Christ, his body, soul, and spirit are all still his own, and he does not have a sinlessly perfect portion of his being until glorification.

Excursus X: An Excerpt from "A Warning Exhortation Against Pietists, Quietists, and all Who in a Similar Manner have Deviated to a Natural and Spiritless Religion under the Guise of Spirituality," by Wilhelmus à Brakel[901]

[901] The text comes from pgs. 639-699 of "A Warning Exhortation Against Pietsts, Quietists, and all Who in a Similar Manner have Deviated to a Natural and Spiritless Religion under the Guise of Spirituality," chapter 43 in vol. 2 of The Christian's Reasonable Service, Wilhelmus à Brakel, trans. Bartel Elshout. Grand Rapids, MI: Reformation Heritage Books, 1993. While Brakel originally wrote his work in 1700 to combat the Satanic pseudo-spirituality and mysticism of his day, the Roman Catholic and Quaker mysticism he spoke against left such a stamp upon later pseudo-spirituality that will be discussed in the following excurses that his penetrating insight is amazing and extremely timely. Nevertheless, the fine discernment expresssed by Brakel in this excerpt does not constitute an endorsement of whatever runs contrary to Scripture and Biblical, historic Baptist doctrine and practice in the Dutch Nadere Reformatie or Dutch Puritan movement.

Further, concerning Brakel's assault upon "pietism," Arie de Reuver notes:

> Brakel . . . as a writer may without any hesitation be regarded as a representative of pietism when he is measured by contemporary standards. The content that the term "pietism" had for him was different from what it carries today. . . . By "pietism," à Brakel means "fanaticism," which he associates with quietists, Quakers, and followers of David Joris, and which is reflected in figures like Böhme, De Molinos, Fénelon and also De Labadie. . . . [T]heir piety gives the pretension of spirituality but rests entirely on the natural

Among those who espouse blind popery—whose religion does not differ much from paganism—there have always been those who have rejected creature-worship and who have written much about internal religion, elevating this as highly as their natural intellect would permit them. These persons are referred to as mystical writers (that is, hidden writers) since the general public did not achieve such a level of contemplation, such elevation of spirit having been concealed from them. Today many are very fond of the word mystical, as if it implies a high level of spirituality. . . . [Such] have little to say about the Lord Jesus as being the ransom and righteousness of sinners—about how He, by a true faith, must be used unto justification and in approaching unto God, beholding in His countenance the glory of God, and practicing true holiness as originating in Him and in union with Him. . . . Numerous imaginations originating in empty minds, natural speculations, deceptions of Satan, dreams, and zealotry go under the name of mysticism . . . [including] the Quakers[.] . . .

[The Roman Catholic] Michael de Molinos . . . rejected all external exercises of religion and proposed that one need only be in a quiet and introverted frame God-ward in order to be irradiated by Him. . . . [He sought] the elimination of all external activity, including the activity of the intellect and any spiritual elation. This would consist in being totally divorced from self, being elevated above all things, being fully united with God, and in passive reflection to lose one's self fully in God, thus worshiping Him in pure love. This is how far the illusions and vain speculations of the natural man—who is void of the Spirit and ignorant of God—can go. Since he excluded all external and spiritual motions and promoted quietness in both areas, his followers, many of whom are to be found among Papists and various sects, are called Quietists, that is, those who are quiet or at rest.

Some years after Molinos, François de Salignac de Lamothe Fenelon, [Roman Catholic] Archbishop of Cambrai, published . . . The Exposition of the Fundamental mind and is developed through fantasy and imagination. . . . [and the] mediatorship of Christ is disregarded by these "mystics." . . . [T]he "pietists" . . . procee[d] apart from and even against the written word of God. . . . Brakel . . . regards contemplation as completely legitimate. However, he wants to distinguish sharply between natural and spiritual contemplation . . . [the latter of which] contemplates God-for-us as he makes himself known in Christ as a reconciling Father. . . . natural contemplation leaves man as he is naturally, [while] spiritual contemplation lets him share increasingly in the divine nature. . . . [Furthermore,] the Spirit always directs people to Christ as their ransom and righteousness, and . . . he leads the believer in everything according to the word. . . . God . . . satisfies one engaged in spiritual reflection with extraordinary and further . . . revelations of himself, acording to his promises in John 14:21 and 23, and he allows [the soul] to see God more closely and experiece who God is and what he is to h[im] in Jesus Christ . . . [yet] contemplation is not the result of one's own activity and effort, but of divine illumination. It is entirely the Spirit who imparts this insight. But the Spirit does not work apart from Christ or from faith in the word. (pgs. 251-254, Sweet Communion: Trajectories of Spirituality from the Middle Ages through the Further Reformation, Arie de Reuver, trans. James A. De Jong)

---

Propositions of the Saints, or, Inner [Spiritual] Life). It is truly not a spiritual book. Fabricated spiritual matters—which are neither to be found in Holy Writ, nor in the practice of the saints—are elevated in a natural manner to as high a level as natural reflection can possibly bring them. He is of the same mold as Molinos and the previous mystical writers among the Papists. They teach a love (or lovelessness), a beholding of God and union with God to consist in some nonessential fancy contrary to the Word of God. This Word teaches us to behold God in the face of Christ as He reveals Himself in the work of redemption. As such God is known and believed by the truly regenerate and true believers. This renders them joy in, and love for, God, causing them to glorify God.

The difference between the self-denial, love, beholding of God, etc., of the mystics and of the truly godly consists in this: The mystics comprehend, say, and do everything according to their natural intellect, fantasy, and imagination, doing so without the Spirit. They do not make use of the Lord Jesus (that is, as a ransom, and righteousness unto justification and peace), as being the only way of approach unto God, and unto true and genuine sanctification. Such exercises and this way are hidden from them. Those, however, who are truly godly, regenerate, and who truly believe, live by faith and not by sight. In all things they make use of the Lord Jesus. They come to the Father by Him, accustom themselves to behold God in the face of Jesus Christ, do everything as in the presence of God, and walk before God's countenance in humility, fear, love, and obedience. These are the old paths. From this you can observe that the difference between the mystics and the truly godly is as the difference between imagination and truth; between being natural and without the Spirit and being led by the Spirit; between worldly and heavenly; between seeking an unknown God and serving the true God; and between being engaged without, and contrary to, the Holy Scriptures (dabbling with invisible things), and living according to the written Word of God. A truly godly person remains humble and serves God in Spirit and truth, and is thus kept from the temptation of entertaining high-minded and fabricated imaginations. . . .

I shall state and defend some propositions whereby the errors will be evident and whereby a believer, holding fast to those truths, will be delivered from their temptations.

PROPOSITION 1: A Christian must have a great love for the truth; all splendid pretense void of love for the truth is deceit. . . . [T]his truth is the seed of regeneration; that is, it is the means whereby man is drawn out of darkness into marvelous light. "Of His own will begat He us with the word of truth" (James 1:18); "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever" (1 Pet 1:23). He who therefore neither knows nor has the truth cannot be regenerated. If he is not regenerated, however, all his speaking about spiritual things is but the work of nature and he is entirely devoid of the truth. . . . [T]he truth is the means, fountain, and rule from which holiness issues forth and according to which it must be regulated. Holiness is the loving observance of truth. "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into Him in all things, which is the head, even Christ" (Eph 4:14-15). The Lord Jesus when praying for holiness for His own, beseeches that it may come about by the truth. "Sanctify them through Thy truth: Thy word is truth" (John 17:17). If the heart is to be purified, it must occur by means of the truth. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit" (1 Pet 1:22). He who lives in sin is a slave and servant of sin. He who is set free from sin is set free by the truth—a truth comprehended and known well. "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free" (John 8:32). To live holily is to walk in the truth. "... even as thou walkest in the truth. I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth" (3 John 3-4). Someone who neither knows nor has the truth cannot be holy. Whatever he manifests is but the natural work of an unconverted person. Every step which deviates from the truth is impure and causes impurity in the way of holiness. . . . If we love the truth, we shall hate all that is opposed to the truth, however insignificant it may be[.] . . . One cannot trifle with the truth. It is too precious a gift from God[,] and God takes notice of how we deal with it. . . . [N]ot only is it contrary to God's will to have fellowship with error, but also with those who espouse error. . . . Thus, every [church] member must be on guard against intermingling with those who espouse false doctrine. Hear what the command is: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you" (2 Cor 6:14-15,17). If you stand in awe of God's majesty, if you tremble at His Word, and if the truth is precious to you, be on guard against false doctrine, false teachers, and for men who are mired in error, however attractive they may appear to be. Let your heart be governed by the exhortation of the apostle: "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed" (2 John 1:10); that is, have no fellowship with him and avoid him so that you will not be drawn away from the truth by him in the least. "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple" (Rom 16:17-18).

How necessary it is to carefully heed this proposition! Compare yourself to this. Do you have such a tender love for the truth? Is it that precious to you? Do you joyfully give thanks to God for it? Do you live according to it? Do you engage in battle on its behalf? Do you indeed abhor all error and those who espouse it? Are you fearful and concerned about associating with such persons? If such is the case with you, then you are not in danger of being misled by the elevated language of [false teachers such as mystical quietists], for you will immediately perceive whether they have and promote either the truth or error, and whether they have love for the truth. . . .

PROPOSITION 2: A Christian must have great love and esteem for the church. . . . He who . . . view[s] the church from every dimension with a spiritual eye and heart, will not only be ignited with love for the congregation and, with ecstasy, stand in awe of the glory of the church, but he will also be provoked to holy wrath against all those who would dare to undertake anything which is detrimental to the church. The [comments] above will give sufficient reasons to be on guard against the delusions of [mystical quietists]. They exert every effort to ruin the church—if this were possible. They reject the church, church order, the divine commission of ministers, the ministry of the Word . . . [t]hey thus make themselves guilty of the abominable sin of despising the congregation of God. " . . . or despise ye the church of God" (1 Cor 11:22). He who despises the church of God despises God Himself and the riches of His goodness, and will not escape the judgment of God. Even though the one [Quietist] espouses this and another person again different heresies and errors, all of them holding to opinions of their own, they agree in this respect that their religion consists in stripping themselves as being nothing (in reference to God, that is), and in the contemplation upon an imaginary and fabricated God. They ascend in this as far as their natural perception will enable them, which to such darkened individuals appears as wondrous light and as being wondrously spiritual. Occasionally they come together to listen to someone speak of these matters. Their religion furthermore consists in manifesting an indiscriminate love for people of various sects—even as far as the wallet is concerned. He who has no love for the church has no love for God. He who is engaged in battling the church is battling God and will endure His judgment. . . . [T]hey make a great display of spirituality and thereby gain entrance with the upright. They thus lead them away from the church and from true religion. Therefore you must, first of all, keep in mind what their objective is, and from that perspective judge their fair speeches. However, do not permit yourself to be ensnared by these fair speeches, nor to be tempted to the commission of the dreadful sin of leaving the church and engaging in battle against her. "He that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad" (Matt 12:30).

PROPOSITION 3: The Holy Scriptures are the only rule for doctrine and life. In the first proposition we have demonstrated how precious and lovely the truth is, and that he who loves the truth, hating all who deviate therefrom, will withdraw himself from all who depart from the truth—and thus also from the Pietists. In the second proposition we have discussed the esteem and love which all lovers of the church have for the people or congregation of God from which the [quietists] are separated. To this we shall now add the preciousness and loveliness of the Word of God, in which all saving truth is comprehended, upon which the church is built, and which God has given to the church for the purpose of preserving and spreading it. This the [quietists] either reject or minimize.

God has caused the way of salvation (there being but one, which is hidden from the natural man) to be recorded so that His people would have a steadfast rule of doctrine and life, and be protected against the deceits of Satan. . . . God has furthermore given such a record in order that the church be protected against the deceits of men who make use of craftiness, causing people to err in a subtle manner. He has also done so in order that everyone would be protected against his own heart which carries within it the seed of all heresy and error. This way of salvation, having thus been recorded, has been entrusted to the church in order that she would preserve it in its purity, transmit it from generation to generation and from nation to nation, proclaiming it everywhere unto the conversion of men, to lead the converted to the church, and to govern the faith and life of the members of the church.

The Word of God is the foundation upon which the church is built (Eph 2:19-20), the insignia of the true church, the nourishment of the church, the only rule of faith and life, and the sword against the enemies who err and battle against the truth—it is everything to the church. There is no church without the Word and there is no Word without the church. . . . The Spirit who has inspired the Word and causes believers to perceive, taste, and experience those matters contained in the Word, assures them of the divinity of that Word. He does this not only by means of its inherent evidences of divinity, but also by way of immediate operation in their hearts. . . . Even though a natural man reads and hears of the mysteries of the Word of God, he does not understand them unless God by His Spirit makes them known to his soul by immediate revelation. . . . [Quietists] lack this spiritual light. They have natural light concerning God's majesty and the insignificance of the creature. They perceive that man's felicity consists in the beholding of God; and by means of the Holy Scriptures their natural light becomes increasingly clear. Since these persons do not understand the spiritual mysteries, they occupy themselves with a natural beholding of God, imagining that their natural perceptions are wondrously spiritual, and far exceed the Word and that of those who are truly illuminated. Yet such perceptions are nothing but fabrications and illusions which deprive them of salvation.

Not only do the Holy Scriptures contain mysteries, but they also contain all mysteries which God wills His children to know, and which are needful for their spiritual functioning here and the enjoyment of felicity hereafter. Therefore, to teach spiritual matters or spiritual exercises which have neither been revealed nor prescribed in God's Word is deceit. . . .There is nothing lacking in the Word—neither small nor great, low nor high. "The law of the Lord is perfect" (Ps 19:7). He who either adds to or subtracts from it shall have no part in all the promises recorded in the Word. Rather, all the curses which are declared in the Word will come upon them (Deut 4:2; Rev 22:18-19). . . .The Word of God is "able to make thee wise unto salvation ... and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works" (2 Tim 3:15-17). One cannot desire anything beyond this; he who fabricates something else accuses God's Word of being deficient. God demands nothing beyond this; he who demands, seeks, and does something apart from Scripture cannot please God with his will-worship. . . .

The Holy Scriptures are the only rule for doctrine and life. He who wishes to live godly and desires to be saved must regulate his intellect, will, affections, words, deeds, and entire religion according to this Word. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them" (Isa 8:20); "Then shall I not be ashamed, when I have respect unto all Thy commandments. Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereto according to Thy Word" (Ps 119:6,9); "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God" (1 Pet 4:11). Therefore—whoever you may be—if you love godliness and salvation, if you have esteem and reverence for God, you ought also to have respect and esteem for the revealed will of God which, by the goodness of God, has been given to us unto salvation. Let this Word be your only rule . . . and you will walk surely. . . .

If the Word of God is so precious to you, if you love it so, and if you make it your rule for faith and life, you will be immune to the delusion of the [Quietists]. If you are taken in and shaken by their speech—having the appearance of spirituality—and you turn to the Word of God, you will immediately perceive that it is not according to the Word, that the Word of God does not speak in that fashion, and that God does not lead His children in such a manner; the Word of God will be a shield to you.

When you encounter them, you must investigate first of all what knowledge of, esteem for, and study they make of the Word. You will then perceive that some reject it entirely, ignore it, and will not respond to your investigation. Others will perceive it as a primer, from which little ones and beginners derive benefit; they contend that one must ascend beyond the Word and engage in more elevated contemplations. However, they will either deny or be silent about the fact that the Word has been inspired by God and has been appointed to be the only and eternal rule—which you may interpret as a denial. Others, who do not perceive the spirituality of the Word with their natural eyes, will deem it to be of little value and will view it as a dead letter, having neither spirit nor life. They maintain that those who hold to the Word will never become spiritual. Others, in order not to give the appearance of casting aside the Word, and your being frightened by them, will make use of it in their conversation and will quote such Scripture passages which speak of light, beholding, and spirituality. Investigate them more carefully, however, as to whether they believe the Word of God to be inspired in its entirety, and whether they acknowledge it as the only rule for faith and life. You will then experience that things are not in order here. . . . You thus have sufficient reason to reject them, and to consider all their doings to be but natural (which they truly are), thinking of this passage: "Lo, they have rejected the word of the Lord; and what wisdom is in them?" (Jer 8:9). . . .

PROPOSITION 4: Regeneration is the originating cause of spiritual life, and of all spiritual thoughts and deeds. . . . However, the point in question is this: What is regeneration and what change does it bring about in man? . . . Many pagans have . . . excelled in conquering their corruptions and in practicing virtue . . . [h]e who reads Cicero, Seneca, Marcus Antonius, Epictus, and other pagan writers will stand amazed.

Regeneration does also not consist in losing sight of yourself; it does not consist in abstaining from aiming at or seeking prosperity and salvation, or your joy and delight for yourself, and instead lose yourself in nothing else but the beholding of God alone. It does not consist in the reflection upon and beholding of God, in sinking away in God, and in continually bringing yourself in the presence of God. All of that can also be the work of nature; pagans, idolatrous Papists, and other proponents of error do likewise.

It does not consist in the increase of natural light and virtuousness, as if man would be regenerated were light to exceed darkness or virtuousness sin. For,

(1) growth is of the same nature as the principle from which it originates. The principle of light and virtuousness is natural, and thus also the increase in both—regardless of how far it may go.

(2) The natural man, however illuminated, virtuous, humble, and exalted he may be in his beholding of God, is and remains a fool (Rom 1:22), without God and without hope (Eph 2:12), and blind (Eph 4:18; 1 Cor 2:14). Thus, regeneration does not consist in the increase of the matters [here] mentioned.

(3) If this were so, man would not need to be regenerated; however, he does stand in need of this. Growth is the continuation of a principle which already exists, and not the receiving of a principle of life which did not exist previously. Regeneration is, however, the generation of a principle of a life which did not exist previously, and thus a translation from one state—death, into another state—life.

(4) Regeneration proceeds from the Holy Spirit by means of the gospel; it causes a person to behold God in the face of Jesus Christ, generates spiritual life by union with Christ, and culminates in felicity. None of these things are true for natural light and virtuousness, and they thus differ in their essential nature.

Regeneration is a complete change of man wrought by the Holy Spirit through the Word. This change is both internal and external. It is from death to life, from natural to spiritual, from an earthly disposition to a heavenly disposition, from self and all creatures to Christ, and through Him to God. Regeneration begins in the heart and in the innermost recesses of the soul. "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh" (Ezek 36:26). The heart encompasses the intellect, will, and affections.

When someone comes under conviction and receives a desire toward God, he will then initially be in danger of striving for great things. Since natural religion is easier—having the cooperation of nature (true regeneration being contrary to man's nature)—he will very readily be drawn away to [Quietism], which is nothing else but a natural religion. He will thus be in danger of remaining in a natural state and of perishing. . . . When you are in the company of these people (however, I counsel you to avoid them and to stay with the church and the godly in the church), do not be taken back by highly elevated matters which have a great appearance of spirituality and thus are very attractive to beginning Christians. If, however, you ask them to speak about regeneration, you will find them to be ignorant in that respect or to be entirely in error. This will be sufficient for you to see that all their activity is but natural and thus draws away from true holiness and communion with God, and consequently from salvation itself. And if there is someone among them who was truly a partaker of the principle of regeneration prior to joining with them, and thus is able to speak soundly about this, do not allow yourself to be deceived along with him who is deceived. The principle of his life is indeed true and he will be saved, but the hay, straw, and stubble which he has built upon it will be burned. Regeneration is imperfect and we must therefore not follow them in all that they do; they also still sin. They, possessing a spiritual principle, can nevertheless yield somewhat to their nature which is yet in them, and thus can practice self-denial and behold God in a natural sense. This will cause them to be a Christian of small stature where true growth is absent. Therefore, take heed.

PROPOSITION 5: A Christian continually avails himself of faith. . . . In order for someone to be a partaker of [the] Savior, he must respond to [the] offer [in Scripture], go to Christ, receive Him, and entrust himself entirely to Him. This act of faith is not the cause of a person becoming a partaker of Jesus, but only the means. Therefore, whether faith is weak or strong, whether it is exercised with clarity or be it in darkness, whether it is exercised with much ease or much strife, is not of the essence, but rather, whether it is done in truth with the heart. . . .

Faith is the beginning point of whatever believers undertake. Faith is the soul of their activity and permeates everything. By faith they take hold of His strength and thereby are active as though it were their strength. By faith they overcome the world, are united with the fullness of Christ, and become partakers of all His benefits. . . . If you are upon this way and exercise faith in the manner here delineated, see to it that you persevere in the same way. Do not ever depart from this way, for it will safely bring you to the end of your faith . . . [y]ou will be safeguarded against the errors of . . . all . . . who are in error as far as the practice of godliness is concerned. . . .

There are also those who at one time have received Jesus as their Savior. This task having been accomplished, they might as well proceed to perfection and pursue more lofty things. Poor people—as if it were possible to grow, apart from Christ; as if we could live, except by faith and the continual, actual beholding of Christ and being in union with Him; and as if we could bear fruit without continually drawing sap and nourishment from Christ! He who conducts himself in such (or even stranger) fashion, let him be convinced of his error and turn to Christ, in order to make use of Him continually unto . . . sanctification[.] . . . If someone is upright in the exercise of faith, but yet small in grace, let that which has been said be as a beacon. Let him flee from all who do not enter upon this way of faith and who with a great show of spirituality fail to encounter Jesus.

PROPOSITION 6: All of man's felicity, here and hereafter, consists in communion with and the beholding of God. . . . This is the most excellent promise: "I will love him, and will manifest Myself to him" (John 14:23); "We will come unto him, and make our abode with him" (John 14:23). Their seeing of God agrees with the manner in which God reveals Himself from His side. "And hath given us an understanding, that we may know Him that is true" (1 John 5:20); "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord" (2 Cor 3:18); "For God . . . hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" (2 Cor 4:6). Such is the activity and the exercise of the godly: "I have set the Lord always before me" (Ps 16:8); " . . . they shall walk, O Lord, in the light of Thy countenance" (Ps 89:15); "My meditation of Him shall be sweet" (Ps 104:34); "How precious also are Thy thoughts unto me, O God! . . . when I awake, I am still with Thee" (Ps 139:17-18). This is sufficient to conclude that the beholding of God is reserved for God's children only. . . . God does not reveal Himself to the world; that is, to the unconverted, to natural men, to those who do not have the Spirit. This is evident in John 14:22, 17, "Lord, how is it that Thou wilt manifest Thyself unto us, and not unto the world . . . the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him." . . . Therefore, whatever the natural man writes or speaks concerning reflecting upon, beholding of, and being united to God in love, is nothing more than an illusion.

Although a natural man cannot ascend to the right knowledge and beholding of God, and since God does not reveal Himself to such, he nevertheless knows from nature that God is, and that his felicity consists in communion with God. This is further reinforced by the natural knowledge of the Word of God. As a result, many have engaged themselves in beholding God, so that the beholding of God and the discussion thereof is no evidence of spirituality.

I repeat, many unconverted do engage themselves in beholding God by means of their natural light, or by means of their knowledge of the Word of God.

(1) This is very evident among the heathen, who speak concerning this in their writings, doing so with such lofty expressions that a Christian must be amazed and astonished about it.

(2) This is also evident among the popish mystics and thinkers. They are obviously idolaters, for they worship a piece of bread as their God. They pray to angels and deceased persons and render religious honor to images. They destroy the atonement of the Lord Jesus by their abominable mass and in other ways. They wish to be justified by their own works, and thereby merit heaven. They acknowledge the antichrist to be their head and hate true believers. They are persecutors of the church of the Lord Jesus; and they, either by their contribution or by having pleasure in this, are guilty of the blood of the martyrs, and are thus much more abominable than the heathen and others who function only in the realm of the natural. They write and speak much about divine meditations, doing so with expressions which are as lofty as their imagination can devise—yes, their words even exceed imagination, and if they cannot understand them, others may understand them. If they cannot, they may be amazed about these incomprehensible expressions.

(3) This is also evident among many others (not of the popish religion) who also engage themselves in meditation and reflection about divine things. It is evident that they neither have a knowledge of nor a love for the truth. They neither have a love for the Word of God nor do they establish it as their only rule for doctrine, thoughts, and life. There is no love for the church (from which they depart), and there is neither love for nor union with the truly godly. They can unite themselves with all manner of devoted people, but cannot tolerate the truly godly who rebuke them by means of their light. They are unacquainted with the nature of true conversion. This is also true for saving faith, they being total strangers of its exercise. . . . [T]hey speak about great things, about being drawn up, about ascending above themselves and above all creatures—yes, dreadful though it be, above God Himself. The language of Balaam is heard among them: "The man whose eyes are open . . . which heard the words of God, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance" (Num 24:3-4).

From that which has been said, it is very evident that unconverted persons also engage themselves in beholding God. You therefore ought not to be immediately inclined to think that those who speak thus—that is, who in a charming manner speak of extraordinary illumination—are true recipients of grace and are truly spiritual. The blind can also speak of light, the unspiritual of the spiritual, and those who are alienated from God about communion with God, and the loveless about love—doing so not feignedly, but from a heart that thinks to have and speak the truth. You must therefore investigate whether that which they say about beholding God is truly spiritual. Follow the advice of the apostle John: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world" (1 John 4:1).

In order not to be hastily inclined by word or spirit, attentively take note of what has been said thus far: There is a twofold beholding of God—a natural and a spiritual.

(1) The natural beholding of God is practiced by the unconverted; the spiritual beholding of God by those who are true recipients of grace, have truly been regenerated, and truly believe.

(2) The natural beholding of God occurs by the light of nature and the external illumination of the Word, by one's own spirit, imagination, and mental powers, and by the drawing of rational conclusions; the spiritual beholding of God occurs by the illumination of the Holy Spirit who has drawn believers out of darkness into His marvelous light.

(3) The natural beholding of God has God as its object as He reveals Himself in nature as the eternal, exalted, and glorious One, etc. In the spiritual beholding of God a person beholds Him in the face of Jesus Christ; that is, in the manifestation of all the perfections of God in the work of redemption. In such spiritual beholding He reveals Himself at times in an immediate sense as their reconciled God and Father, doing so occasionally with such light, glory, sweetness, and bliss that it cannot be expressed, and at other times with such expressions as: "I, God, am your God; I am your salvation; I have loved thee with an everlasting love; thou art Mine."

(4) The natural beholding of God leaves a man alienated from God; the separation remains. The illusion of being united with God is but a union according to their own imagination, for true union occurs only by way of faith—something they do not possess. The spiritual beholding of God brings the soul near to God—yes, unites her with God as belonging to Him. ". . . that they also may be one in us" (John 17:21). Oh, blessed unity! Oh, blessed appropriation!

(5) The natural beholding of God leaves man unchanged, that is, in the state of nature—even though through the knowledge of God they may flee from the excessive pollutions of the world. The spiritual beholding of God causes the soul to become increasingly a partaker of the divine nature, and to become holy as He is holy. By the Spirit of the Lord, the soul is transformed through such beholding—in harmony with the object being beheld—from glory to glory. See to it that you do not immediately deem all beholding of God to be spiritual in nature.

It is evident from the nature of their reflection, that the beholding by God of such persons—which in reality consists more in elevated words than in substance—is the result of natural illumination and imagination. Such beholding varies greatly according to everyone's physical constitution, inclinations, and power of imagination. What follows represents the common manner in which this transpires; if someone is not exercised in the manner as we shall now delineate, he should know that we do not have him in view.

(1) Some, as they undertake such reflection, meditate upon what they know about God in a natural sense, and have read or heard of God. They do not consider at that moment that they have read or heard this. While thus meditating, they ascend from one thing to the next, having conceptions about God in accordance with what their heart and imagination suggest. They then think about what they imagine, and all that is engendered by such thoughts. God must then be as such reflections project Him to be, and in this manner God has then revealed Himself to the soul. It is immaterial whether such thoughts of God are suitable and in harmony with the Holy Scriptures; this revelation is sufficient assurance for them that it is true and spiritual.

(2) Some will mentally withdraw from all creatures, themselves, and God. They are occupied with nothing except with expelling those mental objects which present themselves time and again. They thus endeavor to be without thoughts, as if nothing existed, and they thus enter and sink away into thick darkness. If a ray of light then falls upon their mind in this thick darkness, without the discovery of anything objective, they consider this to be of the Spirit. They allow themselves to be illuminated and guided by this light, and as this light increases, God is unveiled to them as being such and such. This they observe passively—as being the recipient of it, allowing themselves to be illuminated thereby. The soul is thus ignited in love and receives such motions and stirrings, until they again come to themselves and desist for the time being.

(3) Some, having a desire to approach unto God and to behold Him, divest themselves of all reason, memory, affections, and even of those thoughts which initially ignited the inclination to contemplate upon God as having served their purpose. Having thus been emptied of everything, the soul turns to God, considering Him to be her God, and continually thinks: "Oh God, Thou art my God, and I am Thine." The soul then listens to what God will subsequently reveal of Himself, and thus, in an infatuated manner, focuses upon God as being present. Here she reposes, tastes more than she sees, worships, exults, is in subjection, and exercises love. The only things missing here are the Spirit, spiritual life, the exercises of faith, the going to God through Christ, and the beholding of God in the face of Christ. Since these things are absent, they are all the work and imaginations of a person's own doing. They are but natural exercises and thus of no value.

(4) Some remain quiet and in a disposition wherein which they are turned unto God, and do nothing but wait upon the Spirit. If nothing comes to mind, then they again proceed, being well satisfied. If something occurs to them, they deem this to be of the Spirit; then this is truth, and is more certain and infallible than the Word of God which they consider to be but a dead letter, a primer for beginners, and of no benefit whatsoever. If the thought which occurs to them gives direction to do or not to do something, it is considered to be the leading of the Spirit and they give heed to it. They do not pray, speak, or do anything unless they are motivated by such an idea coming to mind; they thus, quietly and with delight, live on. When they are stirred up by an idea which occurred to them, they depend on this, irrespective of whether it either agrees with or is contrary to God's Word. This they do not investigate; it is a matter of indifference to them. They are thus carried away by their own spirit to abominable practices from which even the natural man recoils. This is borne out by the witness of those whom God in His goodness has converted from the error of their ways, and is also taught by daily experience. Some go further than that and play prophet. When thoughts about future events occur to their empty minds, they are deemed to be revelations which will either occur or not occur. Poor, misguided people! They desire to seek God and to do His pleasure, but completely miss the way itself. With all their ideas and the adamant passion of their own spirit they perish.

It behooves all Christians to live in the presence of God, to examine themselves as to what is the good will of God in which He delights, to esteem the Word of God as the revealed will of God and as an infallible rule, and continually to give heed to the leading of the Spirit. It behooves them to give careful heed to their well-illuminated conscience and to be desirous not to act contrary to it. To follow one's own spirit and ideas, however, as if they were from the Holy Spirit, is to run to one's own destruction.

In order to be safeguarded against such fanaticism, we must keep the following in mind:

(1) Man has his own spirit; there are many seducing spirits, and the evil spirit can transform himself into an angel of light. He, with the intent to deceive, can give thoughts which are essentially good, but stir man up to use them in an erroneous manner. We must therefore give heed and know by which spirit we are being moved.

(2) The Holy Spirit convinces man of sin and causes him to grieve, be perplexed, and in many ways be troubled about his sin.

(3) The man who is conquered by the Holy Spirit will be regenerated and translated from darkness to light, from death to life, and from being earthly minded to being heavenly minded.

(4) The Holy Spirit is a Spirit of faith who brings God's children to Christ, causing them to receive Jesus by a true faith as their ransom and righteousness.

(5) The Holy Spirit unites His children and keeps them united to the church, for by one Spirit are they all baptized into one body (1 Cor 12:13).

(6) The Holy Spirit leads believers in all things according to the Word of God; He leads them into all truth. The Word of God is truth, however, and the only rule by which we shall not err. By that Word He regenerates, sanctifies, leads, and comforts them.

Know then with certainty that where these matters are not found, there God's Spirit is not present. Be assured that whatever is deemed to be spiritual but which does not harmonize with the above, is nothing but illusionary and are seductions of a man's own spirit. Regardless of how greatly one may boast of spirituality, be instructed and warned. Know that the Holy Spirit is given only to the children of God and that only those who are led by the Spirit do indeed have the Spirit of Christ. The natural man, however, does not have the Spirit (Jude 19); the world cannot receive the Spirit; it neither sees nor knows Him.

It is evident to the truly godly, when considering these ways of beholding God, that they are all but a natural work. This can especially be concluded from the fact that such persons consider the greatest mark of spirituality to be the measure by which a person is stripped of himself and loses sight of himself so completely as if he did not exist. This is not due to a shameful view of their sins, but the result of comparing themselves to God, or it is without reason, or because of the opinion that thus it must be. This is foolish spirituality, which is nothing but the fruit of nature! Why do you delight yourself in such contemplation wherein you utterly lose sight of yourself and do not think about yourself? Is not self your focus in this and do you not deem this to be your salvation? Why then do you engage in this? You neither need to nor are able to do it by virtue of it being God's will, as it is certainly of no benefit to Him. You thus do it for your own sake, since this reflection upon your nothingness is your delight. Therefore, while thinking that you do not have yourself in view at all, and to be rid of self completely, you are nevertheless seeking yourself. Only if such exclusion and deprecation of self were spiritual in nature (while in reality it is natural and sinful), it would not be a sinful seeking of self, but rather a holy seeking of self.

There can be either a sinful or a holy seeking of self. A sinful seeking of self is when one seeks honor, esteem, love, respect, advantage, etc. in order that all men and everything would end in them. A holy seeking of self is to promote one's own physical welfare for the purpose of being fit to serve God in whatever capacity that may be. In our seeking after God, it is not sinful to have the welfare of your soul, and thus light, life, love, joy, delight, and salvation in view. Rather, it is evidence of being engaged spiritually in the right way. This is a holy seeking of self, for:

First, God has created this spiritual seeking of self within man. Did not Adam need to be careful to refrain from eating of the forbidden tree in view of the threat, "The day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die"? Did he not have to be in fear of losing his blessed state? Was he not obligated to seek his felicity in communion with God?

Secondly, God commands His children to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling (Phil 2:12). This they must therefore strive for.

Thirdly, God continually confronts man with threats in order to save him with fear (Jude 23). Observe this in Luke 13:3, "... except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."

Fourthly, God uses many inducements to persuade man to seek his own salvation. "Come unto Me ... and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you. . . . For My yoke is easy" (Matt 11:28-30).

Fifthly, if man should not seek himself and his own well-being, it would be a matter of indifference to him how he fared according to body and soul; and being thus indifferent, all prayers would cease. Then there would be nothing for him to desire or request. God, however, wills that "in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God" (Phil 4:6). Then all thanksgiving for received benefits would also cease; God, however, wills that we give thanks in everything (1 Thess 5:18). "Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light" (Col 1:12).

It is evident from all this that spirituality does not consist in disregarding our welfare, utterly deprecating ourself, utterly losing sight of ourself as far as salvation is concerned, and excluding ourself from everything. Rather, this is a fabricated religion which is contrary to God's commandment, serving no other purpose but the satisfaction of the flesh and our own imagination.

Objection #1: Ought not God be the focus of all things and ought not all things end in God? By seeking self, however, man makes himself the focus and ends in self.

Answer: When a godly person focuses upon himself in spiritual matters, he acts according to the command and will of God. It would be impossible for him to end in himself and to remain focused on his felicity only, for that is not the highest level of his felicity. Being a recipient of grace, however, and while enjoying the goodness of God, he will time and again turn to God as the cause of his salvation. He will thus end in Him, thank Him, give honor and glory to Him, and praise Him, because by reason of His essence, all praise must be unto Him, He being worthy thereof. The more pure the manner is in which a spiritual person ends in glorifying God, the more felicity he will enjoy; and the more felicity he enjoys, the more he will end in God. This is not to suggest that he contributes something to God, but rather, that the benefit is man's. Thus, having his felicity in view and ending in God must go together; the godly person cannot seek the one without exercising the other. As all the godly end in God upon receiving and enjoying the benefits of God, they (especially the fathers in Christ) likewise have the glory of God in view when they begin to undertake something.

Objection #2: A Christian must deny himself (Matt 16:24), not seek himself (1 Cor 10:24), is nothing (Gal 6:3), and must be lowly of heart (Matt 11:29). Therefore, man must remain outside of everything and neither seek nor have himself in mind in anything.

Answer: There is a threefold self. First, there is a sinful self; that is, pride, maliciousness, vengefulness, envy, miserliness, immorality, and all the sinful lusts of the heart, along with the deeds which issue forth therefrom, whereby he seeks to satisfy his lusts and to attain to the fulfillment of his desire. These a Christian must not seek, but he must abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul. He must mortify . . . them.

Secondly, there is also a natural self; that is, to desire and seek all that pertains to the welfare of the body, such as food, drink, sleep, clothing, housing, goods, peaceful association with people, and whatever else pertains to human existence. One may and must seek these things, for no one has ever hated his flesh, but rather, cherishes it. However, a Christian does not set his heart upon them, and it is his objective to serve God in the use of these things. He is resigned to the divine dispensation, and he must be satisfied with either much or little, since these are not his portion. If, however, these matters run counter to the Lord Jesus, His cause, the truth, and godliness, and one is obligated to abstain from one or the other thing, then a Christian will readily deny himself, willingly let go of everything, view the disappearance of his goods with joy, and not even hold his life dear. This is the denial which Christ requires.

Thirdly, there is a spiritual self; that is, the desire for the salvation and welfare of our soul, consisting in reconciliation with God through the blood of Christ, union with God, and a life in the enjoyment of His fellowship, love, light, and holiness—and thus eternal glory. A Christian may not deny himself these spiritual things. He must always seek them with all his might. It is the life of the soul, the will of God, the command of God, and it pleases God. To neither seek nor pursue this is sin. Man, in having fellowship with and beholding God, may not utterly put self aside and keep himself entirely outside of this. Rather, he must strive for and seek to find pleasure in spiritual delight, joy, love, and holiness.

Matt 16:24 refers to the natural self; 1 Cor 10:24 refers to the sinful self; Gal 6:3 spreaks of such people who have great thoughts of themselves, despise others, and who in the meantime have no grace, or have but a very small measure.

Let us consider Matt 11:29. Humility does not exclude self; instead, it does relate to self, for it acknowledges what a person is and what graces and benefits are his. He does not boast of this, since he acknowledges that he does not have them of himself, but that they have been granted to him of God by reason of His goodness alone. He sees his sinfulness and that he is therefore not worthy of anything. He sees virtues and capabilities in other persons which he does not have, and thus exalts them above himself. Having the Lord Jesus as his example, he knows that this lowly and yet noble disposition as a Christian, is pleasing to God. He therefore seeks to walk humbly with his God as a weaned child and in a becoming disposition-one of submission and being obliged toward man. It is hereby very evident that the exclusion of self in beholding God is a sign of something that purely proceeds from nature, is of one's own choosing, and is a sinful act toward the majestic and holy God.

There are three things which cause the godly to be troubled more than anything else. It first of all troubles them that [certain mystics and quietists] speak of these lofty contemplations also speak of their union with God, of belonging to God, and that in such contemplation they view God as their God. Secondly, such persons, in an exceptional manner, are able to speak of love for God and of sinking away in the love of God, and, so to speak, being consumed by it. Thirdly, there are some who speak of the beauty and glory of the Lord Jesus in a most extraordinary manner. These three matters, they think, are indeed spiritual and evidences of extraordinary grace. Who would not be enamored by these matters? Who would not desire always to hear this discussed? My response to this is that it cannot but be that truly gracious persons, when hearing others speak of beholding God, of belonging to God, of love to God, and of the beauty and glory of the Lord Jesus, will find love and desire stirring within to be in such a condition. This is due to their acquaintance with these matters in their spiritual nature, and they thus perceive them as such when they hear them being discussed. If those who speak thus would know and possess these matters in their true, spiritual nature, far be it from us to warn them in any way; rather, we would embrace them in love. Since we know, however, that these three matters can issue forth from natural illumination and can be expressed by persons who neither possess true grace nor derive these lofty views from a love for the truth, the Word, the church of the Lord Jesus, conversion, and the exercise of true saving faith, we must of necessity demonstrate how the unconverted can be occupied with these three matters.

As far as the first matter is concerned, it is common knowledge that temporal believers, those who are externally religious in the state of nature-yes, even heathens-view God as their God and call Him their God. Everyone knows this. Why is it that those who occupy themselves in contemplating God would also not be able to do so? However, just because they imagine this to be so, does not therefore imply that this is indeed the case. God is only the God of true believers who, through Christ, having received His ransom and righteousness, come to God for reconciliation. Those who are therefore strangers of this way, and do not come in truth unto God in this way, do not have God as their portion. God is not their God, and their imaginations are vain and without foundation. . . . In this illusion they proceed to be amazed, to be delighted in, and to rejoice in God as He is, in the fact that this God is their God, and in all that this God is for them. These are great matters indeed. Many who thus contemplate upon God, however, endeavor to rid themselves of all spiritual motions which pertain to themselves, be divorced from self, and neither think of self nor reflect upon themselves. They only wish to contemplate God, be illuminated by Him, and be drawn up on high, into glory, and into eternity. Yes, though it be dreadful to say, they even endeavor to ascend to God in their reflections. Who would then be offened by the claim of such persons that God is their portion and that He is their God?

Secondly, their love for God is consistent with the manner in which He is their portion. Man has a loving nature, and if he finds or imagines a desirable object, his love goes out toward it. The imagination can have a remarkable effect here, for vain man can imagine something or somebody which or whom he has never seen. He dwells upon this with his thoughts; he delights himself in imaginary conversation, and rejoices in love, as if it were in truth. When a natural man focuses his thoughts upon God, he can also have natural inclinations of love toward God. When in addition he reflects upon the perfections of God—be it through the light of nature or external illumination of the Word—a love issues forth which is not of a spiritual, but of a natural sort. This love is commensurate with their knowledge. It is thus that the heathen delight in God. It is in this manner that idolaters and those who have strayed from saving truth speak of the love of God, the wondrous motions of love, and the kiss of love upon awakening. And thus, by all the motions of natural love which one man can have toward another, they ascend unto God, so that the nature of love does not change, but only the object. They thus dishonor God with their so-called love for Him.

Objection: Are not all natural men haters of God? "Let them also that hate Him flee before Him" (Ps 68:1); " . . . haters of God" (Rom 1:30); "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God" (Rom 8:7). Since many who meditate upon God delight in Him in doing so, is this not proof that they are spiritually illuminated and truly regenerate? "We love Him, because He first loved us" (1 John 4:19); "But if any man love God, the same is known of Him" (1 Cor 8:3).

Answer: Not all that bears the name of love is love. There is a love which is natural and a love which is holy. Natural men—such as the heathen and all the unconverted—have natural love, this being of the same nature as he from whom it proceeds; however, "they that are in the flesh cannot please God" (Rom 8:8). From this natural love we can only conclude that such people are in the state of nature, and not at all that they are spiritual and regenerate. We completely agree that a natural man in beholding the perfections of God as He reveals Himself in nature in His majesty, glory, power, and goodness, etc., can with his natural heart love God in a natural manner. Pagans and other unconverted men have loved Him in this manner. Those who love God in such situations, can hate Him in other respects, demonstrating this by the rejection of His Word, by not receiving His Son, and in hating and persecuting His children. Those who thus meditate upon God in a natural sense are able to associate with all manner of men, but they detest God's children who truly manifest the image of God. They hate the light because it exposes them, and because they are rebuked by the light in true believers. They show that they hate God by being unwilling to live according to His laws, instead desiring to live according to their own imaginations. They hate His rebukes, and their entire life demonstrates that they do not delight in God.

If we compare this natural love with the purely spiritual love of God in Christ Jesus—which we shall briefly discuss further on—then we shall perceive that the smallest spark and the tiniest ray of this love is incomparably superior and more pure than all the pretended love of such who meditate upon God, regardless of how they adorn it with beautiful words. The difference is not only one of degree, but of very essence. Oh, how far does this divine spark—that heavenly fire—excel all those dead coals!

The third matter pertains to the extraordinary manner in which they speak of the glory and beauty of the Lord Jesus. Should it come as a surprise that someone who has the Scriptures, who reads godly literature describing the Lord Jesus in His beauty and glory, and who furthermore has an eloquent tongue, can speak in a most excellent manner about Jesus? Does someone therefore know Jesus Himself? Is this proof that he himself experientially beholds and relishes the Lord Jesus? He who draws conclusions merely on the basis of such eloquent speech is naive, and too little skilled in the matters of Christianity. Take time to observe a person who speaks thus as far as his sentiments are concerned, the company he keeps, his love to the godly in the church, and in reference to the first five propositions of this chapter. You will readily perceive how you must judge such a person. Take particular note, however, of how he speaks concerning the manner in which the soul is led to Jesus as Surety, how the soul is exercised in receiving the Lord Jesus as his ransom and righteousness, as well as its engagement in spiritual wrestlings. You will then perceive that all this lofty speech only relates to the Lord Jesus as King, or as an example for imitation, but not as High Priest in order to find reconciliation and peace with God in His atonement, doing so by a continual and frequently repeated exercise of faith, which is the marrow and essence of true Christianity.

Some little children in Christ, who are easily driven about by every wind of doctrine, hearing someone speak eloquently about lofty reflections and not being conscious of the thorn hidden in it, become enamored with such a condition as a result of the spiritual life and light which is within them. They may also engage in meditation upon God as the [quietists] do; that is, in a natural manner—however, with different results.

(1) Some, when they begin, perceive inner strife and have an aversion for this way, although a heartfelt desire for the matter itself remains. They condemn themselves for such resistance and aversion, being of the opinion that this is engendered by their corrupt nature—thinking that it is but laziness and a lack of spirituality. They resume and strive all the more earnestly, but the resistance and aversion remain and increase. Having thus wrestled for some time, they begin to see that their objective—to behold God—is indeed good and spiritual, but that the method is but a natural one, so that this resistance and aversion were not sinful, but an activity of the regenerated nature. They perceive that there is a spiritual way to walk in the light of God's countenance. They thus escape this snare and desist from pursuing this natural method.

(2) Others, having the principle of spiritual life, are careless as far as preserving and strengthening it. They are inclined to err in seeking to be someone special. They, when perceiving the appearance of spirituality in such lofty reflections, pursue this method recklessly. When God gives them over to themselves, they err by pursuing their fantasy and natural imaginations—and thus, upon that good foundation which is within them they build wood, hay, and stubble, which will be burned. They will nevertheless be saved since the gifts of God's grace are without repentance. In the meantime, they make themselves guilty of giving offense and are at times the cause of the damnation of other people who, not possessing grace, have followed them in this work of nature due to the esteem they have for them. It only occurs very rarely that such persons are exercised again in a unadulterated manner and come to the simplicity which is in Christ, since pride—which comes naturally to those who pretend to have such lofty reflections—has also overtaken their heart. Since those that are truly converted can fall and err greatly, we must therefore be careful in judging the deeds of the godly, as not all that they do is good. We may not imitate them just because they are godly, but only inasmuch as they are followers of Christ and walk according to the Word of God. "Then shall I not be ashamed, when I have respect unto all Thy commandments" (Ps 119:6). . . .

Truly spiritual persons do not make a distinction between meditation and beholding: they are both considered to be human activities. He does make a distinction, however, between the activity of the soul in meditating upon divine things, and the extraordinary revelations of God to the soul engaged in such meditation upon divine things, which the soul—upon receiving them—acknowledges, feels and tastes.

A believer, however much he may humble himself, will never arrive at beholding God as a result of the measure in which he waits, longs, exerts himself, and lifts up his heart. His duty is to meditate so that he may gain more and more insight into what he knows of God by means of the Word, faith, and experience—in order that he may delight himself in, rejoice in, and adore God, while bowing down before Him to worship Him reverently. He must endeavor to acquaint himself with God, become holier by virtue of having fellowship with Him, and serve God in a manner more pleasing to Him.

Objection: All of this is self-love and therefore must be rejected.

Answer: This sort of self-love is holy, commanded by God, pleasing to Him, and a proof of the spirituality of the meditation. Sinful self-love—which manifests itself in the seeking of esteem, honor, love, respect, to be served by others, and to cause all things to end in self—is hated, despised, and avoided by the person who meditates in a godly manner. In seeking his own spiritual welfare in spiritual meditation, he does not end in self, but rather acknowledges all things to be from God and through God. In love and joy he returns all this again to God, giving Him the honor and glory.

Occasionally God, according to His promise (John 14:21,23), meets such who meditate spiritually with extraordinary and more immediate revelations of Himself, and causes them to behold God in more immediate proximity, and to taste who He is and what He is to them in Christ Jesus. . . . Since God does not reveal Himself to the world and the unconverted, and since they cannot attain to a seeing and beholding of God by their own activity, all their speaking of such beholding, and all their beholding of God is nothing but fantasy, is not in truth, and only a reflection of their thoughts upon the illusions of their own making. . . .

A believer, who engages himself in meditation upon divine things and seeking fellowship with God, withdraws himself from all things and considers there to be no one but God and himself. He acknowledges himself as a creature of God, as having an immortal soul, and as having been created with a human nature in Adam, excelling in holiness and glory. He also acknowledges that in all things he is miserably distorted, deformed, and abominable—being sinful within and without. He occasionally will focus upon his condition in order to gain a deeper insight about himself and thus acknowledge himself to be unworthy that God would look upon him, or would bestow any grace or benefits upon him. He acknowledges himself to be entirely unfit and unworthy to approach unto this majestic and holy God, although he cannot enjoy light, life, peace, rest, satisfaction, and felicity except in communion with God.

While thus maintaining this humble frame, he turns his eye to the Mediator, wholeheartedly approving of this holy way to come and to be permitted to approach unto God through Him. . . .

The soul may also be in a sinful condition. The corruption of the heart may manifest itself; she cannot resist vain thoughts; the lusts of the flesh are exceptionally strong and hold her captive; besetting sins are lively—be it due to disposition, physical condition, or incidents which she either desires, cannot avoid, or may not avoid—and she has little strength against them. She is then perplexed by this; sin is a heavy burden and she is bowed down by it. There is no peace; communion with God has been disturbed, God hides Himself, and faith is assaulted. What now? Any personal initiative does not result in progress; to stay away from God causes more regression. The soul dares not approach unto God due to being too sinful; and to remain in this condition is equivalent to dying continually, whereas there is life and faith in the soul. She makes the resolution to approach unto God, being convinced of her sincerity—not only to be delivered from guilt and punishment, but also from corruption and all the sin which proceeds from this.

Such a soul then presents herself to the Lord as sinful and as miserable as she is, together with her grief related to this and her desire to be delivered from it. She meditates upon the free grace of God, that God neither considers anyone's virtue (which is not naturally present anyway), nor sin, but is gracious because He wills to be gracious to her, and is merciful to whomever He wills. While meditating, she will focus upon the depth of this free grace, approve of it with her whole heart, be enamored with it, and adore it. From this she proceeds to eternal and sovereign election, to eternal love, and while reflecting upon herself and the grace which the soul perceives to be in herself, she is astonished and sinks away in adoration. "I, I sinful man have been known! I have been loved by Thee! I have been eternally appointed to be a recipient of salvation! To Thee, to Thee alone, oh Lord, be the glory for Thy free grace and for Thy unsearchable love for humanity." From this she proceeds to the Mediator Jesus Christ. In meditating upon Him she can find neither beginning nor end due to the manifestation of all the perfections of God, such as love, righteousness, wisdom, omnipotence, mercy, etc. She acknowledges this holy way as the way whereby the sinner is reconciled with God and which gives her liberty to approach unto God. This way she approves of. She becomes enamored with it and chooses it for herself. She observes in this way the fullness of the satisfaction and is absorbed by the unsearchableness of this way. She meditates upon the immutability of God, that God remains the same in His purpose and love toward the elect, even though they, time and again, spoil everything before Him. Christ's satisfaction cannot be abolished; the covenant of grace is unbreakable; God remains faithful, and always restores His own. When the soul in a negative frame occupies herself with such meditations, she will experience a wondrous change. The conscience perceives peace with God through the blood of Jesus, the estrangement is transformed into intimacy, and the soul—being washed and cleansed—goes her way rejoicing.

Occasionally the soul of a godly person has a desire for holiness which is more than ordinary. She is enamored with self-denial as far as honor, esteem, the love of men, comfort, earthly delight, and the riches or goods of this world are concerned. She does this neither for self nor for the rest and welfare of the soul, but for the Lord's sake, doing so to the degree and in those circumstances in which the Lord requires such from her. She is enamored with being continually in the presence of God, as well as with obeying, fearing, loving, and walking humbly with God. She greatly desires humility and meekness of heart, as well as wisdom, love, forbearance, and friendly dignity. She furthermore yearns for the image of her Jesus, and to give expression to His life in her life. She does not desire this in an earthly, lifeless, and natural manner as the unconverted do. Rather, she desires that this be so in a living and truly spiritual manner in union with the Lord Jesus by faith—and through Him with God—and by the influence of the Lord's Spirit to the glory of her God, the honor of the church, and the salvation and stirring up of other people. With this desire she comes before the Lord and continues to focus upon His holiness. While continually cleaving to Christ, however, a view of God's holiness causes her to sink away in shame due to her insignificance and sinfulness, saying with Job, "Now mine eye seeth Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes" (Job 42:5-6). With Isaiah she may cry out, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips" (Isa 6:5). She nevertheless, being in Christ, continues in her beholding of this pure holiness, and allows herself to be illuminated and enlivened by this holiness; in that respect she becomes holier and holier. This is according to the testimony of the apostle: "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor 3:18). Thus, the soul who is enamored with holiness acquaints herself with the Lord, cleaves to Him as seeing the invisible, and continually focuses upon the exhortation: "Be ye holy, for I am holy." . . .

At times the soul beholds the Lord's perfections in the work of creation and meditates upon them in an orderly and attentive fashion. Sometimes she occupies herself by meditating upon the providence of the Lord, and learns from this to rightly know God's sovereignty, wisdom, righteousness, and goodness, so that all the power, evil, and goodness of the creature disappears. She views God as being the only one who is operative, executing all things irresistibly according to His purpose and good pleasure. Then again, the soul who attentively meditates selects other matter for reflection and thus acquaints herself with the Lord. The heart thus increases its steadfast confidence in the Lord, loves Him, fears Him, serves Him, and due to continual fellowship with God, the soul begins to shine forth as the countenance of Moses did when he had communed with God for forty days upon the mountain.

The Lord can also lead a longing soul to a more immediate beholding of Himself, at which time she neither brings before the Lord her conditions, nor is occupied with the works of God—be it in nature or in grace. Instead, she immediately approaches unto God, be it in a general sense or as far as each individual perfection is concerned. This is not done in a barren and lifeless manner by merely beholding and acknowledging them. Rather, the Lord occasionally permits her to taste the efficacy and salvation to be found, and at times gives her a foretaste of the beholding of God in heaven. The soul who beholds God in a lively and spiritual manner always cleaves to Christ, and in that frame she beholds God's all-sufficiency, goodness, love, holiness, sovereignty, majesty, glory, and omnipotence, doing all this while considering that this God is her God and that He is her all. This brings forth adoration, joy, love, and praise. In thus beholding God, the soul maintains a humble, quiet, and approving frame that is void of earthly concerns—and also is believing, meditating, going out in love, characterized by intimate communion, dependent, desirous for counsel, and making use of His strength and benefits as her own. . . .

The conclusion of all that we have stated as a warning against the [Quietists] is as follows: There is natural and spiritual religion, a natural and spiritual denial of self, a natural belonging to God as Creator and Preserver and a spiritual and true belonging to God as a reconciled Father in Christ, a natural and spiritual love to God and to man, and a natural and spiritual reflection upon and beholding of God. This is the crux of the matter; everything depends upon this, and salvation or condemnation is contingent upon this. We have made as clear a distinction as possible between the natural and the spiritual, and wish that every one to whom salvation is dear would know this distinction, reject that which is natural, and practice what is spiritual, rather than embrace immediately whatever has the appearance of spirituality.

Objection: Religion, self-denial, belonging to God, love for God and man, the beholding of God, etc., are indeed good things, and if a person is engaged in that which is good, we ought to love such a person. Is it necessary to be so careful in investigating the difference between the natural and the spiritual, and to weigh it upon the scale of a goldsmith? We ought not to judge each other in these matters, but tolerate one another. The one may do it in this manner and the other in that manner, but we must overlook the manner itself, considering it to be insignificant.

Answer: However, must we not have a heartfelt love for our fellow man? Is it love if we, in order to maintain peace and unity, allow our neighbor to run to his destruction in hell? Is it not love if we wish to lead him by the hand unto salvation and warn him about the way which leads to hell? And even if he becomes difficult and views you as dealing lovelessly with him and as being desirous to lord over him, is it therefore not love if we nevertheless wish to pull him away from his destruction? What I did in this chapter I have done out of love, in order to deliver souls from destruction and to direct them in the holy way unto salvation. If you do not wish to hear me, it will grieve me that you are intent on running to your destruction.

You are saying that the actions of all parties are one and the same; the manner in which they are done is a matter of insignificance, and therefore, we must allow everyone to proceed according to his own opinion. If, however, everything depends on the manner in which one proceeds, and if this determines whether something is either natural or spiritual, and leads either to damnation or salvation, then this is not a matter of insignificance. Love demands that we point this out to each other, and warn, protect, and correct each other. For example, in the realm of the natural, is it a matter of indifference to you whether you have a clear diamond in your ring or a piece of glass of the same size and appearance? It also glitters. Is it a matter of indifference to you if a coin has but the proper imprint, regardless of whether it is copper or gold—as long as it is red? You do search out the difference in the natural realm—either choosing or rejecting it—and will not allow yourself to be fooled by external appearance, and would you yet be careless in the spiritual realm upon which everything depends? If there are two rich persons, the one owning his goods righteously and the other unrighteously, will you consider them to be of equal status and say, "Rich is rich, and the matter of 'how' is not important; that should not be so strictly investigated or distinguished"? Should one not give consideration as to the "how" in spiritual matters, since everything depends on it? If there are two horses and the one is clean, vigorous, and fast, whereas the other is full of stinking abscesses, stiff, and halting miserably, would you then say, "A horse is a horse, life is life, and progress is progress"? Are there differences in the physical realm and must we yet approve of everything in the spiritual realm? Is it the same to you whether a dead horse teems with living worms, or whether it is alive? Is it the same to you whether you have your father, child, husband, or wife represented on a painting, or whether they are present in very person? Would you say, "It is all the same"? This is likewise true in the spiritual realm. Is it a matter of indifference as to whether a clock indicates the hour by her chime or whether this is indicated by a human voice? If some people wish to go to the same city and some travel upon the right way, whereas others enter upon a way which does not lead to the city, but to the land of the enemy, would you then say that they all have good intentions, and one must thus leave them alone in their choice of direction? Must we not warn those who have strayed?

I have presented an abundance of examples to convince everyone forcefully that everything does depend upon the "how" or the manner, and that primary attention must be given to this. Scripture says that we must take heed how we hear, and we must speak and act accordingly. Natural men who behold spiritual matters in a natural sense remain natural and unregenerate in the flesh, and the light they have only changes them as far as the degree of virtuousness is concerned—with which they cannot please God (Rom 8:8). They remain without Christ, without true saving faith, and therefore without spiritual life; all their reflections, self-denial, and love for God and men are but dead works. With all their illusions, spirituality (as they call it), and delightful daydreaming they will perish if they do not repent. Be warned, and may the Lord convict such persons and bring them to the right place. Take note of the following texts: "Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able" (Luke 13:24), since they are not upon the right way and do not seek to enter in the right manner. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Prov 16:25). Since they are of the opinion that they are correct, believing that the hidden and spiritual way to heaven has been found by them, there is but little possibility that they can be convinced of their error. "Verily I say unto you, that the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you ... but the publicans and the harlots believed Him" (Matt 21:31-32). Therefore, I warn you in love; do not stray any further, lest you perish. And you who are beginners in grace, and have been enticed by such natural beholding of God, self-denial, and love, I call out after you, "Return, return, O Shulamite; return, return, that we may look upon thee" (Song 6:13). May the Lord hear my prayer on your behalf.bbb

I have indeed anticipated that some of the godly in reading this warning would become concerned and doubt their state, thinking as follows: "If the unconverted also can come this far—that is, live in the beholding of God, in the denial of self, loving God and man, are determined to have God as their portion, and to commune with God as their God—do I even resemble them? How can I think to possess grace if I do not, so to speak, resemble them at all—neither in their activity, nor in their ecstatic speaking about those matters and about the Lord Jesus? I truly ask myself: "Do I have grace indeed?"

To this I answer that whatever they do in a natural manner, you do in a spiritual manner by the principle of spiritual knowledge and life which is within you. Even if they acted and spoke as you perceive they do (although they do not do so), you nevertheless have no reason to doubt your spiritual state, for a small, weak child is just as much a human being as the strongest man. In the church there are indeed men and fathers in Christ, and there are also weak children. Due to the faint resemblance to others, one may not draw the conclusion that one is neither gracious nor possessing grace. Rather, one must acknowledge that which he possesses and be desirous for growth.

Furthermore, your understanding of God and Christ, your prayers, your desires after God, your seeking after the Lord Jesus, your focusing upon God, and your deeds and exercises—all proceeding from this principle of life—exceed all their beholding of God, reflections, sinking away in God, losing themselves in God, and similar expressions. The difference is as great as the difference between a dead and a living person; it is incomparable. The difference is not one of degree but of very essence. The one is natural and the other spiritual; the one is but an illusion, a fabrication. They are but self-made images which you can observe as frequently as you wish, whereas the other is truth, Spirit, and a life emanating from the Holy Spirit. If you were familiar with their activity and the manner in which they behold God—however, they do not come to God, but imagine a God who is according to their wishes—and the manner in which they deny themselves, love, and speak, you would not desire such spirituality, but would reject it. You are also able to create natural images of God and mentally ascend higher and higher. If you yield to such natural imagination, however, you will readily perceive that this cannot delight you; it makes you colder and you will reject it. However, the least ray of God in the face of Christ, the least fleeing to Jesus and leaning upon Him will be incomparably sweeter to you than all that lifeless meditation. Therefore, rejoice quietly in your portion—however small it may seem to you—since it consists in light, life, truth, union with Christ, and love, and allow all those who have such elevated natural notions to go their way. Out of love for communion with Jesus and for His children, continue to be exercised with that spiritual principle which is according to the Word of God, and thank the Lord for your portion, which incomparably exceeds all their natural motions. Your spiritual principle cannot coalesce with theirs, since they are the very opposite of each other. To be but acquainted with their activities is sufficient to reject their principle and to flee from it. Consider but this one example: You love the godly because they love the Lord Jesus and are loved by Him, whereas you love other people in an entirely different manner from the children of God. You cannot be in agreement with all manner of false doctrine. They love indiscriminately, regardless of which religion a person may belong to. It is only the truly godly who stand firm in the faith, who are established in the truth, and who have intimate fellowship with God in the Spirit, whom they do not love. Rather, they abhor them and flee from them since their works, which are not upright but only of a natural disposition, are made manifest by the light of such. By this you can discern the rest of their doings. Be on your guard against this, and let your dealings between God and your soul be in simplicity and in truth. Let your eye continually be focused upon the Word of God whereby you have received spiritual light and life, which is also your continual nourishment and the rule for your life. Then you will proceed safely.

We have thus presented to you the fundamentals to which you must adhere in order to be safeguarded against the temptation of the [Quietists], which simultaneously serve as marks whereby they are discovered. We have therefore considered the following from two perspectives: love to God and man, the denial of self, belonging and being united to God, and the beholding of God. We have done so both from the side of the [Quietists] and the side of the godly, having demonstrated from the Word of God that their activity is but the natural activity of the unconverted by which they will perish; and that the activity in which the godly engage is rooted in God, is by the Holy Spirit, is according to the Word of God, and leads them to salvation.

That which has been said is sufficient to convince those poor misguided people who, desiring to approach unto God and become partakers of salvation, instead depart from God and enter upon the broad way of destruction. Oh, that the Lord would open their eyes and change their hearts so that they would forsake their foolishness and walk in the way of understanding!

That which has been said ought also to suffice as a warning for those who are inclined toward the ways of the [Quietists]. That is an easy way which agrees with man's nature and in which Satan leaves them alone, being able to safely lead them to hell in this way—for the truly godly have both their nature and the devil against them. Therefore, withdraw your foot from them, depart from them, and remove yourself from their snares. If you desire pure light and true godliness, remain with the church, follow the Word, and walk in straight paths.

It also ought to suffice to stir up the truly godly to walk in the way of the Lord with new courage and lifting up of the heart, and to let their light shine—to let it shine in demonstration of what truth is, what the efficacy of truth is, and what is the way of uprightness and holiness, so that the [Quietists] and their illusions may be put to shame. "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Pet 3:18). May the Lord send out His light and truth; may they lead and bring you unto His holy hill, and to His tabernacles (Ps 43:3).

I. Excursus XI: Hannah Whitall Smith: Higher Life Writer, Speaker on Sanctification, Developer of the Keswick Theology, Quaker Quietist and Universalist Heretic

Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, author of The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life and other devotional books, was in her day, and remains at this time, a very influential—indeed, probably the most influential—Higher Life writer on sanctification. Her views undergird and powerfully influence and mold the entire subsequent history of the Higher Life theology. She published The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life in 1875, a capstone of her and her husband's preaching of the Higher Life as "lay evangelists of the National Assocation for the Promotion of Holiness"[902] at the Conventions at Broadlands, Oxford, and Brighton that constituted the birth of the Keswick theology. The publication of her best-selling book coincided with the tremendous impact her preaching was having at that time in Britain.[903] Robert and Hannah were spreading the Higher Life not only "in London, but [also] in other cities such as Manchester, Nottingham, Leicester and Dublin, as well as various Continental European centers. Additionally, strategic doors were opening to them, such as being invited to meet dons and other senior members of Cambridge University to share their message."[904] As thousands of ministers assembled from not the British Isles only, but also France, Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Norway, Sweden, Austria, Italy, Spain, India, Russia, Persia, China, Australia, Israel, South Africa, and North America to learn the Higher Life from the Smiths at the Brighton Convention, Robert declared: "All Europe is at my feet!" There was much truth to his declaration,[905] although in leading venues such as the Oxford Convention[906] and "at Brighton . . . Hannah Smith['s] . . . daily Bible Readings were the main focus of interest and she was widely recognised as the leading spirit at the conference. Never shy about publicity, she observed that . . . she had a congregation larger than that of C. H. Spurgeon."[907] Her preaching brought many into the Higher Life.[908] Describing this period of time, Hannah wrote in her diary:

[902] Pg. 61, Aspects of Pentecostal-Charismatic Origins, ed. Vinson Synan. Cf. pg. 66. The National Association was a prominent perfectionist and second-blessing advocacy organization.

> In January 1874 I went over with our four children and joined my husband in England. . . . [T]he Lord gave us . . . wonderful openings . . . for preaching the Higher Christian Life to rich and poor. My inward experience continues, through it all, to be one of perfect rest and peace. My husband's health was mercifully restored, and the strain of my earthly sorrow was removed. The Lord saw that I had learned the lesson and He delivered me. And my earthly happiness has been unclouded since[.] . . . We returned last Sept. 1874 to America and this winter has been a time of busy work in Philadelphia for me. In March 1875, my husband went back to England, and in a week, I sail with the children to join him. A great work is opening before us there for this summer in large conventions calling for the promotion of Scriptural Holiness [the Keswick precursor Conventions], at which I have to take a prominent part, both in holding ladies meetings, and in

---

903 Pg. 23, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall.

904 Pg. 23, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall; cf. pg. 179, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874. Other predecessor Higher Life and perfectionist meetings are listed on pg. 328, ibid.

905 Pgs. 60-65, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith; cf. "Die Heiligungsbewegung," Chapter 6 of Perfectionism, vol. 2, Warfield; pg. 28, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall; pgs. 271, 358, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875; pg. 225, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.

906 At Oxford Mrs. Smith's Bible readings were technically for ladies, but "Gentlemen who chose to attend were not excluded, and many were present at this and the [other] hours devoted to her Scripture lessons" (pg. 65, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874).

907 Pg. 149, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall.

908 E. g., pg. 175, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.

> giving "Bible readings," as they are called to save the feelings of the dear brethren who are afraid to call it preaching.[909]

Her preaching and her person were very well received at these conferences, and her book The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life, which was really "old Quaker doctrine,"[910] was likewise positively received by those who adopted the Keswick teaching, leading, throughout the rest of her life, to "numberless calls . . . for preaching or giving Bible readings" all over America[911] and abroad. Mrs. Smith was regularly "preach[ing] in Quaker and other churches in England" in high demand, while also publishing further influential books.[912] Indeed, "H. W. Smith['s] The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life . . . is regarded as the classic presentation of Keswick teaching and was instrumental in the spread of the 'victorious life' movement that began at the first annual Convention for the Deepening of the Spiritual Life held at Keswick, England, in 1875."[913] "[I]t may be confidently said that . . . The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life . . . has never been superseded . . . [in] its teaching . . . by anything which has appeared since. This book has had a remarkable influence in connection with the Holiness Movement."[914] Indeed, Hannah came to teach the Keswick doctrine of her Christian's Secret as the "Superintendent of the Evangelistic and Bible Reading work" of the "Women's Christian Temperance Union," so that she had "direct influence over 60,000 Christian women, and

---

909 Journal, May 6, 1875, reproduced in the entry for July 22 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

910 Letter to a Friend, August 17, 1879, reproduced in the entry for September 21 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. In her autobiography, The Unselfishness of God, Hannah Smith devotes an entire chapter to proving that the Higher Life theology was Quakerism (pgs. 275-282, "The Life of Faith Quaker Doctrine.")

911 Journal, May 6, 1875, reproduced in the entry for July 23 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. Even after her husband's downfall, she continued preaching widely; for example, she records that she held "some meetings in a Presbyterian Church . . . the Presbyterian synod object[s] so to women, but the minister says he will 'whistle' at the synod if only he can get me!" (Letter to Daughter Mary, January 8, 1878, reproduced in the entry for August 15 of ibid). On another occasion she preached at a Methodist Holiness Camp Meeting in Ocean Grove, New Jersey, where the Methodists "endorsed this meeting fully" and "called it a 'Methodist class meeting led by a Quaker'" (Letter to Robert, August 9, 1879, reproduced in the entry for September 18 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

In light of Mrs. Smith's strong advocacy of women preachers, rejection of complementarian gender roles in the family, and deep-seated feminism in general, it is not surprising that in the Conference's early years the majority of Keswick missionaries were single women (pg. 114, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall).

912 December 26-27, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

913 Pg. 249, "B. B. Warfield and Lewis S. Chafer on Sanctification," Randall Gleason. Journal of the Evangelical Theological Society 40:2 (June 1997) 241-256. "Hannah Whitall Smith's The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life is characterized as 'one of the most remarkable settings forth of the victorious life you can find anywhere.'" "Victory in Christ," p. 94, Trumbull, cited in "The Victorious Life," Chapter 5 of Perfectionism, vol. 2, Warfield.

914 Pg. 224, The Keswick Convention: Its Message, its Method, and its Men, ed. Harford.

indirect influence over all their congregations." She testified: "[T]he Lord has given me my parish among them."[915] Indeed, she wrote: "ever so many of [these women were] saying that they had learned the secret from my book "The Christian's Secret." It is perfectly wonderful how that book has gone over this whole country. Wherever I go I am met with stories of its value and blessing. So many people even here have told me that it is 'next to their Bibles.'"[916] While it was reckoned by many as of great enough value to be always next to one's Bible, Hannah's book was most selective in its presentation of Biblical teaching, never citing verses such as Philippians 2:12,[917] for the Apostolic command to act with fear and trembling, and the mention of working, did not fit Mrs. Smith's emphasis upon personal happiness, ease, and sanctification by faith alone. In any case, her book is properly recognized as foundational and paradigmatic for the Keswick doctrine of sanctification, so much so that her "book . . . for many years, was the most-read devotional book in the world."[918] The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life "had not only a phenomenal sale all through [Mrs. Smith's] lifetime . . . [and] was reissued again and again, and translated not only into all the major languages of the world, but even into obscure dialects of half-civilized tribes . . . [in] every part of the globe."[919] Hannah W.

---

915 Letter to Anna, November 5, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 28 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. One Woman's Christian Temperance Union leader even wished for Hannah to lead a "W. C. T. U. School of the Prophetesses" (Letter to Pricilla, October 1884, reproduced in the entry for December 24 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

916 Hannah testified thus while writing from the Christian Temperance Union (CTU) meeting on October 25, 1882. She explained:

> Every day, from eleven to twelve, right in the midst of our business meeting we have an hour for a devotional meeting when we tell the story of the life of faith to the crowds who have come in to witness our proceedings. I spoke to them yesterday on "Knowing God" for ourselves and then showing Him to others. And I was followed by a great many short words of testimony as to the blessedness of it, ever so many of them saying that they had learned the secret from my book "The Christian's Secret."
>
> It is perfectly wonderful how that book has gone over this whole country. Wherever I go I am met with stories of its value and blessing. So many people even here have told me that it is "next to their Bibles." . . . The faces are shining with peace and they tell me that it has all come through that book.

Hannah further described that CTU setting in which her book molded the spirituality and had been so very influential:

> Our platform is as broad as humanity; we take in everybody, no matter what their 'views,' or church relationships. . . . It is such a testimony to the reality of the religion which embraces all humanity. (Letter to Mary, October 25, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 25 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter)

A universalist, non-doctrinal religion that embraces all people, regenerate and unregenerate, Catholic, Protestant, Muslim, and Hindu, despite the "C" of the CTU, in a simple desire to be happy, fit Hannah W. Smith and her Keswick classic very well.

917 "Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling."

918 December 31, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

919 Pg. 13, Religious Fanaticism: Extracts from the Papers of Hannah Whitall Smith, ed. Ray Strachey. New York, NY: AMS Press, 1976, repr. of 1928 London ed.

Smith's writings "have done [m]ore than any publications ever written to extend," in the eyes of advocates of the Higher Life, "the knowledge of the truth of sanctification."[920] Her preaching and writing have had an inestimably great impact on the ideas of many millions in worldwide Christendom.

Hannah wrote her book out of a conviction that Higher Life or Keswick doctrine was solid Quaker teaching. She was convinced that "the early leaders of her own society of Friends [Quakers] had been preaching the same" Higher Life theology "which she was hearing about from . . . Methodist writers such as John Wesley" and "the Holiness advocates of her day."[921] Certainly the classic Quaker doctrine of sanctification is either extremely similar or entirely identical to the doctrine taught by the Keswick convention.[922] Hannah was confident that her Higher Life teaching was simply classic, unreformed Quakerism.

How, then, did Mrs. Smith come to write her bestselling and extremely influential Quaker and Keswick classic? She explained:

> [M]y book, The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life . . . was written simply and only to oblige my husband, who was editing a monthly religious paper at the time, and who begged me each month for an article. I had no feeling whatever of being "called" to write it, nor that I was being "guided" in any way. . . . I said . . . that I would only write one [article], and that he need not expect me to continue. For some reason, however, my article excited more interest than anything else in the paper, and he begged me so much to go on writing that I finally consented to give him an article every month. . . . [T]hese articles, collected in a book, made the Christian's Secret of a Happy Life[.] . . . But these articles were dragged from me, so to speak, at the point of the bayonet, for I never wrote them in any month until the printers were clamoring for their copy. I could not be said, therefore, to have had any great feeling or sense of being called to write them, beyond the fact that I did it to oblige my husband[.] . . . [T]he book was not written under any special feeling of being called to write it, nor with any idea that it was in the least an especially religious service. I did it simply and only to oblige my husband, and that was all there was to it. I didn't even pray much about it, nor had I any thought that I was doing a work for the Lord[.][923]

Indeed, Hannah was yet more candid in writing to her daughter:

> [M]y most successful book [The Christian's Secret] was written so to speak at the point of the bayonet, without one ray of enthusiasm, and hating to do it all the time. . . . I must repeat that I did write "The Christian's Secret" at the point of the bayonet, as it were. I did not want to write it at all, and only did it at father's earnest entreaties. . . . [H]e begged me so hard that at last I said I would write one article and no more, if he would give up drinking wine at dinner. Then when that article was published everyone clamoured for another, and father begged, and I was good-natured and went on, but under a continual protest. And the best chapter of all was written . . . when I was

---

920 "The 'Higher Life' Movement," Chapter 4 in Perfectionism, vol. 2, B. B. Warfield.

921 See January 19-20, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

922 Cf. the article "Justification and Sanctification" in the Orthodox Quaker Declaration of Faith Issued by the Richmond Conference in 1887 (Elec. acc. http://www.quakerinfo.com/rdf.shtml), where both a Higher Life theology is affirmed and the Quaker heresy that justification is by the impartation of righteousness rather than imputed righteousness is confessed.

923 Pgs. 251-253, Religious Fanaticism: Extracts from the Papers of Hannah Whitall Smith, ed. & intr. Ray Strachey.

> . . . as near cursing as a person who had experienced the "blessings of holiness" could dare to be! So . . . books can be successful even if they are ground out with groans and curses[.][924]

Thus, Hannah W. Smith did not pray much about her bestseller, nor think that she was doing a work for the Lord by writing it, but simply wanted her husband, at the pinnacle of his work as a Higher Life preacher, to stop drinking alcohol at dinner. She had not a ray of enthusiasm for the book, but emphatically hated writing it, and even ground out the best chapter with groans and curses. Nevertheless, with what appears to be assistance from the supernatural realm, her book, and its Higher Life theology, spread like wildfire and was received with overwhelming acclaim. So wonderful, she came to conclude, was the Christian's Secret of a Happy Life that she wrote concerning it: "Every line I write is a pure favor to the world[.]"[925] The book was her doing—it was marvelous in her eyes.

Nevertheless, even as she wrote her bestselling and paradigmatic Keswick book without much prayer and without thinking about doing any work for God by composing it, but filled with hatred, groans, and curses, Hannah recognized that the kind of religion she led others to adopt could be preached and promulgated by ungodly people who, without any blessing from God, simply were putting on a religious show. After the downfall of her husband Robert P. Smith on account of his promulgation of erotic bride mysticism during the Keswick precursor Conventions,[926] the Smiths returned to America. Upon their arrival, Dr. Charles Cullis, who "had stood by Robert more nobly and grandly than any other human being"[927] when Mr. Smith was exposed for his erotic mysticism, sought to restore Robert by having him and his wife preach some meetings. The "sole object [of the meetings] was to reinstate Robert in the eyes of the church and the world. . . . [I]t ought not to have been called a 'Convention for the promotion of holiness,' but a 'Convention for the promotion of Pearsall Smith.'"[928] Hannah Smith wrote to a friend about these meetings:

> I felt utterly indifferent to the meeting in every way . . . I f[ound] no pleasure in it whatever. So we made no preparations for the meeting, we neither studied, nor prayed, nor meditated, nor in fact thought about it at all. . . . We both of us hated it cordially, and felt we should be only too thankful when it was over.

---

924 Pgs. 172-174, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Letters to her daughter, Mary Berenson, January 1, 1905 & February 25, 1905. Italics retained from the original.

925 Pg. 23, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, reproducing a Letter to her Husband, Robert Pearsall Smith, April 27, 1875. Italics in original.

926 The erotic Spirit baptism doctrine promulgated by the Pearsall Smiths will be explicated in further detail below.

927 Pg. 32, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, reproducing Letter to Mrs. Anna Shipley, August 8, 1876.

928 Pg. 32, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, reproducing Letter to Mrs. Anna Shipley, August 8, 1876.

> It was in no sense a religious or "pious" undertaking on our parts. We were neither fervent, nor prayerful, nor concerned, nor anything that we ought to have been. Thou sees[929] I am telling the honest truth. And I really cannot imagine a meeting begun in a worse frame of mind that [sic] ours was, according to all one's preconceived notions of what is the right and suitable thing. And in precisely the same frame of mind we went through the meeting. It was all a wearisome performance to us. We did it as if we had crossed over an impassable gulf. The flood had come since the last time [when Higher Life meetings were held], and changed everything for us. There was no interest, no enthusiasm. The meetings were a bore; the work was like a treadmill. We counted the hours until we could get away, and hailed the moment of emancipation with unspeakable joy. . . . [We knew we had] indifference and want of every sort of proper qualification for Christian work, which I have described before[.] . . . I was utterly unmoved; and both Robert and I came away more confirmed than ever in our feeling of entire relief from everything of the kind. We are done! Somebody else may do it now.

However, despite the fact that neither Robert nor Hannah Smith could stand being at the meetings, the power from the spirit world that was evident in their earlier ministry was more abundant than ever:

> I . . . am compelled to record that the meeting was a perfect success. There was just the same power and blessing as at Oxford or Brighton, only on a smaller scale because of the meeting being smaller. There was every sign of the continual presence of the Spirit. Souls were converted, backsliders restored, Christians sanctified, and all present seemed to receive definite blessings. Dr. Cullis and many others say that it was the best meeting ever held in this country. And it really was a good meeting, even I, uninterested as I was, could see that. There was just the same apparent wave of blessing that swept over our English meetings. And Robert and I never worked more effectually. He had all his old power in preaching and leading meetings, and the very self-same atmosphere of the Spirit was with him as used to be in England. As for me, thee knows I am not much given to tell of my own successes, but in this case, in order that thee may have all the facts, I have to tell thee that I was decidedly "favored" as Friends say. In fact I don't believe I ever was as good. All who had heard me before said so.
>
> The fuss that was made over me was a little more than even in England. The preachers fairly sat at my feet, figuratively speaking, and constantly there kept coming to me testimonies of definite blessings received while I spoke. The second time I spoke a Democratic Editor was converted and consecrated on the spot; and I could scarcely get a minute to myself for the enquirers who fairly overwhelmed me. . . . I had to write all this, and thee must tear it right up, but how could thee know it unless I told thee[.] . . . For who would have dreamed of such an outcome to the indifference and want of every sort of proper qualification for [Christian] work, which I have described beforehand? . . . They all talked to me most solemnly about how dreadful it was in me to think of giving up public work[.] . . . We had to refuse lots of urgent invitations to hold meetings in various places, but we did it without a longing thought, only too thankful to be released. . . .
>
> The one satisfaction of the meeting to us was this, and it was a satisfaction, that Robert was treated with all the old deference and respect, and that no one even seemed to think of or remember the English scandals, and Robert felt that it was a complete reinstatement of himself in the eyes of the church and the world. Our object in going to the meeting was accomplished . . . it will wipe out all the wretched English blot, and put him right once more. And then henceforth home and home life for us.

Personal holiness and genuine blessing from the Holy Spirit were not required for the type of religion spread by Hannah and Robert Smith. Their Higher Life doctrine could be spread by both knowingly unconsecrated Christians who were just putting on a weary performance and by unconverted persons. Hannah continued:

---

929 The use of the archaic English pronoun in this fashion was typical among the Quakers of Hannah Smith's day.

> And now, WHAT does thee think of it all? I think one of two things, but which one I think, I don't know. Perhaps thee can tell me. Either I was awfully wicked in the whole matter, and God was not in it anywhere, and all the success was by force of natural gifts and talents. Or else I was awfully good, so good as to have lost sight of self to such a degree as to be only a straw wafted on the wind of the Spirit, and so consecrated as not to be able to form a desire even, except that the will of God might be fully done.
>
> I waver about myself continually. Sometimes I feel sure I have progressed wonderfully, and that my present sphinx-like calm and indifference to everything whether inward or outward except the will of God, is very grand. . . . I really don't much care what His will is. . . . And then again I think I am an utterly irreligious and lazy fatalist, with not a spark of the divine in me.[930] I do wish I could find out which I am. But at all events my orthodoxy has fled to the winds. I am Broad, Broader, Broadest! So broad that I believe everything is good, or has a germ of good in it, and "nothing to be refused," if it be received with thankfulness.
>
> I agree with everybody, and always think it likely everybody's "view" is better than my own. I hold all sorts of heresies, and feel myself to have got out into a limitless ocean of the love of God that overflows all things. My theology is complete, if you but grant me an omnipotent and just Creator. I need nothing more.[931] All the tempests in the various religious teapots around me do seem so far off, so young, so green, so petty! I know I was there once, it must have been ages ago, and it seems impossible. "God is love," comprises my whole system of ethics. And, as thou says, it seems to take in all. . . . I guess He means us to be good human beings in this world, and nothing more. . . . There is certainly a very grave defect in any doctrine that universally makes its holders narrow and uncharitable, and this is always the case with strict so-called orthodoxy. Whereas, as soon as Christian love comes in, the bounds widen infinitely. I find that everyone who has travelled this highway of holiness for any length of time, has invariably cut loose from its old moorings.[932] I bring out my heresies to such, expecting reproof, when lo! I find sympathy. We are "out on the ocean sailing," that is certain. And if it is the ocean of God's love, as I believe, it is grand.
>
> But, enough! Now, what will thee do with it all?[933]

Hannah saw that her Higher Life doctrine did not require the blessing of the Spirit of God and that it led people to reject Christian orthodoxy for ever greater heresy. While she was not willing to commit to the truth because of her unwillingless to evaluate everything by Scripture alone, she was correct when she opined: "I was awfully wicked in the whole

---

930 That is, without the Divine Seed of Quakerism.

931 That is, Jesus Christ was not necessary, Mrs. Smith thought. Note that this satisfaction with a bare creative deity, a satisfication with a god other and less than the Triune Jehovah who has brought redemption through His incarnate Son, was Hannah W. Smith's expressed doctrine immediately after the 1874-5 Broadlands, Oxford, and Brighton Conventions. One cannot maintain that she was solidly orthodox at the time she founded the Keswick theology and merely became a heretic, say, some decades later.

932 That is, the adoption of the Higher Life leads to the disowning of Christian orthodoxy.

933 Pgs. 32-36, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to Mrs. Anna Shipley, August 8, 1876. Italics and capitalization in original. See also Letter to a Friend, August 8, 1876, reproduced in the entries for August 2-4 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. A portion of the letter not reproduced by Logan is found in Dieter. Hannah elsewhere wrote: "The truth is my 'broadness' embraces every soul that is reaching out after God and every instrumentality that helps any to find Him, no matter how different it may be from my own views and ways"—that is, as long as one is "reaching after God," Christianity, Hinduism, Buddhism, animism, or any other system of belief was acceptable (Letter to a Friend, May 24, 1880, reproduced in the entry for October 10 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

matter, and God was not in it anywhere and all the success was because of our natural gifts and talents." Both Mrs. Smith and her husband possessed tremendous natural powers and salesmanship abilities which they used to great success.[934] Mrs. Smith was also correct that her sphinxlike indifference was pagan fatalism,[935] irreligious, and evidence that she had nothing of God in her. Describing the powers that brought her to be leading meetings and services continually, Hannah wrote: "There seems to be something occult about it."[936] Nonetheless, she continued on her path without care or concern, feeling happy. Mr. Smith recognized the overwhelming evidence provided by his last "successful" meeting that the Holy Spirit was not in his work at all, but that his success was simply natural; his apostasy from the profession of Christianity to agnosticism following in due course.[937] Mrs. Smith, on the other hand, was not willing to recongize that all her Higher Life agitation had been done without any real blessing by God, and so she retained her belief in the Higher Life and in a deity, while her orthodoxy, such as it was, went to the winds. She could be satisfied without the incarnate Christ,[938]

---

934 Logan Pearsall Smith described the natural powers of salesmanship possessed by his father Robert P. Smith as follows:

> My father was a man of fine presence, and of a sanguine, enthusiastic temperament[.] . . . He was, above all, a magnificent salesman; and traveling all over the United States, and offering the firm's wares [the glass manufacturing firm Robert worked with before he became a Higher Life preacher] to the chemists of the rapidly expanding Republic, he exercised upon those apothecaries the gifts of persuasion and blandishment, almost of hypnotization, which were destined later, in European and more exalted spheres, to produce some startling results [in his Higher Life work]. . . . My father . . . possessed the hypnotic power of swaying great audiences[.] (pgs. 32, 72 Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith)

935 The sphinxlike indifference of Hannah W. Smith was radically different from the attitude of the Lord Jesus Christ. Mrs. Smith declared: "I utterly refuse to let myself indulge in grief for my children who have left me [in death.] . . . It is really disobedience . . . to indulge in grief" (Letter to Priscilla, January 28, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 11 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). "She had lost her elder son . . . her heart was untroubled" (pg. 49, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910). Contrast Mrs. Smith's attitude with that of the Lord Jesus Christ: "When Jesus therefore saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping which came with her, he groaned in the spirit, and was troubled[.] . . . Jesus wept. Then said the Jews, Behold how he loved him!" (John 11:33-36).

936 Pg. 133, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Letter to her Daughter, Mary Costelloe, October 29, 1896.

937 Logan Pearsall Smith wrote: "After this 'scamp meeting' . . . as Dr. Cullis wittily called it . . . and the disillusion it brought, in spite of its success, my father became more sympathetic to my grandfather's want of faith; and this feeling was much increased [as time continued to pass]" (pgs. 66-69, Unforgotten Years).

938 One is not surprised that Hannah was also sympathetic to and ready to reject the orthodox doctrine of the Council of Chalcedon on the Person of Christ and His two natures for the heretical and idolatrous kenotic theory as expressed by Godet, that "the Church doctrine of the two natures does not perfectly set forth the sense of the Scriptures . . . the Scriptures do not teach the presence of the divine nature with its divine attributes in Jesus on earth. The expression in John 1:14 conveys the idea of a divine subject reduced to a human state, but not of two states, divine and human, co-existing" (pg. 399, The Humiliation of Christ in its Physical, Ethical, and Official Aspects, A. B. Bruce. Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1900). Hannah Smith explained how the Higher Life led her against Biblical and Chalcedonian Christology:

considering dotrines such as His Deity, crucifixion, and resurrection as mere tempests in a religious teapot. She could be satisfied also without the church.[939] She could even be satisfied with the piety of mystical Hindu syncretism or Buddhism,[940] as long as she had a

---

> I must read Godet . . . [for] his views of Christ . . . I am not at all shocked at what you tell me about them; and it would be just like our God to take our place really and actually, and share our lot even in its limitations. I think I would have done it if I were in His place. . . . Anna, when once the soul has begun to know God, old prejudices must go! And before the two grand facts of His justice and His love, all the old creeds and notions vanish like clouds before sunshine. . . . I cannot express how thankful I am for the relentless pressure my dear Methodist friends put me under years ago on this matter of consecration. (Letter to Mrs. Shipley, 1878, reproduced in the entry for September 8 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

Hannah was sympathetic to the kenotic theory, for, even if it was not taught in the Bible, she would have followed it if she were God. In any case, at least she had a Divine seed in her, as Quakerism taught.

939 "Somehow my two summers out in the wilds of nature, with no meetings and no religious influences, only God and His works, have been more helpful in my interior life than any other thing I have ever known" (Letter to Anna, November 24, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 29 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). Contrast the attitude of King David towards the instituted worship of the Lord: "How amiable are thy tabernacles, O LORD of hosts! My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the LORD: my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God. . . . For a day in thy courts is better than a thousand" (Psalm 84:1-2, 10).

940 Her attitude toward a syncretistic blending of Hinduism and Christianity is evident in her view of Chunder Sen. "In 1857 the young Keshub Chunder Sen (1838–84) joined the society . . . Brahmo Samaj (Society of Brahma), which taught theism and rationality against the background of Indian mysticism[.] . . . Later he formed a new group, the Brahmo Samaj of India," which combined Hindu mysticism with "social Christianity" and "adopted some Christian teachings" while remaining fundamentally Hindu (pg. 549, The Encyclopedia of Christianity, vol. 2, E. Fahlbusch & G. W. Bromiley. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1999-2003). Hannah Smith viewed this Hindu idolator and syncretist as a great spiritual teacher, and affirmed that, led by her Inner Light, she worshipped the same god, the god of mysticism, the god of this world (Ephesians 2:1-3), the god that spoke to the Quakers and gave them revelations that went beyond the Bible, as the Hindu mystic:

> I have read Chunder Sen, and do feel just like sailing for India to see him. What a grand revelation that man has had! It stirred me to the very depths. Oh, beloved, how it shames us who have such a blaze of light all our lives long! Where did we take the fatal turning that has led us so far astray? . . . I thank God however that the light has come at last; and like Chunder Sen I say that the "residue of my independence has been swallowed up by the all-conquering all-absorbing grace of God, and I am sold forever!" How wonderful that word, "No independence" is! [That is, both Chunder Sen's Hindu mysticism and Hannah Smith's Higher Life mysticism practice Quietism.] It cuts down to the root of everything; and yet is so full of life, Divine life, that it seems to bring the soul out into the grandest place of liberty.
>
> It seems just like one of God's coincidences that I had been learning the very lessons in regard to this which Chunder Sen's announces. I know the "I am" he knew [that is, the pagan Hindu "I am."]. And God has said to me: "I am your church and doctrine; I am your creed and your immortality, your earth, your Heaven, your food, your raiment, your treasure here and in Heaven. Believe in Me." To me it is a life, a free, independent, Divine life, back of all forms, an absolute, universal life, that can fit into any form, or can exist without form. [That is, any god, any worship, whether that of Jehovah or of the vilest idol, can fit into her mysticism.] It would be true then that circumcision availeth nothing, nor uncircumcision. That is, one might enter into the form or might remain without, just as led by the Spirit at the time. I cannot but think this is the deeper insight into the truth; and the more I look to the Lord about it, the clearer are my convictions. Well, I must follow the light, my light, that which is given to me, [that is, the Inner Light,] even though it separates me from all whom I love! And sometimes I think it may. . . . Am I to reckon on God and believe He has answered my prayer [for guidance apart from submission to sola Scriptura], or am I to think He has utterly disregarded it, and has left me a prey to delusions and errors? . . . [T]he Lord has had to put to death all my traditional views one after another . . . I am amazed sometimes to find out what a genuine "early Quaker" I am. (Letter to Anna, September 11, 1879, reproduced in the entries for September 22-24 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter)

Likewise, her spiritual "secret" was inquired about, she affirmed, by "Siddartha" (Letter to Anna, February 5, 1880, reproduced in the entry for October 2 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, simple Creator. When Mrs. Smith could dilute the whole counsel of God contained in the complete Bible to a simple and mushy "God is love"[941]—whoever and whatever God is—and when those who "travelled on this highway" of the Higher Life with her "for any length of time" ended up jettisoning orthodoxy also, it should have been glaringly and horribly obvious to her upon self-examination (2 Corinthians 13:5) that her religion was earthly, sensual, and devilish.

Hannah was able, in part, to continue to preach the Higher Life even after facing the evidence that all her work was unspiritual and devoid of the smiles of heaven because she flatly rejected self-examination. In direct contradiction to the command of 2 Corinthians 13:5[942] and other Biblical passages, Mrs. Smith proclaimed that "self-examination . . . seems to be spiritual" but in reality causes "injury and harm"—indeed, it is "about as disastrous as anything."[943] Consequently, as she learned from "Fenelon," she counselled others: "[G]ive up all future self-reflective acts," for this was a key to spiritual "liberty."[944] At the Brighton Convention, for example, she boldly preached against self-examination, distorting 2 Corithians 13:5 in a major way.[945] ed. Dieter), that is, "Siddartha Gautama" or Buddha, founder of Buddhism, which "teaches that enlightenment may be reached by elimination of earthly desires and of the idea of the self" (Concise Oxford English Dictionary, 11th ed., C. Soanes & A. Stevenson. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2004). Buddha also taught the sort of Quietism affirmed by Mrs. Smith.

---

941 The affirmation "God is love" in 1 John 4:8 is not an affirmation about an empty attribute of the generic deity with which Mrs. Smith could be satisfied. The verse speaks about the loving nature of the Father of Jesus Christ. God the Father is love, and He concretely demonstrated His character as love by giving His Son as a substitute for sinners on the cross, graciously applying the salvation purchased there to His people by the Holy Spirit (1 John 4:9-14; cf. 5:7). 1 John 4:8 is about the concretely manifested love of this particular God, the only true God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

942 "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" (2 Corinthians 13:5; cf. Psalm 26:2; 119:59; 139:23-24; Lamentations 3:40; Ezekiel 18:28; Haggai 1:5-7; Matthew 7:5; 1 Corinthians 11:28-31; Galatians 6:4; Hebrews 12:15; 1 John 3:20-21).

943 Letter to a Friend, 1863; April 10, 1878; Letter to Daughter Mary, May 12, 1878; Letter to Daughter, Atlantic City, May 25, 1878; reproduced in the entries for January 30, August 17, 24, 28, of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

944 Pg. 65, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to Miss Priscilla Mounsey, January 22, 1882 & Letter To Priscilla, January 22, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 9 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. Hannah Smith often warned others, "Don't indulge in self-reflective acts" (Letter to Mary Beck, May 14, 1874, Letter, 1866, reproduced in the entry for July 12 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

945 Pg. 318, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875.

After all, she had "suffered so much from" self-examination that she wrote: "I have at last given it up forever. Do the same, dear friend[.]"[946] Rather than practicing self-examination, one is to "lear[n] the precious lesso[n] . . . of knowing the inward Voice, and following it without reserve. . . . For myself, I find that the sweetness of a life of obedience to this inward Voice is greater than I can express," as confirmed by her feelings of happiness and by the Quaker "Isaac Pennington."[947] Hannah sought to come to a "more complete surrender to . . . the inward voice . . . than ever" as she plunged ever deeper into the Higher Life; her "great hunger" was for this "voice."[948] Thus, by rejecting self-examination, she could remain deluded and happy despite in the devilish nature of her religion, as its terribly unsound character was only obvious to those who recognized human depravity, rejected the Inward Voice, cleaved to sola Scriptura, and carefully applied the Bible to their own spiritual experience, because of their own personal regeneration. Hannah W. Smith rejected such a careful and watchful attitude, since the conflict between the Bible and her experience hindered her feelings of happiness and made her feel like she was suffering; following the Inward Voice instead made her feel very happy, at least at the time—whether she was happy upon her death is another question.

As well as the paradigmatic Higher Life or Keswick writer, Mrs. Smith and her husband were Quakers, "birthright member[s] of the Society of Friends"[949] who sought to lead her children into the Quaker way.[950] The Smiths had Quaker ancestors reaching back to the days of William Penn.[951] Hannah's "father . . . was . . . a very strict Quaker . . . Robert's family were also of good Quaker stock."[952] Indeed, Hannah, her "parents, and [even her] grandparents" were "birthright Friend[s],"[953] and Hannah was raised in 946 Letter to a Friend, April 10, 1878, reproduced in the entry for August 17 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

---

947 Letter to Miss Beck, December 5, 1878, reproduced in the entry for September 9 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

948 Letter to Sisters, August 14, 1879, reproduced in the entry for September 19 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

949 Pg. 11, Religious Fanaticism: Extracts from the Papers of Hannah Whitall Smith, ed. Ray Strachey. New York, NY: AMS Press, 1976, repr. of 1928 London ed; cf. also pg. 231 & Remarkable Relations, Barbara Strachey, pg. 19.

950 See, e. g., Letter to Daughter Mary, January 1, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 1 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter; pg. 79, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith, references Logan's education in Quaker schools all the way through, and inclusive of, college.

951 See pgs. 4-35, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith.

952 Pg. 20, Remarkable Relations, Strachey.

953 Pg. 36, The Secret Life of Hannah Whitall Smith, Henrie.

"traditional Quaker mysticism."[954] While, Mr. Smith was for a portion of his life a member of the Presbyterian denomination,[955] even in his most theologically orthodox years he was close enough to Quakerism that, for example, around the time of his leadership of the Keswick precursor Conventions he could send his "children and their nurse . . . to stay for the whole summer with the Barclays, a wealthy Quaker family, at Monkhams, their home in Essex . . . [where] the girls shared the Barclay children's governess and tutors."[956] Furthermore, Mrs. Smith "could not follow . . . Robert . . . [in joining] the Presbyterians . . . as she found their views against the preaching of women unacceptable."[957] Indeed, Hannah was too heretical even for many Quakers: "In 1867 . . . Hannah . . . tried to start a little Quaker Meeting in Millville, which, not surprisingly, turned out too heretical to be approved, and she searched the Scriptures to support her strong feeling that she was called upon to preach."[958] Nevertheless, by "the 1870s Hannah had no church affiliation and . . . had begun to attend Friend's Meeting again,"[959] as she "had become more or less reconciled . . . [with] the Quakers."[960] During some periods of their married life when, in the words of Hannah, "Robert [was] enthusiastic over [men such as a local] Baptist clergyman . . . because he preaches such a pure gospel," Hannah nonetheless noted, "I cannot enjoy close contact with such people";[961] Quaker ministers, who did not preach a pure gospel, were better.[962] The teachings of the Pearsall Smiths cannot be understood properly without a consideration of the Quakerism that permeated their religious background.

Hannah believed that the "Friends . . . were especially raised up by the Lord to teach this truth" of the Higher Life, and she "long[ed] to see Quakerism the formost in the great battlefield" for it. She wrote: "More and more I am convinced that Quakerism 954 Introduction, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter; see also after January 7 for Robert P. Smith's heritage among "prominent Philadelphia Quakers.")

---

955 Pg. 17, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

956 Pg. 45, Remarkable Relations, Barbara Strachey.

957 Pgs. 25-26, Remarkable Relations, Strachey. A German Reformed minister did, however, administer infant baptism to Mrs. Smith (pg. 35, The Secret Life of Hannah W. Smith, Marie Henry). Such an event by no means changes the plain historical fact that she was firmly entrenched in Quakerism for the entirety of her time as a public speaker, teacher of men, Higher Life crusader, and formative writer in the Keswick movement, although she was not always specifically a member of a Quaker assembly.

958 Pg. 30, Remarkable Relations, Barbara Strachey; cf. pg. 55 for Hannah's continued public speaking.

959 Pg. 68, The Secret Life of Hannah Whitall Smith, Marie Henry.

960 Pg. 55, Remarkable Relations, Strachey.

961 Pg. 29, Remarkable Relations, Strachey; Italics in original. Compare 1 John 3:14.

962 Cf. Letter to Sarah, Marcy 12, 1885, reproduced in the entry for December 25 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

was in its first founding pure, unadulterated Christianity. Every advanced truth that the Lord teaches me, I find is only a return to pure Quakerism."[963] Before her rise as a preacher of the Higher Life, at the pinnacle of her preaching work with Robert that led to the founding of the Keswick Convention, and throughout the rest of her life, she remained a devoted Quaker.[964]

> Mrs. Smith . . . remained essentially a Quaker throughout life, or, as it would be more accurate to say, grew steadily more and more Quaker. There is scarcely a distinctively Quaker conception which does not find expression at some time or other in her writings. . . . [E]ven the fundamental mystical [Quaker heresy of] the "divine seed" is quite clearly enunciated and the characteristic Higher Life teaching developed out of it. . . . Mrs. Smith became perfectly well aware, then, that her teaching was in its essence genuinely Quaker teaching: and she delighted to present it in its organic relation with Quaker teaching.[965]

The Higher Life theology she founded was simply the theology of Quakerism.

Since she did not have to examine herself by the teaching of Scripture, Mrs. Smith could set Biblical doctrine and practice against each other, reject the former, exalt the latter, and feel happy in her deluded state. Hannah wrote:

> How true the old Friends were when they used to tell us that it was not what we believed but how we lived that was the real test of salvation, and how little we understood them! . . . And as thee says, my opinions about God may all be wrong, but if my loyalty to Him is real it will not matter. It seems as if it would be enough just to say, "God is," and, "Be good," and then all would be said. [That is, even Deism combined with mere morality would be acceptable.] It is the practical things that interest me now[.][966]

---

963 Letter to a Friend, August 22, 1880, reproduced in the entries for October 14-15 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

964 Thus, for example, a few days before the Brighton Convention, Robert having just concluded his continental preaching tour in 1875, when "it seem[ed] as if the whole German and Swiss Churches were moved to their very center by his message" of the Higher Life, Mr. and Mrs. Smith would still attend the Friends Meeting with Mr. Cowper-Temple, where Hannah would preach to people who had come to town to attend the Brighton Convention (pg. 26, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to her parents, John and Mary Whitall, May 26, 1875; cf. also pg. 29). The idea that one would need to separate from and reject Quakerism as heresy to be part of the Higher Life or Keswick Conventions was absolutely unthinkable.

965 Pgs. 494-497, "The 'Higher Life' Movement," Chapter 4 in Perfectionism, vol. 2, Benjamin B. Warfield. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Books, 2003 (reprint of 1932 Oxford ed.). Warfield downplays Robert P. Smith's Quaker background, but it is unreasonable to do so when, for instance, Mr. Smith did not renounce the Quakerism into which he was born as a false religion and he had his "steadily more and more Quaker" wife write Higher Life articles for him, such as those which became Mrs. Smith's bestselling Secret of a Happy Life.

966 Letter to Anna, August 4, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 18 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. Since any deity was acceptable to Mrs. Smith, it is not surprising that the pioneering psychologist, pragmatist, and finite god proponent William James was friends with the Pearsall Smiths, nor that, in the words of Logan Smith, James "was an admirer of my mother's religious writings" (pg. 114, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith; Logan notes that James also "enlisted my father's assistance in the formation of an American Society for Psychical Research.").

She did not know whether what she taught people was sound, or whether it was true—but she knew that it made people feel comfortable, and this was enough.[967] Indeed, she wrote that her first duty in life was not to glorify God, but to be comfortable: "I consider it my first duty in life to make myself as comfortable as is possible[.]"[968] After all, as Hannah explained at the Brighton Convention, the Holy Spirit is not "one to make us unhappy"—thoughts that make one unhappy "always come from Satan."[969] She did not seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness (Matthew 6:33), but sought first the secret of a happy life. Feeling happy—eudemonism—was what was truly important. Her son Logan narrated:

> When in her later life [Mrs. Smith] came to be a sort of mother-confessor to the many people who used to come to her for advice in their perplexities, her advice was always, she told us, for them to do the thing they really and seriously wanted to do. . . . "But surely, Mother," [her children] sometimes protested, "this is dangerous advice to give to people!" "Well," she would answer, "our Heavenly Father knows the kind of advice I give, so if He sends people to me it must be because He wants them given this advice. Besides, children," she would add, "people always in the end do what they want to do, and they might as well do it with a good conscience."[970]

Based on this view that people should do whatever they wanted, Hannah taught: "[D]on't be too unselfish."[971] Logan Pearsall Smith explained what he learned from his parents about sanctification from the time he experienced his second blessing as an unregenerate seven year old:

> Sanctification . . . renders us immune from sin. . . . [I] renounced . . . Pelagian attempts to conquer Sin and Satan by [my] own carnal struggles, and realized that only by Grace, and unmerited Grace alone, and by no "deadly doing," could [I] attain the conquest that [I] sought. . . . [Those who receive the second blessing receive] [t]he glorious certainty that they are sanctified . . . they 967 "It is to be hoped I give . . . sound teaching! [For she did not know if she did or not.] At any rate it is comfortable teaching" (pg. 183, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to her daughter, Mary Berenson, February 22, 1906. Italics in original.). Compare Jeremiah 6:14; 8:11.

---

968 Pg. 204, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, reproducing Letter to her Daughter, Mary Berenson, November 26, 1908. Italics in original.

969 pg. 376, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875. Contrast Zechariah 12:10-14; Matthew 5:4; 1 Corinthians 5:2; James 4:9-10.

970 Pgs. 155-156, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith. Mrs. Smith justified this utterly unbiblical advice by a wretched abuse of Philippians 2:13, which was said to prove that God leads people to do whatever they want.

971 Logan recounts the situation in which this advice was given:

> I remember once when [Hannah Smith] was full of years, and famous for her religious teachings, that a party of schoolgirls from some pious school in Philadelphia visited Oxford, and the teacher who conducted the party wrote to my mother . . . to say that it would be a privilege for the little flock of maidens to have a sight of this venerable Quaker saint, and to hear from her lips a few pious words. The permission was granted; the schoolgirls assembled on the spacious lawn outside our house . . . [W]hen she opened her lips I was considerably surprised to her her say, "Girls, don't be too unselfish."
>
> "Surely, Mother," I remonstrated with her afterwards, "when those girls go home their pious relations will be dreadfully shocked by what thee said."
>
> "Yes," she replied gayly, "yes, I dare say it will make them grind their teeth." (pgs. 156-157, Unforgotten Years, Logan P. Smith)

> rejoice—as all my life I have rejoiced—in the consciousness that they can commit no wrong. I may do, I have undoubtedly done, things that were foolish, tactless, and dishonest, and what the world would consider wrong, but since I attained the state of Sanctification at the age of seven I have never felt the slightest twinge of conscience, never experienced for one second the sense of sin.[972]

Logan achieved the goal of his mother's theology of sanctification—happiness in a perpetual freedom from a sense of sin and guilt—the secret of a happy life. To Hannah W. Smith, feeling happy, and having no pangs of conscience because of sin, were more important than the glory of God and obedience to the Bible.

In line with the Quaker background she shared with her husband, both Mrs. and Mr. Smith were believers in the continuation of miraculous gifts for the present day as opposed to being cessationists, advocates of the Biblical truth that the sign gifts ceased with the completion of the canon of the Scripture and the death of the Apostles in the first century. The Smiths were consequently involved in the Faith or Mind Cure movement which advocated miraculous and non-medical means for healing and laid the foundation for Keswick continuationism and Pentecostalism. Mrs. Smith knew Quakers who had received Faith Cures.[973] She was the instrument through which various people received such Cures herself,[974] healing several who were "close to hysteria," although she "tried [972] Pgs. 38-40, Unforgotten Years, Logan P. Smith.

---

[973] Letter to Priscilla, August 14, 1882, reproduced in the entry for August 12 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[974] Mrs. Smith testified that she was the instrument of several healings, the character of which illustrate well many of the healings practiced in the Keswick and Pentecostal movements. Hannah recounts:

> On one occasion I had a dear friend who was very nervous. She used to cry on the smallest provocation and about things which had no personal element in them, except that they upset her nerves. . . . She and I attended a little prayer meeting . . . she announced to us at the beginning of the meeting that we were to devote that meeting to her[.] . . . I confess that I had not much expectation that praying would do her any good, as I thought it was a physical condition which probably could never be alleviated. But when the time came we all knelt down to pray, and of course I knelt with them. I supposed that there would be fervent prayers offered for our friend by the others, and I did not really intend to pray myself at all, but to my astonishment the whole little company prayed all round in turns and never mentioned her case. It seemed to me that this was very impolite, and, in fact, unkind, when she had thrown herself so upon our sympathy, and so mainly, with the idea that she might not be disappointed, and simply out of an impulse of politeness and kindness, when the rest had finished I prayed for her; but, I confess, I had not the slightest idea that anything would come of it, except that her feelings would be smoothed by the recognition of her need. Imagine my astonishment when we rose from our knees and she turned to me and said, "Hannah, thy prayer is answered; I am cured." And as a fact she was cured from that time.
>
> Another case was once when I was attending a meeting. After I had spoken, a woman rose from the middle of the meeting and said, "If that lady who has just spoken will come and lay hands on me and pray for my recovery I shall be healed of a throat trouble that has caused me great suffering for many years, and for which the doctors declare they can do nothing." I thought to myself, "How little that woman knows how unbelieving I am with regard to faith healing. I am certain my prayers would do her no good." And, in fact, I was rather amused at her ignorance, and had to cover my face to hide a smile. The meeting went on for a little longer, and by the time it closed I had entirely forgotten the incident, and began to talk to a friend beside me, when someone came hastily in and said, "Mrs. Smith, that woman is waiting for you to come and pray for her, and you must come at once, for she says her throat is very bad." Out of kindness I went, but I said to the woman as I entered the room, "You have sent for me to pray for you, but I haven't a particle of faith that it will do the least bit of good." "Yes it will," she replied; "it will cure me. Kneel right down here beside her powers, in vain, on a victim of cancer,"[975] since cancer is clearly a physical disease that is not removed when someone is no longer hysterical. She stated: "With Faith Healing I have had a great deal of experience."[976] Hannah wrote concerning a sick friend: "I wish she could get hold of faith healing[.]"[977] She herself used a "Mind Cure for sea-sickness[.]"[978] She was acquainted with that prominent evangelist of the Faith Cure,[979] Dr. Charles Cullis, from at least 1871,[980] and ministered with Cullis on various > me, and lay your hand on my throat and ask God to heal me, and I know I shall be healed." Out of kindness I did as she wished, although I confess it seemed to me something of a farce. However, when we rose from our knees, to my amazement her voice was changed, and she declared her throat was cured. I hear from her quite often afterwards, and the story was always the same, that the cure was complete.

---

>
> As I bade the woman farewell, she said, "Now, Mrs. Smith, you have the gift of healing, and you ought to exercise it." . . . Another instance . . . was in the case of a friend who had become . . . a victim of the opium habit. One day when we were talking together, she said, "I believe if you would pray for me, I could be cured of this habit." I myself had no idea that it could be done, but, of course, when a person wanted me to pray for them [sic], I should not think of refusing, so I keeled down beside her wheel-chair and prayed, and the result in her case also was a complete cure. (pgs. 253-256, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey)

Many other instances of the Faith Cure were, without a doubt, as supernatural as those Mrs. Smith experienced, and as a result of the employment of similar means.

Notwithstanding working several Faith Cures herself, elements of skepticism were engendered in Hannah concerning the Faith Cure as she saw that the Cure failed to cure disease. For example, having heard of Dr. Charles Cullis, whom she called "a most delightful Christian doctor," she assembled a few dozen sick people at her house so that he could come and heal them. He failed to heal anybody at all (pgs. 262-263, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey). The fact that the Faith Cure led to the death of her sister Mary Thomas must also have brought doubts into Hannah's mind. Nevertheless, she never renounced or opposed the Faith or Mind Cure but continued to believe and preach that there was truth in the practice, and she continued to recommend the Cure to others.

975 Pgs. xv-xvi, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith.

976 Pg. 262, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

977 Letter to Anna, May 15, 1878, reproduced in the entry for August 22 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

978 Pg. 89, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, reproducing Letter to her daughter, Mary Costelloe, September 2, 1886. Not surprisingly, the Mind Cure did not work, and Hannah W. Smith still suffered from a horrible sea-sickness.

979 Hannah describes the views of Cullis, and his working of a Faith Cure, in connection with a positive confession of healing, on her nephew Tom Whitall, who had suffered from overwork. The Cure did not completely cure him, and it did not work at all at first. In any case, the partially cured "overwork" of the Faith Cure is hardly the reattached limbs or raising of the dead performed by Christ and His Apostles. Mrs. Smith wrote:

> We really have been stirred up on this faith healing question lately. You may have heard me speak about Saidee's brother Tom as having broken down from overwork several years ago. For four years now he has been doing every thing possible to recover his health, but all in vain. His last venture was a voyage to the Cape of Good Hope, but he came back worse than he went.
>
> When Dr. Cullis was here a week or two ago, Tom felt drawn to try the faith cure, as every thing else had failed, and Dr. Cullis prayed with him twice and told him to say he was healed. He began to say it, and, poor fellow, he had a hard battle, for a whole week there was no sign of any improvement. His mother and I were immersed in the deepest sympathy with him, and we all had to fight for our faith together. . . After a week, however, Tom began to improve, and there has been a most wonderful change in him in every way, and he is full of praise to the Lord. It has, of course, made a great stir among all our circle here, for Tom was always a great favorite. He has gone on to Boston now to spend a little time with Dr. Cullis to have his faith strengthened, and perhaps to help the Dr. a little in his faith work.
>
> If he really does get entirely well I believe I will have to give up and adopt Dr. Cullis' view of the subject. He says Matt. 8:17 teaches clearly that Christ bore our sicknesses just as much as He bore our sins, and that we may be delivered from the one by faith precisely as we are delivered from the other! If this is occasions,[981] since "Dr. Cullis of Boston [was] a friend and fellow evangelist" of the Smiths.[982] After all, Cullis surely had miraculous powers; he healed Mrs. Smith's > true, it would revolutionize the church! I am not convinced yet that it is true, but I confess that passage looks wonderfully like it. I will mail thee some little books about it. Ask thy sister Charlotte and thy cousin Mary Agnes to compare Matt. 8:17 with James 5:14, 15 and see whether they get any light on the subject for themselves.

---

>
> It would be glorious, would it not, if Christians universally could dispense with all human doctors and be cured by the Great Physician alone, and could show the world a continual miracle of healing? Dr. Cullis thinks all disease is from the devil, and is a direct attack from him upon God's children, just like temptation to sin is, and must therefore be met in the same way. There is a good deal of Scripture that seems to support his view. (Letter to Priscilla, May 7, 1882, reproduced in the entry for August 12 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter)

Nonetheless, surely Tom's Faith Cure, while nothing like Apostolic healing, was very grand—at least until some days later, when it became apparent that he was not cured at all, causing Hannah doubts:

> I went up to that invalid friend's who has been trusting for faith healing for so long. We had a little Bible class in her sick room. She does not seem any better. And yet she sticks to the testimony that she is healed, since that is what Dr. Cullis told her she must do. It does not seem right to me somehow.
>
> The fact is this faith healing matter grows more and more perplexing all the time. You remembers [sic] that funny friend of mine Elisabeth Nicholson, who went with us to the prayer meeting about President Garfield? She is not particularly consecrated, except in quite an ordinary fashion; she does not believe in the "Higher Life" at all, and she is very much afraid of fanaticism. And yet the other day she wrote me as follows[:] "The 31st. of May, sitting waiting for the dinner bell to ring, I talked to the Lord like this, "Lord, you know the muscles of my back are weak, and cause me much pain. You know I have inherited this through two generations; that I have been very indifferent about healing, making it an excuse for not visiting or doing anything I did not want to. But now, if it will honor you and if it will give me more strength to work for you, Lord Jesus, then I ask thee to heal me instantaneously." It was done! From that moment I have not had a pain; nor even the soreness which often made me shift my position. It no longer seems like me, but somebody else! I have done my hardest work since then without pain. [Note: At least this is the testimony of this lady, unexamined medically, from the standpoint of two weeks later—a time frame in which Tom Whitall also thought he was cured.]
>
> Now what are we to think when such saints as some I know can't get healed with all their praying and all their trusting? There is a secret somewhere that we have not fathomed yet, I am convinced. Meanwhile, I would advise every sick person to try this way of prayer and faith anyhow. It cannot hurt, and it may be a grand success. My nephew Tom Whitall is not well yet. He thought he was for a few days, and was very jubilant over it, but his trouble all came back, and he has been having a hard conflict. Now he has gone to a water cure to fight it out. My heart just aches for him. I wish I understood! (Letter to Priscilla, June 16, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 14 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter)

Indeed, Mrs. Smith's "invalid friend" was still not better many months later, despite "declaring . . . she was healed that day" so long ago, despite still "trusting for faith healing" many months later, despite having "Dr. Cullis pray for her," and despite believing "teaching of all kinds on the subject of faith"—despite all this, her Faith Cure "fail[ed] . . . utterly" (Letter to Priscilla, August 14, 1882, reproduced in the entry for August 12 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). However, despite its failures, and despite the lack of exegetical evidence for it, Hannah W. Smith was so far from being willing to denounce the Cure of Cullis as a delusion that she still concluded that she "would advise every sick person to try this way" of the Faith Cure anyway.

980 See her Letter to Frank, May 16, 1871, reproduced in the entry for June 5 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

981 See, e. g., her narrative of her "Framingham, Massachusetts meeting sponsored by Dr. Charles Cullis," or her description of her ministry with "Dr. Cullis at his conference" in 1879 and her commending the "little book issued by Dr. Cullis" there, in her Letter to a Friend of August 8, 1876 & Letter to a Friend, August 17, 1879, reproduced in the entries for August 2-3 & September 20 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

982 Pg. 66, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith.

daughter of indigestion through the techniques of the Faith Cure,[983] although he was unable to heal himself—ever—of a serious heart condition he endured for decades.[984] Indeed, Cullis was such a firm supporter of Mr. and Mrs. Smith and their Higher Life preaching that he sought to restore Robert after Mr. Smith's fall due to his preaching of erotic Spirit baptism.[985] As a Quaker, Hannah W. Smith was naturally an advocate for the continuationism of the Faith or Mind Cure.

Mrs. Smith was likewise a "friend" of the "New Thought teacher . . . Mrs. Caldwell,"[986] illustrating the close relationship between the nineteenth century New Thought or Mind Cure movements from which arose the Christian Science of Mary B. Eddy, with its spiritualism and laws of healing, and the Faith Cure.[987] Hannah noted:

> I find that spiritualists have all the "baptisms" and "leadings" and "manifestations" that [non-spiritualistic but continuationist] Christians have, with precisely similar symptoms. The same "thrills," the same "waves" or currents of life, the same spiritual uplifts, the same interior illuminations; they even see similar visions of Christ, and hear similar interior voices . . . taken in themselves, it is utterly impossible to distinguish between them.[988]

Mrs. Smith's daughter also "visited . . . with the intention of studying her doctrine, the famous female prophet, Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy."[989] Indeed, Hannah Smith's description of the Faith Cure makes its identity with the Mind Cure of New Thought evident:

> [O]ur faith lays hold of spiritual forces which are superior to natural forces and which therefore can overpower them. . . . [W]e become able to avail ourselves of powers that He has put at our disposal in the spiritual realm. I expect His real will for us is health always, but if we disobey natural laws His will is thwarted, and it is only by bringing in spiritual laws that we can overcome the evil tendencies caused by sin[.] . . . [J]ust as a wire does not create the electric current but only draws it down in certain directions so our faith does not create health but only draws the vitality of the spiritual realm down into our vessel. It is wonderful what faith will do.[990]

Thus, the Faith or Mind Cure works based on "law," and prayer is not, as it is in the Bible, a means of healing through the petitioning of a personal, sovereign, and loving

---

983 Pg. 39, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, reproducing Letter ot Mrs. Henry Ford Barclay, April 13, 1877.

984 Pg. 131, Theological Roots of Pentecostalism, Dayton.

985 Pg. 32, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, reproducing Letter to Mrs. Anna Shipley, August 8, 1876.

986 See Letter to Sarah, March 7, 1881 & Letter to Sister, July 28, 1881, reproduced in the entries for October 24 & 28 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

987 Interestingly, Hannah noted: "I find that spiritualists have all the 'baptisms' and 'leadings' and 'manifestations' that [continuationist] Christians have, with precisely similar symptoms. The same 'thrills,' the same 'waves' or currents of life, the same spiritual uplifts, the same interior illuminations; they even see similar visions of Christ, and hear similar interior voices . . . taken in themselves, it is utterly impossible to distinguish between them" (Letter to Carrie, July 31, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 17 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

988 Letter to Carrie, July 31, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 17 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

989 Pg. 128, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith.

990 Letter to Mary, November 1, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 27 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

God in Christ for His gracious physical mercies—rather, prayer is the instrument of healing insofar as by it people are "brought into harmony with those laws" of healing.[991] Anticipating the Word of Faith doctrine of positive confession creating positive realities and negative confessions creating negative realities, Mrs. Smith consequently counselled: "[L]et me advise thee not to talk of thyself as being old. There is something in Mind Cure, after all, and, if thee continually talks of thyself as being old, thee may perhaps bring on some of the infirmities of age."[992] She wrote: "[T]he mind cure . . . is only the science by which the faith cure works,"[993] a fact generally recognized by objective writers of her day.[994] No objective disjunction and sharp division between an allegedly Christian Faith Cure movement and a clearly pagan and evil Mind Cure movement can be established by objective historiography—Hannah W. Smith and other early continuationist Higher Life leaders certainly made no such division.

Indeed, the Mind or Faith Cure was simply the application to the body of the Higher Life or Keswick doctrine of sanctification by faith alone: "[T]he mind cure . . . [or] faith cure . . . is simply doing on the plane of physical health what we did on the plane of sin when we reckoned ourselves dead to it and alive only to God. If the atonement covers sickness as well as sin this [is] all . . . true."[995] Hannah's rejection of 991 Letter to Mary, November 1, 1882 & December 8, 1882, reproduced in the entries for November 27 & December 1-2 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

---

992 Pg. 187, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, reproducing Letter to her Daughter, Mary Berreneson, March 5, 1907. The date of the letter validates that Mrs. Smith continued to believe in the value of the Mind or Faith Cure for the course of her lifetime; her faith in the law of the Faith or Mind Cure was no passing fancy. Note also the connection between her affirmation of the Mind Cure and of the Word of Faith idea of positive and negative confession.

993 Letter to Anna, July 1, 1885, reproduced in the entry for December 28 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. Hannah made these remarks concerning her sister Mary Thomas, who trusted in the Mind and Faith Cure, but saw "the mind cure . . . fai[l] . . . [a]nd . . . the faith cure . . . fai[l]" (Letter to Sister, March 15, 1885, reproduced in the entry for December 28 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter), so that she died of a breast cancer that the medical science the gracious God has allowed men to discover could have cured.

994 For example:

> Christian Scientists and Faith Healers are closely affiliated. . . . [T]hey have a common foe—the scientist and the Christian; and a more or less common practice—reaching, in a somewhat similar way, about the same sort of results. . . . [T]he adherents of the two systems often meet together in conventions, and the laity are to some extent interchangeable. . . . The two systems . . . converge in practice. (pg. 249, "Christian Science and Faith Healing," Clyde W. Votaw. New Englander and Yale Review. New Haven, CT: Tuttle, Morehouse & Taylor, 1891. However, Votaw recognizes that there are ways in which the Christian Scientist and Faith Cure advocate "diverge" markedly in their "theory," the manner in which they speak of their systems.)

995 Letter to Anna, July 1, 1885, reproduced in the entry for December 28 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. The "newer gospel" of the faith cure, Hannah's letter affirms, teaches that "suffering and sorrow" are not part of God's plan for the body, just as sorrow and suffering must be eliminated from the spiritual life for a perpetual state of happiness—the secret of a happy life. However, Hannah also notes that she entertains doubts about the validity of the Mind or Faith Cure, despite the fact that it is the necessary consequence of her Keswick or Higher Life theology of sanctification by self-examination was helpful as a support for the Faith and Mind Cure, for not only should one refrain from spiritual self-examination, but from physical self-examination also, so symptoms that were "cured" by the Faith Cure but were still present could be ignored: "Self examination of one's physical symptoms or spiritual symptoms is about as disastrous as anything."[996] Unfortunately, the adoption of the Faith and Mind Cure in Hannah's family led to unnecessary and tragic early death. Hannah Whitall Smith's sister Mary Thomas died of breast cancer at the age of fifty-three in 1887, leaving behind her husband and eight children. Mary believed she was cured by the Faith Cure, consequently refused to go to a doctor to deal with her cancer, and consequently died. In the words of Hannah W. Smith:

> The one great grief to all of us is that six months [earlier] she could have been cured [by conventional medicine], when she first began to think she had the trouble, but then she trusted the Lord for healing and fully believed it was done and went on believing this all summer so fully that she never said anything to anyone about it.[997] And all the while [her cancer] was growing as rapidly as it was possible for it to do . . . my sister is simply the victim of the faith cure teaching.[998]

Hannah's preaching at a camp meeting exemplified the union of the Faith Cure and the Higher Life in her theology:

> In our hotel I found one of the housekeepers who was a devoted adherent of mine and who told me of a Holiness Camp Meeting in progress in the country outside of the city. . . . Just as I neared the ground . . . I saw a Philadelphia lady whom I used to see at meetings there long ago coming to the pump for water! I spoke to her and she recognized me at once, gave me a hearty welcome, and then introduced me to the leaders of the meeting and to all the dear saints right and left. I received a perfect ovation! They had all apparently read my book "The Christian's Secret," and were full of it, and of the blessing it had been to them "next to their Bibles" [as] the "constant companion of their devotions," the "greatest help of their lives" etc. etc. And they fairly overwhelmed me with their delight at seeing me, dear souls.
>
> They would hear nothing but that I should stay and preach for them in their evening meeting, which I did, under a large tent. It was altogether quite a refreshing experience. . . . They had a meeting for faith healing, and insisted on my going to it to teach them! . . . I told them . . . I would give them Dr. Cullis' teaching, and that seemed to satisfy them.[999] faith alone, chiefly because the Faith Cure does not seem to work. It was not evident to her that her theology of sanctification by quietistic faith alone also was contrary to the truth of God.

---

[996] Letter to Mary, May 12, 1878, reproduced in the entry for August 24 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[997] Mary Thomas's action, a result of her confidence in the Faith Cure, was an instance of misplaced faith and of sinful disobedience to use proper means to preserve her life.

[998] Pgs. 97-98, Remarkable Relations, Barbara Strachey. Italics in original. Hannah likewise queried while her sister was still alive: "Why should you have all this to suffer when you already had so much? And why the mind cure has failed with you . . . why the faith cure has failed too? And why, if you are going to get well, you do not get well faster?" (Letter to Sister, March 15, 1885, reproduced in the entry for December 26 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

[999] Letter to Priscilla, August 14, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 19 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. While she publicly preached the Faith Cure at the camp meeting, in her private letter to Priscilla she voiced reservations that she did not make public:

> I could not bear to upset their faith by telling them of the practical difficulties I see in the subject[.] . . . But I can tell you my heart ached to hear some poor invalids there declare they were healed, when it was perfectly plain to everyone else that they were not. I do not know what will be the outcome of all this agitation on the

Mrs. Smith was far from being alone in combining the Faith or Mind Cure and the Higher Life; rather, preparing the way for Pentecostalism, "belief in and the witness to miraculous divine healings attended the holiness movement at every turn."[1000] Her Quaker continuationism was by no means restricted to a belief in continued Apostolic healings; she noted that "speaking with tongues . . . is . . . apt to come to [Higher Life] Revivals, [and] I have known a great many instances."[1001] She likewise thought: "[It is] the privilege of Christians to receive the same Baptism now . . . [as was received] on the day of Pentecost. . . . There is nothing in the Bible which suggests that this gift [of Spirit baptism as experienced on Pentecost] should cease[.] . . . [T]he early Friends must have known and experienced it, and . . . this accounts for their wonderful success."[1002] After all, for Mrs. Smith, if not for Scripture, only elite believers—those only who have entered into the Higher Life—have the Holy Spirit,[1003] so a post-conversion second blessing comparable to Pentecost was obviously of tremendous importance. Mrs. Smith was a committed continuationst because of her Higher Life Quakerism, and was consequently very important Pentecostal precursor.

Hannah, as a natural concommitant of her continuationism and Quakerism, believed in the Inner Light heresy and was consequently an opponent of the sole authority > subject of faith healing. In all parts of the church it is being made prominent, and enough wonderful results follow it to excite a continually increasing interest. And yet there are far more failures than successes, and I dread the reaction. For these failures are nearly always with the most devout Christians, and it is an awful strain on their faith.

---

She noted later: "It's no wonder that doctors are provoked at the way Christians ignore the very first laws of health, and because of it bring such misery and make so much trouble for others" (Letter to Priscilla, 1883, reproduced in the entry for December 16 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

[1000] Pg. 68, Aspects of Pentecostal-Charismatic Origins, ed. Vinson Synan.

[1001] Pgs. 260-261, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey. Hannah recounts:

> [I]n one case it went so far that two apparently sensible people allowed their young daughter of thirteen years to go out to China . . . as a missionary, she not knowing a word of Chinese, but being led to speak gibberish in this way, and they all believed that when she got there the Chinese would understand. What really happened when she did get there, however, I have never heard, but I presume she had to come home again. (pgs. 260-261, ibid).

By the time Mrs. Smith composed those papers published posthumously by Ray Strachey, having increased in her skepticism with age, Mrs. Smith thought tongues were a "fanaticism."

[1002] Journal, October 29, 1866, reproduced in the entry for February 11, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1003] As Hannah preached at the Broadlands Conferences: "God wishes us [Christians] to have the Holy Spirit . . . [W]hy do we not? We do not accept [Him]." The Conferences taught: "The permanence of the presence of the Holy Spirit is a surer sign of a high degree of spiritual life than any other. . . . Let us pray for the Spirit of God Himself to come to us . . . [t]he highest life[,] [to be] one with God" (pgs. 190-195, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Italics in original.). While the permanent presence of the Holy Spirit is the sign of spiritual life, a life possessed by all believers (cf. Romans 8:9), for Mrs. Smith and the Broadlands Conferences such a permanent presence is emphatically restricted to those in the Higher Life alone.

of Scripture. W. H. Griffith Thomas effectively summarizes the character of the Quaker Inner Light heresy:

> In the Mysticism of the Quakers we find the tendency to emphasise the doctrine of the "inner light" as something either independent of, or superior to the written Word. This position is set forth by Barclay, the leading theologian of the Society of Friends. "We may not call them (the Scriptures) the principal fountain of all truth and knowledge, nor yet the first adequate rule of faith and manners, because the principal fountain of truth must be the truth itself; i.e. that whose authority and certainty depends not upon another."[1004] Again, "God hath committed and given unto every man a measure of light of His own Son—a measure of grace, or a measure of the Spirit. This, as it is received, and not resisted, works the salvation of all, even of those who are ignorant of the death and sufferings of Christ."[1005] . . . [Contrary to Quakerism,] it is not true to say that every man, as such, has the Spirit of God, nor can we call the same thing "light," "reason," "grace," "the Spirit," "the Word of God," "Christ within," and "God in us." Such a procedure would create untold confusion and lead to almost endless trouble. . . . According to the early Quakers a man of their time might be as truly inspired of God as were the Prophets and Apostles of the Bible. Against the imposition of dogma by authority George Fox said that "though he read of Christ and God," he knew them only through a ["]like spirit in his own soul." And to refer to Barclay again, he taught that "God hath placed His Spirit in every man, to inform him of his duty and to enable him to do it."[1006]

The Inner Light was key to Quaker devotional writing and practice:

> The most obvious theological distinction [in] Quakerism which makes an impact on devotional pratice is the doctrine of the 'inner light.' . . . [E]very individual was born with the light of Christ within. Though the light (which is often identified with the Holy Spirit) is darkened by sin, it can be rekindled through quietness and spiritual listening. Christ, therefore, shines anew on the heart apart from the normal means of grace such as preaching and reading the Scriptures.[1007]

Rejection of the sole authority of Scripture was a necessary corollary to the Inner Light doctrine—consequently, Hannah W. Smith, along with Quakerism in general, opposed the truth of sola Scriptura. For the "Society of Friends . . . [the] ultimate and final authority for religious life and faith resides within each individual. Many . . . seek for this truth through the guidance of the inner light."[1008] Thus:

> [George] Fox and others stressed [that] the contemporary believer has the same or clearer experience of God as the biblical prophets. . . . [T]he scripture is . . . like a record of ancient men who had their own 'showings' of the divine light, experiences recorded in order to prompt us to do the same. The Bible is a guidebook only in this way[.] . . . "Quakerism is better off emphasizing pantheistic and universalist perspectives. Our [Quaker] mode of worship is especially well-suited to this theology. Other denominations probably better serve people who are looking for strict adherence to doctrine . . . or Christ crucified as a personal Savior[.]"[1009]

Hannah Smith, a universalist who came to rest satisfied in a mystical "bare God,"[1010] rather than the Triune Father, Son, and Holy Spirit revealed in Scripture,[1011] received

---

1004 Forsyth, The Principle of Authority, p. 181. See also p. 183.

1005 Barclay, Apologia. Note Barclay's universalism.

1006 Pgs. 237-239, The Holy Spirit of God, Griffith-Thomas. Note the universal Quaker equation of obligation to God and ability to obey.

1007 Pg. 46, Trinitarian Spirituality, Brian Kay.

1008 Pg. 431, "Friends, Society of," Evangelical Dictionary of Theology, ed. Elwell.

1009 Pg. 48, Trinitarian Spirituality, Brian Kay, quoting Ted Goertzel of Rutgers University.

1010 It is consequently not surprising that at the Broadlands Conference Christ crucified, or the economic redemptive-historical redemption and revelation of the ontological Trinity, or justification by the shed blood of Christ, or other truly evangelical themes were not the "great topics round which our thoughts centered"—the "great topics" were ones that had nothing to do specifically with the Lord Jesus Christ and His redeeming work (pg. 122, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910).

1011 Indeed, Quakerism has never been strongly trinitarian. Already in the sixteenth century, John Owen wrote:

> God hath revealed or manifested himself as three in one, and, therefore, as such is to be worshipped and glorified by us; — that is, as three distinct persons, subsisting in the same infinitely holy, one, undivided essence. . . . I fear that the failing of some men's profession begins with their relinquishment of this foundation. It is now evident unto all that here hath been the fatal miscarriage of those poor deluded souls amongst us whom they call Quakers; and it is altogether in vain to deal with them about other particulars, whilst they are carried away with infidelity from this foundation. Convince any of them of the doctrine of the Trinity, and all the rest of their imaginations vanish into smoke. (A Discourse Concerning the Holy Spirit, John Owen, I:3)

William Penn (1644-1718), the Quaker founder of Pennsylvania and co-laborer of George Fox, blasphemed the Triune God and sought to bring others to adopt anti-trinitarian idolatry:

> Before I shall conclude this head, it is requisite that I should inform thee, reader, concerning the origin of the Trinitarian doctrine: Thou mayest assure thyself, it is not from the Scriptures nor reason, since so expressly repugnant: although all broachers of their own inventions strongly endeavor to reconcile them with that holy record. Know then, my friend, it was born above three hundred years after the ancient Gospel was declared; it was conceived in ignorance, brought forth and maintained by cruelty. (pg. vi, A History of the Doctrine of the Trinity in the Early Church, Hugh H. Stannus. London: Christian Life Publishing, 1882.)

Even for that minority of Quakerism that did not boldly adopt anti-Trinitarian heresy, the Triune character of the true God had very little influence on Quaker piety or devotion, for practical error on the Trinity was tied to the practices associated with of the Inner Light:

> The Quaker doctrine of the inner light was a misunderstanding of both the person and the work of the Holy Spirit. The constant emphasis on the Spirit within-the-soul was a subtle form of an exaltation of the Spirit by the Spirit, especially since the Spirit rarely was understood by Quakers to point the believer back to the objective work of Christ's sacrifice. For [orthodox Christianity, by way of contrast,] the Spirit was instead to glorify the Son, as per the words of John 16:14: "[The Spirit] shall glorify me; for he shall receive of mine and shall show it to you." The message of the Quakers was thus an inversion of the order of the divine dispensations, for the Spirit's mission is to make the Son glorious, honourable, and of high esteem in the hearts of the believers and to shed abroad the love of God in our hearts. The Spirit's mission is therefore parallel to the Son's being sent by the Father to suffer at Jerusalem . . . for us and to bring glory to the Father who sent him. At its heart, the failure of Quaker worship was that it got the Trinity's work of redemption wrong. . . . [T]o the extent that . . . William Penn can be credited with articulating Quakerism's theological foundations, one would conclude that early on the movement had become decidely anti-trinitarian. John Punshon's history of the Quakers admits as much, saying that the movement never formally adopted the doctrine of the Trinity, but instead, the functioning theology proper is closer to pantheism [pgs. 158-167, Portrait in Grey: A Short History of the Quakers, John Punshon. London: Quaker Home Service, 1984]. . . . A nebulous doctrine of God leads naturally to a nebulous, unstructured form of worship. . . . Quakerism . . . tended to describe the spiritual life as if the Trinity did not exist or matter. . . . [Neither] an orthodox theology of God [nor] . . . the role of the Son as a historical mediator . . . filtered down into actual spiritual practice. The [Quaker] emphasis on the "Spirit of Christ" seems to therefore have no connection to the Jesus who lived in Palestine, and the "inner light" does not particularly illuminate the saving purposes of either Father or Son. . . . Quakerism, therefore, prayed, or listened [to the Inner Light], in a way that would be largely unaffected if the Trinity were proved untrue. (pgs. 46-50, Trinitarian Spirituality, Brian Kay. Quotation marks of sources cited by Kay have been removed.)

In contrast, for a born-again believer such as John Owen, the Trinity was at the heart of Christian piety, so that his devotional books and devotional "whole . . . discourse[s] doth presuppose and lean upon . . . the doctrine of the Trinity . . . [as their] foundation" (A Discourse Concerning the Holy Spirit, John Owen, I:3). It is not surprising, then, that in contrast to orthodox Christianity, the piety of Hannah Whitall Smith, as a good Quaker, would be largely unaffected were the Trinity false, while the Triune God in Christ is at the heart of the piety of Christian orthodoxy. For a John Owen, Hannah W. Smith's "bare God" would never do in resisting temptation—only the God and Father of Jesus Christ, who displayed His love through the cross, would suffice for a holy life:

many great revelations as a Quaker—unfortunately, they were far, far too often not illumination that came from the study of the Scripture, but additional revelations or Quaker "openings" that arose from other sources. For example, she wrote: "One of my greatest 'openings' into the mystery of religion came from something I heard . . . Oscar Wilde . . . say in Philadelphia, dressed in shorts with a big sunflower in his buttonhole."[1012] Statements of the serial pedophile Oscar Wilde, with the assistance of the Inner Light, were, for Hannah, a fine substitute for the sole authority of the infallible Word of God, the Bible.[1013]

Naturally, Mrs. Smith opposed literal or grammatical-historical interpretation of Scripture, and the truly authoritative character of Scripture in general. She affirmed: "I am afraid of too much literalness"[1014] in interpreting the Bible, preferring rather "the spiritual meaning" that is "often so much deeper than appears on the surface, as even to seem almost in contrast"[1015] to the literal meaning. After all, literal interpretation was the death-knell of Quaker continuationism and the destruction of the foundation of the Higher Life theology—it was, therefore, better when at meetings like the Broadlands Conferences Mrs. Smith, her husband, and others could minister in a "wonderfully inspired way," testifying to notions validated not by literal exegesis of Scripture, but by

---

> [K]eep the heart full of a sense of the love of God in Christ. This is the greatest preservative against the power of temptation in the world. . . . "The love of Christ constraineth us," saith the apostle, "to live to him," 2 Corinthians 5:14; and so, consequently, to withstand temptation. A man may, nay, he ought to lay in provisions of the law also—fear of death . . . [and] punishment, with the terror of the Lord in them. But these are far more easily conquered than the other; nay, they will never stand alone against a vigorous assault. They are conquered in convinced persons every day; hearts stored with them will struggle for a while, but quickly give over. But store the heart with a sense of the love of God in Christ, and his love in the shedding of it; get a relish of the privileges we have thereby,—our adoption, justification, acceptation with God; fill the heart with thoughts of the beauty of his death;—and thou wilt, in an ordinary course of walking with God, have great peace and security as to the disturbance of temptations. When men can live and plod on in their profession, and not be able to say when they had any living sense of the love of God or of the privileges which we have in the blood of Christ, I know not what they can have to keep them from falling into snares. (Chapter 7, Of Temptation, Owen)

[1012] Pg. 170, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to her Daughter, Mary Berenson, November 10, 1904).

[1013] As documented below, the Quaker rejection of sola Scriptura, by dominating the Higher Life theology through Quakers like Hannah W. Smith, Robert P. Smith, Robert Wilson, and Jessie Penn-Lewis, contributed to the continuationist or anti-cessationist trajectory of Keswick and wider Higher Life theology into Pentecostalism and the Word of Faith movements.

[1014] Letter to Anna, May 15, 1878, reproduced in the entry for August 23 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1015] Letter to Anna, September 27, 1879, reproduced in the entry for September 25 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. At the time of her letter, her love for allegorical and "spiritual" meanings of the Bible and disregard of the literal meaning of the text led her to "not want to read anything but the Gospels."

"their personal experience," as they "tarried . . . not . . . in the letter of the Word, but . . . discerned everywhere beneath it the living Word."[1016]

Mrs. Smith could likewise rejoice when a modernist like "Newman Smyth" wrote "a grand book on Christian evolution,"[1017] or when the modernist "Canon Farrar . . . dealt forcibly with all timid holding on to old errors" and set forth the necessity for "revision of the Bible."[1018] Indeed, because of the preeminence of the Inner Light, the Bible was normally not used in the Friends meeting.[1019] Mrs. Smith certainly had no patience for a dispensational and literal view of Biblical prophecy; indeed, while Biblical holiness leads saints to long for Christ's second coming,[1020] Hannah Smith testified: "[S]ince Christ has come to me in my heart I cannot care so much for His outward coming."[1021] What need did she have for the Bible and its literal meaning when she had mysticism and a Quaker inward divinity, a "Christ within," to lead her and teach her?

Mrs. Smith, contrary to 1 Timothy 2:11-15 and 1 Corinthians 14:34-37, spoke frequently to mixed audiences and taught adult men. Although Paul, under inspiration,

---

[1016] Pg. 122, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. Italics in the original.

[1017] Pg. 69, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Journal Letter to her Friends, August 8, 1883. Italics in original. Smyth made the Bible an authority subordinate to the "Christian consciousness" and made evolution his framework for interpreting Christian faith. (See pg. 233, The Encyclopedia of Christianity, vol. 2, Fahlbusch & Bromiley & "Review of The Christian Life: A Handbook of Christian Ethics, by Joseph Stump," in Reviews by Cornelius Van Til, C. Van Til & E. H. Sigward. Labels Army Company: New York, NY 1997. Elec. ed. in The Works of Cornelius Van Til, Logos Bible Software.).

[1018] Letter to Family and Friends, July 4, 1885, reproduced in the entry for December 29 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. Of course, Farrar approved of both the Higher and the Lower criticism.

[1019] Cf. Letter to Mary, September 4, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 24 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1020] E. g., 1 John 3:2; Psalm 17:15; Hebrews 9:28; 2 Corinthians 5:6-8; Revelation 22:20.

[1021] Letter to Anna, July 8, 1879, reproduced in the entry for September 16 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. Concerning a dispensational approach to the second coming, she wrote in the same letter:

> The Second Coming . . . all seems very spectacular and after the flesh to me. And it does not tend to spirituality say what they may. What with their seven judgments, and their two resurrections, and their rebuilding of Babylon, and their two Witnesses, and their time and times and half a time, there is such a complicated arrangement of affairs altogether, that one's best comprehension can hardly unravel it. And since Christ has come to me in my heart I cannot care so much for His outward coming.
>
> If this outward Coming were to usher in at once a reign of peace and joy I would long for it unspeakably; but according to the students it is to introduce first seven years of unparalleled tribulation and anguish, and I cannot long for that. Still He knows, and I shall be content; only somehow, I have the feeling that I will ask to be allowed to stay down on the earth during this tribulation to help the poor souls bear it. How can we enjoy ourselves up "in the air" when we know that our going has taken away the last restraint upon wickedness, and that we have left the poor world to an unbridled carnival of sin?

Thus, the literal interpretation of Biblical propehecy was "fleshly" to Mrs. Smith, as it did not lend itself to her sort of "spirituality," and she hoped that she could miss the Rapture, as she did not, in any case, care so much for Christ's return since she could experience the Higher Life now.

stated: "Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak. . . it is a shame for women to speak in the church. . . . If any man think himself to be . . . spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord," Mrs. Smith preached to men about how to be spiritual. At their meetings, both "Mr. and Mrs. Pearsall Smith . . . took a leading part in the speaking."[1022] She "supported the right of women to preach as Quakers always had done,"[1023] defending "women's preaching" after "an experience of revolt from the traditional views"[1024] found in Scripture, a revolt in which she was followed by many, such as Mrs. Boardman, who was similarly "led" to address mixed audiences under Quaker influence,[1025] and Hannah's Quaker and Keswick successor Jessie Penn-Lewis. Mrs. Smith explained at the Brighton Convention, where vast crowds of men thronged to hear her preaching,[1026] that she had asked the Lord to show her whether women should preach or not, and "He . . . gave me such a strong feeling that it was His mind, that now, whatever is said against it, it makes no difference."[1027] Experience validated woman preachers in a way that Scripture could not. However, the unscriptural experiental validation of women preachers was most comparable to the validation of the Mind and Faith Cures by experience—the marvels performed by women validated both their leadership ministries and the value of their Cures. After all, students of the early decades of the Mind and Faith Cure movements noted: "[N]inety-five percent of [the] adherents [of] . . . 'Christian Science' . . . are women . . . [and] 'Faith Healing' . . . too . . . has a largely feminine constituency."[1028] Thus, experience on her side, arguments from Scripture could by no means move Mrs. Smith from her position, although she was willing to assent to the views of other Quaker women preachers who justified their disobedience by proclaiming at the pre-Keswick Conventions a misinterpretation of Joel

---

1022 Pgs. 21, 24, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1023 See January 29-30, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

1024 Letter to a Friend, May 18, 1879, reproduced in the entry for September 13 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

1025 Pgs. 146-147, Life and Labours of the Rev. W. E. Boardman, Mrs. Boardman.

1026 Pg. 120, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875.

1027 Pgs. 375-376, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875. Mrs. Smith continued: "Don't ask the Lord and then try to find out by your own reasoning." In line with Quaker doctrine, she taught that impressions and strong feelings were to supercede the reasoning faculty of the mind in determining the will of God.

1028 Pg. 249, "Christian Science and Faith Healing," Clyde W. Votaw. New Englander and Yale Review. New Haven, CT: Tuttle, Morehouse & Taylor, 1891. 18:3:249-258. Votaw gives the 95% figure for 1891 and dates the origin of the Mind Cure to Mary Baker Eddy and the year 1866.

2:28's promise about the prophesying of daughters.[1029] While the committee backing their Higher Life conventions allowed both Hannah and Robert to preach, she made "the members of the committee . . . uneasy[.] . . . It was bad enough for a woman to preach; many, in particular the Germans, found it extremely shocking; but for her to preach Restitution, or the denial of Hell, was dangerously heretical."[1030] Nonetheless, Hannah wrote to Robert: "I quite enjoy the thought of your pow-wow over me . . . and of . . . condolences . . . on the possession of such a dangerous article as a heretical, preaching wife. . . . I do not in the least mind being a heretic. In fact I think it rather suits my cast of mind."[1031] Indeed, it was precisely her denial of hell for the universalist heresy that brought her and her husband to fame, for her universalist confession lead to her receipt, "at a time when the universal hope was deemed a heresy . . . an invitation to hold [the] series of [Higher Life] meetings at Broadlands."[1032] Consequently, on the authority of her feelings and subjective impressions and backed by her heretical opinions, Mrs. Smith began her career as a woman preacher in Quaker meetings and continued preaching regularly to mixed audiences of men and women for the rest of her life.[1033]

Mrs. Smith was also passionately opposed to the Biblical pattern of leadership by the huband in marriage (Ephesians 5:22-33), stating that it made women into slaves, and looking to woman's sufferage as the key to the destruction of all the Biblical patriarchy (Isaiah 3:12) that existed in the society of her day.[1034] Concerning the Biblical roles in marriage, she said: "'No' emphatically . . . a thousand times 'No.' . . . I know nothing more absolutely unjust in itself nor more productive of misery to the woman than the assumption of the place of authority on the part of men. It reduces women at once in principle to the position of slaves . . . [a]ny amount of anarchy and confusion would be

---

1029 E. g., pg. 371, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875.

1030 Pgs. 43-44, Remarkable Relations, Barbara Strachey.

1031 Pg. 44, Remarkable Relations, Strachey.

1032 Pgs. 41-42, Remarkable Relations, Strachey.

1033 Pg. xv, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. For example, in a letter she wrote: "Sixty pulpits were filled by our women on Sunday, and I preached 3 times. Lady Henry's sermon was a great success. The crowds were something fearful" (pgs. 118-119, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Letter to her friends, November 10, 1891). Both before the fall of Robert and afterwards, she "often preached" (pgs. xvii, ibid). It was not unusual in those days for Quaker preachers to hold revival meetings, and Hannah and Robert Pearsall Smith were hardly the only Quakers to do so (cf. pg. 69, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Journal Letter to her friends, August 8, 1883).

1034 Letter to Mary, January 29, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 10 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

better."[1035] Nothing, Hannah W. Smith knew, could be more unjust than what the Holy and Just One, the good and loving God, commanded about the roles of men and women in the marriage relationship.

Judging by her unhappy and un-Christian marriage[1036] and the fact that none of her children who survived to adulthood were born again or honored the Lord,[1037] Mrs. Smith neither had the true "secret" of a happy Christian life nor the spiritual power to affect others for Christ. Her son Logan Pearsall Smith rejected Christ and Christianity. He wrote:

> The old doctrines of the corruption of man and his inevitable doom unless he finds salvation in the conviction of sin, the gift of grace, and a sudden catastrophic, miraculous conversion—this evangelical theology . . . has now become utterly alien and strange to me. . . . I rejoiced in . . . ridicule of the evangelical religion . . . I gave . . . serious attention to the literature of Theosophy, and was inclined to believe that the key to the problem of existence was to be found, if only I could grasp it, in a little book of Rosicrucian doctrine over which I used to pore for hours. . . . We are indeed leaves that perish . . . I do not find that a fate to be regretted . . . for any other form of being I feel no longing. All that I have read about what happens in a future existence makes the life beyond the grave seem an uncomfortable adventure. I have no desire for eternal bliss. . . . [I]f there is a struggle in the mind . . . between God and Mammon, I advise that the service of the god of money should be followed.[1038]

One of Hannah's two daughters abandoned her Roman Catholic husband and her children to pursue an adulterous relationship, while the other daughter married atheist Bertrand Russell; both daughters rejected Christianity.[1039] Indeed, Hannah's persistently adulterous daughter Mary wrote the following to her mother: "I have (I think) no orthodox standards of any kind. Thee, who is such a rebel against orthodoxy in religion,

---

1035 Letter to Frank Costelloe, 1883, reproduced in the entries for December 17-18 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

1036 Indeed, "for some years . . . [Robert] Pearsall and Mrs. Smith had no words—no relations—with each other," and had at least seventeen years of unhappy married life, according to their son Logan (pg. 73, Remarkable Relations, Barbara Strachey). Mrs. Smith had such an antipathy towards husbands, and negative feelings about men in general, concommitants to her ardent feminism, that she wrote: "It is hard for me to believe that any husband and wife are really happy together" (pg. 218, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Letter to her daugher, Mary Berenson, September 28, 1910).

1037 Notwithstanding their truly unregenerate state, Robert P. Smith publicly proclaimed that all his children were saved (pg. 212, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875; cf. Hannah's teaching on pg. 373). His doctrine that "consecration and conversion [are] two separate acts," so that he had "never known one instance in which they were not distinct" (pg. 256, ibid) was almost surely a contributing factor in his children—and he himself—never truly coming to that surrender to Christ as Lord without which salvation is impossible (Mark 8:34-36). Countless multitudes who have adopted his doctrine have also been eternally damned, and misleading their children into false professions, have brought them to hell also.

1038 Pgs. 35, 125-128, 275, 294, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith.

1039 Subsequent to Robert P. Smith's "spiritual apostasy and eventual agnosticism, after his fall from grace in England . . . the children . . . follow[ed] the same loss of faith. . . . Mary finally deserted her first husband and her two children to live in Italy with Bernard Berenson . . . Hannah had to rear the young children, Ray and Karin. Alys became the first wife of Bertrand Russell and was soon swept into his agnosticism" (December 31, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

cannot be surprised or shocked if I am a rebel against orthodoxy in conduct. . . . [O]ne heresy leads to another, in the next generation at least."[1040] As Hannah's children rejected Christianity, so her husband Robert evidenced his unregenerate state by his rejection of Christianity for agnosticism and Buddhism accompanied by his own persistent adultery. More importantly than her lack of the "secret" of happiness or spiritual power, Mrs. Smith did not have the "secret" of a God-honoring Christian life, or even, based on her heresies, a Christian life at all. Nonetheless, "[m]any today who know her only through her writings know very little about . . . Hannah's heresies . . . or, if they do, like those who knew her best, they still accept her spiritual insights as valid . . . loyal to . . . [the] doctrine . . . that life not doctrine was the true test of pure Christianity."[1041] However, one wonders if many of those advocates of a doctrineless false pietism who embrace Mrs. Smith are aware that, while not living an outwardly profligate life, she nonetheless disliked united prayer,[1042] went to casinos,[1043] and hated her household servants.[1044] She wrote a note to her daughter about her "belated birthday present—a telescope Cigarette holder. Thee need not advertise that it is a present from the author of the 'Christian's Secret of a Happy Life'!"[1045] She also wrote her daughter concerning her grandchildren: "The girls decided to play Demon in my sitting-room, and asked if I would let them say 'Da[-]n' now and then, and what could a poor foolish grandmother say but, 'Yes'! (But do not put this in my Memoirs, I beg of thee!)."[1046] Along with allowing her grandchildren to play Demon and employ curse words, Mrs. Smith also

---

[1040] Pg. 116, Remarkable Relations, Barbara Strachey.

[1041] August 3-4, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. Note that the idea that life, not doctrine, is the true test of Christianity is itself a doctrine.

[1042] Pg. 57, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Letter to Sarah Nicholson, August 13, 1881.

[1043] Pg. 142-144, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Letter to her friends, August 26, 1899

[1044] "[M]y servants . . . I simply hate them, and if it would not inconvenience me too much, I would turn them out at once!" (pg. 220, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Letter to her daughter, Mary Berenson, December 5, 1910. Italics in original).

[1045] Pg. 181, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Letter to her daughter, Mary Berenson, February 15, 1906. See also pg. 182.

[1046] Pg. 198, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Letter to her daughter, Mary Berenson, February 14, 1908. The curse word is spelled out in Mrs. Smith's letter—the omitted letter was supplied instead here, instead of the "m," to avoid the use of the curse word in this book.

Note also that Mrs. Smith was perfectly willing to misrepresent or conveniently omit facts in documents concerning her and her life if such misrepresentation would place her in a better light. This willingness should be kept in mind as one evaluates her writings, where her minimalization of her role in accepting and propogating the erotic Spirit baptism heresy is of dubious historicity.

fellowshiped with spiritualists[1047] and received prophecies from occult palm readers.[1048] Her life was not a little different from that of a consistent pietist, even one who cared little for Biblically orthodox doctrine. Neither Mrs. Smith's beliefs nor her life indicated that she knew the alleged "secret" to a happy or holy Christian life.

Mrs. Smith was a committed universalist.[1049] She was passionately and zealously wedded to the heresy that everyone would go to heaven and nobody would suffer eternally in hell. After a period of time during which she blasphemously thought God was selfish for not saving everyone and that she was more loving than God, and consistent with her Quaker background, Mrs. Smith adopted universalism because of a grossly unscriptural "revelation" given to her while she was expressing her displeasure with God. While feeling justified in her "upbraiding" of the Holy One, she adopted universalism because of an "inward voice" that she "knew" gave her the truth because of the testimony of her "heart" before she even looked at the Bible.[1050] She was open to such "revelations" because she rejected the total depravity of man in favor of the Inner Light: "Just as we inherit natural life from the first Adam, so do we inherit spiritual life from the second Adam. There is . . . in every man a seed of the divine life, a Christ-germ as it were. The old Quakers called it 'the witness for God in the soul,' 'that which responds to the divine inspeaking. . . . There is a divine seed in every man[.]"[1051] After all, for Mrs. Smith, the law is not the externally objective testimony of Scripture, but the Inner Light, the Divine Seed—"Our law of life is within; we must love to follow it."[1052] She would have done well to consider God's testimony that "he that trusteth in his own heart is a fool" (Proverbs 28:26; cf. Jeremiah 17:9). Instead, Mrs. Smith taught that one

---

[1047] E. g., pgs. 155-156 of A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, record her letter to her daughter Alys Russell of January 24, 1903.

[1048] E. g., pg. 128 of A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith.

[1049] It is noteworthy that the universalism of Mrs. Smith's day was very open to the Higher Life and to continuationism; for example, the holiness preacher Mrs. Mary B. Woordworth-Etter, who became a leading Pentecostal after the events at Azuza Street, preached in Universalist churches, claimed she had the gift of healing, and claimed that the gift of tongues was evident in her meetings (pgs. 34-35, 249, Vision of the Disinherited: The Making of American Pentecostalism, Robert Anderson). A substantial portion of Pentecostalism, at least in part through Keswick influence under the flagship Keswick universalist Hannah W. Smith, adopted universalism. The doctrine was validated to them by supernatural revelations, just as Hannah Smith had her universalism validated by extra-Biblical revelation (cf. pg. 159, Vision of the Disinherited: The Making of American Pentecostalism, Robert Anderson). Rejection of the Biblical doctrine of an eternal hell also goes through Keswick men such as George Grubb to Pentecostal founder Charles Parham, whos annihilationism also spread to many others in the Pentecostal movement.

[1050] Pgs. 196-228, The Unselfishness of God, Hannah W. Smith. Hannah's description of her adoption of universalism is quoted extensively below.

[1051] pgs. 160-161, Every-Day Religion.

[1052] Pg. 181, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

should follow "God's four especial voices, i. e. the voice of the Bible, the voice of circumstances, the voice of one's highest reason, and the voice of one's inward impressions."[1053] She had learned from the Quakers that personal "revelations" were superior to the Scriptures:

> A Quaker "concern" [alleged revelation] was to my mind clothed with even more authority than the Bible, for the Bible was God's voice of long ago, while the "concern" was His voice at the present moment and, as such, was of far greater present importance . . . the preaching I hear[d] was certainly calculated to exalt the "inward voice" and its communications above all other voices . . . since God spoke to us directly[.][1054]

She received such revelations throughout her life, leading her to all kinds of conclusions that could not be found in the Bible.[1055] Mrs. Smith persisted in believing in and preaching[1056] the universalism she had learned from the spirit world through the Inner Voice until her death,[1057] for the Inner Voice was the necessary corollary of the Quaker and Gnostic[1058] rejection of human depravity for the doctrine of the Divine Seed in every man. Every man had a Divine Seed, so every man would be saved; thus Hannah had learned from the Inner Voice. Hannah came to teach religious pluralism as a corollary of her universalism, that "a good Creator can be got at through all sorts of religious beliefs and all sorts of religious ceremonies, and that it does not matter what they are." Indeed people who are "fundamentally good . . . can be so content without any real link with God," or even "without any certainty that there is a God to be linked to."[1059] Thus, not just the false gospel of High Church Anglicans[1060] and Roman Catholic priests,[1061] or the

---

[1053] Pg. 159, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

[1054] Pgs. 82-83, The Unselfishness of God, by Hannah W. Smith.

[1055] See pg. 148, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith, Letter to her daughter, Mary Berenson, October 26, 1901, for an example of such a revelation.

[1056] See, e. g., pg. 40, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith, Letter to her husband, Robert Pearsall Smith, April 19, 1878, for Mrs. Smith's description of a meeting where she preached universalism, so that others sympathetic to the heresy were "delighted at the plainness with which [she] declared Restitution."

[1057] She died and was cremated at the age of 79 on May 1, 1911. See pgs. 256-259, Remarkable Relations, by Barbara Strachey.

[1058] "[In] the Gnostic system . . . [t]he Divine element is hidden in man as a spark of the Father above, as a spark of the divine self consciousness" (pg. 82, Christ in Christian Tradition, vol. 1, Aloys Grillmeier, trans. John Bowden. Atlanta, GA: John Knox, 1975). Whatever human connections may or may not be traceable between Quakerism and ancient Gnosticism, Satan is without a doubt the author of the Divine seed heresy for both religious systems.

[1059] Letter to her daughter, Mary Berenson, February 16, 1902, on pgs. 148-150 of A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S." (Mrs. Pearsall Smith), ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. London: Nisbet & Co. 1949. Italics in original.

[1060] Pg. 88, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith, Letter to her friends, August 13, 1886. All such "High Churchmen . . . seem very holy men, and I expect our Father in Heaven does not mind their little notions any more than He minds ours[.]" polytheism and blasphemy of Mormons[1062] within the realm of what might in the very loosest sense be termed Christiandom, but also the worship of various gods, whether Allah, Baal, or Satan, is fine; indeed, even atheists and agnostics can be fundamentally good, and everyone is going to heaven at the end, in any case. One may trust in Jehovah and hate the devil, and another may trust in the devil and hate the living God, but although "on exactly opposite pathways . . . we all meet God at last."[1063] People who do not care in the least about the "saving of the soul," and who are "unconsciou[s] . . . [of] the Christianity of Christ," are still "serving, though it may be unconsciously . . . the Divine Master,"[1064] regardless of whatever the Bible might say to the contrary (e. g., Ephesians 2:1-13). God receives the worship and brings to heaven those who worship in spirit and in truth and serve Him in a Bible-practicing church, and He also allegedly receives the worship and brings to heaven those who offer the gore of human sacrifices to Moloch. It thus becomes clear why it was necessary for Hannah to preach the Higher Life—all already have eternal life, but not all have the happiness and rest that comes from the Keswick theology.[1065]

Hannah W. Smith wrote My Spiritual Autobiography: How I Discovered The Unselfishness of God[1066] specifically because she loved being a heretic, and because she wanted to convince others to adopt heresies and become heretics:

> [M]y autobiography . . . "How I discovered God" . . . is the story of my soul life from my early Quaker days, on through all the progressive steps of my experience . . . I am putting all my heresies into my story, and am trying to show the steps that have led to them; and I flatter myself that it is going to be very convincing! So if you feel afraid of becoming heretics, I advise you not to read it. For my part, I always did love being a heretic as some of you know. What fun it

---

[1061] Pg. 126, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith, Letter to her friends, March 16, 1894. Mrs. Smith is here describing a priest, who even while specifically promulgating the damnable heresy of baptismal regeneration, is none the less "most saintly."

[1062] Pg. 52, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith, Letter to Mrs. Ford Barclay, July 23, 1880.

[1063] See pg. 118, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith, Letter to her daughter, Mary Costelloe, November 7, 1891. In all religions "there is a knowledge of God that must be and that is more or less the same everywhere."

[1064] Pg. 125, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith, Letter to her friends, March 16, 1894.

[1065] Note that this view is extremely similar to that of F. B. Meyer, and explains Meyer's preaching of the Higher Life, rather than the gospel, to Hindus in India and the heathen in other lands; see the chapter below on F. B. Meyer.

[1066] My Spiritual Autobiography: How I Discovered The Unselfishness of God, Hannah W. Smith. New York: Fleming H. Revell, 1903. She wrote this book at the age of 71. It was singularly fitting that the founder of the Keswick theology, which spread overwhelmingly through the influence of testimonial and not through the exegesis of Scripture, should also seek to spread her other heresies through testimonial, namely, through the story of her life and how her heresies made her happy.

was[!][1067]

The book documents Mrs. Smith's universalist and Quaker heresies, as well as the fact that her universalism, which she spread in her writings, antedated her and her husband's public proclamation of the "Higher Life" theology from which the Keswick movement originated. She explained her adoption of the universalist heresy as follows:

> Neither could I see how a Creator could be just . . . in consigning some of the creatures He Himself, and no other, had created, to the eternal torment of hell, let them be as great sinners as they might be. I felt that if this doctrine were true, I should be woefully disappointed in the God whom I had . . . discovered. . . . As an escape from the doctrine of eternal torment, I at first embraced the doctrine of annihilation for the wicked, and for a little while tried to comfort myself with the belief that this life ended all for them. But the more I thought of it, the more it seemed to me that it would be a confession of serious failure on the part of the Creator, if He could find no way out of the problem of His creation, but to annihilate the creatures whom He had created. . . . I could not believe He would torment them forever; and neither could I rest in the thought of annihilation as His best remedy for sin. . . . I set myself to discover my mistakes. . . . [O]ne day a revelation came to me that vindicated Him, and that settled the whole question forever. . . . I seemed to have a revelation . . . not of His [Christ's] sufferings because of sin, but of ours. . . . I had been used to hear a great deal about the awfulness of our sins against God, but now I asked myself, what about the awfulness of our fate in having been made sinners? Would I not infinitely rather that a sin should be committed against myself, than that I should commit a sin against any one else? Was it not a far more dreadful thing to be made a sinner than to be merely sinned against? . . . I saw that, when weighted in a balance of wrong done, we, who had been created sinners, had infinitely more to forgive than any one against whom we might have sinned.[1068]
>
> The vividness with which all this came to me can never be expressed. . . . I saw it. It was a revelation . . . it could not be gainsaid. . . . How long it lasted I cannot remember, but, while it lasted, it almost crushed me. And as it always came afresh at the sight of a strange face, I found myself obliged to wear a thick veil whenever I went into the streets[.] . . . One day I was riding on a tram-car along Market Street, Philadelphia, when I saw two men . . . dimly through my veil . . . [but when the] conductor came for his fare . . . I was obliged to raise my veil in order to count it out. As I raised it, I got a sight of the faces of those two men, and with an overwhelming flood of anguish, I seemed to catch a fresh and clearer revelation of the depths of the misery that had been caused to human beings by sin. It was more than I could bear. . . . I upbraided God. And I felt I was justified in doing so. Then suddenly . . . [a]n inward voice said . . . "He shall see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied." "Satisfied!" I cried in my heart . . . . ["]If I were Christ, nothing could satisfy me but that every human being should in the end be saved, and therefore I am sure that nothing less will satisfy Him." And with this a veil seemed to be withdrawn from before the plans of the universe . . . I saw therefore that the remedy must necessarily be equal to the disease, the salvation must be as universal as the fall.
>
> I saw all this that day on the tram-car . . . not only thought it, or hoped it, or even believed it—but knew it. It was a Divine fact. And from that moment I have never had one questioning thought as to the final destiny of the human race. . . . However great the ignorance therefore, or however grievous the sin, the promise of salvation is positive and without limitations . . . somewhere and somehow God was going to make everything right for all the creatures He had created. My heart was at rest about it forever.

[1067] Pg. 146, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to her friends, February 18, 1901. Italics in original.

Indeed, if one loves Jesus Christ, and consequently hates heresy and does not wish to become a heretic, he would do well to avoid reading and seeking for any spiritual guidance whatsoever in Mrs. Smith's books, and he would do well to reject the Keswick theology that she originated.

[1068] Of course, Scripture teaches that God did not make man a sinner, but that the race freely rebelled against God and plunged itself into sin.

I hurried home to get hold of my Bible, to see if the magnificent fact I had discovered could possibly have been all this time in the Bible . . . my Bible fairly shone with a new meaning. . . . the true [universalist] meaning, hidden behind the outward form of words . . . rightly interpreted, not by the letter, but by the spirit . . . the denunciations of God's wrath, which had once seemed so cruel and so unjust, were transformed into declarations of His loving determination to make us good enough to live in Heaven with Himself forever.[1069] . . . [A]t this time my real discovery of the unselfishness of God began. Up to then . . . I had been secretly beset from time to time with a torturing feeling that, after all, it was rather a selfish salvation, both for Him and for me. . . . always there had been at the bottom of my mind this secret feeling that His love could not stand the test of comparison with the ideal of love in my own heart. . . . I still had often felt as if after all the God I worshipped was a selfish God, who cared more for His own comfort and His own glory that He did for the poor suffering beings He had made. . . . [M]ost of my ideas of the love and goodness of God have come from my own experience as a mother . . . since this discovery of the mother-heart of God I have always been able to answer every doubt that may have arisen in my mind . . . by simply looking at my own feelings as a mother. . . . I had in short such an overwhelming revelation . . . that nothing since has been able to shake it. . . . [W]hen I had that revelation on the tram-car in Philadelphia that day, a light on the character of God began to shine. . . . The amazing thing is that I, in company with so many other Christians, had failed, with the open Bible before me, to see this ["truth" of universalism.] . . .

[Opposition to my new belief in universal salvation] became at this time well-nigh intolerable. I could listen patiently, and even with interest, to any sort of strange or heretical ideas . . . but the one thing I could not endure, and could not sit still to listen to, was anything that contained, even under a show of great piety, the least hint of [opposition to universalism]. . . . [A] celebrated Preacher . . . was visiting us. . . . his object was to combat my views on Restitution [that is, universalism.] [A]lthough the speaker was my guest, I broke forth into a perfect passion of indignation, and declaring that I would not sit at the table with any one who held such libelous ideas of God, I burst into tears and left the room, and entirely declined to see my guest again. I do not say that this was right or courteous, or at all Christ-like, but it only illustrates how overwhelmingly I felt on the subject. . . . As was to be expected . . . my views on Restitution, which of course I had speedily announced, met with a great deal of disapproval from the Plymouth Brethren, and my other orthodox friends . . . I have always rather enjoyed being considered a heretic . . . the discovery I had made . . . was considered by many to be . . . a grave heresy . . . but the revelation I had had was too glorious for me to withhold it whenever I found an open door; and . . . I was never willing to sail under false colours, nor speak anywhere without it being perfectly well known beforehand what a heretic I was[.] . . . And, as a fact, these very views, and the frank confession of them . . . were the means of opening the way for some of our most important and successful work. . . . In 1873 my husband had come over to England to hold some meetings in the interests of the Higher Life, or, what I prefer to call it, the Life of Faith. I soon followed him, and upon my arrival in London I was invited to meet a company of leading Evangelical[1070] ladies, who were to decide as to whether it would be safe for them to endorse me, and lend their influence to the work. . . . I [declared my belief in] the universal hope . . . the moment I ceased speaking . . . [I was invited to] come and have some meetings . . . not a word of disapproval was uttered, and . . . [the way] was thrown open to us for our first conference, which was a time of wonderful blessing, and proved to be the entering door for all the future conferences, and for our whole after work in England and elsewhere. . . . I believe in Restitution more and more. . . . When in 1874 there was to > be one of these conferences . . . some of the committee who were helping to organize it, got frightened about my heresies . . . [but] as it was felt important to have me at the meetings, the committee . . . decided to take me as I was, with all my heresies. . . . I am a thousand times stronger in my view of restitution every day I live. . . . I . . . know that never for one single moment in all my work in England was I made to feel that my views on restitution in the slightest degree hindered the entrance of the message I had to give, or closed any door for my work. In fact I believe they made the way for me in many places that would otherwise not have been open. . . . [Concerning] my [universalist] . . . belief . . . without it I should have been shorn of half my power."[1071]

---

[1069] Hannah here displays her rejection of the true gospel, which is not that men are made good enough to live in heaven, but that they are justified by grace alone through faith alone based on the imputed righteousness of Christ alone. Rather than the true gospel, Hannah accepts the Quaker heresy of justification by imparted righteousness.

[1070] Mrs. Smith employs the word "evangelical" in an exceedingly loose fashion. This fact can be illustratated by the fact that although she was a Quaker who denied the gospel, accepted that Quaker revelations were on the same plane as Scripture, and believed in universalism, she considered herself to be an "evangelical" at this period of her life. The "evangelicals" she speaks of here include those spiritualists and Quakers she sought approval from, as described below.

Mrs. Smith then proceeds to explain that she came to her position about "the life of faith"—although her view of faith was always extremely weak and unscriptural—only after she had adopted the universalist heresy. She called "the life of faith" the "fourth epoch in my religious life,"[1072] while the universalist heresy was "the third epoch in my religious life."[1073] Her universalism, she affirmed, opened up avenues for her spread of the "Higher Life" doctrine, and without universalism, she stated, "I should have been shorn of half my power." Universalism was essential for Mrs. Smith's development and promulgation of the Higher Life or Keswick doctrine of sanctification.

As already noted, Mrs. Smith declared that her universalist heresy and other heresies were key to her work as a Higher Life preacher and Keswick founder:

> [T]hese very views, and the frank confession of them . . . were the means of opening the way for some of our most important and successful work. . . . [the] meetings in the interests of the Higher Life, or, what I prefer to call it, the Life of Faith. . . . [A] company of leading Evangelical[1074] ladies . . . were to decide as to whether it would be safe for them to endorse me, and lend their influence to the work. . . . I [declared my belief in] the universal hope . . . the moment I ceased speaking . . . [I was invited to] come and have some meetings . . . not a word of disapproval was uttered, and . . . [the way] was thrown open to us for our first conference, which . . . proved to be the entering door for all the future conferences, and for our whole after work in England and elsewhere. . . . [M]y views on restitution . . . made the way for me in many places that would otherwise not have been open . . . without it I should have been shorn of half my power."[1075]

Hannah elsewhere explained her rise to Higher Life preacher in England in more detail, revealing that not universalism only, but spiritualism also—familiar intercourse with demons—was key to her exaltation as a famous Higher Life preacher and the founder of the Keswick theology. First, before beginning to preach the Higher Life, she sought Quaker approval for her teaching:

> Robert [Smith] . . . seems to expect nothing else but that I will plunge into the work [of Higher Life agitation] with equal zeal, but I have not felt any guidance as yet in reference to it, except in the direction of the Friends [Quakers]. . . . I really could not consent to do it unless the Friends had first heard me, and were fully alive to the purport of my message. [A Quaker leader] therefore 1071 Pgs. 196-228, The Unselfishness of God, Hannah W. Smith. Italics in original.

---

1072 pg. 228, The Unselfishness of God.

1073 pg. 199, The Unselfishness of God.

1074 Again, Mrs. Smith has a very broad definition of "evangelical."

1075 Pgs. 196-228, The Unselfishness of God. While much of this excerpt was reproduced earlier, the specific connection between Mrs. Smith's universalism and her rise as a Higher Life preacher is here more clearly brought out and noted.

> proposed, and we agreed, to invite a number of Friends to come to our house . . . to hear one of my lessons[.] . . . I burn to see this glorious life of faith becoming once more the realized experience of my dearly loved [Quaker] Society.[1076]

At this meeting, the critical incident was Hannah's declaration of her belief in universalism, which brought her the support of the famous noblewoman and spiritualist Mrs. Mount-Temple, also known as Mrs. Cowper-Temple,[1077] who attended both Quaker meetings and spiritualist séances with her husband. Mrs. Mount-Temple narrated:

> [T]he critical . . . incident at this meeting [took place while] Hannah was sitting in a little circle of excellent orthodox friends [Quakers], who had assembled to hear some of the good things that she had to impart, and she was there on examination.
>
> She happened to have seen a funeral in the street, and as she spoke of it, we all put on the conventional look of sadness. "Oh," she said, "when I meet a funeral I always give thanks for the brother or sister delivered from the trials and pains of this mortal state." "How wonderful," I thought, and I could not help exclaiming, "Is that possible? Do you feel this about everybody?" . . . She stopped and looked around. . . . [It was] a time when the universal hope was deemed a heresy, and she was on her trial. She owns that she went through a few moments of conflict. But truth prevailed, and looking up, with her bright glance, she said, "Yes, about everybody, for I trust in the love of God." I yielded my heart at once to this manifestation of trust and love and candour.[1078]

Logan Pearsall Smith described his mother's critical confession of universalism in more detail:

> [S]he could not, she avowed to the assembled company, believe that the God she worshipped as a God of love was capable of such awful cruelty [as not to take every single person to heaven]; sinners, of course, He punished, but that He had decreed that their torments should be unending was to her a horrible belief. . . . [T]he company was on the point of breaking up in confusion when from the depths of the great drawing-room there floated forward, swathed in rich Victorian draperies and laces, a tall and stately lady, [Mrs. Cowper-Temple,] who kissed my mother, and said, "My dear, I don't believe it either."
>
> This dramatic moment was . . . a turning point . . . since, if it had not occurred, our family would no doubt have soon returned to America[.] . . . For this lady who thus intervened and took my mother under her protection was, as it were, the queen of evangelical Christians;[1079] and her acceptance . . . [and] corroborat[ion] of [Mrs. Smith's] view of Hell . . . afterwards confirmed by that of her husband, William Cowper Temple, silenced all opposition and no further objections were suggested . . . [since the] Cowper Temples, owing to their great wealth and high position,

---

1076 Pgs. 21-22, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to Sarah Beck, January 22, 1874.

1077 The "Mount Temples" were the "Cowper Temples" for the reasons, likely related to adultery and immorality, described on pgs. 45-46, Unforgotten Years, Logan P. Smith. William Cowper Temple inherited Broadlands in 1865, at which time he became Lord Mount Temple; he possessed the estate until his death in 1888. See pgs. 22-23, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. The designations "Cowper Temple" and "Mount Temple" are generally employed in this composition as synonyms rather than with reference to specific periods in the life of the husband and wife.

1078 Pgs. 27-28, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith; see pgs. 116-117, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

1079 That such an unconverted heretic and spiritualist as Mrs. Cowper-Temple could be viewed as "the queen of evangelical Christians" illustrates the utter absence of spiritual discernment in these "evangelical" circles where the Keswick theology was born.

were by far the most important people in the world in which [Mr. and Mrs. Smith] were, so to speak, on trial.[1080]

Mrs. Mount-Temple was delighted in Hannah W. Smith's confession of universalism—she declared that it was "what strongly drew me to her that day"[1081]—as was Mr. Mount-Temple, who "partly believe[d] in Mahomed, Vishna, Buddha, the Pope, the Patriarch . . . [and] love[d] high, low and Broad Church."[1082] The couple were of one mind in religious matters.[1083] Thus, because of Hannah W. Smith's frank confession of universalism, the Mount-Temples threw their powerful influence behind her and her husband. With such patronage, and the help of the demons conjured in the Cowper-Temples's séances, the Pearsall Smiths were exalted to their position as leading Higher Life preachers, and the founding of the Keswick theology became possible.

The Mount-Temples were the owners of the Broadlands estate where the foundational precursor Conference to the Keswick Conventions was held, and the fundamental innovations of the Keswick theology on the older orthodoxy were set forth.[1084] Broadlands was a receptacle for amalgamating many mystical heresies and spreading such newly minted concoctions onward; for instance, both the Catholic "Bernard of Clairvaux" and "profound saying[s] . . . of Druidic philosophy," uttered, perhaps, between Druidic acts of human sacrifice,[1085] were welcome at Broadlands.[1086]

[1080] Pgs. 44-46, Unforgotten Years, Logan P. Smith; cf. pgs. 27-28, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith.

[1081] Pg. 116, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1082] Pg. 6, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1083] Pg. 27, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1084] While the first Keswick Convention followed the first Broadland Conference as a continuation of Broadlands teaching, not the first Broadlands Conference only, but also the following yearly Broadlands Conferences profoundly impacted the Keswick Convention and its theology. The presence of many of the same Higher Life preachers at both events, and comparable themes and goals at the two meetings, contributed to a close symbiotic relationship.

[1085] For example:

> [T]he Gauls . . . [w]ithout the Druids . . . never sacrifice. . . . [A]s to their modes of sacrifice and divination . . . [t]hey would strike a man devoted as an offering in his back with a sword, and divine from his convulsive throes. . . . It is said they have other modes of sacrificing their human victims; that they pierce some of them with arrows, and crucify others in their temples; and that they prepare a colossus of hay and wood, into which they put cattle, beasts of all kinds, and men, and then set fire to it. (pg. 295, The Geography of Strabo, Strabo, 4:4:5)

> The nation of all the Gauls is extremely devoted to superstitious rites; and on that account they who are troubled with unusually severe diseases, and they who are engaged in battles and dangers, either sacrifice men as victims, or vow that they will sacrifice them, and employ the Druids as the performers of those sacrifices; because they think that unless the life of a man be offered for the life of a man, the mind of the immortal gods can not be rendered propitious, and they have sacrifices of that kind ordained for national purposes. Others have figures of vast size, the limbs of which formed of osiers they fill with living men, which being set on fire, the men perish enveloped in the flames. They consider that the oblation of such as

As Hannah W. Smith saw her doctrine of the Higher Life in the ideas of Buddhism[1087] and Hinduism,[1088] so the Higher Life proclaimed at Broadlands and affirmed by the Mount-Temples was not that only of Roman Catholic mysticism, and other unregenerate mystics within the Judaeo-Christian tradition, but even that of overtly pagan Eastern mysticism:

> From very early times, and especially in the countries of the East, there have been men and women who have sought . . . [to] ponder the nature and duties of true life, to be alone with God, and learn to know and worship Him.
>
> Buddha and his followers in India, the Essenes among the Jews, and the early Christians of the third and fourth centuries, who from Rome and many other cities fled to the deserts of Egpyt . . . [medieval] anchorite[s] . . . [dwellers in] monastic settlements . . . [h]ermits . . . perfect m[e]n . . . [possessed] spiritual power . . . [that] gave them force and initiative[.] . . . Men and women who lived thus were revered, trusted, and consulted during their lifetime, and honoured, and sometimes worshipped, after their death. . . . The Roman Catholics have their "Retreats" under a spiritual director, the . . . Anglicans of the English Church have their "quiet days," the Quakers their Conferences[.] . . . Surely these practices, during so many ages and amongst such diverse peoples . . . point to a true instinct rooted deeply in human nature, one which is referred to and sanctioned in the Holy Scriptures . . . the felt need . . . [to] reach after the highest possibilities of life. . . . The Conferences at Broadlands came about this way.[1089] > have been taken in theft, or in robbery, or any other offense, is more acceptable to the immortal gods; but when a supply of that class is wanting, they have recourse to the oblation of even the innocent. (Gallic War, Julius Caesar, 6:16).

[1086] Pgs. 88-89, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. The particular profundity of the Druids discussed is both an affirmation of the Inner Light, that "God manifests Himself . . . [and] His word is uttered . . . [in the] human spirit," and a rejection of the Biblical fact that the church, the congregation of saints, is the temple of God (Ephesians 2:20-22; 1 Timothy 3:15). For the Druids, only nature and the human spirit are allegedly such temples.

Perhaps since the word "Druid" appears to be derived from the Old English word for "tree," and the Druidic philosophy had much alleged good in it at Broadlands that deserved to be accepted, apparently pantheistic affirmations (though not entirely clear because of their terseness) at Broadlands such as the following were less surprising: "Christ is everywhere. The blessing in everything reveals Him. Trees, one of the earliest symbols of God, worshipped" (pg. 213, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Italics in original. There certainly is no hint of condemnation of tree-worship in the context, and pgs. 211-212 suggest that it is considered acceptable in at least certain situations.).

[1087] Mrs. Smith stated that her spiritual "secret" was inquired about by "Siddartha" (Letter to Anna, February 5, 1880, reproduced in the entry for October 2 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter), that is, "Siddartha Gautama" or Buddha, founder of Buddhism.

[1088] E. g., concerning the Hindu mystic Chunder Sen, Mrs. Smith stated: "I have read Chunder Sen, and do feel just like sailing for India to see him. What a grand revelation that man has had! It stirred me to the very depths. . . . I know the 'I am' he knew [the pagan Hindu 'I am.']" (Letter to Anna, September 11, 1879, reproduced in the entries for September 22-24 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

[1089] Pgs. 5-16, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. While Jackson's description of the parties above is overwhelmingly positive, unspecified "false ideals of life and religion" are mentioned (pg. 11).

Indeed, for Mr. Mount Temple, a poem praising the Muslim Allah, including the confession "La Allah, illa Allah![1090] . . . expressed better than anything he knew his own thoughts and feelings."[1091] Universalism and religious syncretism were the foundation of the close friendship of Hannah Smith with Mrs. Mount-Temple and her husband.

The Mount-Temples also found enchanting and attractive the Quaker rejection of a judicial justification solely by the imputed righteousness of Christ and the associated Quaker Higher Life doctrine of sanctification by faith alone preached by the Smiths. Mrs. Cowper-Temple narrated:

> William [Cowper-Temple] was deeply interested in the experiences of which [Hannah W. Smith] and her husband had to tell us. We had been brought up to try to hold the forensic view of justification by faith; but of sanctification by faith we had never heard, and it seemed to us that, though the meaning of the two terms [justification and sanctification] might be identical, it enabled us to look at the doctrine in a new light . . . for who could really care about being merely accounted righteous? [W]hile to be made righteous . . . seemed something worth hearing about.[1092]

Mr. and Mrs. Cowper-Temple's support for Mrs. Smith and her husband, because of Hannah's universalism and the Smiths' Quaker repudiation of the gospel by confusing justification and sanctification, led to Hannah and Robert's exaltation to the central position as Higher Life preachers—their "fame spread from Broadlands."[1093] The 1874 Conference at Broadlands that came about because of Hannah's confession of universalism and repudation of justification and the gospel was the "initiatory [Higher Life] Conference . . . [and] the starting-point for those that followed . . . and which, but for this one at Broadlands, would never have been held."[1094] That is:

> [B]ut for this spectacular intervention, [the Smiths] might never have taken to preaching in England . . . [I]t was the worldly greatness of [Hannah's] new friend which saved H. W. S. . . . Lady Mount Temple . . . [was] a hospitable leader of the evangelicals[1095] (Broadlands became 1090 That is, the shahada, the most important article of faith for Muslims, the recitation of which is the means through which people convert to Islam. Modern transliteration of the shahada is usually slightly different than what was employed in Edwin Arnold's poem and referenced by Mr. Mount-Temple. The second half of the shahadah was not specifically quoted.

---

1091 Pg. 169, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. The poem Mr. Mount-Temple loved so well, as excerpted in his wife's Memorials, was Edwin Arnold's "After death in Arabia."

1092 Pgs. 116-117, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. Italics in original.

1093 Pg. 57, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith; cf. pg. 120, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple, for Robert P. Smith's impulse in the initiation of the Broadlands meetings. Note also that the 1874 Broadlands Conference, the one that initated the Oxford, Brighton, and Keswick Conventions, was, as Mrs. Mount-Temple testified, the pinnacle of the spirituality of Broadlands (pg. 118, ibid).

1094 Pg. 135, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

1095 Again, "evangelical" is very, very loosely defined, so that a heretic such as Mrs. Smith was considered one. Mrs. Smith was an "evangelical" in that she was not a High Church Anglo-Catholic.

> almost a second home to the Pearsall Smiths)[.] . . . The religious conferences at Broadlands, where H. W. S. often preached, became famous. . . . [T]he house . . . was filled to the attics and many of the guests overflowed into the inns . . . [f]amous people attended, in the company of others less famous.[1096]

Along with the weighty patronage of Mrs. Cowper-Temple, "the Friends . . . were unanimous in wishing [her] . . . to give them a series"[1097] of Higher Life lessons, and Mrs. Smith's fame as a Higher Life preacher had consequently begun, with the "Mount Temples [as] ardent supporters of the Smiths."[1098] As a result, "the good Cowper Temples . . . inaugurate[d] a series of such [Higher Life] meetings," the first and following, Broadlands Conferences, those key initial precursors and supports of the Keswick Conventions. "Lady Mount-Temple . . . initiated the Broadlands Conferences in 1874 where one might find, at the same gathering, a preaching Negress, a Quaker, a Shaker, an atheist, a spiritualist, an East End Socialist, and a prophet of any sort at all."[1099] At these Broadlands meetings Mr. Smith "was an acceptable preacher . . . but [Mrs. Smith], beautiful in her Quaker dress, with her candid gaze and golden hair, was given the name of 'the Angel of the Churches,' and her expositions . . . attracted the largest audiences, and made these gatherings famous in the religious world."[1100] Hannah W. Smith, who was present at the first, the last, and most of the Broadlands Conferences in-between,[1101] truly epitomized the Higher Life as presented at Broadlands and its successor Conventions at Oxford, Brighton, and Keswick.[1102] From the first Conference in 1874, the root of all the subsequent Higher Life and Keswick movement[1103] and a pinnacle of Higher Life teaching,[1104] participants generally recognized that they "received

---

1096 Pg. 28, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. At Broadlands Logan P. Smith notes that one of the speakers "taught that sin was a disease" (pg. 28, ibid), perhaps a reference to the Faith and Mind Cure.

1097 Pg. 22, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to Sarah Beck, February 7, 1874.

1098 The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, ed. Dieter, entry for December 30.

1099 Pg. 7, The Letters of John Ruskin to Lord and Lady Mount-Temple, ed. John L. Bradley.

1100 Pgs. 48ff., Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith.

1101 Pgs. 48, 160, etc., The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

1102 Pgs. 122ff., The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

1103 Pg. 135, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

1104 "'Each Conference,' said Lady Mount-Temple, 'had its distinctive character and charm, so that it was often said, 'Surely this is the best we have had.' I think, however, that none brought out such intimate revelations of spiritual experience as the first, or seemed more to make each one present to understand the meaning of the communion of saints,['"] (pg. 134, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910) including, of course, in Lady Mount-Temple's view, the dead saints that still communicated with the living through spiritualistic séances.

the clearest and most definite teaching" from Mrs. Smith's preaching there,[1105] just as she set forth the Broadlands and Keswick doctrines in her "books, which are well known."[1106] Many at Broadlands could testify: "She was to me the most inspiring . . . figure . . . amongst those who addressed us."[1107] She led countless multitudes of unregenerate individuals at Broadlands to feel happy, "sunny, and joyful" as she pointed them to the ease and rest of the Higher Life.[1108] The Cowper-Temples kept up the Broadlands Higher Life Conferences annually, spreading the Higher Life with Hannah W. Smith, as well as supporting the Oxford Convention[1109] and other subsequent Higher Life gatherings, until "Lord Mount Temple's death at Keswick."[1110] Truly, through the work of the Pearsall Smiths and Mount Temples in the birthing of the Higher Life theology proclaimed at Keswick and in other ways, "[t]he results that followed on the Broadlands Conferences were widespread and various"—indeed, "it is difficult to measure them," for they are truly incalculable.[1111]

Mrs. Mount-Temple was not only Mrs. Smith's patron in her Higher Life preaching, but the two became very close friends—so much so that Mrs. Mount-Temple mentions Mrs. Smith first in a list of "[f]riends whom we [the Mount-Temples] loved."[1112] During their time as Higher Life evangelists in Britain, the Smiths would often leave their children "at Broadlands in Hampshire, the home of [Mr. and Mrs. Smith's] friends, the Cowper Temples . . . Broadlands became . . . almost [the family]

[1105] E. g., pgs. 122-123, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Cf. pg. v.

[1106] Pg. 123, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1107] Pg. 48, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1108] Pg. 2, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910; cf. pgs. 134-135.

[1109] Thus, for example, Mr. Cowper-Temple's endorsement and support of the Oxford Convention was gladly accepted and publicly printed and proclaimed; see, e. g., pg. 32, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.

[1110] Pg. 53, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention, Polluck. The Broadlands Conferences ran yearly from 1874 to 1885 (cf. pg. 141, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890; pg. 1, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910). Lord Mount Temple died in the town of Keswick, not during a Keswick Convention meeting.

[1111] Pg. 245, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1112] Pg. 95, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

home in England,"[1113] where "innumerable guests . . . were gathered . . . to listen to the glad tidings" of the Higher Life.[1114] Hannah called her rich patron "our sweet Lady Mount Temple,"[1115] since their "friendship lasted till [Mrs. Mount Temple's] death in extreme old age,"[1116] when Mrs. Smith was one of a few very close friends granted entrance to Mrs. Mount Temple on her deathbed.[1117] They spoke together at various functions to large crowds.[1118]

Lord Mount-Temple was not merely the owner of the Broadlands property but the active leader and director of the Higher Life Conferences on his estate; they were the highlight of their year.[1119] He "was eminently fitted to preside over such an assembly . . . [and] occup[ied] the position of President at these Conferences,"[1120] while "Lady Mount-Temple . . . was the sun and soul of all that . . . company."[1121] Mr. Mount-Temple's spiritual guidance and leadership were crucial, unforgettable, and a model for Broadlands spirituality.[1122] He opened and closed the meetings, presided over them, introduced and specified the topics Conference participants were to address, set and maintained the tone and direction of the speeches, and regularly spoke himself.[1123] Broadlands spirituality and Higher Life theology are inextricably united to the spiritual system of the Mount-Temples—indeed, the spirituality of the Conferences and that of their hosts were indubitably one and the same.

[1113] Pgs. 42-43, 50, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith.

[1114] Pg. 50, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith.

[1115] Pg. 119, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to her friends, November 22, 1891.

[1116] Pg. 47, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith. For Logan's connection with them also, see, e. g., pg. 166, ibid.

[1117] Pg. 147, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to her daughter, Mary Berenson, October 26, 1901. See pgs. 27, 74, 111, 126-7, ibid, for other interactions of theirs.

[1118] E. g., to over 3000 at a "Women's Jubilee Meeting at a large hall in Lambeth" (pg. 90, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to her friends, May 10, 1887).

[1119] Pg. 28, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1120] Pgs. 38-39, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1121] Pg. 44, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1122] E. g., note the description of his prayers on pgs. 135, 225, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910, as he "seemed to lift one into the very presence of God."

[1123] Cf. pgs. 156, 164, 168, 171, 184, 186, 195, 198, 208, 215, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Lord Mount-Temple would preach elsewhere also—his public proclamations were not limited to the Broadlands Conferences (e. g., pg. 41, ibid.).

Mr. and Mrs. Mount-Temple were unregenerate people who were drawn into spiritualism, the Higher Life theology, and many other grievous false teachings, and their devilish errors were blatent and obvious to any who had a modicrum of Biblical discernment. In Mr. Mount-Temple's "childhood[,] religion was at a very low ebb . . . religious instruction did not come within the scope of recognized maternal duties," and he received "no religious training," so his ideas were very "vague."[1124] He never came to a point of conscious conviction of sin and of his lost estate, followed by repentance and faith in Jesus Christ, and to the new birth. Instead, as he thought, he felt "the first strivings within him of an unexpressed God-consciousness . . . in his cradle," and from that time he was a "spotless youth" who was, apart from Biblical conversion, "growing spiritually"[1125] (contrast Luke 5:31-32). Similarly, Lady Mount-Temple "as a child . . . had learned to pray but had never undergone a 'conversion'" to Christ; instead, "search[ing] for . . . a higher life," she turned to spiritualism in 1861.[1126] She testified: "[C]onversion never came to me. Instead of it I was early beset by doubts of all kinds."[1127] However, at least each of the Mount-Temples could testify: "I am enrolled in [the] holy army [of] . . . the Lord Jesus. . . . I have been signed with the sign of the cross in Baptism."[1128] After all, the sacrament of "Christening . . . was the ingathering of [infant] lambs into [their] Master's Fold."[1129] Surely a baptismal regeneration could substitute for a Biblical conversion.

While unconverted, the couple nevertheless desired spirituality. Seeking the Higher Life, Mr. and Mrs. Mount-Temple "learned to take a much wider view of the Church as a single body of all baptized Christians, including Nonconformists and members of the Roman and Greek Churches."[1130] For example, a picture of Christ bestowing the stigmata on the hands and feet of Francis of Assisi was a wonderful

---

[1124] Pgs. 4-5, 101, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple, a biography by his wife, Georgina Cowper-Temple, Baroness Mount-Temple, followed by biographical notes by other authors], G. Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1125] Pg. 182, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1126] Pg. 8, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982; cf. pg. 11.

[1127] Pg. 101, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1128] Pgs. 24-25, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1129] Pg. 94, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1130] Pgs. 8-9, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

positive in the spirituality of Broadlands,[1131] for such a receipt of stigmata was certainly not a devilish deceit, but a glorious and positive event. Mr. Mount-Temple testified:

> I . . . always felt an interest in the opinions of different denominations . . . and have attended the worship of all which have been within my reach . . . I have been able to enjoy the privilege of prayer with them all.
>
> I have prayed fervently in the . . . Romish churches, and have lifted up my heart in their solemn litanies and pealing music[.] . . . I have learnt much in the Unitarian services in Liverpool; I have profited by the sermons and prayers of the Independents, Wesleyans, and Baptists; I have joined with Quakers and Plymouth Brethren . . . worshipping the same God . . . [by] Unitarian [writings] . . . I am drawn nearer to my heavenly Father[.] . . . I found myself edified by . . . Papists and Greeks [Eastern Orthodox], as well as with Calvinists and Lutherans[.] . . . In [a] . . . Unitarian Chapel . . . [i]t is delightful to . . . join in prayer and praise, and to carry away some good thoughts. . . . I have never become acquainted with any religious body in which there were not to be found persons full of love to our Lord.[1132]

Preachers of the Trinity and preachers of a non-Trinitarian deity,[1133] advocates of justification by faith alone and of justification by works, worshippers of Jehovah and worshippers of Mary, and all religious bodies whatever, contained people who were full of love to the Lord, Mr. Mount-Temple knew. "From the first he combined the opinions of the Broad Church with . . . fervour and warmth."[1134] Similarly, Mrs. Mount-Temple did not view Roman Catholics or other advocates of false gospels as people to "proselytize, believing they had all they needed to make them good Christians."[1135] Naturally, medieval Romanist mystics such as "Fénelon . . . were . . . men of exalted and angelic nature."[1136] "Catholic[s] of the mystic school" were present and preaching at the

---

[1131] Pgs. 67-68, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1132] Pgs. 17, 27-28, 34, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. Compare also pgs. 53, 84-85, 102, for their delight in Catholic priests and Cardinals, building of a Roman Catholic church edifice, and further endorsements of Mystery Babylon, as well as ecumenicalism and acceptance of many other false religions. Mr. Mount-Temple stated: "I have to record my thanks for the omission in my childhood of all narrow doctrines," for that opened him up to the "teaching of Henry Drummond in intensely spiritual High Churchism . . . for [the universalist] Maurice's broad instruction in unconventional real Christian facts . . . for the knowledge that we are all two in one—two natures in one person . . . the Divine and the human" (pg. 183, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890).

[1133] For example, it was acceptable to preach modalism at Broadlands: "Jesus Christ is. . . the Holy Spirit, Who will dwell in us" (pg. 170, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910). Other false teachings concerning the Triune God could be found at Broadlands (e. g., pg. 195, ibid), although at times because of the woeful ignorance of theology by its participants rather than because of a conscious and active hostility to Christian Trinitarianism.

[1134] Pg. 102, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1135] Pg. 79, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1136] Pg. 30, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

Broadlands Conferences from the first.[1137] The place of worship at the Mount-Temples's Broadlands residence contained a special crucifix, kept low to the ground so that not adults only, but children also could reach its feet to kiss the graven image of the Catholic "Christ," and poems about the crucifix and prayers to be like it were celebrated parts of Broadlands spirituality.[1138] Radically different and contradictory beliefs were to be united around Higher Life mysticism: "High Church, Broad Church, Low Church were . . . submerged in the Deep Church."[1139] Hannah W. Smith likewise rejoiced in the ecumenical unity and the "absolute oneness" she felt with those who believed and preached false gospels at the Broadlands Conferences, a oneness she recognized as greatly facilitated by and manifested in Mr. Mount-Temple.[1140] "All shades of religious opinion" were represented at Broadlands,[1141] and Mr. Mount-Temple's command was embraced: "[D]on't be too critical."[1142] "None of those who took part . . . at Broadlands . . . could be spared"[1143]—every single one of the false views and heresies represented there were necessary, and every single speaker and visitor was a positive influence and helped raise others to the Higher Life, no matter how abominable his false doctrines and practices were when compared to Scripture.

Having come to doubt the doctrine of the Fall,[1144] the Mount-Temples came to adopt a "broader view of Christian truth and of the universal hope," that is, the universalism that made Hannah Smith so appealing to them. Many universalists in addition to Mrs. Smith were among their religious teachers, facilitating both the ecumenicalism of both the Pearsall Smith and Cowper Temple families. "Dr. Baylee" was a dear "religious . . . . friend . . . for many years" who "helped indeed," and he "was rejoicing in the universal hope" when he "visited [the Mount Temples] in later years at

---

1137 Pgs. 79, 34-35, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

1138 Pgs. 157-160, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

1139 Pg. 134, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

1140 Pg. 174, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

1141 Pg. 139, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. Cf. pg. 174.

1142 Pg. 133, Pgs. 108-109, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

1143 Pg. 83, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

1144 Pgs. 8-9, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

Broadlands."[1145] They testified: "[H]elp and enlargement through the great Christian prophet of our day, Frederick Maurice. We used to wander on Sunday afternoons to [his] . . . Chapel[,] [where we] heard the broader view of Christian truth and of the universal hope[.]"[1146] They testified that their "best friends" included Maurice's "disciple[s],"[1147] and proclaimed that "the blessed George MacDonald," that famous universalist, "has been one of our dearest friends and teachers,"[1148] indeed, a "special teacher or prophet" at Broadlands. Despite the plain words of Jesus Christ (John 8:44), Broadlands affirmed that "all [are] children of God," with the "actual, living, inspiring presence of the Holy Spirit in each heart."[1149] The rejection of Christ's teaching about hell in favor of the universalist heresy was important to the great Higher Life lived by the Cowper-Temples and proclaimed at Broadlands, and the promotion of universalists such as Hannah W. Smith was consequently near to their heart.

Broadlands ecumenicalism was held together, not by universalism only, but by the Quaker doctrine of the Divine Seed also:

> [Mr. Mount-Temple] discern[ed] far more quickly than most the Divine seed in every man. . . . He was in very truth, as George Fox was, the "friend" of all men. He believed, with George Fox, that every soul of man was a visited soul . . . therefore differences of creed . . . were no hinderances to his loving fellowship[.] . . . This deep sense of the solidarity of mankind [in the Divine seed] led Lord and Lady Mount Temple to seek to gather the leaders of wholly differing schools of thought together in their home at Broadlands, that they might all be drawn closer together[.] . . . All sects . . . were represented at these Conferences. High Church, Low Church, Broad Church, Dissenters, Quakers, Plymouth Brethren, Salvation Army officers, [and so on] . . . were all at [Broadlands] bound together into one common brotherhood[.] . . . Each [speaker] agreed immensely with the last speaker, and then proceeded to offer quite another Gospel.[1150]

Since the Divine Seed was in every man, Lord Mount Temple prayed for a mystical Deification: "My Lord Jesus, as Thou didst take my humanity, I pray Thee impart to me Thy Divinity."[1151] Employing the language of the truth affirmed at the Council of Chalcedon of Jesus Christ's character as one Person with two natures, a true Divine nature and a true human nature, Mr. Mount Temple affirmed the sickening idolatrous

---

[1145] Pg. 103, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1146] Pg. 182, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1147] Pg. 106, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1148] Pgs. 106, 130, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1149] Pgs. 131-132, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1150] Pgs. 120, 173-174, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1151] Pg. 183, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

error that all men are, like Christ, likewise single Persons with a Divine and human nature: "I have to record my thanks . . . for deep Churchism at our Conferences . . . for the knowledge that we are all two in one—two natures in one person . . . the Divine and human."[1152] Likewise, as Christ had preexisted his incarnation, so all men had preexistent souls—"We were not created when we were born; that was not the beginning—'Trailing clouds of glory do we come/From God, Who is our home'; we were put here for a term, for our education, enwrapped in a fleshly nature, that the inner nature might grow by overcoming it."[1153] Consequently, as one enters the Higher Life of mystical union with God, one comes to "nothing short of interpenetration, oneness with God," patterned after Christ, for "[i]n Him the human is the Divine."[1154] Passing beyond a simple knowledge of Jesus leads to "the ideal life, the life of man as Son of God."[1155] The preexistent soul becomes the Divine Seed in man, so that he can enter into the Higher Life and be finally divinized. Speakers at Broadlands tied in deification and preexistent souls with universalism and the Divine Seed in every man, for the Biblical doctrine of total depravity was set aside: "Awake to the knowledge that every fellow-creature is a member of Christ. Gordon found it useful in dealing with men, whether heathen or others, to say to himself, 'Here is one in whom God is, I will speak to the God in him.' . . . We must be dead to the sin in others, alive to the God in them."[1156] Certainly if, in accordance with Satan's primordial lie (Genesis 3:5) and consistent with Quaker doctrine, all people are God and man, the possibility that some men are "heretick[s]" to be "reject[ed]" after admonition (Titus 3:10), or that the true Christian was to have "no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them" (Ephesians 5:11), would the farthest thing from Mr. Mount Temple's supposedly Divine but actually depraved and idolatrous mind.

The ecumenicalism and universalism derived from the Divine Seed doctrine were at the heart of the Broadlands Conferences, as they were exceedingly dear to Hannah W.

[1152] Pg. 183, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1153] Pg. 157, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Of course, the doctrine of pre-conception human existence fits very well with the spiritualism preached and practiced at Broadlands.

[1154] Pgs. 158-159, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1155] Pg. 192, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. "Son of God," not "son of God," is intentional by the Broadlands author.

[1156] Pg. 202, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

Smith and the Mount Temples, and passed into the Higher Life and Keswick movement through them. Unregenerate false teachers were treated as the objects, not of evangelism, but of hearty fellowship as the children of God,[1157] so that their ideas could be imbibed:

> Almost every shade of Christian thought was represented there; there were those who belonged to the High Church, Low Church, Broad Church, Dissenters, Salvationists, Quakers, Swedenborgians, all able . . . to meet as one brotherhood . . . in the real union apparent at these Conferences . . . learn[ing] from one another . . . [as] His children.[1158]

Indeed, ecumenicalism was one of the greatest and most marked results of the Broadlands Conferences:

> But perhaps the most marked of the results of the Conferences, the one which has had the widest influence, even amongst those who were never at Broadlands, but have caught something of its spirit, was the breaking down of barriers between brethren; . . . between those of whatever creed . . . the increased desire for union, that seems everywhere to be leavening the churches. . . . People met together at Broadlands who certainly would not have met elsewhere . . . [and] found their differences were of less importance than they had thought, and that they were one in the deepest aspiratons of their souls. . . . Evangelicals saw that Ritualists were not necessarily slaves of the husks and the letter; more important still, the eyes of orthodox religionists were opened to the mysterious workings of the spirit of truth in regions far beyond the precincts of recognized Christianity . . . a sign of what is coming upon Christendom.[1159] . . . Those hours were a prophecy and promise of . . . what is long[ed] for, "the corporate union[.]" . . . [T]he Broadlands Conferences were the starting-point of . . . [t]he great Conferences at Oxford in 1874, and at Brighton in 1875 . . . leading on to those held annually at Keswick[.] . . .
>
> Two men were heard talking together outside one of the great meetings at the first Oxford Conference. "What does it all mean?" said one. "Oh, don't you know," replied the other, "it's all the Christian people in the world are going to be one sect."[1160]

Ecumenicalism, both through the direct position of the leaven at Broadlands and through the leaven of the ecumenical Conferences it birthed at Oxford, Brighton, and Keswick, was a central result of the meetings started by Lord and Lady Mount-Temple. Furthermore, the alleged workings of God in saving and blessing people outside of Christianity and among all the groups in Christendom, which formed the foundation of Broadlands ecumenicalism, arose from the Broadlands emphasis upon universalism. At Conference after Conference Hannah W. Smith, Andrew Jukes, George MacDonald, and many others passionately set forth the universalist heresy;[1161] since all men have the Divine Seed within them, "the awakening touch will come, the life will be quickened and

---

[1157] E. g., pg. 78, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1158] Pgs. 32-33, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Compare also pgs. 2, 260.

[1159] Indeed, Broadlands was part of the preparation for the one-world religion centered in Rome, the whore of Babylon, that will unite unregenerate pseudo-Christianity and all other fales religions in the future Tribulation period (Revelation 17); in truth, Broadlands is a sign of what is coming upon Christendom.

[1160] Pgs. 249-252, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1161] E. g., pgs. 29, 50-52, 56ff., 165-166, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

manifest itself," so that all will come to salvation.[1162] Not regenerate man only, but each and every "man is the child of God,"[1163] without any qualification of any kind, so that "the ordinary work to be wrought by evangelical preaching . . . [s]udden and effectual conversion . . . is not in"[1164] MacDonald's writings or those of his fellow universalists. Evidence for universalism was culled, not from the Bible alone—for it was very difficult to find it there—but from many other sources, such as pagan religions and modern poets. After all, since "[a]ll the poets believe in a golden age," so should we:[1165]

> [T]he restitution of all things . . . [is something] which mankind in almost every age and in many countries seem to have had some kind of dim intimation[.] . . . I still have an impression of the reverent, serious attitude, the bowed head and almost breathless awe, in which the subject was approached, and the contributions, not only from our own Scriptures, but from the sacred writings of the East, from old philosophies, and from modern poets, which were brought forward to show how deep-seated was this great hope in the hearts of mankind generally. . . . "There is no evil," says the old Druidic philosophy, "that is not a greater good than it is an evil[."] . . . Dante surely had something of the same idea . . . [as did] Browning . . . [and] Tennyso[n] . . . [and] Trench[.] . . . Quotations were of course made from the Scriptures [also]. . . . Much was spoken that might be summed up in Walt Whitman's words[.] . . . [A] prayer from Lord Mount-Temple . . . would fitly close the meeting. . . . Referring to possibilities for individual souls after death, George MacDonald said one day: "The Roman Catholics believe in three stages after death. At the Reformation the Protestants gave up one, but they gave up the wrong one."[1166]

Consequently, the Broadlands Conferences stood for the position that "a desire to proselytize . . . has been the cause of all the religious tyranny and persecution that has been the disgrace of the Christian Church, and . . . is entirely opposed to the spirit and teaching of Jesus."[1167] Indeed:

[1162] Pg. 140, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Because of the Divine Seed in every man, Broadlands proclaimed: "The deepest cry of the human heart"—not of the regenerate heart only, but of all men's hearts, in flat contradiction to Romans 3:11—"is the cry for God" (pg. 230, ibid).

[1163] Pg. 263, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1164] Pg. 21, Forward Movements of the Last Half Century, Pierson.

[1165] Pg. 183, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. That is, our attitude should be that of George MacDonald: "All the poets believe in a golden age. I believe it."

[1166] Pgs. 140-143, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1167] Pg. 150, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Of course, the Broadlands position is entirely false. Boldly preaching all the truth to everyone, as Christ commanded in the Great Commission, and reproving error and sin (Ephesians 5:11-13; 2 Timothy 4:2), is actually conforming to the work of the Holy Spirit (John 16:8), loving one's neighbor as oneself (Leviticus 19:17-18), and the exact opposite of using the sword to torture or murder those with other religious convictions. When Romanists or other advocates of religious persecution killed their enemies, they put an end to the opportunity to convert them.

It is worth noting that the Broadlands attempt to convince the world that it is a great sin to prosyletize is itself an act of proselytism—it is an attempt to get those who believe John 14:6 to reject their view and adopt the religious sentiment of the Conference.

> [O]utside . . . the Christian temple . . . there are beautiful, preeminently beautiful souls adorned with all Christian graces. . . . These noble, beautiful souls . . . are the "other sheep, not of this fold," are guided by the "true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." . . . Proselytising is wrong. There was, perhaps, nothing our Lord condemned more strongly. . . . The desire to proselytize is generally from selfishness or pride. . . . We should never take from any man, not even from a heathen, that [spiritual truth] which he has, without giving him something better. . . . The world is helping the churches. There is an island in the South Sea, where, it is said, the people are never dishonest and never untruthful. A missionary is going out there. It makes one almost tremble to think of it.[1168]

Lord and Lady Mount-Temple were very successful in working at Broadlands with Hannah W. Smith and others in spreading their Higher Life ecumenicalism and universalism throughout Christendom.

The Inner Light, with its concomitant heresies of the Divine Seed and universalism, were exalted in the anti-cessationist Higher Life atmosphere of Broadlands. The "higher and deeper Christian life" was a development of "the inner light, which is variously manifested by human souls, each contributing in the measure it has received 'of the fullness of Him that filleth all in all,'" that is, of the Divine Seed in every man,[1169] the presence of which was intimately tied in with the affirmation of universalism and the rejection of an eternal hell.[1170] Experience and many world religions validated such ideas—had not the Druids believed in the Inner Light?[1171] A belief in the Biblical doctrine of human depravity, which denies that man has anything remotely close to a Divine Seed in him, was a tremendous roadblock to the Higher Life, for "only as . . . man . . . yields himself to this highest within him, can he know his true life, the spiritual life . . . self-surrender to the highest life within"[1172] is what is necessary. People can obey

---

[1168] Pgs. 209-211, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Of course, John 10:16 & 1:9 are radically misinterpreted in this quotation. Universalist sentiments such as these doubtless contributed to the early opposition of Keswick to adding a missionary meeting: "For the first few years of its existence, Keswick had no direct connection with missions. When Mr. Reginald Radcliffe pleaded [after the years of the earliest Conventions] for their admission to the programme, all he could obtain was the loan of the tent on the Saturday" (pg. 74, The Key to the Missionary Problem, Andrew Murray. London: J. Nisbet & Co, 1902). However, early Keswick reluctance to embrace missions was eventually overcome, and men such as Keswick's first world advocate, George Grubb, and Keswick's world embassador, F. B. Meyer, could circle the globe on missions, telling people that the lost do not burn in an eternal hell and that the heathen can be saved without personal faith in Christ.

[1169] Pgs. 120-121, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1170] E. g., pg. 140, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1171] Pgs. 88-89, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Compare pgs. 140-141.

[1172] Pg. 137, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

without grace, Biblically defined, since virtues are "latent in all men."[1173] Broadlands testified: "Whenever I meet a man, I know the germ of the Christ-life is there. . . . Christ is the life of men, the Divine seed in every one." Consequently, "[t]here is something to learn from every one," for "revelation" comes to all men through the Inner Light based on the Divine Seed.[1174] Monergistic regeneration of the spiritually dead sinner is the opposite of the Broadlands message; on the contrary, "[W]hat we call conversion [is] the potential spiritual life becoming the actual,"[1175] the Divine Seed beginning to flourish as those who already have Divinity within enter into the Higher Life.

The advance of "Christian Socialism"[1176] was also part of the Mount-Temples's spirituality. They "loved heartily" their "dear friends" and fellow leaders in "Christian Socialism," such as "Charles Kingsley" and "Tom Hughes,"[1177] who first met Mr. Mount-Temple at the first Broadlands Conference in 1874. However, Mr. Mount-Temple outshone them all in the battle for socialism: "[I]n the early days of Christian Socialism, . . . [the] movement [was] so vehemently and widely denounced, [but Mr. Mount-Temple] was from the first an advocate and liberal supporter, and, from his social and public position, risked more than all the rest of [its leaders] put together."[1178] Attacks on

---

[1173] Pg. 86, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1174] Pg. 178, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1175] Pg. 184, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1176] Pg. 9, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982. The Bible teaches an economic system that values private property (Exodus 20:15), free enterprise (Matthew 20:2), and economic freedom (Mt 20:15), rather than socialism or communism in any form. Scripture teaches that taxation on income should be below a flat 10% rate—any higher rate is a curse and a form of slavery (1 Samuel 8:6-8, 15, 17-18). "Redistributing" wealth—the government taking from one person by force through taxation to give to someone else it believes is more worthy—is ungodly (1 Samuel 8:14-15). Governments that redistribute wealth are stealing (Exodus 20:15), just like a robber who "redistributes" what a person owns. Such practices are considered in Scripture to be pagan (1 Samuel 8:19-20), tyrannical (1 Samuel 8:17-18), and oppressive (1 Samuel 12:3). Devaluing currency—as the government does by creating inflation—is also stealing (Isaiah 1:22, 25). National debt is a curse (Deuteronomy 28:12, 44). Bribery—including bribing certain classes of people to vote a certain way by promises of government handouts—is a sin and "perverted judgment" (1 Samuel 8:3), for the government is to be impartial and neither favor the rich or poor (Deuteronomy 16:19; Exodus 23:3; Proverbs 22:16). God commands individual believers and churches to generously and selflessly help the needy and poor (2 Thessalonians 3:10; Galatians 6:10; Luke 6:35), and not to do so is sinful, but for the government to employ force to extract money from people to give to either the rich or poor is the sin of stealing, not charity or generosity. Such Biblical teachings make the idea of a "Christian socialism" an oxymoron, similar to "Christian atheism" or "holy sinning."

[1177] Pg. 106, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1178] Pgs. 151, 171, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

freedom and the spread of socialism under the guise of Christianity were important parts of the Cowper-Temples's religion.

When the Cowper-Temples declared that they received alleged truths from "all sects" and "schools of thought,"[1179] their "all" was no exaggeration—as strong continuationists because of their belief in the Quaker doctrine of the Divine Seed, they happily received the allegedly inspired teachings of the most twisted cultists and vilest fanatics, as they exalted, listening to, and obeyed their heart's voice (cf. Jeremiah 17:9).[1180] They warmly held the "belief in the revival of the prophetic gifts which Christ had bestowed on his apostles for all men with a living faith."[1181] The couple consequently rejoiced in the demonically-manipulated perfectionist and cult leader Edward Irving and his Apostle, Henry Drummond. Irving founded of the Catholic Apostolic Church,[1182] predicted the end of the world in 1868, affirmed that Christ had adopted man's fallen nature, claimed that the gift of tongues and other first century miraculous gifts had been restored among his followers, and vigorously maintained other heresies, which Drummond faithfully supported and promulgated. Mrs. Mount-Temple narrated:

> Mr. Henry Drummond . . . [was] a very special influence which affected [Mr. Mount-Temple's] religious views[.] . . . At Albury, Mr. Drummond and Lady Harriet, the Duchess of Northumberland (then Lady Lovaine), and Lady Gage, the other daughter, were all very kind to us, and hoped perhaps that we should join the Apostolic Church, of which Mr. Drummond was an Apostle.
>
> It was all very interesting and hope-giving, and opened a new region to us. All we heard of the birth and development of this Church was thrilling. . . . Haldane Stewart had instituted . . . a system of prayer . . . for a special outpouring of the Spirit. He and other devout friends assembled at Albury, and there was, they believed, such a miraculous answer, that it was to them as a second Pentecost. Some began to speak under spiritual influences, and through these persons, endued, they believed, with the prophetic gift, a most beautiful Church system was organized, not, they said, by their own will or wisdom, but by the Spirit of God.
>
> They believed the Lord was soon to return [that is, in 1868], and that a new body of apostles and faithful disciples were called out to receive Him. They called this the Elias ministry. . . . They believed apostles were appointed supernaturally to rule the Church universal. Prophets were inspired to teach and evangelists sent forth with power [now that these offices had been restored in their religious organization; before that time] the prophetic gift was unknown, and the

---

[1179] Pgs. 173-174, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1180] Pg. 161, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1181] Pgs. 8-9, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1182] Compare the articles on Irving, Drummond, and the Catholic Apostolic Church in the Biographical Dictionary of Evangelicals, the Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church, and the Cyclopedia of Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical Literature. The Catholic Apostolic Henry Drummond (1786-1860) should not be confused with the later Henry Drummond (1851-1897) who worked with Moody.

> apostolic universal ministry had been lost. . . . [T]his [was a] really splendid ideal of a Church. . . . [It greatly influenced] my husband's religious development.
>
> The kindled hope of the Lord's speedy approach, the calling out of Apostles, and of an elect body to meet Him, greatly quickened our spiritual life. We attended their beautiful services, we listenened to [their] eloquent and fervent appeals[.] . . .
>
> We hung on Mr. Drummond's words for hours, while he described to us this wonderful ideal[.] . . . He was indeed one of the last men . . . whom one could suspect of any fanaticism or spiritual aberration.[1183] . . . Imagine such a man an Apostle . . . bringing in the Kingdom of God. . . . This was the new world in which we found ourselves, and very kindling and entrancing it was!
>
> I was carried away by it[.] . . . It deeply moved William, but he did not feel called to leave the place and the duties to which he was attached. . . . [W]hat remained to us of the teaching and blessing of this time [was,] [f]irst of all, the revival of spiritual life [that is, the Higher Life]; then, a much wider view of the Church . . . includ[ing] all who have been baptized . . . comprising therefore the members of the Roman and Greek Churches, and all Nonconformists [as well as] Quakers [as] the descendants of those within the covenant of baptism. . . . [S]pecial truth [was] confided to . . . the Unitarians . . . [while] the Friends [received the] . . . special truth . . . [of] the Inner Light . . . the Wesleyans [of] . . . perfection, etc. All one body . . . [Drummond] taught us also the meaning of Symbols, and of Ritual . . . [t]he members of the Apostolic Church hold that the Lord is truly present in Holy Communion[.] . . . So it was, that without joining the Apostolic Church, William always felt much indebted to the teaching we received [from them] at Albury[.][1184]

Thus, from Irving's Catholic Apostolic cult, the Cowper-Temples were encouraged in ecumenicalism, continuationism, post-conversion Spirit baptism with miraculous results, the Inner Light, the Real Presence, perfectionism, and the Higher Life, all of which flourished at their Broadlands Conferences and at the Keswick Conventions which developed from them.

Spiritualism was at the root of the Higher Life beliefs of Mr. and Mrs. Mount-Temple.[1185] Mrs. Cowper-Temple explained that, having first heard of spiritualism in 1857 and becoming fully initiated by 1861, she led her husband also to embrace the occult,[1186] so that Mr. Mount-Temple "gathered all the good he could from spiritualism, and was helped . . . leading us to a higher life."[1187] The couple attended a vast number of 1183 This affirmation of Mrs. Mount-Temple illustrates her utter inability to recognize fanaticism and spiritual aberration.

---

1184 Pgs. 103-105, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

1185 The Mount-Temples' interest in "somnambulism, believed to open a portal to the spiritual world" (pg. 752, The Encyclopedia of Christianity, vol. 4, Fahlbusch & Bromiley. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 2005), is also noteworthy (cf. pgs. 39-40, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890).

1186 Pgs. 107-108, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. Mrs. Mount-Temple recounts that Lord Palmerston "disapproved of my heretical views, and feared my influence over William" (pg. 48, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890).

1187 Pg. 108, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

séances,[1188] seeing there great marvels performed by, as they thought, the dead who had been conjured up. They learned, contrary to 1 Corinthians 15, that the true resurrection is not that of the body, but the rising into the realm of the spirits—the Higher Life.[1189] They not only were spiritualists themselves, but sought—successfully—to lead others into their fellowship with devils,[1190] as they were "always ready to introduce" their friends, such as Hannah W. Smith, "to influential people among the spiritualists."[1191] They greatly advanced the careers of self-professed "Christian spiritualist" ministers such as H. R. Haweis.[1192] They "studied the . . . writings of Swedenborg,"[1193] "the great spiritualist of the eighteenth century,"[1194] and Swedenborg's writings and friends were continued influences at Broadlands and its Conferences.[1195] Indeed, spiritualism was promoted at [1188] For example, a book where Mr. Cowper-Temple records material concerning his séances indicates that he attended at least 31 between 1861 and February 23, 1864, sitting with numerous prominent mediums; see pgs. 9-10, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982. They continued for years to attend very many, and eventually gave up counting (pg. 18).

---

[1189] "The true resurrection day" is not the day with the Triune God raises the bodies of the dead, but "the day of that great promotion from the world of matter to the world of spirit and the unlocking of the senses of the soul" (pg. 188, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890).

[1190] See, e. g., Letter 9 10, 13, pgs. 30-32, 36-37, The Letters of John Ruskin to Lord and Lady Mount-Temple, ed. John L. Bradley, where one can find discussions of learning things from ghosts and casual and familiar references to seeing, asking questions of, and conversing with spirits of the dead that have been raised up. See also pgs. 7-8, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1191] Pg. 18, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982. Compare Mrs. Smith's description of her visit to a spiritualist medium on pgs. 155-156 of A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith.

[1192] Haweis believed and taught: "Spiritualism fitted very nicely on to Christianity; it seemed to be a legitimate development, not a contradiction, not an antagonist. . . . Spiritualism had rehabilitated the Bible. . . . They [spiritualistic phenomena] occur every day in London as well as in the Acts of the Apostles" (pgs. 176-177, "Modern Spiritualism Briefly Tested by Scripture," The Fundamentals 4:12, A. J. Pollock). When the Mount-Temples heard Haweis preach, were impressed with his "ability and largeness of view," and "thus Mr. Haweis became our friend," they stated, so that Mr. Mount-Temple "asked him to revive" the "Church in Westminster" where Haweis was, by "William's gift," able to preach spiritualism and other damnable heresies to "crowded services in the restored Church" (pgs. 106, 182, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890) and was elevated to a place of prominence in England.

[1193] Pg. 108, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1194] Pg. 161, An Elusive Victorian: The Evolution of Alfred Russel Wallace, Martin Fichman. Chicago, IL: University of Chicago Press, 2004; cf. pg. 128, Emanuel Swedenborg: His Life and Writings, William White, 2nd. rev. ed. London: Simpkin, Marshall, & Co., 1868.

[1195] At Broadlands the Mount Temples and their Conference guests "me[t] as one brotherhood" with the "Swedenborgians" and other heretics (pg. 32, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910; cf. pgs. 78, 82). Of the Broadlands Conferences, where it fit well with the doctrine of the erotic spiritual Baptism: "Each meeting included discussions on the uses of Spiritualism, the role of entrancement, the role of prayer, and the mission of God in the world."[1196] The Mount Temples's longing for restored miracles and a Higher Life was satisfied by the spirits with whom they became familiar through séances.[1197] For example, they conversed with the spirit of Frederick Lamb, a Viscount, who told Mr. Mount-Temple where he could find assorted letters and speeches and commanded that they be published.[1198] Lord Palmerston, who had been dead for 13 months, similarly told Mr. Mount-Temple where important memoranda could be found.[1199] They worked with mediums who "engaged in extensive automatic writing . . . and . . . often left [their] body to traverse the spheres," while also working wonderful cures [of sickness]."[1200] At various séances, and in the company of other spiritualists, including those they had proselyted into spiritualism, the Mount-Temples experienced the supernatural signs and wonders that they had been seeking:

> [Prophetic] message[s] . . . [were given through using] a ouija board[.] . . . [A] wonderous demonstration [took place] of a table dancing in tune with music played on a piano apparently by invisible hands [for a while until they] heard departing footsteps and the [spirit's] farewell, "Dear earthly friends, good night." . . . [T]able rapping and spiritual music . . . table tilting and levitation . . . psychical responses sent through clairvoyant visions or spirit writing moving [one's] fingers when . . . in a state of trance [were experienced]. . . . [G]uests pressing their fingers lightly to the tops of two tables, [Mr. Temple recorded,] "the large table danced in time to a country dance & the little table rose & being suspended in the air the feet be[in]g about 1 foot from the ground & it rapped against the edge of a sofa . . . it also heaved as if at the top of a wave & tilted to the side." . . . [Séances were discussed where] fresh eggs, fruit, and flowers would descend from the ceiling . . . [although some were] amazed with the triviality of the manifestations.[1201] . . . [S]pirits moving about the room [caused] ferns [to] shake[.] . . . [A medium] elongating his body by some six to eight inches in a trance [was also] summoning luminous forms visible to guests. . . . [O]bjects materiali[zed] without the aid of a medium[.] . . . [Many] messages from the dead [were delivered.][1202] course, these facts do not mean that everything taught by Swedenborg was followed to the least letter at Broadlands by everyone (e. g., pg. 78, ibid).

---

[1196] Pg. 51, Altered States: Sex, Nation, Drugs, and Self-Transformation in Victorian Spiritualism, Marlene Tromp. Albany, NY: State University of New York Press, 2006.

[1197] Pg. 12, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1198] Pg. 10, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1199] Pg. 18, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1200] Pg. 23, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1201] The triviality of spiritualistic marvels was indeed a very notable contrast with Biblical miracles.

[1202] Pgs. 12-24, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

While the Mount-Temples led many to adopt spiritualism, some of their converts came to suspect the true source of the manifestations. For example, one who had been converted to spiritualism by the Mount-Temples and attended numerous séances with them wrote to Mrs. Mount-Temple in April 1868:

> Could anything more perfectly answer the description of a "familiar or household spirit" [Leviticus 19:31; 20:6, 27, etc.]—than that thing—if a true thing—that came . . . and answered the question—"Have you any News?["]—"I haven't got any"? Think of it! [If the Testament is true,] I have no doubt that it is your duty at once to abstain from all these things . . . [and] to receive what you have seen of them [the spirits] as an awful sign of the now active presence of the Fiend among us.[1203]

The manifestations, this more discerning convert recognized, were "beneath the dignity of an intelligent God"—therefore, "have done with 'Mediums.'"[1204] However, the Mount-Temples, despite being confronted with the plain warnings of Scripture, did not take heed to this advice. Mr. Mount-Temple continued to be so enchanted with spiritualism that he was even nursed by a medium in his last illness.[1205] He never decided to reject them as Satanic, for they were among "the great cloud of witnesses encircling the world."[1206] Besides, "the presence of unseen heavenly ones added to the deep gladness that was felt"[1207] at the Broadlands Conventions, so the spirits of the dead must have been good because they made people feel the happiness of the Higher Life. Likewise, Mrs. Mount-Temple, even to the end of her life, was never freed from the influence of mediums.[1208] After all, as she had learned from them, "Spiritualism [was] . . . the handmaid of Christianity."[1209] Mrs. Mount-Temple even exercised supernatural powers herself; for example, one day when a man was suffering from a sickness, she threw a lady into a trance so that the cure for the disease could be obtained by prophecy, and then brought the lady out of the trace—"another bit of witchery."[1210] In the 1870s,

---

[1203] Pgs. 19-20, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982. Italics in original.

[1204] Pg. 20, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1205] Pg. 24, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982. Mr. Mount-Temple was born in 1811 and died in 1888 (pg. 179, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890).

[1206] Pg. 21, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1207] Pg. 262, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1208] Pgs. 22, 27, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1209] Pg. 16, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1210] Pgs. 23-24, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

when the Higher Life meetings at Broadlands were founded and Mr. and Mrs. Mount-Temple were promoting Robert and Hannah Pearsall Smith, as well as cultists like Laurence Oliphant, the "Cowper-Temples . . . met the best-known mediums of this decade," bringing "the greatest of the English mediums, with whom they had been attending séances . . . to Broadlands . . . [b]y 1874,"[1211] the very year Mr. Mount-Temple asked the spirits during a séance for permission to become a medium himself to further his spiritual growth.[1212] Thus, in 1874 Mr. Mount-Temple, seeking the Higher Life, both asked for permission to become a medium and thrust the Pearsall Smiths into the limelight in that fateful Higher Life Conference on their property. Indeed, the Mount-Temples were "one of the earliest" to explore "spiritualism" in England.[1213] Broadlands truly was a very spiritual place—mediums validated that "all manners of ghosts [were] about the house,"[1214] since "[c]ontact with ghosts helped shape both Lady and Lord Mount Temple's futures and day-to-day living."[1215] The day after the 1874 Broadlands Conference that germinated the Keswick theology, Mrs. Cowper-Temple had reached such a spiritual height in her Higher Life that she attended a séance to see if more of the spirit of a dead man, John King, would materialize than in the last attempt to contact him—previously, only his head had materialized, and Mrs. Cowper-Temple was hoping for more in her post-Conference séance.[1216] Truly, Mr. and Mrs. Cowper-Temple lived a supernatural and spiritual life, and the spirits that gathered there contributed to the supernatural and spiritual Higher Life that so many led at Broadlands. Such was the place, and such were the promoters, of the Broadlands Conference for the promotion of the Higher Life that hatched the Keswick system.

Scriptural cessationism, consequently, was rejected at the Broadlands Conferences for continuationism. Pentecost, with its signs and wonders, was not a completed dispensational event, but "a sample of that dispensation of the Spirit, which was the gift of God to the Church in all generations."[1217] Indeed, because of the Divine

---

[1211] Pg. 22, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1212] Pg. 53, Altered States: Sex, Nation, Drugs, and Self-Transformation in Victorian Spiritualism, Marlene Tromp. Albany, NY: State University of New York Press, 2006.

[1213] Pg. 19, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention, Polluck.

[1214] Pgs. 25-26, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1215] Pg. 53, Altered States: Sex, Nation, Drugs, and Self-Transformation in Victorian Spiritualism, Marlene Tromp. Albany, NY: State University of New York Press, 2006.

[1216] Pg. 113, Christmas Story: John Ruskin's Venetian Letters of 1876-1877, John Ruskin, ed. Van Alan Burd. Cranbury, NJ: Associated University Presses, 1990.

[1217] Pg. 125, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

Seed in every man, "[a]ny hour may be a miracle hour"—such miraculous visions as "the young Isaiah" had of Jehovah on His throne (Isaiah 6), as "Moses" had on "Mount Horeb," and as "Paul" had on the road to "Damascus," "such hours of visio[n] come to all . . . [h]ow many, in all ages . . . have known these sacred experiences[.] . . . Such special, memorable hours, came to us, not seldom, at Broadlands."[1218] Many "hours of vision" and "dreams . . . came to the worshippers at Broadlands."[1219] In fact, even the poet Wordsworth[1220] had received visions like those of Isaiah, Moses, Paul, and the participants at the Broadlands Conferences.[1221] While Scripture testifies that "God . . . spake . . . at sundry times and in divers manners . . . in time past" before the coming of Christ (Hebrews 1:1-4), Broadlands testifies that "At sundry times and in divers manners God [still] speaks and manifests Himself."[1222] Sola Scriptura and cessationism were out, while spiritualism and continuationism were in.

Those at Broadlands desired the presence of the sign gifts and healing powers, practiced the Faith and Mind Cure, and received inspiration from those demons that directed the Mount-Temples and promulgated through them the corruptions of the Higher Life theology. Supernatural beings from the angelic realm gave commands, so that voices, with music accompanying them, were heard at Broadlands Conferences.[1223] When Mr. Mount-Temple was, sick, through the Faith and Mind Cure he was restored

---

[1218] Pgs. 218-220, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. A record of an alleged vision "from the first Conference" is recounted immediately following the quotation reproduced above—however, unlike the Scriptural and truly miraculous visions with which the marvels at Broadlands were compared, the Broadlands marvels "do not sound much in the telling" (pg. 226), while the miraculous visions of Scripture sound like very much, in the telling, because they truly were.

[1219] Pg. 266, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Italics in original.

[1220] In Wordsworthean fashion, Broadlands also testified: "Look up at these trees and sky . . . and God will speak to us through these . . . they . . . tell of much" (pgs. 223-224, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910). Personal messages, speech "to us" in particular, could come through nature, although, as pgs. 223-224 explain, there is more than just nature through which God speaks—the Inner Voice, for example.

[1221] Pg. 218-220, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. The fulsome exaltation of false visions, and the yet more fulsome downgrade of Biblical inspiration, is evident in the placing of what God gave the Apostles and prophets on a comparable level with what was allegedly given to those at Broadlands and to Wordsworth.

[1222] Pg. 233, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. That is, the past tense "spake" of Scripture is altered to the present tense "speaks" at Broadlands.

[1223] Pgs. 129-130, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

again; both he and his wife "tried the 'mind cure'" at times.[1224] They were conversant with homeopaths.[1225] Mr. Mount Temple's "witness to others in the matter of healing by the prayer of faith was unceasing . . . ['']I am anxious[,] [he said,] ['that] . . . this form of Divine Healing . . . should be tried . . . it seems to me to be unfaithful not to have recourse to it . . . showers of healing are so plentifully falling around us . . . this valuable life should be [within] reach.['']" During his sickness, in a manner consistent with his spiritualism, he was even able to join in prayer "with words of fervor and power as though his spirit were using his body whilst the mind remained dormant."[1226] Dormant minds allegedly disjoined from actions on the spirit were most helpful in affecting Faith Cures.

Contrary to the truth that inspiration was complete with the canon of Scripture, but in accordance with its embrace of the Quaker doctrine of the Inner Light, Broadlands was a place where allegedly post-canonical inspiration was as plentiful as fog in London. At Broadlands, "[n]ot only . . . pastors and teachers" were present, but "prophets" also.[1227] Mrs. Mount-Temple stated that the "impulse" through which Mr. Mount-Temple offered his Broadlands estate to Hannah and Robert Smith for the foundational Conference "seemed . . . like . . . inspiration"; "thus our first Conference was initiated,"[1228] Mrs. Mount Temple declared, by a revelation and by inspiration. The Conference was then "led by Mr. Pearsall Smith" in a "wonderfully inspired way,"[1229] even as Mr. Mount Temple's speeches were "so inspired in utterance"[1230] both at that first Conference and at other times. Mrs. Pearsall Smith had reached such a height of spirituality that "inspiration" even "came from her shining face."[1231] Indeed, women

---

[1224] Pg. 85, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. In the particular case mentioned on pg. 85, the Mind Cure was self-confessedly a failure.

[1225] Cf. Pg. 8, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1226] Pgs. 108-109, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1227] Pgs. 136-137, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1228] Pgs. 117-118, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1229] Pg. 186, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1230] Pgs. 108-109, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1231] Pg. 123, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

preachers—"inspired wom[e]n"—gave "inspired addresses,"[1232] and continuationism in general, and in particular a rejection of sola Scriptura for the Quaker doctrine of authoritative continuing revelations and inspiration because of the Divine Seed in every man, were insisted upon as of primary importance and as the core of Broadlands teaching:

> It was insisted on first of all, that God does actually communicate with each one[1233] of the spirits He had made: not only did He speak to human beings in the past, but does still, here and now. This fact is referred to in the Bible . . . as the light . . . as a voice . . . as a guide . . . [in] individual guidance . . . [and] also as inspiration. . . . [T]his Divine communion is not only . . . the light (that which reveals), not only . . . a voice (which lets us know from Whom the word comes), or . . . a guide (which indicates our course), but is even as the breath or life of God within our life, to inspire us[.] . . . The power to discern this Divine guidance is given to all in some measure . . . it is a gift, a faculty common to all . . . God's voice is of the heart[.] . . . Surely this is . . . the Quaker doctrine of the Inner Light, which is the corner-stone of their belief. . . . Intuitions come at such times . . . [w]e feel within us "the breath of God, that warrenteth the utmost, inmost things of faith"[1234] . . . The vision br[ings] supreme joy . . . visionary hours may be as the steps in a rocky path, by which we climb to the pure air of the mountain-top.
>
> Dream, vision, prophecy, spiritual imagination, call them what we will, are an essential element of human life. . . . [W]ithout the inspired spiritual element in life, man can never be truly man. . . . the highest powers of his being remain unused.[1235] . . . Every age[1236] has its seers, its dreamers of dreams, its men of [supernatural] insight . . . [such men] are needed. . . . The seer brings us new knowledge[1237] . . . as vision opens beyond vision into the depths of being and of love. . . . The seer rejoices . . . and the worker is glad of the inspiration . . . [t]hey are not disobedient to the heavenly vision.[1238]

After all, the Incarnation was not necessary so that Christ could satisfy the Law of God and shed His blood as a propitiatory sacrifice for the sins of men,[1239] but He came to lead

---

[1232] Pgs. 71-73, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1233] That is, post-canonical inspiration is not limited to the regenerate, but all men receive it, because all have the Divine Seed; in truth, there is no need to pass from darkness to light through a truly evangelical conversion and new birth, but all will ultimately be saved without one.

[1234] Note that Scripture does not warrant the utmost, inmost things of faith for those at Broadlands—on the contrary, the Inner Voice provides the warrant. In the words of Hannah W. Smith and other Broadlands preachers: "Within us is an intense life which nothing can touch"—the Divine Seed in every man. Consequently: "Our law of life is within; we must love to follow it" (pgs. 180-181, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910).

[1235] That is, men who do not experience inspiration from the Divine Seed in them are missing out on what is most important in life.

[1236] That is, inspiration is not limited to the production of Scripture or to the Apostolic era, and, as the sentence explains, such additional revelations are not even simply available but optional—they are "needed."

[1237] That is, truths not found in Scripture are revealed by the Inner Light.

[1238] Pgs. 144-145, 226-228, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Italics in the original.

[1239] For, indeed, in the orthodox sense of the word, Broadlands affirmed that there was no propitiation for sin; on the contrary, "'Propitiation' . . . mean[s] [only that] . . . He was altogether merciful to sin" (pg. 188, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910).

people to listen to the Inner Light: "He came in the flesh, that He might get at us from the outside, because we do not listen to the inward voice."[1240] Despite multitudes of texts like Isaiah 53:4-6 and 1 John 2:2, Hannah Smith and the Mount Temples knew that "Christ" was "not in any sense . . . appeasing the wrath of God"[1241] by His work on the cross, so having His redemptive blood personally applied through a new birth was, without a doubt, not necessary for salvation. Further revelations are necessary, because "Christianity has never yet been fully preached," not even by the Apostles and the first century churches—the "chuches have to learn that." Consequently, "what a power there is in vision"![1242] Thus, at that first Broadlands Conference, as at subsequent ones, the universalist Andrew Jukes proclaimed his heresies with "inspired wisdom."[1243] Antoinette Sterling, consistent with "her Quaker upbringing . . . seemed as much inspired in the choice of her songs as in the rendering of them,"[1244] for "she was one of the few to whom God . . . [w]hispers in the ear," so she could "guid[e] . . . the assembly . . . to a higher, nobler plane" with her "spontaneous outpourings which seemed inspired."[1245] After all, "the highest music is itself a revelation, a manifestation of something divine" as it "prophesies of . . . predestined good . . . [and] salvation universal," and "[t]here is no truer truth obtainable than comes of music,"[1246] including the propositions of Scripture, which flatly deny that salvation is universal. By entering into the Higher Life "the soul . . . receives more inspiration than it can hold."[1247] The supernatural spirits that worked so greatly in Mr. and Mrs. Mount-Temple's lives, as they did in the Quakers to give them Inner Light, and gave them and others present at Broadlands wonders and marvels, were the source of what Mrs. Mount-Temple called "the God-inspired . . . Conferences which

---

[1240] Pgs. 214-215, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1241] Letter to Anna, September 3, 1876, reproduced in the entry for August 8 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1242] Pg. 192, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Italics in the original.

[1243] Pgs. 52, 129, 135-136, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Jukes adopted the universalist heresy in 1867.

[1244] Pgs 62, 113, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1245] Pgs. 113, 266, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1246] Pg. 115, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1247] Pg. 170, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[Mr. Mount-Temple] inaugurated and carried through for so many years . . . at Broadlands."[1248]

The broadness of the Mount-Temples's views embraced not only Irvingism, continuationism, and broader spiritualism, but even and especially the filthy religion of the occult perfectionists and free-love practicioners Thomas Harris and Laurence Oliphant,[1249] since spiritualism and sexual immorality were the natural handmaids of each other.[1250] As Hannah and Robert P. Smith adopted the doctrine that the baptism of the Spirit was associated with erotic thrills, so the only way to receive the true Spirit Baptism was through sexual immorality, taught Oliphant as Harris's disciple. "Laurence Oliphant, together with his disciples, actually carried out, to the utmost possible extent, the practices of which Robert Pearsall Smith was suspected."[1251] However, only those initiated into the Higher Life were brought into these depths of Satan; publicly Harris and Oliphant were more vague, as were the Smiths. Nevertheless, Oliphant held that "sexual passion was the only real spiritual life."[1252] Oliphant explained to Mrs. Smith, and to many others, at the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Cowper-Temple, his unspeakable abominations. Hannah W. Smith explained:

> [T]he Baptism of the Holy Ghost, [which we were to] seek the experience [of] for ourselves. . . . was to be the aim of our desires. . . . Mr. Oliphant . . . told me that he believed my husband was called to enter into and propogate the views he held, and he urged me to beg him not to stop short of the full consummation. . . . "Come and get into bed with me." . . . I asked him if it were not

---

[1248] Pg. 184, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. As is frequently the case with those who accept extra-Biblical inspiration for post-canonical periods, the character of genuine inspiration is also downgraded in claims for the inspiration of persons, messages, and so on associated with the Broadlands Conferences. Thus, not all the claims that the Conferences, Mrs. Smith, and so on, were "inspired" were necessarily affirmations that the persons or things in question were vebally, plearily, and infallibly dictated by the Holy Ghost, as Scripture truly was.

[1249] Perhaps the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Mount-Temple "loved to prove that faults are but twisted virtues" (pg. 141, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple) contributed to the facility with which they adopted the ideas and practices of Harris and Oliphant.

[1250] The connection between sexual immorality and spiritualism is clearly evident historically, so that the Broadlands doctrines of an erotic Spirit Baptism and of familiar intercourse with demonic spirits are naturally connected. For example:

> Mr. T. L. Harris, once a Spiritualistic medium, testifies that the marriage vow imposes no obligation on the Spiritualistic husband. They have been known to abandon their own wives, and prefer the company of those of whom the spirits told them that they had a closer spiritual affinity to them. Mrs. Woodhull, elected three years in succession as president of the Spiritist Societies in America, often lectured in favor of free love; and advocated the abolition of marriage ("forbidding to marry"), stigmatizing virtue and responsibility as the two thieves on the cross. She said: "It was the sublime mission of Spiritism to deliver humanity from the thraldom of matrimony, and to establish sexual emancipation." (pg. 178, "Modern Spiritualism Briefly Tested by Scripture," The Fundamentals, Pollock, 4:12).

[1251] Pg. 86, A Religious Rebel: the Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith.

[1252] Pg. 223, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

> possible to lead people into this glorious experience he spoke of without personal contact. He said no, it was not.[1253]

Such was the Higher Life Harris and Oliphant spread with the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Mount-Temple.

It was Mr. Mount-Temple's seeking to "gathe[r] all the good he could from spiritualism" that led him to make the acquaintance, his wife explained, of Harris and Oliphant.[1254] Mrs. Cowper-Temple, who was especially attracted to Oliphant[1255] because of his turn from materialism to spiritualism after necromantic contact with his dead father,[1256] narrated concerning the dirty duo:

> [N]o one . . . ever attracted William [Mount-Temple] more . . . [than] Mr. Harris. . . . It was through him we became much allied with Laurence Oliphant, whom we first met at Broadlands . . . All there were interested in him. [Oliphant had] turned his back upon all and went off . . . to find God under the guidance of Mr. Harris. . . . [H]e always said he owed everything to Mr. Harris. . . . [Laurence] married [one from] our house [that is, one from the Cowper-Temple household], who was of one mind with himself . . . upheld by the hope of bringing others [by sexual contact] into the new and higher life . . . [They resided] with us at Broadlands [among other places].[1257]

The Mount-Temples "considered joining . . . Harris [and] his cult in New York State," but they decided instead to simply make their "home at Broadlands a haven for . . . Harris,"[1258] from whence they "might help in [the] unfolding"[1259] of the spiritual Kingdom of which Harris was the messenger. From Broadlands Harris and Oliphant could propogate their ideas and seduce others into the Higher Life of sexual immorality and the thrills of the erotic Spirit Baptism, for Mr. Mount-Temple was zealous to promote such spiritual growth in all those whom he could influence from Broadlands.[1260] The

---

[1253] Pgs. 225-226, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

[1254] Pgs. 107ff., Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1255] "Oliphant, Laurence (1829-1888). Author; born in Cape Town, Africa, in 1829. Lord Elgin made him his private secretary in 1853, and in 1865 he was elected to Parliament, but he resigned in 1868 in obedience to instructions from Thomas L. Harris, leader of the Brotherhood of the New Life, a spiritualistic society of which both Oliphant and his wife were members" (pg. 4316, Harper's Encyclopedia of United States History, B. Lossing, Ed. Medford, MA: Perseus Digital Library, elec. acc. Logos Bible Software).

[1256] Pg. 108, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890; pg. 18, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982; cf. pg. 21.

[1257] Pgs. 108-109, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. Compare pg. 87.

[1258] Pgs. 6-7, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1259] Pgs. 108, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1260] Cf. pg. 109, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. What the Cowper-Temples termed spiritual growth might, by those who hold to Christian orthodoxy, perhaps be better termed cancerous growth.

Mount-Temples founded the Broadlands Conferences, the root of the Keswick Conventions and the capstone of their personal spiritual quest,[1261] for the purpose of promoting such Higher Life theology as that of Harris and Oliphant, and the special spiritual Baptism that accompanied it:

> These [Broadlands] Conferences were established . . . to seek the outpouring of the Spirit[.] . . . A meeting . . . of universal character, all speaking as the Spirit moved them, not of doctrines or of systems, but of the wonderful things of God. . . . In 1874 a few persons were led together on this new basis . . . their participation in the same desire to lead a higher and deeper Christian life.[1262]

People sought "a tangible sign of the Spirit," and received "ten times more [than they] expected" in his "felt presence."[1263] Mr. and Mrs. Smith were consequently invited by the Cowper-Temples to lead that first fateful conference at Broadlands in 1874, that others also might enter into that same Higher Life and Spirit baptism that they four had experienced with all its physical thrills.[1264]

Hannah W. Smith was well aware of the spiritualism and the immoral abominations practiced and propounded by the Mount-Temples. She wrote: "Lady Mount Temple is about as sweet as a human being can be. But she is a spiritualist, and told me that nothing had saved her from absolute infidelity but the proofs she had seen in spiritualism of a life in another region . . . she . . . had so much Scripture on her side[.]"[1265] Hannah Smith believed "so much Scripture" was on the side of Mrs. Mount-Temple's spiritualism despite the clearest and direst warnings against this demonic practice in texts such as Deuteronomy 18:11 and Isaiah 8:19. Thus, Hannah Smith allowed Mrs. Mount-Temple to introduce her to numerous spiritualists and mediums, and they sat under their teaching together.[1266] Was it not good that Mrs. Mount-Temple had been kept from agnosticism[1267] and atheism through the close communion with Satan and

---

[1261] Pg. 115, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1262] Pgs. 115-116, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1263] Pgs. 127, 148, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. Italics in original. Note the reference to bridal union with Christ a handful of lines after the quotation from pg. 127 on the top of pg. 128.

[1264] Pgs. 116ff., Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1265] Pg. 67, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to Priscilla Mounsey, January 10, 1883.

[1266] E. g., pg. 27, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982; a goodly amount of the material in Mrs. Smith's Religious Fanaticism came from the fellowship with spiritualists and mediums she partook of with Mrs. Mount-Temple.

[1267] Likewise, in a letter to Mrs. Mount-Temple, Ruskin indicates that the conversations with the spirits of the dead that have been raised up through spiritualistic necromancy have also convinced him "that his devils into which she was brought as she engaged in familiar intercourse with demons pretending to be dead people who had come back from the grave? However, notwithstanding her preservation from agnosticism and atheism at the time, at a later time "Lady Mount Temple" began to "rav[e] against God one minute, and d[id] not believe there is any God the next minute."[1268] Furthermore, "Lady Mount Temple could never grasp the difference between right and wrong; when no cruelty was involved she couldn't see why people should not do what they like"[1269]—why they could not, as Hannah advised, "always . . . do the thing they really and seriously wanted to do . . . and . . . with a good conscience."[1270] That such advice could lead to the most monstrous iniquities, and extreme lasciviousness, was apparent. Indeed, Mrs. Mount Temple's "family, the Tollemaches, were a wild family, much given to misbehavior" that led many of them into "disgrace," as a result of which they would be invited to stay with Mr. and Mrs. Mount Temple for a while.[1271] Mrs. Mount-Temple's "only answer" when confronted with the fact that a servant of hers named Sarah, "under the almost intolerable domination" of whom she had fallen, "was the mother of a large family of illegitimate children," was: "'I am so glad poor Sarah has had some fun.' . . . [A] charge of misconduct made no impression."[1272] Indeed, Lady Mount Temple even "wrote . . . a friendly letter . . . [to] Oscar Wilde [while he] was out on bail between his two trials . . . inviting him to pay her a visit,"[1273] although Wilde was a notorious and serial pedophile, and his two trials were connected to his despicable sodomizing of countless boys and men. Lady Mount Temple also thought—as her conection with Laurence Oliphant makes most unsurprising—that it was "incomprehensible and silly" that Mr. Smith was removed there is a spiritual state" (Letter 13, pg. 36, The Letters of John Ruskin to Lord and Lady Mount-Temple, ed. John L. Bradley).

---

1268 Pg. 132, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to her daughter, Mary Costelloe, October 3, 1896.

1269 Pg. 47, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith.

1270 Pgs. 155-156, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith.

1271 Pgs. 48-49, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith. Logan Smith illustrates the wild behavior of Mrs. Mount Temple's family with one relative who had left her husband for an adulterous relationship, and who consequently "had been placed under Lady Mount Temple's roof." There, along with exhortations to some kind of morality, Mrs. Mount Temple composed a letter to send to the man the lady was committing adultery with, so that he could come and join her, as the adulteress was "feeling so lonely without" the man for whom she had betrayed her holy vows to God and her husband (pg. 48, ibid).

1272 Pg. 49, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith.

1273 Pg. 47, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith. Compare Hannah W. Smith's receipt of revelation from seeing Oscar Wilde on pg. 170, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to her Daughter, Mary Berenson, November 10, 1904.

from his leadership of the Keswick Convention[1274] after the Brighton meetings because of his espousal of erotic bridal mysticism: "If these good people wanted to kiss each other, what, she wondered, could be the harm in that?"[1275]

Despite, or perhaps because of, Mrs. Mount-Temple's spiritualism, damnable heresies, immorality, and rejection of the gospel of Jesus Christ, Mrs. Smith could write to her: "I think of you as . . . sitting in a bower of heavenly love . . . our true and only [l]and is the beloved and beautiful will of God, which environs us all everywhere and in everything."[1276] Indeed, Mrs. Smith was happy to have fellowship with a variety of other spiritualists also,[1277] as well as receiving prophecies from occult palm readers.[1278] It is unsurprising that Hannah felt that there was "something occult about"[1279] the powers that assisted her preaching ministry. She was certainly not an enemy of the Satanic spiritualism of her great Higher Life patrons.

With the Mount-Temples,[1280] Mrs. Smith fellowshipped with Laurence Oliphant, that spiritualist, perfectionist cult leader, and free-love practicioner.[1281] Oliphant taught [1274] Robert Smith also thought that he would be able to continue to lead the Convention and expected "encouragement to continue his ministry" after his confession of teaching erotic bride mysticism (pg. 36, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention, Polluck).

---

[1275] Pg. 65, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearasall Smith.

[1276] Pgs. 105-106, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to Lady Mount Temple and Mrs. Russell Gurney, October 3, 1889. Logan Smith comments: "Mrs. Russell Gurney, Lady Mount Temple, and H. W. S. formed themselves as a holy band" (pg. 105, ibid). "Emilia Gurney was among Mrs. Cowper-Temple's best friends . . . [w]ith Hannah Smith these three ladies called themselves the "Trins," a holy band comparable to the five mystic birds of ancient Philadelphia. Mrs. Gurney was at least sympathetic with Mrs. Cowper-Temple's interests . . . [in] spiritualism . . . and acquainted with members of the spiritualist circle, including Mrs. Acworth" (pgs. 121-122, Christmas Story: John Ruskin's Venetian Letters of 1876-1877, John Ruskin, ed. Van Alan Burd. Cranbury, NJ: Associated University Presses, 1990.

[1277] E. g., pgs. 155-156 of A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, record her letter to her daughter Alys Russell of January 24, 1903, where Mrs. Smith discusses her time with a spiritualist named Podmore, who saw spirits materialize and talk with each other, and who believed that both Cardinal Newman and Napoleon appeared to him.

[1278] E. g., pg. 128 of A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, records her discussion of the prophecy of a "Palmist" in her letter to Mrs. Lawrence of May 12, 1895. She claimed that she was skeptical of his prophecy.

[1279] Pg. 133, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Letter to her Daughter, Mary Costelloe, October 29, 1896.

[1280] Compare the references to the Mount Temples on pgs. 310 & 313 of The Memoir of the Life of Laurence Oliphant and of Alice Oliphant, His Wife, by Margaret Oliphant, William Blackwood & Sons: London, 1892.

[1281] For example, during Mr. Laurence and Mrs. Alice Oliphant's "missionary" work in the Middle East, "Mrs. Oliphant felt compelled into high-minded but unreticent intimacy with Arabs, 'no matter,' as H. W. S. writes, 'how degraded and dirty they were'" (pg. 86, A Religious Rebel: the Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith). Mrs. Smith enjoyed reading "some of Mrs. Oliphant's books" (pg. 196, A Religious Rebel: the Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to her Daughter, Mary Berenson, the doctrine which had already been adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Smith some years earlier, and was publicly proclaimed at the Keswick precursor Convention at Oxford, that Spirit baptism brought erotic sexual sensations,[1282] although Mr. Oliphant affirmed with greater clarity[1283] that the actual entertainment of lustful and vile passions in acts of shameful immorality was the key and the only way to receive Spirit baptism. It was essential, Hannah knew, to receive a post-conversion Spirit baptism,[1284] for only after the Baptism does one really become a temple of the Holy Spirit and have His indwelling.[1285] And, in truth, it certainly would not be surprising if a supernatural spirit made the body of someone who received the erotic bridal Baptism his dwellingplace.[1286] In any case, Mr. and Mrs. Smith were not alone in receiving patronage from the Mount-Temples;

February 14, 1908.), referring to the works of Laurence Oliphant's cousin, Mrs. Margarent Oliphant, who wrote the Life of Irving, a biography of that earlier continuationist fanatic and heretic, Edward Irving.

[1282] The author begs the pardon of the reader for reproducing such blasphemous trash as the following examination of Mrs. Smith's confusion of the baptizing work of the Holy Spirit of God with sexual sensations. Although it is so unbelievably ridiculous and appalling, it constitutes a key part of the historical development of the nineteenth century Higher Life and Keswick doctrine of sanctification. It consequently seemed necessary to this writer to reproduce at length the evidence that Hannah W. Smith, her husband, and others adopted it, that the reader might not dismiss the facts as impossible because of their evidently Satanic, fanatical, and delusional character.

[1283] At least Oliphant was clearer, and the doctrine adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Smith somewhat more moderate and less crude and vile, if Mrs. Smith's declarations are to be believed—that is, if she did not wish, in describing the erotic Spirit baptism espoused, experienced, and promulgated by both Robert and herself, to make her family and her own person look better than they actually were. Only if what she wrote about herself in this connection was nothing but unvarnished and brutal truth, to be conveyed without diminution to the public, was Oliphant's teaching worse than the Pearsall Smiths's views. However, the historical record provides clear evidence of Hannah "adjusting" and distorting the facts to cover up and mitigate her and her husband's adoption and promulgation of the erotic Baptism doctrine. Oliphant himself publicly proclaimed only a vaguer version of his doctrine, concealing the real depths of Satan in his teachings from the masses—he reserved them for those he privately initiated into immorality.

[1284] Compare her explaining her own receipt of a post-conversion Spirit baptism and her call to the Ladies Meeting at Brighton to do so also on pgs. 376-377, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875.

[1285] Hannah wrote that through "the baptism of the Holy Ghost" one received "the full indwelling of the Spirit, whereby we become, not judicially, but really and actually the temples of the Holy Ghost, filled with the Spirit!" (Journal, April 29, 1868, reproduced in the entry for April 15 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

[1286] It is noteworthy that leading Pentecostal historians connect their doctrine of gibberish-speech as the essential evidence of Spirit baptism with Hannah and Robert P. Smith's doctrine of erotic thrills in Spirit baptism (cf. pg. 51, Aspects of Pentecostal-Charismatic Origins, ed. Vinson Synan; pg. 64, "Wesleyan-Holiness Aspects of Pentecostal Origins: As Mediated through the Nineteenth-Century Holiness Revival," Melvin E. Dieter, pgs. 55-80 in Aspects of Pentecostal-Charismatic Origins, ed. Synan; cf. pgs. 84-85, A Theology of the Holy Spirit: The Pentecostal Experience and the New Testament Witness, F. D. Bruner, for the Pentecostal "passion . . . to know even physically" that they have received the Baptism). Supernatural spirits can indeed possess many unconverted people who receive such Baptisms.

Oliphant also was received in the like manner and given a stage upon which to proclaim his filthy abominations.[1287] Mrs. Smith wrote about their meeting:

> I went to Dorking to join Lord and Lady Mount Temple at a friend's house there to meet Laurence Oliphant. . . . He . . . has come over to England on a mission to propogate a sort of mystic spiritualism of a most peculiar kind. . . . After dinner Laurence Oliphant read us a long paper . . . [t]he next morning, however, he unfolded his ideas to me . . . similar teaching had [been adopted by] a great many good people[1288] in America.[1289]

Her letter dramatically understated matters; as other writings of hers, which she would not allow to be published until after her death, and the deaths of all those involved in the events, indicated: "Readers of her [Hannah Smith's] Religious Fanaticism will recognize the moderation of this letter, for, as she there frankly reveals, Laurence Oliphant, together with his disciples, actually carried out, to the utmost possible extent, the practices of which Robert Pearsall Smith was suspected,"[1290] speaking of the doctrine that Spirit baptism was associated with sexual thrills, and engaging in practices suitable to such a confession; for Oliphant held that "sexual passion was the only real spiritual life."[1291] In her more forthright and posthumous description of her visit with the Mount-Temples to sit at the feet of Oliphant, Mrs. Smith wrote:

> On one occasion I was invited to go with two friends of mine . . . to meet Mr. Oliphant. In the evening, after dinner, Mr. Oliphant read us a paper about some mysterious experience that he declared was the Baptism of the Holy Ghost, and was the birthright of everyone; urging us to seek the experience for ourselves. . . . I scented out what he meant;[1292] but one of my friends did not, and she was profoundly impressed with the mysterious reference to some wonderful "it" that was to be the aim of our desires. When he closed the paper, she said in her sweet, childlike way, "What would'st thou have me to do in order to gain this?" Immediately he coloured up to the roots of his hair, and said, "I could not tell you in this company." It flashed into my mind that if he had answered her what was really in his mind, he would have said, "Come and get into bed with me." However, nothing more was said then, and we separated for the night, but I was convinced from the behaviour of our hostess and her daughters that they had been more or less initiated into the mystic rites of this new religion. The next morning Mr. Oliphant asked for a private interview with me, in which he told me that he believed my husband was called to enter into and propogate the views he held, and he urged me to beg him not to stop short of the full consummation. I asked what the full consummation was. He said, "You noticed the question that was asked me last night? Do you know what I would have answered? I did not tell him what I 1287 See, e. g., Letters 59, 96, 118, 121, pgs. 117, 181, 223-224, 228-229, The Letters of John Ruskin to Lord and Lady Mount-Temple, ed. John L. Bradley. Note also the discussion of Thomas Harris and his writings in Letter 112, 121, pgs. 212-214, 228-229.

1288 Mrs. Smith does not specify who these "good people" are in her letter; they included her husband and herself, who both adopted the erotic Spirit baptism heresy from the "good" Dr. Foster in America, and also many others, some of whom are described in her book Religious Fanaticism, which she allowed to be published only after her death and the death of all parties mentioned in it. In her letter, on the contrary, she affirms that she told Oliphant: "I told Oliphant of the dangers which I saw in his teachings[.]"

1289 Pgs. 85-86, A Religious Rebel: the Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to her friends, Dorking, August 1, 1886.

1290 Pg. 86, A Religious Rebel: the Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith.

1291 Pg. 223, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

1292 Mrs. Smith knew of what Oliphant spoke for she had herself adopted, with her husband, the erotic Baptism doctrine years earlier.

> had thought, but asked him, "What would you have answered? His reply was, "If I dared to I would have said, 'Come and get into bed with me.'" . . . I asked him if it were not possible to lead people into this glorious experience he spoke of without personal contact. He said no, it was not.[1293]

In addition to contact with Oliphant through the Mount-Temples, Hannah Smith had contact with the sect of Oliphant's father in his filthy faith, Thomas Harris,[1294] although she professed, at least in public, that she did not adopt either of their views. However, it is clear that she sought out, learned, and "knew personally about" Oliphant's sect and Harris's sect,[1295] while reading some of Harris's writings and lending them to others.[1296] On Mrs. Mount-Temple's request, Hannah even visited Harris's colony in California.[1297] Since Mr. and Mrs. Mount-Temple made their "home at Broadlands a haven for all sorts of prophets of new religious and utopian experiements, including the American Thomas Lake Harris . . . [and] his cult in New York State" and they seem to have "considered joining [his] American group,"[1298] Mrs. Smith's exposure to and fellowship with Harris and Oliphant is not surprising in the least. Indeed, although he may be difficult for her to understand, "Harris" is definitely "in his senses," as Hannah knew, a fact validated to her by her friend, the New Thought teacher Mrs. Caldwell, who considered his writings "very advanced truth"—and Hannah knew that Mrs. Caldwell was also certainly "in her senses," with "plenty more people, too" who found Harris and his abominations attractive.[1299] Filthy fanatics like Oliphant were some of the people[1300] Mrs. Mount-Temple introduced to Mrs. Smith. Through Mr. and Mrs. Mount-Temple, Hannah W. Smith was both influenced by spiritualism and other forms of demonic activity, encouraged in the doctrine of erotic bride mysticism being promulgated by her husband

---

[1293] Pgs. 225-226, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

[1294] Pgs. 213-239, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

[1295] Pg. 219, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

[1296] Cf. Letter to Sister, July 28, 1881, reproduced in the entry for October 28 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1297] Pg. 112, Christmas Story: John Ruskin's Venetian Letters of 1876-1877, John Ruskin, ed. Van Alan Burd. Cranbury, NJ: Associated University Presses, 1990.

[1298] Pgs. 6-7, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982.

[1299] Letter to Sister, July 28, 1881, reproduced in the entry for October 28 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1300] Oliphant was by no means the only deluded fanatic Mrs. Mount-Temple introduced to Hannah W. Smith. For example, Mrs. Smith wrote:

> As usual Lady Mount Temple is full of interesting things, and today she introduced me to a mysterious creature, a man he looked like, who is the leader of a strange sect called the "Temple," and who declared to me that he had not slept a wink for 8 years, but had every night got out of his body and travelled around the world on errands of service for the Lord!! He declared that he sees angels as plainly as he sees men, and knows them all apart, and that Michael has light flaxen hair, and Gabriel dark eyes and hair, and they all live in the sun! (pg. 102, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to her friends, June 10, 1888) and adopted, for a time, by herself also, and exalted to be the most important leader of the Higher Life movement, so as to become the founder of the Keswick theology.

The Mount-Temples's Broadlands Conference was the launching point for the Keswick movement; all the key Keswick theological distinctives were there in place.[1301] The distinctive pattern of the later Keswick meetings of beginning with an explication of the evil of known sin, progressing through the provision made in the Higher Life for victory, and a call to the embrace of the Higher Life and its practical consequences, was pioneered at Broadlands.[1302] The positive Keswick emphases, retained from the older classical orthodox doctrine of sanctification, on the necessity of surrender to Christ, a rejection of self-dependence, and the importance of faith, were set forth. What was truly new, the deviations from classical orthodoxy among Keswick speakers and writers, was also taught. For example, Broadlands taught the Keswick idea that Christ Himself lives the Christian life for the believer.[1303] Broadlands rejected Christ's Lordship and Biblical repentance in conversion, teaching that one receives Christ with the attitude of "some of self, and some of Thee" and only later comes to a real surrender.[1304] Broadlands taught the standard Keswick Quietism and its associated continuationism.[1305] The standard pattern of progressive daily topics at the Keswick Convention was that of Broadlands.[1306]

[1301] Compare the references in "An Analysis and Critique of Keswick Theology as Set Forth Particularly in So Great Salvation: The History and Message of the Keswick Convention, by Stephen Barabas," below.

[1302] Pgs. 21ff., Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874. The Broadlands and Keswick emphasis upon the renunciation of "known sin" to receive the second blessing carried over directly into Pentecostal theology (cf. pg. 95, A Theology of the Holy Spirit: The Pentecostal Experience and the New Testament Witness, F. D. Bruner).

[1303] Pg. 23, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.

[1304] Pgs. 25-26, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874; pg. 126, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890; pgs. 191-193, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. The confused Higher Life gospel became a very famous Keswick hymn written by Monod at Broadlands (cf. pgs. 53-54, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910).

[1305] E. g., Lord Mount Temple taught that in seeking the Higher Life one is to "respond to the impulses and impressions" allegedly from Christ outside of the Bible and "overcome all allurements to . . . independent action," (pg. 184, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890) rejecting what is apparently a temptation to study the Bible think about it, and obey it instead of following passively received suggestions and impulses; for to the Mount Temples, the spirit can use the body while the mind remains dormant (pg. 186, ibid).

[1306] Pgs. 124-125, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

Broadlands taught the distinctive Keswick model of sanctification. Keswick theology was consequently molded by the corruption of the gospel, confusion of Biblical sanctification, spiritualism, continuationism, ecumenicalism, the Inner Light, New Thought, the Mind and Faith Cure, feminism, Quakerism, syncretism, quietism, antinomianism, universalism, erotic sensations as Spirit baptism, and the other heresies of the Smiths and their fellow teachers of the Higher Life as taught at Broadlands. It is difficult to underestimate the influence of the teaching of Hannah W. Smith and others at Broadlands on the subsequent history and development of the Keswick movement, as the Oxford and Brighton Conventions were simply Broadlands writ large,[1307] and Keswick theology is the permanent establishment of the promulgations of these Conventions.

Thus, Mr. Mount-Temple was by no means a passive host who simply lent his Broadlands property to others for their use—on the contrary, he was the mainspring and heart of the Broadlands Conference and consequently a prime initiator of Keswick. Those who knew Broadlands best testified:

> Lord Mount Temple . . . was th[e] mainspring, th[e] very heart . . . of the Broadlands Conferences[.] . . . He was the preparer and the almost hidden ruler of the feast. . . . [T]he aim of his life express[ed] itself and t[ook] visible form in these Conferences . . . it was in these that the sap of his inner ideal life . . . found issue[.] . . . I attribute . . . the felt presence of the Spirit [at the Conferences] . . . not a little, I may say mainly, to the tone and spirit of him who [was] the lord of those broad lands[.] . . . I believe the main channel of all this blessing at Broadlands was dear Lord Mount Temple himself. . . . [I]t was his heart which . . . first conceived the possibility of such meetings . . . it was his personal influence, also, . . . which kept . . . opposite elements in peace[.] . . . Broadlands . . . [was under] the . . . leadership of Lord Mount Temple.[1308]

Lord Mount Temple led the way in spiritual things, Hannah Smith testified, and called through the Broadlands message for others to follow him to his eternal dwelling place.[1309] He received rhapsodic and hagiographical praise from key Keswick men such as Charles Fox,[1310] the poet of Keswick and its closing preacher for two decades.[1311] He developed [1307] Cf. e. g., the testimony that Oxford was but a larger scale of Broadlands on pgs. 27-28, 31, 146-147, 243, 321, 354, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874; Brighton was just Oxford intensified (cf. pgs. 321, 344-346, ibid.).

---

[1308] Pgs. 132-134, 148-150, 172-174, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. Italics in original.

[1309] Pg. 175, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1310] For example, consider an excerpt of Charles Fox's in memoriam poem addressed to and concerning Lord Mount Temple (pg. 135, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple):

> The world is colder since thy sun went down,
> Went down in splendor noiseless as thy life,
> Thou noble-hearted banisher of strife,
> Thou tender traveller betwixt Cross and crown.
>
> Heaven's own simplicity was thine,—a light, the practice of "open[ing] every meeting"[1312] at the Broadlands Conferences, where he "urged upon his hearers the need of a higher spiritual life" and promoted Quietism.[1313] Furthermore, his influence was by no means limited to Broadlands, but "he often preached"[1314] in various venues. By leading the Broadlands Conference, he was the source of the Oxford, Brighton, and Keswick Conventions that patterned themselves after and developed from it. As Hannah Whitall Smith explained out of her personal experience as a fixture and leader among the Broadlands preachers:[1315]

The light of early dawn instinct with dew,
Healing all sundered souls, thou didst diffuse,
Like summer twilight linking day and night.

Thy name was fraught with human brotherhood,
Thy words down-lighting softly everywhere,
Like snowflakes fell, but straight unveiled there stood
Truth's dauntless snowpeaks, towering crystal-fair!
Thy life soul-luminous, transparent, just,
Seemed God's own signature in human dust!

This was the praise of Keswick for the unconverted man who was both the founding impulse for their movement and among the most prominent of the promoters of familiar intercourse with demons in spiritualism.

It is natural that Fox was an honored guest not at Keswick alone, but at the Broadlands Conferences also (pgs. 118-119, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890).

1311 Andrew Naselli notes:

> Charles Armstrong Fox (1836–1900)[,] Keswick's Poet[,] an Anglican minister, spoke at the Brighton Convention in 1875, and Harford-Battersby and Wilson were so impressed with him that they invited him to speak at the first Keswick Convention just three weeks away. He was constantly ill, which inhibited him from speaking at the Keswick Convention until 1879, but he was then able to speak there every year through 1899 (except for 1897 because of illness). . . . After Fox's first convention, he gave the closing address on the final evening of each convention he attended. . . . The Keswick Mission Council passed a resolution on 18 December 1900 noting the Keswick Convention's "irreparable loss" in Fox's death: "As its saintly poet, he lent distinction to the Convention from the first, and to him by general consent in the days of his prime was entrusted the address on the Friday evenings, in which the whole series of meetings culminated." (pgs. 128-129, Let Go and Let God? A Survey and Analysis of Keswick Theology, Naselli)

1312 Pg. 184, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. Mrs. Cowper-Temple specifically speaks of her husband's practice at the Conference of 1888—she does not specify how far back it goes, but pg. 124, ibid, provides evidence that Lord Mount-Temple's practice was by no means limited to the 1888 Conference.

1313 Pg. 124, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890. Lord Mount-Temple's promotion of Quietism is evident in, e. g., his address's declaration that, to experience the Higher Life, not only must "our carnal will . . . be subdued" but "our natural will must die," not only must "carnal wishes" be removed but "emptying ourselves of human desires" must take place. While both the Son of Man, Jesus Christ, and unfallen Adam had sinless human desires and a sinless natural will, for Higher Life Quietists such as Lord Mount Temple and Hannah W. Smith not sin alone, but human nature itself is the enemy—it is not surprising, therefore, that for Lord Mount Temple, as for the Gnostics of old, "the true resurrection" is not that of the body, but "promotion from the world of matter to the world of spirit" (pg. 188, ibid).

1314 Pg. 183, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

1315 E. g., she was not only leading at the first Conference, but testified: "As a Quaker, I have attended many of these Conferences," and was present and preaching even at the last one (pgs. 132, 174, Memorials

> Mr. and Mrs. Cowper Temple . . . were among the first to open their hearts and their home to the teaching concerning the life of faith that was at that time beginning to attract attention among English Christians. The great Conferences at Oxford, later, in 1874, and at Brighton in 1875, and the long series of similar, though somewhat smaller Conferences since held for the "deepening of the spiritual life," were all the outcome of that first Conference gathered by Mr. and Mrs. Cowper Temple at Broadlands . . . in the summer of 1874; and probably without this brave initiatory Conference of theirs those which followed, filled as they have been and still are with [Higher Life] blessings to thousands, would never have been held. This fact is not generally known, but in the great day of accounts, when the secrets of all hears are revealed . . . thousands will [recognize] these . . . pioneers for having thus opened to Christians a wide door into . . . the life hid with Christ in God.[1316]

Broadlands led directly to Keswick:

> [O]n July 17, 1874, the first Broadlands Conference met. About 200 persons assembled[.] . . . After this a Conference was held at Broadlands nearly every summer till 1888, and soon after the last one, in August of that year, Lord Mount-Temple died.
>
> Many who attended the first Conference in 1874 felt it would be well if similar meetings, open to larger numbers, could be held elsewhere, and, at the suggestion of Stevenson Blackwood, Oxford was selected as a suitable spot[.] . . . Accordingly a Conference was held in September in the lovely old city, and about 1000 men and women of all ranks of society and of various religious denominations were present.
>
> A fortnight later a crowded meeting was held under the Dome of Brighton, to hear about the Oxford Conference, and as a result of the interest awakened, a Conference was held at Brighton in the following spring, which was largely attended. There were about 8000 strangers in Brighton, as many as 6000 attending services at the same time. . . .
>
> The same year as the Brighton Conference, 1875 . . . the Keswick Conventions . . . [were] inaugurated . . . which have drawn great numbers . . . year after year ever since[.][1317]

Both persons who attended and written works about Broadlands and its teaching were key in the formation of the Higher Life movement encapsulated at Keswick.[1318] Thus, "the Broadlands Conferences were the starting-point of many important movements. The great Conferences at Oxford in 1874, and at Brighton in 1875, for the deepening of the spiritual life, leading on to those held annually at Keswick and elsewhere . . . were the outcome of those at Broadlands[.]"[1319] The 1874 Broadlands Conference, at which the Smiths were key speakers, was "the germ from which Keswick was to grow, and out of which the memorable gatherings at Oxford and Brighton sprang more immediately."[1320]

[of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890).

[1316] Pgs. 171-172, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1317] Pgs. 16-18, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Cf. pg. 25, Forward Movements, Pierson.

[1318] Pg. 27, Forward Movements, Pierson.

[1319] Pg. 24, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1320] Pgs. 61-62, Evan Harry Hopkins: A Memoir, Alexander Smellie); cf. the account on pgs. 57-60, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith. At Brighton it was indisputable and assumed that the teaching was that of Broadlands (e. g., pgs. 8, 23, 176, 343, 419 Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875) and Oxford (e. g., pgs. 6, 89, 94, 111, 143, 145, 200, 242, 259, 292, etc., ibid), for at Mrs. Cowper-Temple's residence at "Broadlands the first such English gathering was held . . . Oxford and Brighton have been their

The Keswick Conventions are indubitably the product of Broadlands. What is more, "the fruits of these . . . Broadlands Conferences . . . even now are seen, [even] among those who never were at Broadlands, but who have caught something of its spirit."[1321] The deviations from orthodox spirituality in the Keswick movement developed from the foundation of the movement in the federation between the Mount Temples, the Pearsall Smiths, and other false teachers at Broadlands.

Hannah Smith's Higher Life theology, promulgated in the Keswick movement, that sanctification produces a sort of perfection of acts,[1322] follows the teaching of the leading Quaker theologian Robert Barclay.[1323] However, Mrs. Smith came to her view of "the life of faith" in association not only with the "Quaker examples and influences" that from her youth led her to seek for entire sanctification,[1324] but also the Catholic heretics and mystical quietists "Fénelon and Madame Guyon."[1325] Hannah described her love for successors" (pg. 19, ibid.). Keswick indisputably developed from these meetings (cf. pg. 123, The Keswick Convention: Its Message, its Method, and its Men, ed. Harford).

---

While Mrs. and Mr. Smith were the center of the Broadlands, Oxford, and Brighton Conventions, men such as Asa Mahan and William Boardman were present and preached also; cf. pg. 73, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874, etc.

[1321] Pg. 147, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890.

[1322] That is, "the necessary consequence of consecration and faith . . . is a present and complete deliverance from sinning. If my soul is really entirely surrendered to the Lord Jesus and if I am really trusting Him to work all the good pleasure of His will in me, I must be delivered from sinning" (Journal, February 16, 1869, reproduced in the entry for May 12 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.).

[1323] Barclay wrote:

> This most certain doctrine then being received, that there is an evangelical and saving light and grace in all . . . as many as resist not this light, but receive the same, in them is produced an holy, pure, and spiritual birth, bringing forth holiness, righteousness, purity, and all these other blessed fruits which are acceptable to God; by which holy birth (to-wit, Jesus Christ formed within us, and working his works in us) as we are sanctified, so are we justified in the sight of God. [Barclay thus teaches that sanctification and justification are received exactly the same way, and that justification is not by Christ's imputed righteousness, but by becoming inwardly holy, a rejection of the gospel, in which Hannah W. Smith follows him; cf. pgs. 193-194, Every-Day Religion, or The Common-Sense Teaching of the Bible, Hannah W. Smith. New York: Fleming H. Revell, 1893.] . . . In whom this holy and pure birth is fully brought forth, the body of death and sin comes to be crucified and removed, and their hearts united and subjected unto the truth, so as not to obey any suggestion or temptation of the evil one, but to be free from actual sinning, and transgressing of the law of God, and in that respect perfect. Yet doth this perfection still admit of a growth; and there remaineth a possibility of sinning, where the mind doth not most diligently and watchfully attend unto the Lord. (pgs. vii-viii, cf. pgs. 87ff., Proposition 7, "Concerning Justification," and Proposition 8, "Concerning Perfection," An Apology for the True Christian Divinity: being an Explanation and Vindication of the Principles and Doctrines of the People called Quakers, Robert Barclay)

Hannah Smith cites Barclay repeatedly and positively in her writings; see, e. g., her Journal from 1849, reproduced in the entry for January 3 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1324] See, e. g., her Journal from 1849 & 1861, reproduced in the entry for January 2 & 29 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1325] pg. 232, The Unselfishness of God. Methodist influences were also present, as explained below.

a collection of their writings and its influence upon her, and her father before her, in leading them towards the Higher Life, as follows:

> I knew I was not what I ought to be. My life was full of failure and sin. . . . I was continually sinning and repenting, making good resolutions and breaking them . . . longing for victory . . . but more often failing. . . . From the peaceful, restful lives of the Quakers, among whom I had been brought up . . . I had supposed of course that becoming a Christian meant necessarily becoming peaceful and good, and I had as much expected to have victory over sin and over worries as I had expected the sun to shine. But I was forced to confess in the secret depths of my soul that I had been disappointed. . . . Nothing could have described my condition better than the Apostle's account of his own condition in Romans 7:14-23.[1326] I had entered into the salvation through Jesus Christ our Lord, and yet I knew no such triumphant deliverance from the "body of death" within me[.] . . . This feeling became especially strong after my discovery of the unlimited love of God.[1327] . . . The Quaker examples and influences around me seemed to say there must be a deliverance somewhere, for they declared that they had experienced it[.] . . . There was also another influence in my life that seemed to tell the same story. I possessed a book which distinctly taught that God's children were not only commanded to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, but also that they could do so;[1328] and which seemed to reveal the mystical pathway towards it. It was called "Spiritual Progress," and was a collection of extracts from the writings of Fénelon and Madame Guyon. This book was very dear to me, for it had been a gift from my adored father, and always lay on my desk beside my Bible. . . . [Concerning it, my father also testified,] "This book proved to be of the greatest comfort to me. I carried it in my pocket, and at leisure moments read it to my everlasting profit, I trust. And I cannot but thank a kind Providence for giving me this blessed book." . . . He valued the book so highly that, as fast as his children grew old enough, he presented each one of us with a copy, and asked us to read it carefully. Our father was so dear to us that we always wanted to please him, and I for one had made the book my special companion . . . its teachings had made a profound impression upon me[.] . . . After . . . the discovery I had made of the wideness of God's love [universalism], I began to feel more and more uneasy. . . . And more and more I felt the inconsistency of having a salvation, which was in the end to be so magnificently complete [as every single person would be in heaven], but which failed now and here so conspiculously in giving that victory over sin and over worry . . . [until I discovered] the Methodist "blessing of holiness."[1329]

Thus, not only Quakerism, universalism, and a self-centered eudemonism that was focused upon being free from worry and having a life of ease and rest, but also Roman Catholic mysticism was key in Hannah's discovery of the Higher Life. In her youth Hannah had wished to "get perfectly good, just like Mme. Guyon,"[1330] and even to the 1326 Hannah adopts the Higher Life view of the passage that considers it as a description of Paul in self-dependent defeat. She goes on to give the standard Keswick argument that Paul must pass out of defeat in Romans 7 into victory in Romans 8 because of Romans 7:25a, ignoring Romans 7:25b, Paul's actual conclusion in Romans 7:14-25.

---

1327 That is, after she rejected eternal torment and became a universalist.

1328 That is, the Higher Life and Pelagian doctrine of the equation of obligation and ability, here taught to Hannah Smith by Guyon and Fénelon.

1329 Pgs. 172-176, 185, The Unselfishness of God, Princeton, NJ: Littlebrook Press, 1987.

1330 Pg. 2, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, reproducing Letter to her Cousin, Annie Whitall, 1850. Hannah was 18 at the time. Her writings contain other references to being "much helped" by Madame Guyon (cf. pg. 164, The Unselfishness of God, Hannah W. Smith, Princeton, NJ: Littlebrook Press, 1987).

limits of her old age she found various affirmations of Fénelon "everlastingly true."[1331] She further wrote: "Fenelon's whole teaching is to show us how to let the lower life die, and the higher life take its place[,] [that is,] . . . the 'Higher Life' . . . [taught in my] 'Christian's Secret[.]'"[1332] Likewise, Hannah Smith found "the true meaning of self abandonment" in Madame Guyon's Commentary on the Song of Solomon,[1333] found confirmation on "the subject of guidance" by the Inner "Voice" from "Madame Guyon,"[1334] discovered her quietistic doctrine of resting on God in "naked faith" from "Madame Guyon" and "Fenelon,"[1335] and developed her doctrine of being "one with God" from them also.[1336] Indeed, she made many discoveries from this pair of Catholic mystics, who were central to her doctrine of sanctification,[1337] although other Roman Catholics were also important.[1338] Indeed, she found that not only Romanist mystics, but "[a]ll the writers on the advancing life say that a renunciation of all the activities of the soul must come before God can be all in all."[1339] That is, quietism is the necessary

---

[1331] Pg. 213, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, reproducing Letter to her Daughter, Mary Berenson, March 25, 1910. Hannah was 78 at the time.

[1332] Letter to Daughter Mary, October 9, 1881, reproduced in the entry for October 30 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1333] Journal, Millville N. J., August 27, 1865; reproduced in the entry for February 3 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1334] Letter to Abby, Millville N. J., September 6, 1865; reproduced in the entry for February 4 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1335] Letter to Carrie, March 12, 1881; reproduced in the entry for October 25 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1336] Letter to Carrie, March 12, 1881; reproduced in the entry for October 25 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. Guyon and Fénelon also assisted Hannah move all the further away from literal interpretation of Scripture to the "inner sense" of allegorical, mystical, and non-literal interpretation that supported the doctrines she was imbibing from the Romanists.

[1337] Compare Letter to Sarah, March 7, 1881; Letter to Priscilla, 1883; Letter to a Friend, January 17, 1883, Providence, R.I., reproduced in the entries for October 24, November 16, & December 7 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1338] For example, Hannah enjoyed the works of Frederick W. Faber, who journeyed with Cardinal Newman from the false gospel of Anglo-Catholicism into the arms of the Roman harlot itself (Revelation 17). She quoted him favorably in chapter 22 of her Christian's Secret of a Happy Life. Commending him to another, she likewise wrote: "I wish you had Faber's Growth in Holiness to read a little of it as a part of your devotions. I find him very helpful" (Letter to Carrie, February 2, 1881, reproduced in the entry for October 23 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). See further representative examples of her positive view of Faber in Letter to Robert, July 20, 1873, Letter to a Friend, September 2, 1873, Letter to Anna, September 29, 1876, Letter to a Friend, August 17, 1879, reproduced in the entries for July 2, 5, August 9, September 20, of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter, etc.

[1339] Letter, 1880, reproduced in the entry for October 19 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. Fenelon and Guyon were the most prominent of these "writers on the advancing life" or "spiritual writers"; cf. Letter to Carrie, March 12, 1881, reproduced in the entry for October 25 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

prerequisite for mystical union and deification.[1340] The Higher Life "may make us lazy on the line of 'creaturely activity,' for all our restless strivings and agonizings will be over, and our souls will dwell in 'peaceable habitations' continually,"[1341] but quietism is the truth, at least in the view of the writers on the advanced life, if not in the view of the Bible.

Both the Roman Catholic Archbishop Fénelon and the mystical Quietist and panentheist Madame Guyon, who in "all that concerns the distinction between Protestantism [and the Baptists] and Romanism . . . is wholly Romanist,"[1342] were enemies of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Madame Guyon began her last will as follows: "I protest that I die in the faith of the Catholic, apostolical, Roman Church; having no other doctrines than hers; believing all that she believes, and condemning, without restriction, all that she condemns."[1343] She was "an outstanding proponent" of "quietism," that "manifestation of Roman Catholic mysticism in the seveneenth and eighteenth centuries," having adopted it from "Miguel de Molinos, a Spanish priest"[1344] who was "founder of the Quietists."[1345] Packer describes the error of Quietism:

> Quietism . . . holds that all initiatives on our part, of any sort, are the energy of the flesh; that God will move us, if at all, by inner promptings and constraints that are recognizably not thoughts and impulses of our own; and that we should always be seeking the annihilation of our selfhood so that divine life may flow freely through our physical frames. . . . by biblical standards this passiv[e] frame of reference is altogether wrong, for the Holy Spirit's ordinary way of working in us is through the working of our minds and wills. . . . Thus, our conscious, rational selfhood, so far from being annihilated, is strengthened . . . Philippians 2:13. This is holiness, and in the process of perfecting it there is, properly speaking, no passivity at all.[1346]

David Cloud explained:

> The school of mysticism that Guyon adhered to, sometimes called Quietism, was an extreme form of Roman Catholic mysticism that emphasized the cleansing of one's inner life and included the belief that one could see Christ visibly. Before Guyon's day, in the Middle Ages, this took strange forms in erotic "bride mysticism" with some visionaries believing they were married to Jesus. Guyon and the Quietists went further, into something called essence mysticism. They believed that 1340 Hannah W. Smith's doctrine would have been in accord with her fellow preacher and founder of the Broadlands Conferences, Lord Mount Temple: "My Lord Jesus, as Thou didst take my humanity, I pray Thee impart to me Thy Divinity" (pg. 183, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890).

---

1341 Letter to Priscilla, September 20, 1882, reproduced in the entry for October 25 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

1342 pg. 376, Perfectionism, vol. 2, Benjamin B. Warfield. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Books, 2003; reprint of 1932 Oxford ed.

1343 "Guyon, Jeanne-Marie Bouvier De La Mothe," pg. 402 in the Cyclopedia of Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical Literature, vol. 3, James Strong & John McClintock. Elec. acc. Christian Library Series vol. 2. Albany, OR: AGES Software, 2006.

1344 Pg. 901, "Quietism," Evangelical Dictionary of Theology, ed. Elwell.

1345 "Molinos, Miguel De," Cyclopedia of Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical Literature, John McClintock & James Strong, vol. 6, elec. acc. AGES Digital Software Library.

1346 Pg. 127, Keep In Step With The Spirit, Packer.

> their being was merged with God's being and the two became one. This unbiblical idea survives today in the New Age and other non-Christian religions. . . . She taught that we can know of God by "passing forward into God," going into a mindless, meditative state where we can get in touch with the Christ within the self, merge with that Christ and be lifted into ecstasy.[1347]

Guyon "won many converts," resulting in a "belief in a vague pantheism which is closer to the South Asian religions than to Christianity," but, nevertheless, she "felt herself so close to God that she received visions and revelations,"[1348] as did so many of her Higher Life successors who devoured her writings. Madame Guyon also, with other medieval Roman Catholic mystics, believed in the abominable heresy of deification, which was also transferred into the Higher Life and Keswick milieu.[1349] Fenélon, who "admired and defended [Guyon's] ideas,"[1350] had many converts also—he became the Catholic "Superior of a house for recent converts from Protestantism and then led a mission to the Huguenots,"[1351] seeking to bring those French Protestants back to the fold of that religious system, centered in Rome, that the Apostle John called the mother of harlots and 1347 "The Delusions of Madame Guyon," by David Cloud. Port Huron, MI: Fundamental Baptist Information Service, November 16, 2010. It is likely that the medieval Roman Catholic erotic bridal mysticism was ultimately at the root of the theological trajectory that led to Mr. and Mrs. Smith's reception of the doctrine, although Henry Foster was the more immediate instrument of their adoption of the heresy.

---

1348 Pg. 902, "Quietism," Evangelical Dictionary of Theology, ed. Elwell.

1349 Madame Guyon wrote: "The essential union is the spiritual marriage where there is a communication of substance, when God takes the soul for His spouse, unites it to Himself, not personally, nor by any act or means, but immediately reducing all to a unity. The soul ought not, nor can, any more make any distinction between God and itself. God is the soul, the soul is God" (cited pgs. 82-83, The "Higher Life" Doctrine of Sanctification, Henry A. Boardman). "Communication of substance" is classical Trinitarian language for the possession of the undivided Divine essence by the Son through His being eternally begotten by the Father, and of the Spirit's possession of the undivided Divine essence by eternal procession from the Father and the Son. To affirm that the Divine substance is communicated to a human being, so that the soul is God, is horrific blasphemy. Sundry Keswick advocates, such as Watchman Nee and Witness Lee, accepted the mystical heresy of deification, which was present in the Keswick movement from the time of its genesis in the Broadlands Conferences. Since the Higher Life and Keswick theology developed out of a historical trajectory involving Guyon, Fénelon, and mystical Quietism, this acceptance of deification is natural. However, more orthodox proponents of Keswick theology agree with Stephen Barabas and deny that sanctification involves "the merger of the personality with that of God . . . [or] the destruction of the personality" (pg. 121, So Great Salvation, Barabas); those Higher Life writers who agree with Barabas have allowed Scripture to remove this particular heresy from the historical stream of Keswick theology within which they swim.

The Word of Faith movement likewise calls believers "god men" and preaches deification, as did the nineteenth century New Thought movement, which developed "the Divinity of Man" through "obedience to the Indwelling Presence which is our source of Inspiration, Power, Health, [and] Prosperity" (pgs. 106-107, A Different Gospel, McConnell). The metaphysical and Word of Faith doctrine that through "deification" men "are transformed into gods," since "man was created with the divine nature, sinned, and was filled with satanic nature; but through the new birth, he is again infused with the divine nature," so that "to be born again" is to receive "the nature and life of God in one's spirit" (pg. 119-121, ibid.) is also very similar to the doctrine of Watchman Nee and Witness Lee, and the Word of Faith system arose from the Higher Life antecedents that produced Pentecostalism.

1350 Pg. 902, "Quietism," Evangelical Dictionary of Theology, ed. Elwell.

1351 Pg. 89, "Fénelon, Francois de Salignac de Mothe," Who's Who in Christianity, ed. Lavinia Cohn-Sherbok.

abominations of the earth (Revelation 17). Concerning these Quietists, Hannah W. Smith wrote: "By my Quaker education, I was exceedingly inclined towards mysticism, and the books I had read—such as Madame Guyon, Fénelon, Isaac Pennington[1352] and others, all of which lead to a life of introspection and self-abandonment—had greatly strengthened me in this, so that I honestly believed that wonderful spiritual light would come, and did come, to souls that gave themselves up to the control of their interior emotions and followed impressional guidance."[1353] She stated: "[B]ecause of my education in the Quaker Society . . . [m]y idea of guidance . . . was of having impressed upon my mind in some miraculous way the will of God; and the teaching I received was that instant, unquestioning obedience to these impressions was the only way[.]"[1354] Quaker and Roman Catholic mysticism were at the heart of Hannah W. Smith's Higher Life and Keswick theology.

Mrs. Smith also rejoiced in her "dear Quaker friend[s] and the Catholic Saints" who "exalted James with his justification by works."[1355] After the death of her daughter's Roman Catholic husband, she "covenanted that" her grandchildren from that marriage would "be educated as Roman Catholics, and she kept . . . strictly to her promise."[1356] She wrote: "My two little grandchildren are . . . devout little Catholics, and seem to enjoy their religion, and I am glad of it. I daresay they will be saved a good many of the perplexities and difficulties that so often beset Protestant children."[1357] She led them to celebrate Lent,[1358] to "la[y] up treasure in Heaven by giving candlesticks to a Roman Catholic High Altar" and by going to Mass[1359] and the Confessional.[1360] Hannah used the methods in "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life" to lead "a Roman Catholic lady, a convert who was vexed by doubts about some dogma of the Church" of Rome, to an unshaken confidence in the dogma of transubstantiation. "H. W. S. wrote out on a

---

1352 Pennington was a Quaker mystic and heretic. Hannah W. Smith repeatedly refers to him (e. g., April 23, May 6, September 9, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life: The Unpublished Personal Writings of Hannah Whitall Smith, ed. Melvin Dieter).

1353 Pg. 206, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

1354 Pg. 240, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

1355 Pg. 234, My Spiritual Autobiography, Hannah W. Smith. James does not teach that one is justified in the sight of God by works, nor contradict in any way the Pauline doctrine of justification by faith alone (Romans 3:28).

1356 Pgs. 158, 144, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. She would not have even "the narrowest Catholicism" taken away from her granddaughters (pg. 194, ibid). See also pg. xx.

1357 Pg. 139, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Letter to Miss Olive Seward, March 28, 1898.

1358 Pg. 158, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith.

1359 Pg. 158, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith.

1360 Pg. 174-175, 184, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith.

piece of paper, 'I undertake never to have any more doubts about the Real Presence' (or whatever it was), and brought it to her, and made her sign it. After that the troubled spirit was utterly at rest"[1361] in the bosom of the Whore of Babylon. After all, nothing was wrong with Romanism, since because of a Quaker "opening," one of the special revelations she received that supplemented or contradicted the Bible, Mrs. Smith came to realize that Roman Catholics were all one in God with other Christians.[1362] In any case, a Christian does not need to be justified by Christ's imputed righteousness, nor believe what the Bible says about Jesus Christ—rather, "to be a good human being is to be the best Christian that can be made."[1363] Mrs. Smith documents how she turned away from the doctrine she had learned from the Plymouth Brethren of judicial and forensic justification by faith alone (cf. Romans 3:28), "[a]fter . . . the discovery [she] had made of the wideness of God's love [universalism],"[1364] adopting instead the heresy and works-gospel that justification means that "the life of Christ in our souls is a righteous life."[1365] She thus denied the Biblical doctrine of justification, as well as holding to other corruptions of the gospel, both before and during the time when she began her influence as a Higher Life teacher and preacher, and she cleaved to a false gospel the rest of her life.

In addition to rejecting the core Biblical doctrine of justification, Mrs. Smith was very confused on the instrumental means for the receipt of the gospel. Denying that repentant faith alone was the instrumentality for the receipt of salvation, Hannah taught that "we cannot be saved until after we confess," so that it was necessary to "make an apology" after doing wrong.[1366] Her view of faith was dangerous and heretical. She wrote: "Faith, then, is not a grace . . . Neither are there different kinds of faith. Men talk about a . . . living faith, and a saving faith, and an intellectual faith, and an historical 1362 "I had one of my 'openings' in regard to all the Catholic ceremonies, that took away forever my prejudices, and made me feel that it was a fact that we are all one in God. Such openings are tremendously enlightening. I love to have them" (pg. 216, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith).

---

1361 Pg. 153, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith.

1363 Pg. 256, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

1364 pg. 237, My Spiritual Autobiography, Hannah W. Smith.

1365 Pg. 193-194, Every-Day Religion, Hannah W. Smith.

1366 Hannah was writing, in 1870, to her son Frank, basing her false gospel upon a misinterpretation of Romans 10:9-10 (Letter to Frank, January 2, 1870, reproduced in the entry for May 22 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). Romans 10:9-10 does not make confession of any kind a prerequisite to justification; rather it affirms that after one has believed in his heart and received Christ's righteousness, he will confess Christ before men as a mark of his regenerate life, and so enter heaven, that is, receive ultimate salvation. See "An Exegesis and Application of Romans 10:9-14 for Soulwinning Churches and Christians," by Thomas Ross.

faith, and a dead faith; but God talks about believing what He says, and this is the only kind of faith the Bible mentions."[1367] Thus, to Mrs. Smith, saving faith was merely intellectual assent, believing facts. Furthermore, Mrs. Smith anticipated the Word-Faith heresy[1368] that positive confessions create positive realities:

> Put your will then over on to the believing side. Say, "Lord I will believe, I do believe," and continue to say it. . . . I began to say, over and over, "The Lord does love me. He is my present and my perfect Saviour; Jesus saves me, Jesus saves me now!" . . . Those three little words, repeated over and over, — "Jesus saves me, Jesus saves me," — will put to flight the greatest army of doubts that ever assaulted any soul. I have tried it times without number, and have never known it to fail. Do not stop to argue the matter out with your doubts, nor try to prove that they are wrong. Pay no attention to them whatever; treat them with the utmost contempt. Shut your door in their faces, and emphatically deny every word they say to you. . . . Cultivate the habit of expressing your faith in definite words . . . repeat often.[1369]

Further anticipating Word of Faith error, she wrote elsewhere: "Faith, we are told, 'calleth those things which be not as though they were.' Calling them brings them into being," so that exercising faith is "the law of creation[,]"[1370] misinterpreting Romans 4:17, which states that the personal, omnipotent God, not faith, calls those things which are not as though they were. Thus, Hannah believed she could do what Romans 4:17 affirms God, not the Christian, does: "[I]t is like the pangs of creation to have 'the faith of God' and 'call those things which be not as though they were.' Is not that a grand definition of faith? It is in Romans 4:17."[1371] Nevertheless, Hannah admitted: "I see the [1367] Pg. 42, The "Higher Life" Doctrine of Sanctification Tried by the Word of God, Henry A. Boardman. Harrisonburg, VA: Sprinkle, 1996, citing Mrs. Smith's tract "Faith," published by the Willard Tract Repository. Pgs. 38-58 of Boardman's book documents Smith's unbiblical, Pelagian, and rationalistic view of faith.

---

[1368] Mr. Robert P. Smith also makes affirmations that sound like the Word-Faith positive confession heresy (cf. pgs. 100-101, "The Brighton Convention and Its Opponents." London Quarterly Review, October 1875).

[1369] The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life, Hannah W. Smith, Chapters 3, 6, 14, elec. acc. Accordance Bible Software; cf. Letter to Anna, September 6, 1871, reproduced in the entry for June 16 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

It is noteworthy that Hannah Smith's "Jesus saves me now" was also Robert P. Smith's great refrain of immediate sanctification, the "watch word" of the Conventions that developed the Keswick theology (Letter to Father and Mother, June 9, 1875, reproduced in the entry for July 26 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter), and the way of entrance into a state of a perfection of acts, instantaneously obtained as a result of an act of faith directed to that end. Furthermore, "'Jesus saves me now,' is the refrain of more than one peculiarly 'Keswick' hymn," which teach that by that immediate act of faith one obtains this second blessing (pg. 216, The Keswick Convention: Its Message, its Method, and its Men, ed. Harford); "Jesus saves me now" was enshrined in Keswick hymnody from at least the time of the Oxford Convention (pgs. 88-89, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall). Compare pgs. 140, 319, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875.

[1370] Pg. 235, The God of All Comfort, Smith.

[1371] Letter to Daughter, February 14, 1883, reproduced in the entry for December 11 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

difficulty you speak of, and I confess it does seem an odd sort of thing to do, to become satisfied by saying one is satisfied, when one is not. But is it not just what faith is described to be 'calling those things which be not as though they were.' And what else can we do?"[1372] She recognized that it was, indeed, very odd to simply say that things were a certain way when they were not so, but such was her view of faith, and she did not know what else to do. Her view, applied to feelings, might have had some effect as a psychological gimmick, but when applied to physical healing in the nineteenth century Faith and Mind Cure movements, and the modern Word of Faith movement, it has caused vast numbers of early deaths, while when applied to conversion and assurance of salvation, it has led to vast numbers of eternal, spiritual deaths.

As Mrs. Smith's view of faith was heretical, so her view of conversion was terribly deficient and dangerous. Her counsel to the unconverted was:

> If you are unconverted, take His message to sinners in 2 Corinthians 5:19, for instance, and make up your mind to believe it, irrespective of your feelings, or of your reasonings or of any other thing whatever. Say to yourself, "God says that He 'was reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them.' I do not see how this can be. I do not feel as if it were so. But God says it, and I know He cannot lie; and I choose to believe Him. He is reconciled to me in Christ, and He does not impute my trespasses unto me; I was saved through the death of Christ." Repeat it over and over, putting all the power of will you possess into it. "I will believe; I choose to believe; I do believe; I am saved." "How do you know it?" says Satan; "do you feel it?" "No I do not feel it at all; but I know it, because God says so; and I would far rather trust His word than my own feelings, let them be ever so delightful."[1373]

Henry Boardman[1374] rightly comments on this false view of faith by Mrs. Smith: "Can this grossly unscriptural advice be followed without deadly peril of self deception?"[1375] Saving faith is a Spirit-worked trust in the Person and cross of the Lord Jesus Christ. It possesses intellectual, volitional, and emotional elements. Repeating to oneself over and over that since Christ died for the sins of the world, one has received spiritual life, is a fearful error and a false gospel. Describing, on another occasion, how she would bring someone to "conversion," although conversion to "a different sort of God altogether" than that of Christian orthodoxy, that is, the god of universalism, Hannah explained that the sinner does not need to recognize that he is a child of the devil (John 8:44) who is dead in sin (Ephesians 2:1-3) and then come to repentance (Luke 13:3); rather, he should simply mentally assent to the fact that he is, allegedly, already a child of God and already 1372 Letter to Priscilla, January 8, 1882, reproduced in the entry for November 3 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

---

1373 Faith, Hannah Whitall Smith, cited pg. 55, The "Higher Life" Doctrine of Sanctification Tried by the Word of God, Henry Boardman. Italics in original.

1374 Henry Boardman must not be confused with the Higher Life leader William Boardman.

1375 Pgs. 55-56, The "Higher Life" Doctrine of Sanctification Tried by the Word of God, Henry Boardman.

forgiven, just like all other sinners in the world, and then enter into the Higher Life and feel happy and free from trouble. Hannah and Robert Smith were happy to give assurance and the peace and comfort that comes with it to those without any testimony of real conversion or the life associated with it; for example, they publicly proclaimed that all their children were saved, although none of them were.[1376] She wrote:

> [C]onversion comes . . . at the moment of belief, only it is belief in a different sort of God altogether. I go to a sinner now and say, "Poor soul, God loves you; God is your Father; He is on your side. He came down to this world in a human body, just to take your lot upon Him and to bear your sins and sorrows. He met your enemy and conquered him, so that you need not fear him any more. He is not angry with you. He took your sins upon Him and made your cause His own. He is reconciled to you. He declared that He forgave you when He was on earth, and He declares it still in the Record He left behind Him. He says if you will only trust Him He will get you out of all your troubles. He will beget His own spiritual life in you, and make you a partaker of the Divine nature. You shall be born of the spirit, and be filled with the spirit[.][1377]

In light of Mrs. Smith's confusion on the nature of saving conversion—errors in which she was followed by her husband[1378] and in which she stood with other Higher Life leaders[1379]—it is not surprising that Mrs. Smith's son Logan could remember little about

---

[1376] Pg. 212, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875; cf. Hannah's teaching on pg. 373.

[1377] Letter to Anna, January 21, 1881, reproduced in the entry for October 20 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1378] A brief testimony by Robert about his professed conversion appears on pgs. 168-169, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874; he came to see what Christ's blood "had" already done for him, and recognising that fact, he testified: "I never for an hour doubted my pardon and adoption"; mention of repentance, or of actually trusting in what Christ did, is omitted; only assent to facts about Christ's blood is stated. Furthermore, Robert believed that "consecration and conversion [were] two separate acts" and he had "never known one instance in which they were not distinct" (pg. 256, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875); that is, if his testimony is to be credited, he never knew a single instance in which a sinner repented and surrendered to Christ as Lord at the time of his professed conversion, and Mr. Smith did not surrender to Christ at the time of his own professed conversion; consequently, his salvation was spurious, as were all those of whom he testified truly.

Mr. Smith's exceedingly weak view of conversion is also evident in that he testified: "I had asked the Lord not to send me out [in ministry] till the Divine seal had been set on my work at home—[but] when all my children, my servants, and many of my work-people had been converted, and brought to live the faith-life, it was easy to go 'to the parts beyond'" (pg. 221, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874). Although his children, at least those who lived to adulthood, were all unconverted, he publicly proclaimed exactly the opposite—but it is not surprising that one who is unconverted himself should have great difficulty leading others to true conversion.

[1379] For example, Jacob Abbott, commenting on William Boardman's definition of faith in his The Higher Christian Life, notes:

> We had read with astonishment, in the early part of the work, what he quoted, with an apparent endorsement, from a monk, who was directing Luther how to be saved. Said the monk: "The commandment of God is, that we believe our own sins are forgiven" (p. 25). Where do we find a warrant for so believing, and calling it saving faith? What kind of faith would that be for impenitent men . . . [to] believ[e] that their own sins are forgiven, [that they have] an assured hope of heaven, [and] an assured knowledge of the saving presence of Jesus[?] . . . Would it not be, what a great many are doing, believing a lie, that they might be damned? . . .

his own alleged conversion at the age of four. He had to find out what happened at the time of his professed conversion by reading a tract his father Robert P. Smith had written about it. His alleged conversion did not change his life—for such a change needed to await the second blessing, sanctification, Logan related—and he was never truly born again and so was able to apostatize from, renounce, and come to hate evangelical Christianity and the Christ set forth by it,[1380] just as his father and mother came to do, and all the other Smith children that lived to adulthood.

Mrs. Smith was able to adopt all her heresies because she was never truly born again. At the time of her alleged evangelical conversion Mrs. Smith noted that she thought that she simply "had found out something delightful about God" and the idea "that I personally was different in any way from what I had been before, never entered my head."[1381] A member of the Plymouth Brethren, however, hearing her change in doctrinal views, told her: "Thank God, Mrs. Smith, that you have at last become a Christian," to which she "promptly replied, 'Oh no, I am not a Christian at all.'"[1382] However, Mrs. Smith allowed this member of the Plymouth Brethren to convice her that her doctrinal assent was equivalent to becoming a Christian, so that she came to conclude: "'I must be born of God. Well, I am glad.' From that moment the matter was settled, and not a doubt as to my being a child of God and the possessor of eternal life, has ever had the slightest power over me since."[1383] Unfortunately, since she had never through repentant faith come into saving union with the crucified Christ, but had simply assented to certain Biblical truths, she never was regenerated, and thus was able to apostatize from even the evangelical doctrinal beliefs that had, for a time, captivated her interest. She refers, in her later life, to her "very evangelical days" as a time in the past that had come to an end,[1384] and she "had afterwards to discard" even the trappings of

---

The amount of it is, that we are to believe something about ourselves . . . [n]ow we ask, is that evangelical faith at all? . . .

What is the object of Christian faith? Is it not the salvation of Christ, the "good tidings" revealed in his word? Can anything be a proper object of justifying or sanctifying faith, what what God as recorded in his word? . . . [Assurance] springs up amind the fruits of a renewed heart [and] must not be mistaken for the faith itself, that works by love, and purifies the heart, and overcomes the world. (pgs. 515-516, Review of William E. Boardman's The Higher Christian Life, Jacob J. Abbott. Bibliotheca Sacra (July 1860) 508-535. Note that Boardman's account of the monk and Luther is almost certainly mythological in any case. As Abbott notes later: "[S]o far as we have the means of verifying them, there is not one of [Boardman's testimonials from history] that stands upon the ground of historical truth" (pg. 520).)

1380 Pgs. 35-38, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith.

1381 Pg. 179, My Spiritual Autobiography, Hannah W. Smith.

1382 Pgs. 179-180, My Spiritual Autobiography, Hannah W. Smith.

1383 Pg. 180, My Spiritual Autobiography, Hannah W. Smith.

1384 Pg. 278, The Unselfishness of God.

Christian orthodoxy that she held in her "extreme evangelical days."[1385] At the time of her evangelical influence, she stated that she had not embraced the Person of the crucified and risen Christ through a repentant faith, but "what I got at was the fact of God's forgiveness," and since all she "got" was a "fact," not a Person, she stated that the evangelical gospel was "a hook [about God's forgiveness] that I had afterwards to discard. . . . The various hooks upon which I hung this fact at the different stages of my progress were entirely immaterial after all."[1386] She could apostatize from even the evangelical truths she temporaily held to because they were simply facts assented to mentally—she had never embraced Jesus Christ as her own Lord and Savior on gospel terms. Consequently, as years passed, "[s]he found that, after all her searching and all her experimenting, she had come back very close to the position of the old Quakers from which she had started, and in her later days she was more mystical, more quietist, and at the same time less positive," that is, more relativistic, than ever,[1387] since the "time has not yet arrived in the history of the human race when in this world we can have any absolute standard of right and wrong."[1388] Mrs. Smith's universalism led her to reject the necessity of the new birth and of conversion, truths to which she had intellectually assented for a short period:

> [As Quakers,] [w]e were never told we had to be "converted" or "born again," and my own impression was that these were things . . . [which] were entirely unnecessary for us, who were birthright members of the Society of Friends, and were already born into the kingdom of God, and only needed to be exhorted to live up to our high calling. I believe this was because of one of the fundamental principles of Quakerism, which was a belief in the universal fatherhood of God, and a recognition of the fact that Christ had linked Himself on to humanity, and had embraced the whole world in His divine brotherhood, so that every soul that was born belonged to Him, and could claim sonship with the same Father. . . . [T]he early Friends accepted this as true, and would have thought it misleading to urge us to become [converted or born again, since] we . . . already belonged . . . [to] the Good Shepherd. For a little time, in my Plymouth Brethren days, I looked upon this [Quaker doctrine] as a dreadful heresy; but later on I learned the blessed fact . . . that we are all, the heathen . . . heathen idolators . . . even included, "God's offspring;" and I realized that, since He is our creator, He is of course our Father, and we equally of course are his children. And I learned to thank and bless the grand old Quakers who had made this discovery, since their teaching made it easy for me to throw aside the limiting, narrowing ideas I had first adopted [of the necessity of the new birth and conversion], and helped me to comprehend . . . that no one can shut another out [universalism].[1389]

Mrs. Smith was an unregenerate woman who professed and preached a false gospel.

[1385] Pg. 149, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith, Letter to her daughter, Mary Berenson, October 26, 1901. The theological looseness and indulgence of various heresies that are consistent, in Mrs. Smith's mind, with being an allegedly "extreme evangelical" should be recalled.

[1386] Pg. 149, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith, Letter to her daughter, Mary Berenson, October 26, 1901. Italics in original.

[1387] Pg. 15, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

[1388] Pg. 159, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

[1389] Pgs. 83-85, The Unselfishness of God.

Having rejected justification by faith and the new birth and having become a universalist, in association with what she learned "among the Methodists . . . [of] the 'Doctrine of Holiness' . . . [Hannah Smith learned about] an experience called 'sanctification' or the 'second blessing' which brought you into a place of victory."[1390]

She explains what she learned by means of Methodist meetings on the second blessing:

> [I] found . . . what Paul meant when he said, "Not I, but Christ," and that the victory I sought, was to come by ceasing to live my own life[.] . . . I find there are some Christians who say that [we] receiv[e] Christ by faith for our sanctification, just as we received Him by faith for our justification . . . a Methodist doctrine . . . but it seems to be the only thing that can supply my needs . . . this is the Methodist "blessing of holiness."[1391]

She wrote:

> This new life I had entered upon has been called by several different names. The Methodists called it "The Second Blessing," or "The Blessing of Sanctification;" the Presbyterians[1392] called it "The Higher Life," or "The Life of Faith;" the Friends [Quakers] called it "The Life hid with Christ in God." . . . I have most fully set it forth . . . [in my book] the "Secret of a Happy Life" . . . [where the teaching is expounded that] practical sanctification was to be obtained, like justification, by simple faith; and that, like justification, it was to be realized in any moment in which our faith should be able to grasp it.[1393]

The Higher Life "is what the Quakers have always taught. Their preaching is almost altogether about it."[1394] Quaker men and women "receiv[ed] the blessing of full salvation or death to sin" in Quaker meetings and went on to become "very successful in holding Holiness meetings."[1395] Indeed, Mrs. Smith thus noted that the Quakers, Methodists, and Catholics all taught the Higher Life doctrine she also embraced:

> [T]his discovery, which I have tried to set forth, was the beginning of a great revival in the spiritual life of the Church everywhere . . . the life of faith [was found] not only among the Methodists, but among the Quakers and among the Catholics as well, and in fact it is I believe at

---

1390 pg. 240, The Unselfishness of God. The Methodist doctrine of the second blessing or perfectionism affirms:

> [In] the entirely sanctified . . . "concupiscence" has lost its evil, and [has] reverted back to . . . mere desire incident to the flesh, without any complicity or affinity with sin . . . victory is perfectly gained through the overwhelming might of the Spirit in the inner man, so that [those who have been perfected] have only to keep themselves from the external enemy who seeks to "touch" them, and to preserve or maintain the victory over self which God has given them. . . . The natural will being dead, the agony of a divided life and purpose is gone; for now our glorious motive power, God's own will, works in us, freed from internal opposition . . . released from the inward proneness to sin. . . . God is pleased to reckon as a fulfilment of the law . . . perfect love[,] [which is] possible to the faith of the Christian. . . . "Christian perfection" was indeed a favourite expression . . . [of] Mr. Wesley[.] . . . [T]his perfection is always wrought in the soul by a simple act of faith; consequently, in an instant. But [there is] a gradual work, both preceding and following that instant. (pgs. 118-124, "The Brighton Convention and Its Opponents." London Quarterly Review, October 1875; comparison is made to the second blessing doctrine of Robert P. Smith, which is evidenced to be very similar to that of Wesleyan perfectionism.)

1391 pgs. 242-243, 245, The Unselfishness of God. Italics in original.

1392 That is, Presbyterians such as William Boardman; Presbyterian orthodoxy rejected the Higher Life movement.

1393 pgs. 261, 264-265, The Unselfishness of God.

1394 pgs. 269-270, The Unselfishness of God.

1395 Letter to Priscie, reproduced in the entry for September 4 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. Hannah Smith speaks of the Quaker woman preacher Helen Balkwell.

> the bottom of the creeds of every Church . . . The Life of Faith [is] . . . what the Quakers had always taught. . . . They were in short "Higher Life" people[.][1396]

Hannah W. Smith refined the Higher Life perfectionism that was her Quaker birthright, not only from Roman Catholic influences, but from Methodist perfectionism also.

Mrs. Smith further developed her doctrine of sanctification by faith and the Higher Life through a discovery she stated was "more fundamental"[1397] than any other. She received this Higher Life truth through the influence of a Methodist minister who experienced demonic revelations and was a sexual predator. She explained why she was open to his twisted ideas:

> [I]n my search after the deep things of God . . . I think all the fanatics in the United States must have found their way to my presence to try and draw me into their especial net, and . . . I was always ready to listen sympathetically, hoping that among them all I might at last find the truth[.] . . . I [could] be completely taken in by anyone who professed to be "guided by the Lord." This was owing, I expect, to my early Quaker teaching about Divine Guidance. People had only to say to me that the Lord had led them into such or such a course, for me to bow down before them in profound reverence. . . . I was made to believe that . . . I should be able to understand the Divine reasons for what seemed to me violations of good sense and even of simple morality.[1398]

In contrast, concerning a local "Baptist clergyman . . . [who] preaches such a pure gospel," Hannah affirmed, "I cannot enjoy close contact with such people,"[1399] finding preachers of a pure gospel repulsive,[1400] but fanatics of all sorts much more attractive, in keeping with her background, associations, and unrenewed nature. She stated: "My first introduction to fanaticism, if I leave out all that I got from the Quakers to start with, which was a good deal, came through the Methodist doctrine of entire sanctification. That doctrine has been one of the greatest blessings of my life[.]"[1401] This blessing came in association with Dr. Henry Foster and his Clifton Springs sanitarium; the Pearsall

---

1396 pgs. 272-274, 280, The Unselfishness of God.

1397 Pg. 267, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey. Italics in original.

1398 Pgs. 194-195, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

1399 Pg. 29, Remarkable Relations, Strachey. Italics in original.

1400 Hannah preached and testified: "When I entered this [Higher] life . . . [t]he Lord delivered me from [judging]. . . . I feel it is not my place to judge anybody" (pg. 368, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875). Mrs. Smith was relatively consistent in her failure to judge and condemn heretics, universalists, and fanatics, despite Christ's command to "judge righteous judgment" (John 7:24) and the Apostolic pattern of judging people for false doctrine and practice (1 Corinthians 5:3; Galatians 2:4-5). However, she seems to have made an exception for Baptists who preached a pure gospel—these, she judged, were repulsive and intolerable—a feeling reflective of her view of their Master (Matthew 10:40; John 13:20).

1401 Pg. 203, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey. Hannah Smith went on to warn that the Methodist doctrine had "introduced [her] into an emotional region where common sense has no chance, and where everything goes by feelings and voices and impressions," which she did not think was good, as, at the time she was writing, she did not think that very extreme fanaticism was commendable. However, she did not go on to reject the Quaker Inner Light heresy, or the Methodist errors of entire sanctification and extra-Scriptural revelations, for a consistent sola Scriptura stand and a truly Biblical doctrine of sanctification, such truths being aborrant to her because of her unregenerate state (cf. 1 Corinthians 2:14). Thus, she remained a fanatic herself.

Smith family had known Dr. Foster since at least 1871 when Robert had stayed at the sanitarium and learned from the spiritual doctor the doctrine of erotic Sprit baptism. Hannah described her association with this Methodist minister and his family, the insight into the Higher Life she received, and evidenced her incredible spiritual blindness,[1402] as follows:

> In the year 1879[1403] we took a furnished house in Coulter Street, Germantown,[1404] for the summer. A lady who lived next door to us had lent her house to some friends who had the reputation of being wonderful Christians, and of having great revelations and marvelous experiences. As I was at that time in search of remarkable experiences, I was exceedingly interested in these people, and very soon made their acquaintance. The head of the household was a Methodist minister named J. L., and I found him to be a most impressive and interesting man. He had a way of suddenly turning to you when conversation was going on and saying that he had a message for you from the Lord[.] . . . There were also in the house two sisters named W., whose father, Dr. W., was a man of position and authority in the Methodist Church, with a great reputation for piety. . . .
>
> From the first I was profoundly impressed by the apparent holiness and devotedness of this household, and felt that they must have been brought there on purpose to help me onward in my earnest search for a realised oneness with Christ, a oneness which they seemed to have attained in a very marvellous degree.
>
> The thing which interested me at first was the remarkable way in which they seemed to understand the guidance of the Holy Spirit in all the little daily affairs of life. . . . I must say here that their way of looking continually, moment by moment, to the Lord for His Guidance, and their perfect certainty that He did indeed, according to His promise, direct their every step, seemed to invest them with an atmosphere of holiness and to surround them with the conscious presence of the Lord. . . . They seemed literally to live and move and have their being in God . . . hungering . . . to know the utmost possibilities of the life hid with Christ in God, [so that] it seemed [to me] that it ought to be almost like entering the very gates of Heaven to be in their presence, and I threw myself with intense eagerness into their teaching and their influence.
>
> No one could associate with them and not believe that they thought themselves special Divine favourites. They professed to be so minutely guided in life that I was very anxious to attain the same experience, so finally I got Miss W. to give me a sample of the way in which she was guided. She said it was like this: that when she was awakened in the morning her first conscious thought was to consecrate the day to the Lord, and to ask Him to guide her every step of the way throughout the whole day. She would then ask Him whether she was to get up or not; and very

---

1402 Compare the chapter "An Excerpt from 'A Warning Exhortation Against Pietsts, Quietists, and all Who in a Similar Manner have Deviated to a Natural and Spiritless Religion under the Guise of Spirituality,' by Wilhelmus á Brakel." Wilhelmus á Brakel describes and penetratingly warns against the pseudo-spirituality of the sort espoused by this Methodist minister which Hannah W. Smith esteemed so highly and adopted.

1403 Note that 1879 was by no means the first introduction of the Smiths to Clifton Springs or to the erotic Baptism doctrine; both Mr. and Mrs. Smith had learned and adopted the doctrine from Dr. Henry Foster years earlier. The fact that they still fellowshipped with him in 1879 shows that association with their mentor in spiritual eroticism was still acceptable to the family even after Mr. Smith's downfall in England for preaching the erotic Baptism.

1404 Germantown was in such close proximity to Clifton Springs that Hannah could state in a letter that she was staying in Clifton Springs in the summer of 1879 (see Letter to Anna, written from Clifton Springs on July 8, 1879, reproduced in the entry for September 16 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). It is not possible from the historical record to determine if Mrs. Smith wrote "Germantown" in her published book and "Clifton Springs" in her unpublished letter to make it more difficult for readers to associate the Methodist sexual predator whom she does not name with Dr. Henry Foster's Clifton Springs Sanitarium. It is also very possible that she simply frequented both the adjacent locations.

often, although it was apparently very important that she should get up, the Lord told her to stay in bed. Then, perhaps, in a few minutes the voice would order her to get up. Then she would proceed to get up. As she put on each article she asked the Lord whether she was to put it on, and very often the Lord would tell her to put on the right shoe and leave off the other; sometimes she was to put on one stocking and leave off the other; sometimes she was to put on both stockings and no shoes; and sometimes both shoes and no stockings; it was the same with all articles of dress. She also said that often during the day, when she was seated at work, the Lord would tell her to get up and go out of the room, and when she got out would tell her to come back. And often she would be told to move from one chair to another, or to go and stand on the front doorstep, or to do all sorts of erratic things. She said that the object of this was to make her pliable so that she would be ready to follow the guidance of the Lord on the instant. I immediately thought that I would like to live this way, so the next morning after this conversation I began the process, and it was with the greatest difficulty that I got dressed or downstairs to my duties, as the voice kept telling me all sorts of things. Then when I did get downstairs I could hardly get through my breakfast, for the voice would suggest, just as I would get a mouthful nearly into my mouth, that I must not take it. I spent the morning running about from one chair to another, going out to the steps and coming back again, and running from one room to the other, and even going so far as to take off my shoes and stockings, and then to put them on again without any apparent cause.

I kept this up until about twelve o'clock, and then . . . I said to myself . . . ["]I have just got the ideas from what Miss W. told me, and I am making it up all out of my own head," and I was forced sorrowfully to conclude that I had not fathomed the secret of Divine guidance yet.[1405] This did not, however, weaken my desire to know the inner depths of the experience of which I heard[.] . . .

In spite of all their evident holiness, I had been conscious all the while of something mysterious about the whole household, an intangible atmosphere of something wrong which seemed to fill the house, and to look out of the eyes of its inmates, and to be heard in the tones of their voices. There was nothing I could lay my hands upon, or could even formulate in my thoughts, and whenever the feeling forced itself upon me I blamed myself as being as yet too unspiritual fully to enter into their heights of spirituality and set myself more determinedly than ever to attain to their divine level. Believing, as they taught, that human reason must be laid aside in spiritual matters, and only the interior voice of the Spirit obeyed,[1406] I . . . tried to convice myself that I was in this way being uplifted more and more into the secret things of God's immediate presence.

I must confess it was all very fascinating. . . . in many respects their teaching was exceedingly valuable. And I did receive during the course of the summer a real revelation of God that has made my life to me a different thing ever since [that is, the Higher Life doctrine of sanctification in greater fulness]. . . . It was the continual habit of this strange household to refer everything to God. . . . Their one universal reply to everything was simple, the words, "Yes; but then there is God"; and no arguments or questionings could turn them from this by so much as a hair's-breadth.

As may be imagined, during my intercourse with them, because of all the unexplainable mystery accompanied by the apparent wonderful holiness that seemed to surround them, I often found myself in a good deal of spiritual perplexity, and, as I looked upon them as religious teachers deserving the highest confidence, I continually went to one or other of them with my difficulties, chiefly, however, to the oldest of the W. sisters, Miss Caroline W., who was a woman of great culture and intelligence and unusual spiritual power.[1407] I would pour out to her all my 1405 Neither, of course, had Miss W. discovered such a "secret," and close attention to the real Divine guidance in the Word of God would have kept both women from such unhesitating submission to the suggestions of their own sinful hearts and the openness to Satanic influence that went along with it.

---

1406 The truth is that neither fallen and corrupt human thinking nor the "interior voice" was the proper authority—the sole authority in spiritual matters, and all other matters it addresses, is the Bible (2 Timothy 3:16).

1407 Note that this is Mrs. Smith's description of this women even after she knew about the fleshly abominations in which she participated.

interior perplexities and difficulties and temptations, to which I must say she always listened very patiently, but when I would pause for some comforting or helpful reply, there would always ensue a moment or two of silence, and then she would always say in a tone that seemed utterly to conclude the matter, "Yes, that may all be true, but then, there is God." . . . [M]y most impassioned or despairing stories of my spiritual woes could never elicit anything more than this. "Yes, yes," she would say; "I know it all. But then, there is God." . . .

Towards the end of their stay, one night, a friend who had come to sit at their feet and I had gone to be in great perplexity, full of questioning as to how it could be that God would permit people who wanted to follow Him, and were trying to walk in His paths, to wander into error. We went to sleep in this perplexity, unable to see any light; but somehow, in the morning when we met, we turned to each other and said, in the sense that we had never said it before, the single word, "God!" and with that word came to us a recognition of the all sufficiency of God in a way that has never left us. . . . It would be impossible to put into words just what seemed to come to us that morning, but it certainly was a satisfying revelation of the all-sufficiency of God, just the bare God[1408] . . . for all our needs. . . . I shall never cease to feel real gratitude to this strange household for having brought me to this, although I very soon found out some dreadful things about them. . . .

One day . . . I received a telegram from Mrs. C. in Boston, begging me to come and see her at once on a matter of vital importance. The message was so urgent that I took a night train, and arrived there the next morning. Immediately Mrs. C. told me that she thought I ought to know the state of things in this household, and she had sent for me to tell me about it. She brought in a highly respectable woman doctor, who told me the following facts.

The doctor said that she had two very intimate friends in Boston, who were ladies of very good standing, and, in fact, one of them was at the head of a large school or college, and was considered an authority on education . . . and were, in fact, devoted Christians. They had become acquainted with Mr. L., the Methodist minister, who was the head of the mysterious household next door to me . . . and had seemed to find great spiritual uplifiting from his teachings. This doctor was at that time in charge of a hospital, and these ladies would often come to see her. She noticed that one of them seemed to be losing her spirits, and to be greatly depressed, with so far as she knew no apparent reason. She seemed to be on the verge all the time of saying something to the doctor which she appeared afraid to continue, and the doctor felt that her friend had a confidence to make to her which for some reason she was reluctant to make.

One night this friend came to stay all night at the hospital and slept in the room with the doctor. As she was standing by the looking-glass arranging her hair, the doctor noticed something peculiar in her appearance, and it flashed across her mind that her friend was in the family way. She explained, "Oh, darling, what is the matter?" and her friend burst into tears. Nothing more was said; the doctor was too shocked to speak; she would as soon have expected to find the Angel Gabriel in such a plight as her friend; and they spent the night both weeping, but saying nothing till towards the morning. Then her friend opened her heart and confided in the doctor. She told her that she and her companion had been greatly impressed by the teaching of this Mr. L., to whom they had been introduced by Miss ——, a religious teacher of a great deal of spirituality, living in Boston.[1409] They had both become greatly influenced by Mr. L's teaching, and gradually he had unfolded to them that it had been revealed to him that he was to be the father of a race of children that were to be born into the world as Christ was, and that the Lord had shown him that they themselves were to be the favoured mothers of these children. . . . Mr. L. . . . not only believed that he was Christ, but thought that he was destined to be the father of "Christ's children," who were to found a race that was to revolutionize the world. These children,

---

[1408] That is, the generic god of natural and pagan religion, associated for Mrs. Smith with a merely natural and unregenerate intellectual assent to various facts about Jesus Christ, not the true God of the regenerate, the Father, who has reconciled His people to Himself through the substitutionary sacrifice of His eternal Son Jesus Christ, and regenerated and justified them through the sole instrumentality of Spirit-produced faith.

[1409] For, truly, Boston was a hotbed of fanaticism, Faith Cure, Mind Cure, New Thought, and other wretched abominations at the time.

according to him, were to be begotten in a spiritual way, without bodily contact, but his practice did not bear out his assumption. . . . [H]e succeeded in completely deluding these ladies, and in carrying out his purposes, and this poor thing was now expecting to be the mother of one of those children. The agonies of mind that she had gone through could not be described. She dared not admit the idea that it was a delusion, for her whole spiritual life seemed to depend upon believing that she had been rightly guided; for if she could think that in the most solemn moments of consecration the Lord could allow her to be so deceived, she would feel that she could never trust Him again.[1410] She clung with a deathlike grip to the belief that it was Divine guidance, and that she was greatly favoured to be allowed to be the mother of one of these wonderful children. How to get through the earthly part of it, however, was the great difficulty. But her doctor friend stepped in to the rescue; she took a house out of the city, brought her friend there, took care of her until the time came, carried her safely through her confinement and kept the facts hidden from everybody. The lady told her mother, who had been anxious about her health, that she was broken down by so much teaching, and was going to the country for a complete rest, and there was no exposure.

Mr. L. was a constant visitor at the house, as the doctor had not the heart to plunge her friend into the abyss of despair which would have been her portion if she had lost faith in him. The doctor did not like his ways at all, and herself believed that it was pure human lust. However, the thing was carried through; the doctor adopted the baby, and her friend went back to her usual avocations. She never lost her [faith in Mr. L.] during my knowledge of her. Mr. L. married the other lady, the companion who had shared in her delusion, and, soon after the birth of the baby the mother went to live with him and his wife, and for many years they formed one household.

The dear sister who had lent Mr. L. the house . . . a wealthy widow . . . came so much under his influence . . . [that] she was tempted to go away with him. . . . [He] had almost succeeded in persuading her to put all her private property into his hands, and go and live with him. We at once, in his presence, told her the whole story as we had heard it, and while he acknowledged the facts, he stuck to his position that he was commissioned of the Lord to bring forth these children, and that they were not begotten according to any natural process. We succeeded, however, in frightening him so much as to our revelations that might be made, that he himself told our friend he did not believe she was called to go with him[.] . . . How many poor souls were beguiled during that strange summer I do not know.

Of course, from that time my intercourse with these dear misguided Christians[1411] ceased, but about a year after I received a very impressive and solemn note from one of them saying that the way was still open for me to return to the Lord if I would give up my self-will and consent to be guided as the Lord led. . . . Since then, I have never seen nor heard about them. . . .

[Nonetheless, from Mr. L and his household] I did discover one truth, more important to Christians than any warnings about dangers in this world . . . and that truth was God. . . . [In] the summer . . . [of] 1879 . . . when the L. household lived next door to me[,] The Lord . . . t[aught] me very blessed lessons about the interior life[.] . . . He [had] sent some of His children to spend the summer in a house [next door].[1412] One of them especially [was] helpful to me. She is what I call a "mystic"—one of those who know the Spirit's voice, and who walk alone with God. . . . At last I begin to understand what this means, and I believe I am beginning to live it. . . . Definitely and forever I consent now to die as to any recognized self-life. It shall be henceforth no more I, but Christ. . . . [I]n spite of . . . [their] frightful fanaticism . . . [which made me question if I ought to be] content to know but little of the inward voice . . . [since] they have tried so faithfully to find it, and have been deluded . . . [yet] I know the truth about it must exist[,] . . . [and] I had gained 1410 Note that Robert Pearsall Smith came to exactly this conclusion—when he rejected the erotic Spirit baptism at the heart of his Higher Life ministry, he also rejected Christianity for agnosticism and Buddhism.

---

1411 For, Hannah W. Smith believed, they were indeed Christians, despite such abominable heresies and evil works—since they were the human instruments through which she came into her most fundamental knowledge of spirituality and of the Higher Life, how could they be otherwise?

1412 That is, Mrs. Smith believed that these deluded fanatics and filthy fornicators were sent by God to teach her spiritual truth.

> from the summer's experience a knowledge of God . . that . . . brought me into a peaceful resting in Him that has never been seriously disturbed since. . . . It may seem strange that such an acquaintance with God could have come to me out of such a hotbed of fanaticism, but there is the fact, and there is no getting around it. Whatever else these dear deluded fanatics may have been or have done they did live in the presence of God in a most unusual sense[.][1413] . . . "Pure religion," says Fénelon, "resides in the will alone."[1414] And again, "the will to love God is the whole of religion." I . . . am thankful beyond words that . . . I was brought at last to see that a quiet stedfast holding of the human will to the will of God and a peaceful resting in His love and care is of . . . great[est] value[1415] in the religious life.[1416]

Thus, Hannah Whitall Smith learned what she considered her greatest spiritual discovery, not from the study of the Scriptures, which would have prevented her from adopting such a sort of pagan spirituality, but from the demonic revelations of a Methodist minister who was a sexual predator, to whose ideas she was open because of her background in Quaker and Romanist mysticism, Methodist fanaticism, and her expectation of Quaker revelations from the Inner Voice.

The Methodist predator from whom Mrs. Smith made her most fundamental discovery of the spiritual life also believed in the doctrine, developed out of medieval and counter-Reformation Roman Catholic mysticism, that Spirit baptism brought physical sexual thrills. Visiting "the lady who had been largely instrumental in starting people . . . on the career which led them to L. [the Methodist sexual predator mentioned above]," Hannah W. Smith narrated the following:

> I found her to be a quiet refined lady rather past middle age, evidently very intelligent and a Christian worker who was highly esteemed by all who knew her. I told her what I knew about the L. household [the Methodist minister and sexual predator]. . . . She said . . . that the Lord's dealings were often very mysterious and such as the natural man could not understand, but that what God had pronouced clean no one might dare to call unclean, and that these dear saints had 1413 Mrs. Smith affirmed that they lived in the presence of God in an unusual sense. However, the true God describes people like them in words such as: "They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate" (Titus 1:16). Passages such as the following provide Jehovah's view of such persons:

---

> For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. . . . Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh . . . [and] speak evil of those things which they know not: but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves. Woe unto them! for they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished in the gainsaying of Core. These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever. (Jude 4, 8-13)

Thus, the only god that these fanatics could be unusually in the presence of was the god of this world, Satan, the source of their deluded Higher Life spirituality.

1414 Robert P. Smith also cited this maxim of Fénelon at the Brighton Convention (pg. 140, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875).

1415 That is, Mrs. Smith learned, in the most fundamental way, the tremendous value of the natural and pagan "spirituality" of the Roman Catholic mysticism and quietism of Fénelon from these Methodist fornicators and fanatics; such was the spirituality of Mrs. Smith's Higher Life.

1416 Pgs. 182-193, 259, 267-270, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

been most manifestly led by Him. . . . [S]he had been led into these courses and . . . she could do nothing but obey[.] . . . During the course of my conversation with this lady she said: "You may think it strange, Mrs. Smith, but I speak from experience; there have been times when, in order to help my friends to receive the Baptism of the Holy Spirit, I have been distinctly led of the Lord to have them get into bed with me and lie back to back without any nightgown between. And," she added, "it has always brought them to the conscious Baptism." . . . [S]he has been the means of leading a great many young women into the same line of things.

Another friend of mine . . . whom I had told about Dr. R., received while I was talking to her, what she believed was the Baptism, and began to experience right there thrills of rapture from head to foot, which completely carried her away. . . . [S]he [came] to spend most of her time lying on the sofa trying to induce [the thrills] to come. She also . . . felt it her duty to kiss several men, with the idea that through that means God would bestow either great blessings upon them or greater blessings upon herself. She had felt led to kiss Mr. L. [the Methodist sexual predator]. . . . [Indeed,] a great many saintly women . . . one after another . . . would in some mysterious way begin to "feel led" to give him a kiss . . . the called for kiss bestowed . . . floods of joy and peace would fill their souls.[1417] . . . She was impressed with the idea that through this performance God would bestow the Baptism of the Spirit upon the receipient of her kisses. . . . [She] was so good and pure minded that we all called her "Saint Sarah[.]" . . . At one of our meetings at Brighton [when Mr. and Mrs. Smith were preaching the Higher Life] . . . there was a great deal of talk about the Baptism of the Spirit, and many souls were hungering for it[.] . . . My friend, "Saint Sarah"[1418] . . . confided to me that she felt led to kiss . . . a refined and cultured gentleman . . . herself as a means of imparting to him the Baptism of the Holy Ghost. . . . She was in the greatest trouble about it . . . and she felt sure that she would be making herself ridiculous. . . . Days went on and she became really ill with the conflict; and at last, seeing that there was no way out of it[1419] but for her to do it, I said, "It won't hurt; I'll explain it to him. So just go and kiss him and be done with it!" My taking of it in this way greatly relieved her mind. I told our host what she wanted to do, and he said he wouldn't object in the least . . . she was able to perform what she thought was her religious duty. This kiss was given[.] . . . In two or three other instances the same process was repeated [with other men]. . . .

This dear Saint was so enmoured of what she called "The Touch of God," that she spent a large part of her time seeking for it and enjoying it, until it finally became a sort of possession . . . a very good Christian lady . . . said . . . [she] was possessed of the devil. . . . I made up my mind that she must be freed from this somehow, so I . . . went to the woman who had plunged her into the trouble [by stating "Saint Sarah" was demon possessed] and told her the dreadful effects of her

---

1417 Hannah herself recounts:

> One day when I was alone reading my Bible and praying for guidance . . . suddenly, in the moment of a most solemn act of consecration to God, a voice, that seemed to be entirely distinct from my own personality, said plainly, "If you want to be entirely consecrated to God, you must kiss Mr. L." . . . There seemed nothing for me to do but to surrender my will in the matter and to say, "Yes, Lord, if it is Thy will, repulsive as it is, I will do even this!" Perfect peace at once filled my heart[.] (pgs. 247-248, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey. Italics in original).

However, she never ended up kissing him, because when "the voice spoke again, 'Now you must do it,'" Mr. L. told her not to (pg. 248, ibid.). However, she narrates:

> I went to my dressmaker . . . an inward Voice told me I . . . must kiss the dressmaker. . . . I dared not refuse, and said to the dressmaker, "The Lord tells me to kiss you," and proceeded to bestow a kiss upon her cheek. I must say the whole thing fell very flat. The poor woman coloured crimson with embarrassment, and I shared her embarrassment. . . . She hurried to finish her fitting and I hurried to leave the house, thankful to get alone where I could endure my mortification in silence. (pgs. 249-250, ibid.)

1418 Compare the commentary by this Quaker woman preacher on the book of Joshua, from which the typical Higher Life conclusions are drawn: The Fulness of Blessing; or, The Gospel of Christ, as Illustrated from the Book of Joshua, Sarah F. Smiley. London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1876. In discussing the post-conversion Baptism of the Spirit, she condemned the "tendency to ignore the importance of the body, [which] proceeds from a general lack of insight into the Scriptural philosophy of nature and of spirit" (pg. 89).

1419 Mrs. Smith at first tried to get her to not kiss the man.

former words, and said to her, "And now you must give me in writing the assurance that the devil has gone out of her," and I bullied her into doing it. I then went back to my friend armed with this assurance, and said to her: "Now the devil has gone out of thee, and here is the proof." She believed it, and from that moment began to recover, and has since lived a peaceful and normal Christian life.[1420]

Mrs. Smith narrates other similar and awful instances of people who were seeking Spirit baptism and the Higher Life of entire sanctification:

[Another] young woman . . . had been seeking the Baptism of the Spirit as a result of the fervent preaching of a Methodist minister in the town where she lived, and had found great spiritual help from her conversations with him. They found, she said, that when they were together they seemed to feel an especial nearness to the Lord, and the closer they sat together the more they felt it. They constantly, when in one another's company, had wonderful waves of divine thrills going through them, especially when there was any personal contact, which thrills the preacher told her were the conscious Baptism of the Holy Spirit for which she was seeking. Of course, if this was the case, the more of these waves of delicious thrills they had the more truly filled with the Spirit they were, and they had consequently sought every opportunity of being together, and had encouraged a closer and closer personal contact, never dreaming of evil, until at last she found herself in the midst of a criminal connection with the preacher who was already a married man. . . .

[A] dear beloved saint . . . who had given up everything in life to follow the Lord, and who was considered by everybody who knew her to be one of the saints of the earth . . . had all the Quaker scruples with regard to dress, and looked as she walked about like the embodiement of ascetic piety. I greatly revered her and sat at her feet to be taught. . . . [A] friend [and I] . . . asked her to tell us her last experience. She said that . . . she had told the Lord that she wanted to make Him some New Year's gift, and that as she had given Him everything that she possessed and everything she was, she could not think of anything new to give. Then, she said, the Lord told her that there was one thing, and that was her virginity, and that He would send a man whom she must be willing to receive in His name and surrender herself to Him. She told us that she had said, "Thy will be done," and was now awaiting the ringing of the bell and the advent of the promised man . . . whether the man came or not, I do not know. I have heard, however, that at one of the camp meeting grounds, where she . . . held meetings, the authorities had been obliged to close her meetings on account of the dangerous tendency of her teaching.[1421]

The heresy that Spirit baptism was associated with physical sexual thrills was thus widespread in the religious background of Hannah and Robert Smith, and it is thus not surprising that they both adopted it.[1422]

1420 Pgs. 194-202, 246-248, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

1421 Pgs. 196-197, 203-205, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

1422 Higher Life perfectionism, antinomianism, continuationism, and the rejection of sola Scriptura, are all related concepts which easily relate the one to the other. Lyman Atwater explains:

[M]en who esteem themselves perfect are apt to make themselves, their own subjective exercises, experiences, judgments, desires, and appetites, the measure and standard of perfection; to make these the rule and measure of rectitude, rather than God's word; or rather to construe them as God's voice and word, speaking in and through them. They have often maintained that as Christ was living within them, their desires, and words and deeds were Christ's. This, of course, is the extreme of fanatical and blasphemous Antinomian pride and licentiousness. . . . [T]here are [grave dangers in] making our subjective feelings the standard of truth and holiness . . . [as] often develops in simple mysticism, in which the feeling of the subject, devout and elevated though it be, still becomes a law unto itself, and sets its own impulses and bewilderments above the law and the testimony. Against all this we cannot too sedulously guard. . . . [T]he Antinomian feature of [the Higher Life perfectionism] has strong logical and practical affinities for licentiousness[.] . . . Nor do we think it wrong or uncharitable in this connection to refer to the career of Mr. Pearsall Smith, who has been so conspicuous in Higher Life leadership. (pgs. 418-419, "The Higher Life and Christian Perfection," Lyman H. Atwater. The Presbyterian Quarterly and Princeton Review (July 1877) 389-419)

Robert maintained and propogated the erotic Baptism heresy throughout his time as a preacher of the Higher Life—his promulgation of his beloved mystical abomination ended only with his fall because of scandal associated with it—while he influenced many others to adopt and practice it as a key aspect of the Higher Life theology.[1423] For example, "Miss Bonnicastle sp[oke] on this subject . . . [of] conscious union of the believer and Christ as the Heavenly Bridegroom . . . at the Oxford Ladies meetings . . . [which] quite shocked a good many."[1424] In "the Christ-life," another minister proclaimed, one is to "let the thrill . . . surge and thrill through all your being."[1425] Thus, the doctrine of the sexual Baptism as a key portion of the Higher Life experience was proclaimed publicly at the Oxford Convention, that key precursor to the Keswick Conventions. Indeed, many of Robert and Hannah W. Smith's Higher Life "evangelical and especially their Quaker friends . . . condoned . . . [Robert's] adventures with his feminine disciples."[1426] Nonetheless, after convincing many to adopt the heresy, Robert eventually rejected erotic bride mysticism, and "in rejecting what he himself had experienced, he could not help turning his back on all religion,"[1427] so that he turned away from his profession of Christianity to agnosticism,[1428] and then moved from [1423] Leading Pentecostal historians connect the theory of erotic Spirit baptism with the rise of their doctrine of speaking in tongues as the physical mark of Spirit baptism. For example, Donald W. Dayton, in his essay "From 'Christian Perfection' to the 'Baptism of the Holy Ghost,' which was recognized as the prizewinning submission in its category from the Society for Pentecostal Studies in 1973, references the description of Hannah and Robert P. Smith's doctrine of physical sexual thrills in Spirit baptism in Religious Fanaticism: Extracts from the Papers of Hannah Whitall Smith, ed. Ray Strachey, and writes: "It is easy to see how the gift of tongues would fulfill this longing" (pg. 51, Aspects of Pentecostal-Charismatic Origins, ed. Vinson Synan; Dayton's essay covers pgs. 39-54). Melvin E. Dieter also notes the background to Pentecostal tongues in the erotic Spirit baptism of Robert and Hannah W. Smith, along with "the inherited . . . tendencies of a perfectionist movement and the influence of the spiritual raptures in the experiences of the Quietists and other Catholic mystics who had been widely accepted as part of the true holiness movement" (pg. 64, "Wesleyan-Holiness Aspects of Pentecostal Origins: As Mediated through the Nineteenth-Century Holiness Revival," Melvin E. Dieter, pgs. 55-80 in Aspects of Pentecostal-Charismatic Origins, ed. Synan). The doctrine of thrills in Spirit baptism could easily be passed down by the Higher Life and Faith or Mind Cure movement into Pentecostalism through innumerable continuationists such as Dr. Henry Foster and Robert P. Smith.

---

[1424] Letter to a Friend, February 12, 1876, reproduced in the entry for July 30 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1425] Pg. 158, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.

[1426] Pg. 132, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith. Logan speaks of the time when his sister was married in Oxford: "[T]o these festivities my parents invited their [Higher Life] evangelical and especially their Quaker friends, who most of them had condoned, if they had not forgotten, the scandal of my father's adventures with his feminine disciples."

[1427] Letter to Carrie, February 13, 1877, reproduced in the entry for August 12 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1428] Hannah wrote to her daughter Mary: "I have watched the growth and development of agnosticism in your father[.] . . . Your father gave in to the doubt, and has lost at last all sense of any perception of God" agnosticism to Buddhism. Robert could not retain his profession of Christianity without his erotic bride mysticism. Robert testified at the Oxford Convention: "There has been no period since . . . [my] baptism of the Spirit . . . when God has not been more or less in my consciousness as the living Being unto Whom I looked."[1429] At the time of his Baptism a Power came to be present with him that always accompanied him afterwards, a Power that directed all his actions as a minister of the Higher Life and was at the heart of his spiritual experience. If his erotic Baptism was a delusion, so was all of his Christianity, and agnosticism appeared to him to be a necessary consequence. The possibility that he was possessed by demons through his erotic Baptism, demons that then directed him in his subsequent Higher Life ministry, does not seem to have been given serious consideration. Hannah also eventually came to reject erotic bride mysticism later in her life[1430] after some time propogating it near the years of the zenith of her and her husband's work as Higher Life agitators.

Describing the incident that led to Robert P. Smith's withdrawal from public work shortly before the first Keswick convention, a headline in the Brighton Weekly stated: "Famous Evangelist Found in Bedroom of Adoring Female Follower."[1431] In the bedroom of his disciple, Miss Hattie Hamilton, Mr. Smith had explained to her the abhorrant doctrine he had learned in 1871 while institutionalized, on account of a total nervous breakdown he had suffered,[1432] in a hydropathic and homeopathic sanatorium from the head of the facility, Dr. Henry Foster, that the baptism of the Holy Ghost was (Letter to Mary, January 27, 1883, reproduced in the entries for December 8-9 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter), and noted: "His unbelief is most contagious. . . . He has been pouring floods of agnosticism upon me" (Letter to Daughter, February 7, 1883, reproduced in the entry for December 10 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

---

[1429] Pg. 253, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.

[1430] Hannah eventually concluded that "it seems impossible that anything can be the truth of God which is not fit to be publicly proclaimed" (Letter to a Friend, February 12, 1876, reproduced in the entry for July 30 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). Note, however, that promulgation of the physical thrills doctrine and association with its other advocates continued for the Pearsall Smiths far after the time of the composition of this letter, which was more a piece of revisionist history and apologetic defense of Robert P. Smith than actual fact. Hannah not only affirmed in this letter that "it seems impossible that anything can be the truth of God which is not fit to be publicly proclaimed," but also that "I don't have to tell you I am sure that my dear husband is entirely innocent of the vile charges against him," a statement which was simply false, and which casts doubt upon her repudiation of the erotic Baptism doctrine.

[1431] pg. 82, The Secret Life of Hannah Whitall Smith, by Marie Henry. The woman, Miss Hattie Hamilton, stated that Robert P. Smith tried to commit adultery with her in her bedroom, but he denied that he had sought to do so.

[1432] Robert, recounting his and his family's "fearful curse of our inheritance of NERVES" in a letter to his daughter Mary, concluded: "be very distrustful of our own intellectual and moral conclusions" (pgs. 159-160, Remarkable Relations, Barbara Strachey). His conclusion that his own intellect and morals were untrustworthy appears to be most sound.

accompanied by physical sexual thrills because of the esoteric union of Christ with His people as Bridegroom and Bride, as described in the Song of Solomon.[1433] Robert Smith's explanation of the erotic Baptism doctrine in one bedroom too many brought about the rapid fall of his previously rising star in the Higher Life movement.

Dr. Foster, while "a lifelong Methodist," was "interdenominational" in his religious spirit.[1434] Thus:

> Dr. Foster insisted upon . . . [the] chapel [at his sanitarium] . . . be[ing] purely interdenominational spirit and life. . . . He established the custom that the Holy Sacrament should be administered every month, the form for one month being that used by Episcopalians and Methodists, and alternating the next time with the form observed by Presbyterians and others. [People] counted one Sabbath morning when . . . the kneeling form [was administered, and] twenty-six religious bodies [were] represented by those partaking. Following the public service the Chaplain always administered the rite privately in their rooms to those requesting it.[1435]

Indeed, Foster's sanatarium "ha[d] always been noted for its prevailing fairness and charity towards different types of religious belief, [so that] all grades from the highest ritualism to the simplicity of the society of Friends, have felt perfectly at home. . . . [F]requently . . . Roman Catholic Priests and Bishops . . . seemed to appreciate the place and enjoy it."[1436] Nobody was warned about his false religion, whether the Catholic sacramental and ritualistic false gospel or the rejection of justification by faith alone based on the imputed righteousness of Christ alone taught by the Quakers. Foster "was never happier than when sharing or promoting interdenominational fellowship."[1437] Indeed:

> All the churches of the village received from [Mr. Foster] substantial help at various times. . . . When the Roman Catholics erected their new Church edifice in 1895, the Doctor made a substantial contribution, and rented a pew in it each year thereafter, which custom is continued to the present. Annual offerings were made by him to all the Protestant churches and that custom is continued to the present.[1438]

Mr. Foster loved ecumenical fellowship with false teachers of all sorts.

Dr. Foster's religious ecumenicalism extended to an ecumenicalism of healing praxis:

1433 Cf. pgs. 506-508, Warfield, Perfectionism, vol. 2. Meneghel, "Becoming a 'Heretic,'" 227-30.

1434 Pg. 26, Life of Henry Foster, M. D., Founder Clifton Springs Sanitarium, Samuel Adams Hawley. Clifton Springs, NY: Sanatarium Board of Trustees, 1921.

1435 Pg. 98, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley. Administering the elements of the Lord's Supper kneeling supports the Roman Catholic idea that the bread changes into God and is an error, as is giving it to people in private. The Biblical mandate for unity is that "all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment" (1 Corinthians 1:10). Such unity is an essential aspect of the Scriptural celebration of the Supper (1 Corinthians 11:18-21; 10:17), but it is impossible among twenty-six denominations with different doctrines and practices—indeed, it is impossible outside the context of an individual true church.

1436 Pgs. 146-147, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

1437 Pg. 157, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

1438 Pg. 75, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

> "Allopathy," "Water Cure," "Homeopathy," "Mind Cure," "Faith Cure," were to him members of a group in the therapeutic family. He . . . look[ed] for the higher unity, treating each as a segment in the full circle . . . allopathy, homeopathy, hydrotherapy, mental therapy, and the prayer of faith . . . belong[ed] to one great healing family.[1439]

Thus, Foster believed in homeopathy, although it was obviously demonic in its origin and practice,[1440] in hydropathy, although it was intimately associated with spiritualism and demonism,[1441] and in Mind Cure—which was, indeed, associated with Faith Cure—although it was likewise essentially a form of pagan and demonic medicine based upon untestable mystical energies.[1442] The nineteenth century Mind and Faith Cure movements, which were part of the warp and woof of the Keswick theology and at the root of the Pentecostal and charismatic movement, developed out of a common background in mesmerism, vitalism, homeopathy, and other pagan and demonic ideas, and cannot be separated into distinct and unrelated phenomena.[1443] Thus, despite its

---

[1439] Pgs. 26, 157, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

[1440] See pgs. 263-314, Can You Trust Your Doctor? The Complete Guide to New Age Medicine and Its Threat to Your Family, John Ankerberg & John Weldon. Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, 1991; "The New Age in Health Care," David Cloud (Fundamental Baptist Information Service, November 3, 2008); elec. acc. Fundamental Baptist CD-ROM Library.

[1441] Historians generally recognize the association between hydropathy or Water Cure and spiritualism:

> In water cure, Spiritualists found a medical system in sympathy with their reform orientation. Also called hydropathy, water cure was a therapeutic approach imported from Europe in 1843 that relied on the internal consumption and external application of cold water for the prevention and cure of all diseases. Spiritualists . . . embraced water cure because of its appeal to the laws of nature embodied in each human being as the source of healing and because of the reform principles of its leaders. Hydropathy relied on the natural curative tendencies of the individual rather than on intervention by an authoritative medical expert. . . . Water cure establishments provided a fertile environment for the development of many of the ideas advocated by Spiritualist health reformers. (pg. 154, Radical Spirits: Spiritualism and Women's Rights in Nineteenth-Century America, Ann Braude. 2nd ed.)

Thus, "[a]long with homeopathy and animal magnetism, hydropathy was a favorite cure among the Spiritualists" (pg. 116, Plato's Ghost: Spiritualism in the American Renaissance, Cathy Gutierrez).

Of course, water itself is something God made, and some people who went to Water Cures just liked to get wet, while others were were simply ignorant or dupes of quacks; not all were intentional devotees of Satan.

[1442] Dr. Foster noted: "Spiritualism had its birth just north of us" (pg. 33, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley).

[1443] As the Mind Cure and homeopathy, which developed from mesmerism and vitalism, undergirds the Faith Cure in men like the homeopathic doctors Dr. Foster and Dr. Cullis, who were themselves roots of the Higher Life and Faith Cure doctrines of people like William Boardman and Hannah and Robert Pearsall Smith, so Mary Baker Eddy's Christian Science developed from the "mind-cure . . . homeopathy . . . mesmerism . . . and the magnetic doctor, Mr. P. P. Quimby," from whom "she had learned her system." "Quimby was . . . the founder of the whole school of Mental-Healers which . . . flourished in America through the . . . half-century [of the late 1900s]" (pgs. 272-274, Counterfeit Miracles, Warfield). The Mind Cure involved one convincing himself he was not really sick, but perfectly healthy, and believing it was so, because of a healing Power; the Faith Cure likewise involved one convincing himself that he was not really sick, but pefectly healthy, and believing it was so, because of a healing Power. The Faith and Mind Cures were by no means two separated and unrelated phenomena, but were the same fundamental error and two names or emphases of one and the same movement.

demonic origin, at Foster's sanitarium "[t]he prevailing method of administering medicines was homeopathic."[1444] Dr. Foster "became a hydropathic practitioner, then he saw in homeopathy special adaptation to chronic cases, then he awoke to the large realm of mental therapy." He "was profoundly impressed with the effect of mind over matter. The relation of the mind or the spirit to disease, he concluded, was a subject of prime importance. . . . [T]his led to his seeking for a new place where he could establish his practice and work out his ideas unmolested," that is, his sanitarium, where "he came with a protest and also with a purpose. . . . his highest thought was in relation to the effect of the mind over the body in disease.[1445] Discovery of the power of Mind Cure was "the greatest event in his life."[1446] Thus, Dr. Foster taught the doctrine of Mary Baker Eddy's cult of "Christian Science," which "aligns itself with . . . pantheistic idea[s] . . . [and teaches that] [s]in is like sickness and death, and these are errors of the mind and can therefore be completely overcome by 'mind cure,'" so that "thoughts are things, thoughts are forces, and therefore as a man thinks, so is he."[1447] Dr. Foster, as an important part of the basis for the later Keswick healing theology, combined Mind and Faith Cure, saying:

> Take this law and power of faith, and take the law of the influence of mind over the body, and put them together and see what you get. You get something that will work . . . It was the acceptance of this truth that decided me to try and establish a house where these truths . . . the power of the mind over the body, and the salutary effects of a constant religious faith upon the sick . . . should be enforced.[1448]

Foster "was a firm believer in the effect of mind over matter—over disease. . . . [This belief] pervaded the whole institution. . . . Whatever good there is in Christian Science [the cult of Mary B. Eddy], in the Emmanuel Movement, and in modern faith healing he brought to bear in his therapeutics[.]"[1449] Thus, "prayer to God was a force in nature, as real as the law of gravitation,"[1450] rather than simply a petitioning of that God who was above nature and does, in accordance with His will, intervene in nature. In this way,

---

For more information see, e. g., James Monroe Buckley, Faith-Healing, Christian Science and Kindred Phenomena (New York: The Century Co., 1898); Paul G. Chappell, "The Divine Healing Movement in America" (Ph. D. diss., Drew University, 1983); Heather D. Curtis, "'The Lord for the Body': Pain, Suffering and the Practice of Divine Healing in Late-Nineteenth-Century American Protestantism." (Th. D. diss., Harvard University, 2005).

1444 Pg. 57, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley. Foster's brother "Dr. Hubbard became an avowed and pronounced homeopathist," and, naturally, Foster had "intimate association with his brother, Dr. Hubbard" (pgs. 17-18, ibid.).

1445 Pgs. 169-170, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

1446 Pg. 169, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

1447 Pg. 161, Reformed Dogmatics, Volume 4: Holy Spirit, Church, and New Creation, Herman Bavinck.

1448 Pgs. 23-25, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

1449 Pgs. 174-175, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

1450 Pg. 90, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

practicing "[m]ental hygiene and mental therapy . . . as well as the great therapeutic value of religious faith . . . the 'Emmanuel Movement' at Boston, of which so much has been said with its slogan 'Religion and Medicine,' was anticipated by Henry Foster."[1451] Although the Bible taught that much of Dr. Foster's practice was demonic in origin, his practices were confirmed to him by a vision. He stated:

> I presented my whole life again to God; the entire interests of the Sanitarium, and my relations with it. While thus contemplating the work, the Holy Spirit came upon me, filling me with His presence, and I saw what seemed to be a rainbow. The base of it was there on [a] mountain inclosing me; it went up to the mercy seat; the other base came down and rested here in Clifton Springs, over the house [sanitarium]. . . . I looked at it, and I saw there were streams going up, and then there were streams going down, and resting upon me. I was re-energized, and so much so that I became astonished . . . that settled me, strengthened me, proved to me that the teaching was from God, and from God alone[.][1452]

Surely such a vision was sufficient proof that his pagan and demonic philosophies and practices were acceptable to God.

As a result of Foster's vision, received at the time of his "pentecostal baptism of the Holy Spirit"—physical sexual thrills because of erotic bride mysticism—he founded his Water Cure:

> [He] saw that his pentecost was not for its own sake, but was given to prepare him for such a work. He prayed, and light came. He had a vision of the institution God would give him,—just as definite a vision as Moses had of the Tabernacle in the Mount; and as Moses was to make all things according to the pattern showed him in the Mount, so God had in vision outlined the work he was to do, and he must follow the pattern.[1453]

When Mr. Foster experienced his "real baptism of the Holy Spirit and of power" he also gained "a vision like Paul's when he was caught up into Paradise, and heard unspeakable words, a call and a commission like that of the prophet Jeremiah, or of Isaiah in the temple—an imperative call when his whole soul was filled and thrilled," and in this manner the spirit world led him to "the beginnings of the Sanitarium and of this pentecostal baptism" that was both its its erotic origination and an element of its religious proclamation.[1454] At his hydropathic and homeopathic healing house, he sought to bring especially "Christian workers, such as clergymen, teachers, and missionaries who are peculiarly liable to physical and nervous breakdown . . . [that they might] come to his institution and remain long enough for a cure."[1455] Consequently, "at least seventy or eighty thousand" patients came to the sanitarium, including "presidents of colleges, professors, lawyers, judges, ministers, bishops, all classes of men, literary men and 1451 Pgs. 22-26, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

---

1452 Pgs. 54-56, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley. Foster stated that his vision "was a mental thing, of course, but it was a reality to me" (pg. 55, ibid.)

1453 Pg. 27, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley; see pg. 33.

1454 Pgs. 18-21, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

1455 Pg. 27, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

literary women, some of the most renowned in the land. There have been [there] thousands of the foremost cultivated men and women of America, and some from other lands," so that a vast "spiritual influence," more, in the mind of some, than from "any institution" else, went out to influence the "intellectual and moral" climate of America,[1456] and, indeed, the world, as the sanitarium "bec[a]me a center of missionary interest and activity. Dr. Foster's invitation to foreign Missionaries of all Mission Boards to come to the Sanitarium for needed rest and treatment, and his concessions as to cost . . . brought hundreds of them."[1457] Note the Pearsall Smiths alone, but other Keswick leaders, such as A. T. Pierson, could praise "Dr. Henry Foster, of Clifton Springs, N. Y.[,]" for "all who came in contact with him bear testimony to the elevating effect of his spirituality of life" and his "benevolence . . . [to] the cause of missions." After all, "for some years the International Missionary Union . . . held . . . [at] Clifton Springs . . . its annual sessions."[1458] Many came, and, like Robert and Hannah Smith, also left with both Dr. Foster's love for Faith and Mind Cure and his vile doctrine of physical bridal-union in mystical Spirit baptism.

Hannah W. Smith chronicled Dr. Foster's communication of his views to herself and another lady as follows:

> Never shall I forget that interview. He began by telling us that "The Baptism of the Holy Spirit" was a physical thing, felt by deligthful thrills going through you from head to foot . . . and that this had been revealed to him in the following manner. He had been praying to the Lord to give him the Baptism . . . and he found that whenever he prayed especially earnestly he had physical thrills which he had thought belonged to earthly passions. He blamed himself exceedingly for this, and thought what a sensual man he must be, that in his most sacred moments such feelings should come. . . . One day . . . an inward voice seemed to say "These sensations you so much condemn are really the divine touch of the Holy Spirit in your body." . . . Immediately, he said, he began to receive them with thankfulness and the result was that they had become so continuous that there was scarcely a moment in his life without them. . . . My friend and I had not dared to say a word while this revelation was being made to us, and when Dr. Foster left us we sat for a long while in dumbfounded silence.[1459]

Hannah Whitall Smith described how their family adopted Mr. Foster's abominable doctrine and communicated it to others:

> I was seeking to know all that could be known of the "life hid with Christ in God," and was hungering and thirsting after an expression of entire consecration and perfect trust. . . . I had also a very mystical side to my nature which longed for direct revelations from God . . . and for many years I sought in every direction to find a satisfaction for this craving. . . . The beginning of it was was in the year 1871 or '72, when my husband needed a course of treatment for a nervous

---

1456 Pgs. 140-141, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

1457 Pg. 81, Life of Henry Foster, Hawley.

1458 Pgs. 230-231, The Modern Mission Century Viewed as a Cycle of Divine Working, Arthur T. Pierson. New York, NY: Baker & Taylor Co., 1901. The closer the contact, the higher the elevation, no doubt.

1459 Pgs. 34-35, Remarkable Relations, Barbara Strachey. Strachey's book supplies ample difficult to obtain original source material.

breakdown. We took our family to a Hydropathic Sanatorium in New York State, and we stayed there for three or four months. . . . A very dear friend of mine was staying in the Sanatorium at the same time; and as we were both hungering and thirsting to know the deep things of God, we very often had long conversations about it. One day she said to me, "Hannah, I believe that Dr. [Henry Foster] knows some secrets of the divine life that thee and I ought to know: he has hinted as much to me when he has been seeing me about my health. Wouldn't thee like to have him tell us?" Of course I agreed to this with all my heart, and she decided to ask him. When I next saw her she said she had asked him, and he had told her that he would ask the Lord whether he was to reveal the secret to us or not. A few days later he told my friend that he had received permission from the Lord to tell us the secret, and he fixed a time when were were to meet to hear it. . . . Never shall I forget that interview. He began by telling us that the Baptism of the Holy Spirit was a physical thing, felt by delightful thrills going through you from head to foot, and that no one could really know what the Baptism of the Spirit was who did not experience these thrills. He said that this had been revealed to him in the following manner. He had been praying the Lord to give him the Baptism of the Holy Spirit, and he found that whenever he prayed especially earnestly he had physical thrills which he thought belonged to earthly passions. He blamed himself exceedingly for this, and thought what a sensual man he must be that in his most sacred moments such feelings should come. By fasting and prayer he would get deliverance, as he thought, and would then begin to pray again for the Baptism of the Holy Spirit, but invariably, after a short time of prayer, the sensations would return, and the same process of fasting and prayer would have to be gone through. As this happened over and over he was at last almost in despair. One day, however, when, during an earnest season of prayer, these sensations were particularly strong, an inward voice seemed to say, "These sensations which you so much condemn are really the divine touch of the Holy Spirit in your body." He said it was very hard for him to believe this, but it seemed to come with such divine authority that he dared not reject it. He asked specially for a sign that if it really were that Baptism of the Spirit for which he had been praying it might be made so plain to him that there could be no mistake. And this prayer, he said, had been unmistakably answered, and he had been convinced beyond a shadow of a doubt that these very sensations, which he had condemned as being of the flesh, were actually the very Baptism of Spirit that he had longed for. Immediately, he said, he began to receive them with thankfulness, and the result was that they had become so continuous that there was hardly a moment in his life without them, and that he had found the greatest spiritual enlightenment and uplifting from the moment that he allowed himself to receive these sensations as being the touch of the Lord. This he told us was the divine secret which had been revealed to him, and which he was permitted to tell chosen souls. He urged us to take the subject before the Lord in prayer, and ask Him to enlighten us, and he warned us not to let carnal thoughts concerning this blessed experience come in to blind our eyes to the divine realities it embodied. My friend and I had not dared to say a word while this revelation was being made to us, and when Dr. [Foster] left we sat for a long while in dumbfounded silence. . . . [W]e had such absolute confidence in the holiness of this saint of God, as he seemed to us, that we were afraid our horror at what he had told us must be because we were too carnally minded, as he had said, to be able to see the deep spiritual purity of it all, and we felt that we dared not reject it without further prayer and consideration. We had several further talks with Dr. [Foster] about it, and he told us these "baptisms" were really the fulfilment of the union between Christ and His people as the Bridegroom and the bride, described in Ephesians v, 25-32, and typified in the Song of Solomon, and declared in many parts of Scripture, and that to reject it was to reject union with the Lord Himself. And he described this spiritual union as being so enrapturing and uplifting, and so full of the Lord's actual presence, that at last we began to believe there must be something in it, and to long to know for ourselves the reality of this wonderful consecration. We could not accept all the details of the experience that Dr. [Foster] gave us,[1460] but we did begin to believe that there

---

[1460] Hannah Smith publicly claimed that, at least at this time, she did not accept Dr. Foster's teaching in every detail; she admits only that others did. For example, Hannah wrote about what had happened when she had explained their experiences at Dr. Foster's sanatorium to a friend, Quaker minister Sarah F. Smiley:

> When I told her of my experiences at the water cure [Dr. Foster's hydropathic sanatorium] . . . she seized upon it . . . putting herself under the teaching of the doctor there, hoping that she might learn his strange was a physical "touch" of God, that manifested itself in a bewildering delicious sensation of a sort of magnetic thrill of divine life pouring through both soul and body, which lifted one up into an enrapturing realization of oneness with Christ and that this was the true 'Baptism of the Holy Ghost.' We came to the conclusion that it must be what all the old mystics had known, and that it was the true inner meaning of that Union with Christ for which saints of all ages had longed, and into the realization of which so many of them seemed to have entered. And we both began earnestly to seek to know it for ourselves. . . . I [thought] that now at last I had found the key that would open to me the door of this mystic region of divine union. As usual, when I was interested in anything, my friends had to become interested too, and to all with whom I dared to touch on such a sacred, yet delicate, subject, I tried to tell what Dr. [Foster] had told us. And in several instances, both in England and America, those I told of it receved the baptism I described, and in each case this very baptism was the opening up for them of a life of union and communion with God far beyond anything they had ever known before. . . . In many instances the receiving of it by preachers was the beginning of great revivals in their churches, and was, in fact, the initiation of a great deal of the "Holiness" movement of thirty years ago [that is, the time when the Keswick and Higher Life theology was originated and promulgated]. This movement took hold of the upper classes, and the meetings were largely composed of the aristocracy and the rich and influential people in English Society. There was nothing sectarian in the whole [Keswick] movement; no secrets. The result was that she went into the wildest extravagences. . . . Among other things she felt it her duty to ask him to stand naked before her, and also to do the same thing herself before him. To what other lengths she went I have never known. . . . She really believed that Christ had often come to her at night when in bed, as the real Bridegroom, and had actually had a bridegroom's connection with her. She taught this doctrine to a choice circle of friends and even tried by personal contact to produce in them those physical thrills which she believed were the actual contact of the Holy Ghost. (pg. 39, Remarkable Relations, Strachey)

---

However, in her narrative above, in order to make herself look better, Hannah distances herself and understates her influence in leading Sarah Smiley into the erotic Baptism heresy. Elsewhere, in a writing which was only to be circulated posthumously and in which she attempted to conceal the identify of Dr. Foster, Hannah admitted that she was the immediate instrument of Sarah's entering into the erotic experience:

> Another friend of mine . . . whom I had told about Dr. R., received while I was talking to her, what she believed was the Baptism, and began to experience right there thrills of rapture from head to foot, which completely carried her away. . . . [S]he [came] to spend most of her time lying on the sofa trying to induce [the thrills] to come. She also . . . felt it her duty to kiss several men, with the idea that through that means God would bestow either great blessings upon them or greater blessings upon herself. She had felt led to kiss Mr. L. [the Methodist sexual predator discussed above]. . . . [Indeed,] a great many saintly women . . . one after another . . . would in some mysterious way begin to "feel led" to give him a kiss . . . the called for kiss bestowed . . . floods of joy and peace would fill their souls. . . . She was impressed with the idea that through this performance God would bestow the Baptism of the Spirit upon the receipient of her kisses. . . . [She] was so good and pure minded that we all called her "Saint Sarah[.]" . . . This dear Saint was so enmoured of what she called "The Touch of God," that she spent a large part of her time seeking for it and enjoying it, until it finally became a sort of possession . . . a very good Christian lady . . . said . . . [she] was possessed of the devil. (pgs. 194-202, 246-248, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey)

Smiley became part of what was known as the "Boston Party," following the "outgrowth of Dr. Foster's idea." Smiley testified that the Boston Party was "far ahead of all other Holiness meetings she has ever attended in spirituality, direct guidance, etc." (Letter to Robert, December 4, 1873, reproduced in the entry for July 8 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). Smiley also set forth the typical Higher Life and Keswick allegorization of the book of Joshua, including a doctrine of post-conversion Spirit baptism, in her The Fulness of Blessing; or, The Gospel of Christ, as Illustrated from the Book of Joshua (London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1876). It is noteworthy, in light of Hannah's revelations of Smiley's activities with Dr. Foster, that Smiley's discussion of post-conversion Spirit baptism allegorically eisegeted into Joshua includes an extensive note decrying the "tendency to ignore the importance of the body, [which] proceeds from a general lack of insight into the Scriptural philosophy of nature and of spirit" (pg. 89).

Of course, Boston was the place from which the Faith and Mind Cures of Dr. Cullis and Mary Baker Eddy spread in the background of Higher Life teaching, rejection of sola Scriptura, fanaticism, and demonism.

> one was asked, or in any way influenced, to leave the Church to which they belonged . . . one of the marvellous features of it was the union of people of all forms of belief, and of all denominational relationships[.] . . . Dogmas and doctrines were of no account, and were never referred to, for they were not needed in the region in which this movement was carried on. It was the region of personal experience[.] . . . But while great spiritual blesings have seemed often to be the result of this experience of union with God, very disastrous outward falls from purity and righteousness have sometimes followed[.][1461]

Hannah Smith, thus, both adopted and promulgated the erotic Baptism doctrine and explained that it was at the root of the Holiness, Higher Life, or Keswick movement.

Hannah Whitall Smith further explained, through a representative example, how she spread Dr. Foster's filthy doctrine to others, and its effects upon them:

> One day, not long after our [Mr. & Mrs. Smith's] stay at the New York sanatarium, I [met] . . . a very strict Friend [Quaker] . . . a most successful Christian worker, but rather self-absorbed. She . . . dressed in the strictest fashion of sugar-scoop bonnets, crossed handkerchiefs, with a dainty three-cornered shawl over her shoulders. We became very intimate[.] . . . She was very religious, and we soon discovered that we were both seekers after the mystic life, and especially after the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and we embraced every opportunity we could find of seeking for it together.
>
> At that time some Methodists who believed in sanctification by faith were in the habit of holding in the summer what were called Holiness Camp Meetings . . . led by prominent religious preachers and teachers who believed in the doctrine of Holiness, or, in other words, of "sanctification by faith." . . . [T]he friend of whom I speak and I myself, with a large company of congenial friends, attended one of these Camp Meetings, all of us hungering and thirsting . . . to know experimentally the conscious baptism of the Holy Spirit. The whole camp ground was exercised on this subject, and in almost every meeting wonderful testimonies would be given by those who had, as they believed, consciously received it.
>
> Our expectations and our longings were wrought up to the highest ptich of enthusiasim, and one evening, after the public meeting under the trees was over, a few of us gathered in one tent for a special prayer meeting on the subject, determined to wrestle and agonize until the answer came. We knelt in the dark, and poured out our prayers and supplications . . . for two or three hours. . . . As the company passed out of the tent, I noticed my friend did not pass out with them, and I wondered whether she had slipped out silently before the meeting closed and gone back to her own tent. I lighted a candle to go to bed, when, to my astonishment, I found her lying across the foot of my bed in what appeared to be a swoon. I spoke to her, and immediately she began to praise God in the most rapturous way: "Oh, how wonderful! Oh, how glorious! Oh, this is the Baptism! Oh, what a blessing; 'tis more than I can bear! Oh, Lord, stay Thy hand! Flesh and blood cannot bear this glory!"[1462] And similar exclamations burst from her lips in tones of ecstasy. As may be imagined, I was overwhelmed with awe and delight, and I immediately rushed out to call in my friends to see the wonderful answer to our prayers, for I could not doubt that my friend had received the baptism of the Holy Spirit for which we were all longing. Why she had been picked out, I could not imagine, for she was not, as far as I knew, a bit better or a bit more earnest than any of the rest of us. However, there it was . . . [a] little awestruck company gathered round the bed, and eagerly drank in all her rapturous exclamations, afraid almost to breathe for fear that we should disturb the heavenly visitation. After a while she seemed to recover from her swoon sufficiently to go to her own tent, and, although very tottering and scarcely able to walk, we managed to take her there and get her undressed and into bed. . . . [E]arly in the morning I sent word to the early Prayer Meeting of the great blessing that had come to the camp ground. Immediately a deputation of the leaders of the meeting came to the tent to ask my friend whether

---

1461 Pgs. 165-172, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

1462 Compare Hannah Smith's description of her related experience near Clifton Springs through her surrender to the Inward Voice in her Letter to Sisters of August 14, 1879, reproduced in the entry for September 19 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, ed. Dieter.

> she would not come to their large meeting and bear testimony to the blessing that had been bestowed upon her. . . . It was one of the foundation principles among believers in the definite baptism of the Holy Spirit that if you did not confess it when you had received it, it might be lost[.][1463] . . . [The baptism] seemed to have been what the Swedenborgians[1464] call "her opening into the spiritual world," for from that time she began to have very strange and wonderous experiences . . . [which made] ordinary religious life very humdrum and uninteresting[.] . . . I told her of my experience at the water-cure [Henry Foster's hydropathic sanitarium], and of the secret that had there been revealed to me[.] [S]he immediatley seized upon it . . . and went to this same water-cure, and put herself under the teaching of the doctor there[.] . . . She embraced all his views, and felt led, as she fully believed by the Holy Spirit, to great lengths in the lines he taught. Among other things, she felt her duty to ask him to stand naked before her, and also to do the same thing herself before him. To what other lengths she went I have never known, but she was fully imbued with the idea that the baptism of the Holy Spirit was physical as well as spiritual, and that the great aim of religious teachers should be to excite in themselves and in others those physical thrills which accompany passion, and which she had come to believe were the manifest token of union with Christ. She took the Song of Solomon to be the exposition of the relation between the soul and Christ as the Bride and Bridegroom, and she confessed to me with great awe that she really believed that Christ had often come to her at night when in bed as the real Bridegroom, and had actually had a bridegroom's connextion with her. She taught this doctrine to a choice circle of friends, and even tried by personal contact to produce in them those physical thrills which she believed were the actual contact of the Holy Ghost. She overawed these friends by the tremendous force of her own convictions, and in many cases obtained . . . control over them, so that they were not surprised or shocked at anything she did or said, but accepted it all as from God, and as being the avenue through which the Holy Ghost was to be poured out upon them . . . [although] the person who was acknowledged by all to be the most full of self was my friend [herself], who had apparently received the Baptism. [1465]

Hannah had written to her husband: "There does seem to be a truth in it [Dr. Foster's doctrine], and I feel as if it would be a great means of restoration to health to thee if thee could get fully into it. Do try."[1466] With the leading of Dr. Foster and the encouragement of Hannah his wife, then, Robert P. Smith received such an erotic baptism, and having "received the baptism of the Spirit . . . he began to teach, preach, and propogate"[1467] the [1463] This principle that blessings not confessed immediately were lost carried over to the foundational pre-Keswick Conventions, into the Keswick movement, and into the Pentecostal and Word of Faith movements; thus, e. g., the Oxford Convention proclaimed: "None retain the blessing of full faith [the Higher Life], and its consequent victory, who refuse to acknowledge, on suitable occasions, what God has done for them. The saintly John Fletcher four times fell back into the old level by fearing to witness for this grace of God" (pgs. 284-285, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874). Fletcher was the central theologian of Wesleyan Perfectionism (see, e. g, "How John Fletcher Became the Theologian of Wesleyan Perfectionism, 1770–1776," T. L. Smith. Wesleyan Theological Journal 15:1 (Spring 1980): 68–87).

---

[1464] Swedenborgianism is another demonic and spiritualist cult that Hannah W. Smith viewed in a positive light, as did, among others, Mr. and Mrs. Mount-Temple.

[1465] Pgs. 173-181, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

[1466] pg. 38, Remarkable Relations, Strachey, citing a letter from October 21, 1873. Hannah later became less enthusiastic about Dr. Foster's doctrine and then rejected it, but her husband continued to believe and promulgate it secretly until it caused his public downfall.

[1467] Pg. 317, The Puritans: Their Origins and Successors, D. M. Lloyd-Jones. Robert had earlier received entire sanctification and a less erotic spiritual Baptism at a Methodist Holiness meeting, where he learned that "one can be sanctified by faith just as one was saved by faith" (February 5-6, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

Higher Life theology publicly and the mystic baptism privately, leading many[1468] into a post-conversion Spirit baptism and the thrills of the marriage-bed that allegedly accompanied it. For example, one of Robert's first English disciples, a woman called Lizzie Lumb, wrote Robert a series of letters between 1873 and 1875 describing the physical sensations of her "Betrothal with [a false] Christ":

> The thrill commences in the love nerves, with a great throbbing, as though a heart beat there, and rises to the regions of the chest, with a thrill and sweet confusion of union[.] . . . Most earnestly do I thank you for revealing such treasures to me, as you have in this mystery of the heavenly marriage.[1469]

Hannah Smith recognized that adoption of the Bridal Baptism doctrine led to the free acceptance and practice of sexual debauchery, or at least something very close to it.[1470] For instance, as a consequence of Robert's preaching at one meeting, Hannah W. Smith narrated: "Boole got a great Baptism during the meeting, the unmentionable kind, and was so completely carried away by it . . . that he came near to making love to me, and actually did get into a deep and spiritual flirtation with a lady there who had left her husband because of his ill usage."[1471] Likewise, Hannah W. Smith recounts:

> I knew one dear lady who began in the purest and simplest way to give herself up to these emotions, and gradually came to spending most of her time allowing these waves of thrills to flow through her from head to foot, believing that she was in this way realizing more and more the presence of the Lord, and coming more and more into actual union with Him. And the result was most disastrous in destroying her moral nature, and launching her into a course of impurity from which in the beginning she would have shrunk with horror.[1472]

One must not be surprised that the infinitely holy and pure Holy Ghost would give over to their lusts (Romans 1:26) those who would defile His Holy Name by associating such things with His baptism. Certainly such supernatural manifestations as the erotic Baptism were manifestations of the god of this world, the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that works in and energizes the children of disobedience, the infernal Power [1468] The doctrine was a regular theme of Robert P. Smith, and many adopted it as a result of his propogation of it; cf. pgs. 233-234, 238, 251, 255-260, 466-467, 470, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875.

---

[1469] Pg. 39, Remarkable Relations, Strachey.

[1470] Pg. 48, Remarkable Relations, Strachy; cf. pg. 104.

[1471] Pg. 50, Remarkable Relations, Strachey. This meeting took place in 1876 under Robert Smith's preaching at a camp meeting in the United States after his downfall in England. Note that Robert was still, obviously, promulgating the doctrine of the erotic Baptism even after being forced to leave England after the Brighton Convention because of it.

Other manifestations of fanaticism ascribed to the Holy Spirit at another camp meeting the Smiths graced were similar to those experienced by early Quakerism: "The ladies . . . at our house this spring have that quaking under the power of the Spirit that gave the early Friends the name of Quakers. Mrs. Ashmead and Mrs. Bond both quake wonderfully at times. And yet neither of them are at all remarkable for any depth of natural character" (pgs. 51-52, ibid.).

[1472] Pg. 162, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

behind Robert and Hannah W. Smith's theology of sanctification and "Christian" living. Robert believed in his erotic Baptism "as late as 1878,"[1473] that is, until he gave up Christianity entirely, for he "thought that it was a very precious truth."[1474]

While Mr. Smith most clearly spread Foster's filthy doctrine in private to a variety of his followers, usually women, he did publicly proclaim with clarity the necessity of a post-conversion Spirit baptism as the climax of the Higher Life, while pointing publicly to its sexual nature only in a guarded way. Unsurprisingly, he also warned that those who entered the Higher Life should "expect revelations of the world of darkness"[1475] far greater than those experienced by those who were merely normal, uninitiated Christians. While many women, and some men, knew what Robert Smith meant when he spoke of the "phenomena of the coming of the Spirit upon individuals,"[1476] not all understood the significance of his public proclamation at the Oxford Convention:

> [H]as the Baptism of the Spirit been duly pressed upon the believer? . . . Beloved Christian, let me ask you, have you had this baptism[?] . . . [M]any Christians seem to forget that this happened again and again. It was not the characteristic of the beginning only, but of the continuance of the dispensation in which we live. . . . [There are] phenomena [accompanying] the coming of the Spirit upon individuals[1477] . . . [We ought to] expect this baptism[,] [which has] been so long lost to the Church. . . . [It brings] a thrill, an intense emotion . . . [although] [y]ou may have special temptations of Satan after this time of baptism . . . [and] the highest elevations of experience involve the most fearful dangers.[1478]

Those who already had experienced the physical thrills of Baptism by the spiritual Bridegroom understood what was involved in the Higher Life doctrine of the Smiths—others were only pointed towards it by their public proclamation:[1479]

1473 Pg. 36, The Keswick Story, Polluck.

1474 Letter to a Friend, February 12, 1876, reproduced in the entry for July 30 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

1475 Pg. 43, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874. Compare Jessie Penn-Lewis's affirmations that Spirit baptism brings one to revelations of the world of darkness, discussed below in the chapter concerning her and Evan Roberts.

1476 Pg. 251, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874. Mr. Smith affirms that he does not wish, at that time, "to point so much to the phenomena . . . as to the reality . . . of the coming of the Spirit" (pg. 251), for an open and explicit declaration of the erotic phenomena he thought accompanied the Baptism were not fit to be proclaimed publicly.

1477 Robert explained that in his public discourse he did "not wish to point so much to the phenomena," for he was not willing to explain plainly the eroticism of his doctrine to everyone present at the Oxford Convention.

1478 Pgs. 244-259, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.

1479 While this writer feels it is necessary to print the following quotation, it is exceedingly grievous to His soul to have the infinitely holy God, and the perfect purity of Jesus Christ, blasphemed in the manner that it is by those who understood and accepted the Bridal Baptism doctrine. The glorious, blessed, and

[T]here is a point in our spiritual life, in which all self-imposed barriers break down . . . [j]ust so . . . there is a certain point at which a true woman breaks through all the reserve of her nature, and lets her heart go . . . the time of the soul's espousals, when it realises its union to the heavenly Lover. . . . [T]here will spring up a sweet soul-intercourse between your soul and Him such as you have never conceived the thought of. Often has my whole being thrilled . . . I could not understand this when I was contentious about doctrine[.] . . . Will you yield yourself to Him in this the day of your espousals? . . . [I]f earthly love be so sweet, shall not Divine love satisfy our whole being[?] . . . Earthly relationships are created but to reveal heavenly realities of union with our Lord. . . . Faith contradicts even our moral sense[.] . . . [B]reak down every barrier in your nature . . . and let your heart go[.] . . .[E]very need of a woman's heart could be met and satisfied with the love of Christ . . . [when] the Lord reveal[s] Himself . . . as the heavenly Bridegroom, who would henceforth carry [her] in the arms of love[.] . . . [C]laim the Lord as [your] heavenly Bridegroom . . . a thrilling message [that] stirred the meeting so deeply that it seemed a necessity to give some expression to our feelings[.] . . . [Women] followed, testifiying to the same blessed experience [of the] . . . wonderous secrets of His love[.] . . . [A]s we had learned deeply the lessons of entire consecration and simple trust, we needed now to go on to consider more fully the blessed secret . . . only the soul that had entered into rest could understand . . . passages [such as] Eph v. 22-32; Isaiah lxii. 4, 5, liv. 5; Hosea ii. 16, 19, 20; Song of Sol. iv. 7-12[.] . . . The Song of Songs [contains a] blessed secret . . . that the soul is slow to understand . . . the actings of the love of espousals. . . . The believer does not fully know what Christ is until he comes to this . . . [and surrenders] throughout the whole range of our being [including the physical organism.] . . . For the consecration we have been pressing in these meetings, and the full and childlike trust, are only stepping-stones to this glorious consummation of soul-union with the Beloved[.] . . . [O]ur souls have not reached their highest destiny until it is known and rejoiced in . . . absolute abandonment . . . overmastering love. . . . Several [more] ladies followed, testifying to the joy and rest their souls had found in thus knowing Christ as the Heavenly Bridegroom . . . far more than earthly friend or husband[.] . . . Many hearts were melted . . . in view of such glorious privileges as were opened up before us. The feeling was so great, that at the close of the meeting several met more privately[1480] . . . that to each one of them this wonderous soul-union . . . might become an experimental reality. . . . [As] Boaz . . . called the claim . . . that Ruth . . . had made "showing kindness,"[1481] . . . [the] Lord delights in every claim we make upon Him for union with Himself, and calls it kindness—"the kindness of thine espousals." . . . [Let us] make our claim for this realized union . . . [with Christ] more than any earthly friend or lover ever could be. . . . This is the consummation of all Christian experience . . . the wonderous secret . . . [to be] learned by each one experimentally for herself . . . thrilled with the sweetness of His love.[1482]

---

truly spiritual union of the Redeemer with His espoused church is a wonderful and awesome truth which it is the depths of vileness to drag into the gutter as the Bridal Baptism heresy does. This writer perfectly understands, and has great sympathy with, those who would prefer to simply pass by without reading such quotations, with their double entendres for the initiated and the uninitiated, so that his mind does not need to think upon the despicable evil intended in such public proclamations for the initiated. Singing or reading Psalm 109 might be an appropriate response by those who truly love that One before whom the seraphim sing "Holy, Holy, Holy"—or even a good preparation for the reading of the following quotation, and the rest of the quotes exposing the filthy doctrine of the Smiths and other Higher Life promulgators elsewhere in this composition.

[1480] For, in private, the Bridal Baptism doctrine could be more openly set forth; more private explication was the practice of its advocates, whether Robert and Hannah W. Smith, Laurence Oliphant, or sexual predators who claimed that they were fathering an exalted new human race.

[1481] Compare Logan P. Smith's description of the erotic Baptism doctrine as "the doctrine of 'Loving-kindness'" (Pgs. 60-65, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith).

[1482] Pgs. 236-239, 270-271, 300-302, 306-314, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874. The Oxford Ladies' Meetings were led by Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Boardman (pg. 289).

Once again, this writer begs the pardon of his reader for reproducing and calling to mind the trashy filth meant by the initiated into the Bridal Baptism secret. Reader, know that this writer sympathizes with

While the Smiths were somewhat reserved in public, others were more open in their proclaimation of the Bridal Baptism teaching. For example, "Miss Bonnicastle sp[oke] on this subject . . . [of] conscious union of the believer and Christ as the Heavenly Bridegroom . . . at the Oxford Ladies meetings . . . [which] quite shocked a good many,"[1483] but led many also into the knowledge of that Bridal Baptism. It was common knowledge that "the "object of the . . . Meeting at Oxford . . . was to lead Christians to . . . [be] baptised with the Holy Ghost,"[1484] and as a result of that Convention "there was so much" of "the Baptism of the Holy Ghost"[1485] that vast multitudes received physical thrills. Nevertheless, the full depths of Satan hidden in Robert Smith's doctrine were not clearly revealed to all, but only to those fully initiated into the Higher Life. Thus, experience of erotic thrills in the Baptism was the culminating and highest point to which the Higher Life led, and many, through coming to "lie passive in His hands," came to know "the baptism of the Spirit" as allegedly set forth in the Song of Solomon and as taught by Smith.[1486]

While Mr. Smith successfully proclaimed and led others to the erotic Baptism at Oxford and Brighton, divulgence of this Higher Life secret to Miss Hamilton in her bedroom shortly before the first Higher Life Convention at Keswick proved his public downfall[1487]—although even through this, the Smiths did not cut off contact with Mr. Foster or Clifton Springs.[1488] "Hannah found [Robert] huddled in despair in a Paris hotel you if you desire to vomit. Were such quotations introduced for an insignificant purpose, they would certainly be unjustifiable—they are reproduced only because they represent the thinking of those who have profoundly influenced the doctrine of sanctification of huge portions of Christiandom—a fact that would be almost absolutely unbelievable, apart from clear evidence such as that provided in this composition, and one which illustrates how deeply Satan has laid his deceptions.

---

1483 Letter to a Friend, February 12, 1876, reproduced in the entry for July 30 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

1484 Pg. 19, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.

1485 Pg. 215, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.

1486 Pgs. 371-372, 384-385, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874. It should not be a surprise that those who pointedly affirmed, "I cannot remember . . . my conversion" were prominent among the people who "heard Mr. Smith's address on the baptism of the Holy Spirit" and received the "conscious . . . blessing" he proclaimed (pgs. 384-385).

1487 Hannah called Dr. Foster's heresy "the subtle doctrine concerning the physical manifestation of the Holy Spirit which led my dear husband astray" (pg. 48, Remarkable Relations, Strachy; cf. pg. 104). Mrs. Smith, as usual, downplays her own adoption of the erotic Baptism teaching.

1488 Thus, for example, Hannah Smith was staying at Clifton Springs in July 1879 (see Letter to Anna, written from Clifton Springs on July 8, 1879, reproduced in the entry for September 16 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

room where he had fled in his collapse."[1489] Concerning his father's exposure, and the attempt—which was quite successful during Mr. and Mrs. Smith's lifetime[1490]—to cover up the true reason for Mr. Smith's downfall in his promulgation of erotic bride mysticism, Logan Pearsall Smith wrote:

> "All Europe is at my feet," . . . my poor father . . . exclaim[ed] when he stood on the platform [at the Brighton Convention]. But almost immediately an announcement appeared in the papers that he had been compelled to cancel all his engagements and to return almost at once to America. It was suggested that a fall from a horse some years before had led to the return of certain distressing symptoms which rendered absolute rest necessary. I must say that in the family we didn't believe in that horse; at least I am certain that my mother didn't. I don't think she ever referred to it at all, which made people suspicious, and so universal became the gossip that my father's friends felt it necessary to issue a further explanation. It had come to their ears, they stated, that my father had inculcated doctrines that were most dangerous and unscriptural, and that there had been conduct on his part which, though it was free, they were convinced, from all evil intention,[1491] had rendered it necessary to abstain from public work, and take the complete rest rendered necessary by the fall from his horse. That the doctrine of Sanctification and Deadness to Sin might lead to dangerous forms of Antinomianism was well known from the history of the past . . . [b]ut this was not the doctrinal quadreped from which my father slipped at Brighton. It was a much more mysterious beast which he had also brought from America, so mysterious that even the learned and profound Professor Warfield seems never to have guessed at its existence.[1492] But my mother

---

1489 July 27-28, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

1490 Victorian sensibilities and the fact that Hannah Smith's writings on fanaticism and various other writings were intentionally left unpublished during her lifetime account, in part, for the fact that early critics of the Keswick theology did not strongly identify the connection between Mr. and Mrs. Smith's Higher Life doctrine and mystical, erotic bridal union. However, the central factor is a deliberate decision to supress this portion of her and her husband's history, both by the Higher Life men in England who forced Robert out when he was found in Miss Hattie Hamilton's bedroom initially, and by the Smith family themselves. Concealement was sought, rather than open repentance of and renunciation of such filthiness. Hannah certainly sought to deliberately cover up her husband's practices and spiritual shipwreck, both at the time and during his later decline into agnosticism: "I think the thing to say about Robert when anyone asks about him is just this, that he never recovered from the nervous shock of that time in England, and that he is suffering an eclipse of faith from actual nervous collapse" (Letter to Priscilla, November 22, 1883, reproduced in the entry for August 12 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). She similarly sought to cover up her own adoption and propogation of the erotic doctrine.

1491 Of course, both those who engaged in immoral debauchery, believing that such was the method through which Spirit baptism and the Higher Life were obtained, and those who taught and led others to adopt such perversions, were free from "all evil intention." They were sincere in their indulgence of lustful passions, and their intentions were good, or so they claimed, while their actions were utterly shameful.

1492 That is, the mysterious declaration of Robert Pearsall Smith's friends about unnamed "doctrines" that were "dangerous" was as far as B. B. Warfield was able to penetrate in his day when he wrote the articles that came to constitute Studies in Perfectionism; it was as much as Stephen Barabas chose to divulge in the hagiographical and revisionist history in So Great Salvation, although in Barabas' day the truth was much more easily accessible than it was in the days of Warfield (see pgs. 26-27, So Great Salvation, Barabas & Warfield, Perfectionism, vol. 2, pgs. 505ff.). Unfortunately, the coverup of Robert P. Smith by Keswick advocates such as Barabas, despite the now clearly accessible facts, continues in the work of many other modern advocates of Keswick theology. For example, one notes the fantastic understatement on pg. 30 of Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, by Price & Randall, that Robert P. Smith's downfall was caused by nothing more than that he put his arm around Miss Hamilton; Price & Randall breathe not a whisper about erotic bridal mysticism. J. C. Polluck (pgs. 34-36, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention) says that he is revealing the truth, since the "facts have lain hidden for nearly ninety years inviting sensational speculation," and then goes on to relate that "the truth is pathetic rather than shocking," for Smith simply knew it well[.] . . . What exactly was the nature of this doctrine? I cannot find that it has a name, so for convenience I shall call it the doctrine of "Loving-kindness." It is . . . based . . . on the fact . . . that nature, in one of her grossest economies, has placed the seats of spiritual and amorous rapture so close to each other that one of them is very likely to arouse the other . . . so exactly do these two forms of ecstasy feel alike [that] . . . sometimes . . . it [is] extremely difficult to distinguish between them.[1493] From this fact it was only too easy to form the heretical belief that this heightening of religious experience, due to the mingling of the sexes, was God's own way (and His ways were mysterious and not to be questioned by carnal reason) of bestowing His blessing upon them. When a holy preacher sat near a sanctified sister, or a female penitent close to her confessor, they became more conscious of the Baptism of the Spirit; and, as my mother sardonically expressed it, the nearer to each other they sat, the deeper and richer the consciousness became. . . . [I]t has taken . . . centuries to eliminate . . . this holy kiss—if indeed [Christianity] has succeeded in doing so completely. Certainly in my father's time this exquisite, secret doctrine was extremely prevalent in America; and my father, in spite of my mother's . . . warnings,[1494] would expound it to select gatherings mostly composed of spinsters of a certain age.[1495] Unluckily one of these grew jealous of another,[1496] and let the great beautiful cat out of the bag, to the scandal of the righteous, and the extreme joy of the unholy, whose jokes about the "Higher Life," as it was called, made my father feel that it would be wise for him to cease his ministrations. . . . As people grow old, it becomes very hard for them to keep clear in their minds the important distinction beteen Right and Wrong—outlines become dim and one thing fades into another. . . . At the time, however, my father found it wise, as I have said, to cease his ministrations; though to the Cowper Temples, I think—certainly to Mrs. Cowper Temple—all this fuss seemed told a woman a false doctrine—the character of which Polluck leaves unnamed—"with his arm around her in his hotel room." It is difficult to think that Polluck's claim that he is finally making the truth clear, and there is nothing "shocking" about it, and then stating that Robert Smith put his arm around Miss Hamilton, while Polluck refuses to breathe a syllable about erotic bridal mysticism, is anything other than a deliberate coverup to make Mr. Smith look better. It is similar to Polluck's refusal to mention that Smith turned agnostic and then Buddhist. Nevertheless, the preface to Polluck's book by A. T. Houghton, Chairman of the Keswick Council, declares that Polluck "does not cover up the failings of those whom God has used in the leadership of the Convention, nor would the Council desire to hide anything" (pg. 10). Mr. Smith's unconfirmed self-testimony that he had good intentions (Oliphant and the whole host of fanatics advocating erotic bridal mysticism and practicing immorality as a consequence had good intentions also) when he had his arm around Miss Hattie Hamilton alone in a hotel room is mentioned; the fact that he told her of erotic bridal mysticism is unmentioned, the fact that at the Brighton Convention Miss Hamilton threw her arms around Mr. Smith and kissed him in Mrs. Smith's presence is unmentioned, and the fact that Miss Hamilton said Robert sought to commit adultery with her is not mentioned (cf. pgs. 78-82, The Secret Life of Hannah Whitall Smith, Marie Henry; pg. 111, Let Go and Let God? A Survey and Analysis of Keswick Theology, Naselli). Keswick advocates who cover up the abominations of the founders and propogators of the Keswick theology are in plain violation of 1 Timothy 5:20: "Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear." However, while they violate the Apostle Paul's command in 1 Timothy 5:20, they practice Robert P. Smith's view that one is to do exactly the opposite of 1 Timothy 5:20—according to Mr. Smith, a Divine "curse" falls "on those who expose the sin of their brethren or their fathers in Christ" (pg. 42, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875).

---

1493 This difficulty is felt if the people involved are unconverted heretics not indwelt by the Spirit of truth, so that all their religion is not spiritual, but natural or devilish. The confusion of fornication and spirituality consequently had much in it to attract Mr. and Mrs. Pearsall Smith, although it is utterly abominable to those truly born of God.

1494 Mrs. Smith contributed to her husband's adoption of erotic bridal mysticism, but she also turned away from it before he did.

1495 That is, Mr. Smith would especially seek to share this teaching with unmarried women of an age relatively near to his own.

1496 Did one of these ladies grow jealous of knowledge of this "truth," or jealous when it was acted upon with another person with whom she wished to act upon it herself?

> incomprehensible and silly. If these good people wanted to kiss each other, what, she wondered, could be the harm in that?[1497]

After the scandal in England, and the outward success of the Higher Life meetings conducted in America under the impulse of Dr. Cullis by Mr. and Mrs. Smith, despite utter lack of concern and consecration,[1498] "Robert gave up preaching, [although] his wife continued."[1499] "Robert Pearsall Smith lost more than his occupation; he lost his faith as well. . . . [T]his disbelieving and disillusioned preacher [would have] believing disciples . . . still come for guidance . . . leav[ing] him to the awkward task of giving advice and encouragement of which he himself hardly believed a word."[1500] Robert "went back to America and to selling glass. His spiritual life degenerated. He never again had a heart for ministry or for God. He retreated to a world of Buddhist meditation and died in 1899 a broken man."[1501] He "began to lose his faith [more completely in] 1875-1876 . . . [by] . . . 1877 he was . . . in the process of losing his faith altogether,"[1502] so that he become an [1497] Pgs. 60-65, Unforgotten Years, Logan Pearsall Smith; cf. pgs. 61-62, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Indeed, in light of the association of the Cowper Temples with Laurence Oliphant and other practicioners and promulgators of the doctrine that one must engage in immorality to receive Spirit baptism, the noble family's inability to see anything wrong with the doctrine of the preachers at whose feet they sat, and whom they promoted, is understandable.

---

[1498] See pgs. 65-69, Unforgotten Years, Logan P. Smith, and Hannah W. Smith's mystified amazement with the Higher Life power both she and her husband still possessed although without all consecration (pgs. 251-253, Religious Fanaticism: Extracts from the Papers of Hannah Whitall Smith, ed. & intr. Ray Strachey; pgs. 172-174, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Smith. Letters to her daughter, Mary Berenson, January 1, 1905 & February 25, 1905; pgs. 32-36, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Letter to Mrs. Anna Shipley, August 8, 1876; Letter to a Friend, August 8, 1876, reproduced in the entries for August 2-4 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. Mrs. Smith's ruminations over her ability to generate Higher Life results in a state of utter unconsecration has been examined above.).

[1499] Pg. 14, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

[1500] Pgs. 61-62, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith. Logan explains further:

> My father . . . had begun to lose his faith in the whole scheme of Salvation which he had so fervently advocated[.] . . . His situation was thus an awkward one; he had still a reputation in the religious world, he still possessed the hypnotic power of swaying great audiences, and many calls were made upon him to address meetings and administer religious instruction to souls in trouble. Invitations to preach he could avoid on the grounds of health, but the religious inquirers who called at the house, coming sometimes from as far as from Russia, were the source of greater embarrassment; and I remember how desperately he would try to keep one or the other of his children in the room to avoid the necessity of a spiritual dialogue, and how quite heartlessly we would escape from it, leaving him to grapple alone with these spiritual inquirers. This we thought great fun. (pgs. 72-73, Unforgotten Years, Logan P. Smith)

[1501] July 27-28, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1502] Pgs. 175, 85, The Secret Life of Hannah Whitall Smith, Marie Henry. As Logan P. Smith notes, Robert began to turn towards agnosticism when it became apparent that all the "blessing" that he had felt and experienced from the time of his consecration to preaching the Higher Life in conjunction with his erotic Baptism to his final Higher Life meeting under Dr. Cullis's encouragement in America after his downfall following the Brighton Convention was a delusion—the presence of the identical spiritual "power" and "blessing" that characterized his best earlier Higher Life ministrations in his final meeting when in an evident state of unconsecration and ungodliness was the beginning of his final fall. Rather than recognizing that he was in need of true conversion by receiving the true gospel and coming into a true agnostic by 1883[1503] as his "religious beliefs [were] gradually dwinding into an interest in Psychical Research."[1504] Thus, "he gradually gave up all his Christian commitments and died alienated, but not separated, from his family. Plagued by a manic depressive nature for most of his life, he [came to be] happiest when engaged in his Buddhist meditations in his spacious tree house at the family's home at Friday's Hill, south of London."[1505] As with vast numbers of Higher Life advocates, Robert Smith's ultimate recognition that his merely fleshly and natural emotion-driven religion had nothing in it that was truly from God led him to apostatize from Christianity.[1506] A significant part of his familial alienation derived from his years of unrepentant adultery,[1507] evidencing, like his doctrinal apostasy, his unregenerate state, until he finally died in 1898 and went to his own place, where his wife joined him some years later.

Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith was a false teacher who was deluded by Satan and her own unrenewed heart. Robert P. Smith was an unconverted false teacher also. Their writings are filled to the brim with dangerous theological errors and heresies. Alongside of the Higher Life of Keswick theology, one finds within the compositions and proclamations of Mr. and Mrs. Smith a false gospel, the Inner Light, New Thought, the Mind and Faith Cure, feminism, Quakerism, syncretism, quietism, fatalism, eudemonism, allegorical hermeneutics, passivity in sanctification, continuationism, antinomianism, universalism, works salvation, erotic sensations as Spirit baptism, and extra-biblical revelations. Hannah rejected sola Scriptura, total depravity, substitutionary atonement, justification by imputed righteousness, saving faith, the new birth, supernatural living union with the resurrected Christ so that he could have real spiritual power, Robert concluded that the marvelous effects wrought by his own natural abilities, while under the delusion that his Higher Life agitation was genuinely spiritual, were a demonstration that there could well be nothing to religion other than the psychical powers analyzable by a Psychical Research Society, and perhaps no God at all.

---

[1503] Pgs. 70-71, 320, 51, Remarkable Relations, Strachey, pg. 117, The Secret Life of Hannah Whitall Smith, Marie Henry.

[1504] Pg. 74, Remarkable Relations, Strachey.

[1505] "Smith, Hannah Whitall & Smith, Robert Pearsall," Biographical Dictionary of Evangelicals, ed. Tim Larson, pg. 617. Cf. pg. 107, Strachey, Remarkable Relations, pg. 127, The Secret Life of Hanah Whitall Smith, Henry.

[1506] Consider the testimony in 1912 of onetime Holiness leader Harry Ironside on the evil fruits of the Higher Life and "second blessing" theology: "[T]housands are yearly being disheartened and discouraged by their teaching . . . hundreds yearly are ensnared into infidelity through the collapse of the vain effort to attain the unattainable . . . scores have actually lost their minds and are now inmates of asylums because of the mental resultant upon their bitter disappointment in the search for holiness" (pg. 6, Holiness: The False and the True).

[1507] In his earlier years, Robert P. Smith preached erotic baptism to unmarried women. "In his later years, Robert was unfaithful to his wife" (pg. 173, The Secret Life of Hannah Whitall Smith, Marie Henry; cf. pgs. 99-105 & Remarkable Relations, Strachey, pgs. 184-187). Robert fell under the doom pronounced in 1 Corinthians 6:9-11; Galatians 5:19-21 & Revelation 21:8.

conversion, and self-examination. Mrs. Smith plainly testified that she rejected the evangelical gospel, detested Christian orthodoxy, and delighted in both being a heretic and in making others into heretics. She thought that man's chief end was not to glorify God, but to feel happy, doing whatever one wants without any pangs from the conscience. Her exaltation as the leading teacher of the Higher Life took place in connection with spiritists and the working of demons. She testified that she gained her chief spritual insight into the "Christian" life from a sexual predator who taught, practiced, and led others into unspeakable debauchery. She was an enemy of Christ, His Word, and of true holiness of life.

As an unregenerate false teacher, Hannah Whitall Smith is someone to mark, reject, and avoid (Romans 16:17; Titus 3:10). Her heresies and writings, and those of her husband Robert, should be abhorred and detested by the godly. She is by no means someone to embrace as a font of truth on Christian living, and adoption of her ideas by others evidences a tremendous lack of spiritual discernment and the certain presence of doctrinal error.

Applications from the Life and Writings of Hannah Whitall Smith and her Husband

As believers can learn much from the life and teachings of the wicked recorded in Scripture, whether Ahab, Judas, or Diotrephes, so the negative example of the life and writings of Hannah W. Smith can teach the Lord's people a number of important lessons.

Mrs. Smith's false teachings—all of them—must be discerned, rejected, guarded against, exposed, and warned about. Believers should not read her writings. Christian leaders should plainly preach and teach against her heresies and warn of her by name. Churches should separate from those who have been influenced to adopt her heresies and are unwilling to repent. Her confusion on the gospel has led precious souls into the fires of hell. Her confusion on sanctification has hindered countless Christians in their spiritual walk. There is no reason to try to pick out a little spiritual good from the veritable mass of errors in her works, but a clear Biblical basis for rejecting her, root and branch.

Many lessons can be learned from the deluded career and miserable end of Robert Pearsall Smith. His life exemplifies the extreme spiritual danger of rejecting sola Scriptura in practice, even if one accepts it in theory. His abandonment of literal, grammatical-historical interpretation for experience-driven hermeneutics is also seen to be extremely dangerous. Had Mr. Smith studied Scripture more carefully and recognized it alone as the authority by which he needed to judge all experience, he could have been freed from the delusions of the devil and of his own sinful heart and come to a true saving conversion to Jesus Christ, instead of being an unconverted preacher who was both "deceiving, and being deceived" (2 Timothy 3:13). Furthermore, he illustrates the danger when religious experience is derived from a false fanaticism rather than genuine Christian and Trinitarian spirituality. When he finally saw through his fanaticism, instead of turning to the true Christ in true faith arising from Scripture alone, he rejected Christianity altogether. What dangers and proclivities to all evil are wrapped within the depraved human heart! No one will escape from that "desperately wicked" seat of corruption or escape delusion from that fountain of lies that is "deceitful above all things" (Jeremiah 17:9), without cleaving to the Scriptures and receiving the protection of the Holy Spirit as a consequence of the union with Christ brought about through true conversion. Reader, do you view your heart as God does? Do you meditate on its horrible and desperate depravity and, as a result, flee to the Christ revealed in the Scriptures as your only refuge? Learn your need so to do from the deluded life and everlasting damnation of the Higher Life preacher-turned-Buddhist, Robert Pearsall Smith.

Learn also from the lives of Mr. and Mrs. Pearsall Smith life that unconverted false teachers can put on a great show of godliness and exert a tremendous influence on the spiritually unwary among the true people of God. The ideas Hanhah and Robert Smith propogated influence many millions today—millions who, in large part, have no idea that their confusion on and false doctrine of sanctification are derived from an unregenerate Quaker couple. Be sure that your beliefs and practices are truly "the faith which was once delivered to the saints" (Jude 3) and the product of Scripture alone. It does not matter whether or not men who are exalted by Christendom have taught them, for such are not your authority for faith and practice. Robert P. Smith was extremely popular in the Christendom of his day—all Europe was at his feet. There are many extremely popular false teachers in Christendom today. The Antichrist will be even more popular in the post-Rapture Christendom of the future than any of his anti-christian predecessors. Place no confidence in men because of their popularity, but, within the protection of a strong independent Baptist church, let all you believe and do arise only from the Spirit-illuminated teaching of the literally interpreted Word of God.

Furthermore, since Hannah W. Smith founded the Keswick theology with her husband, and Keswick has never dreamed of repudiating and repenting of their false teachings and pernicious influence, Keswick theology should be rejected. Keswick is saturated with the ideas of Hannah W. Smith. This is not a good, but a great and fearful evil.

The tremendous influence Mrs. Smith has exerted on Christendom, so that very large numbers of true churches and Christians have been unintentionally infected with her errors, illustrates the dangers of failing to issue plain warnings, avoid ecumenicalism, and exercise a watchful and strict separatist position. Mrs. Smith has influenced millions. She created a new, and very influential, doctrine of sanctification—the Keswick theology. Through both her direct influence and her stamp upon the Keswick movement, she has precipitated the rise of the Pentecostal, charismatic, and Word of Faith heresies. How greatly the leaven of error has spread because so many preachers have refused to give plain warnings! How essential it is for pastors to be well informed about and very careful concerning what writings they recommend to the flocks over which the Holy Ghost has made them overseers! Reader, do not follow the bad example of those who blew an uncertain sound on their gospel trumpets—determine that you will, by God's grace, for His glory, and out of love for Him, contend against all error, and for all the faith once delivered to the saints (Jude 3). Do not fear man—you will be called "uncharitable," "too negative," "narrowminded," and all sorts of other names (Luke 6:22, 26). Instead, consider that the Apostle Paul commanded the marking and avoidance of false teachers in the context of his love for large numbers of God's dear people.[1508] Think on the love for the Father, for His people, and for the truth that filled the soul of the Lord Jesus, and led Him to boldly and pointedly denounce error (Matthew 23). Be Christlike—go, and do likewise.

Consider also what dangers there are that yet lie buried within your fallen heart. How Mrs. Smith was led astray by trusting in her own heart, in the Inner Light delusion, and in her continuationist Quakerism! While she was totally blind because of her unregenerate state, you, oh Christian, still have the serpent of indwelling sin lying within your own bosom. How essential it is that you reject all extra-Biblical revelation, and carefully study the Bible, cleave to its every precept, and prize it as your sole authority! The Sword of the Spirit is the only offensive weapon in your spiritual armor, and the only means through which you can stand against the wiles of the devil (Ephesians 6:10-17). How important it is for you to carefully and accurately exegete Scripture, put in practice all it says with holy fear and trembling, and walk humbly with your God, trusting in Jesus only!

Consider how essential it is for you to be a functioning member of a strong, separated, independent Baptist church. Only in the Lord's church is His special presence manifested, and the special protection Christ gives to His holy temple and beloved bride is lost to those who are not members of Biblical Baptist churches. Mrs. Smith, being without the protection afforded by a true church, and without a true pastor for spiritual protection (Hebrews 13:7, 17), was influenced by hordes of false teachers and fanatics in her spiritual journey on the broad road to destruction. Spiritual guides may be very popular in the eyes of the broad and undiscerning world of Christiandom, and may possess a great appearance of piety, and yet be vipers and wolves—but Christ's true congregations have the spiritual equipment to discern and reject such. Had Mrs. Smith been aware of and adopted the historic Baptist doctrine of Spirit baptism, she would never have believed in the filthy perversion that led to her husband's public disgrace and contributed to his continuing adultery and the unhappiness of her marriage. Had she accepted the clear Biblical teachings of sola Scriptura and the cessation of the sign gifts, she would not have accepted the "miraculous" validation that led her into false teaching and led her sister Mary Thomas to an early grave through the false wonders of the Faith Cure. Had she rejected feminism for the loving and God-ordained patriarchy of family and church practiced in Biblical assemblies, she would have recognized that she could, as a lady, be more easily deceived (1 Timothy 2:14), and that she needed godly, Bible-believing men at home and church to protect her from error. Had she treasured Baptist ministers who preached a pure gospel, instead of finding them repulsive because they would not allow her to feel happy in her delusion, so that she preferred as a consequence the company of heretics and fanatics, she could have been saved herself, and her family with her, from both the earthly vanity of their false religion and the inconceivably horrible eternal consequences of the unpropitiated wrath of God.

---

[1508] Compare Romans 16:17-18 with 16:1-16.

Learn from Mrs. Smith's failures the necessity for a genuine vital piety, one which arises out of a true conversion and issues in a close walk with God. Mrs. Smith's false piety did not convince her family—her husband and all her surviving children rejected Christianity. People read her books and looked up to her, but those who knew Mrs. Smith best rejected godliness for rebellion against Jehovah, and received eternal retribution for their sins. Have you been led by Mrs. Smith's confusing views of faith, conversion, and salvation to settle for anything less than the supernatural new birth without which no one will enter the kingdom of God? Do you only have assurance of salvation if you compare yourself to the standard set by Hannah W. Smith, but not if you compare yourself to the standard set forth by the Apostle John in his first inspired epistle? Do not follow into hell the demons who misled Hannah W. Smith. Be satisfied with nothing less than the Biblical gospel and true conversion.

Do you want a godly seed—do you want your family, for whatever generations may be left until the return of Christ, to know and serve your Redeemer in spirit and in truth? The sham spirituality of Hannah W. Smith will never suffice. But if you reject such pseudo-Christianity and sincerely and uprightly walk with God your Father, through Christ your Redeemer, as empowered by the Holy Spirit, you can claim the promise of Proverbs 22:6: "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it."

Do not turn aside to the idol of Hannah W. Smith's "bare God." An unconverted person who does so will be eternally damned, and to whatever extent a regenerate person turns from the God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit to Mrs. Smith's deity he will find his spiritual life much darkened and his holy Father much displeased. Genuine Christian spirituality arises out of the love of the Father, the purchase of the Son, and the applicatory work of the Holy Spirit. How sweet and precious to the saint is his dear adopted Father! How glorious is the redemptive work of Christ! How heart-melting it is to behold Him in the glory of His essential Deity, to marvel at the preciousness of His sinless humanity, and to be moved by the infinite condescension and love shown in the cross! How ineffably wonderful it is to know experientially the communion of the Holy Ghost! Do not, oh saint of God, turn aside from your own Redeemer, your own personal God who has come to you in Jesus Christ, who has supernaturally revealed Himself to you through His Word by His Spirit. What are the dregs of Mrs. Smith's idolatry to the overflowing cup of infinite blessing found in Jehovah, the living God?

Furthermore, you should examine yourself to see if you find Mrs. Smith's errors unbearable, horrible, and exceedingly grievous, or if you find her abominations titillating and exciting, as many ungodly people find gossip. Is it necessary to expose Hannah W. Smith's lies and unmask her pernicious character? Yes—certainly. Should such an expose be examined as a mere intellectual exercise, a curiosity comparable to some strange gene-spliced monster that might be on display at a circus or a fair for people to gawk at? By no means.

Indeed, how sweet—how precious, glorious, and soul-refreshing it is to turn with disgust from Hannah W. Smith to behold the Lord Jesus! Here is One who is spotless in purity. Here is one who mixes, not secret corruptions with false teachings, but perfect holiness with infallibly sure guidance. Here is a perfect Prophet, a spotless Priest, a matchless King, an all-sufficient Redeemer, one who is fairer than the children of men, whose lips are full of grace. How blessed it is to see Him in His holy Word, and find in Him a true Shepherd who properly and perfectly cares for, protects, and gives His life for His beloved sheep. Let the works of Hannah W. Smith, and all her fellow false-shepherds, be put in the trash where they belong, and listen instead to the voice of this true and unerring Pastor. Hearken to His voice as you read every line of His Word in your personal Bible study—hearken to His voice as He is preached by a true man of God in the church of the living God—meditate upon His law day and night. So shall you have a truly blessed life during your earthly pilgrimage, and a rich reward in the coming life of sight for all eternity.

J. Excursus XI: An Analysis and Critique of Keswick Theology as Set Forth Particularly In So Great Salvation: The History and Message of the Keswick Convention, by Steven Barabas[1509]

1.) The Background and History of the Keswick Convention and Keswick Theology Stephen Barabas's So Great Salvation is widely considered the standard interpretation of Keswick theology. In a preface to the book by Fred Mitchell, "Chairman of the Keswick Convention Council, 1948-1951," Mitchell states that Barabas's book is "faithful and accurate; it is well annotated with sources of his information; it is saturated with an appreciative spirit, for he himself has been so much helped by Keswick. The book will form a text-book and a reference book on this unique movement."[1510] Thus, its contents accurately represent the theology of the original Keswick movement. Indeed, "Steven Barabas['s] . . . book So Great Salvation is perhaps the single best interpretation of the message of Keswick."[1511] "The most objective account and appraisement of the . . . Keswick . . . movement is So Great Salvation: The History and Message of The Keswick Convention—an extraordinarily exact account . . . [written] after exhaustive research."[1512] Keswick's "standard

---

1509 So Great Salvation: The History and Message of the Keswick Convention, Steven Barabas. Eugene, OR: Wipf & Stock, 2005. Orig. pub. 1952.

While Hebrews 2:3 is the most likely source, it is possible that Barabas took his title from a book by Keswick leader George MacGregor wrote of the same name in 1892 (pgs. 105-107, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention, Polluck). While the Author of Hebrews would disagree, MacGregor believed that a man such as Robertson Smith was "a reverent and believing critic . . . of the Bible" (pg. 106-107, ibid), although Smith brought Wellhausen's Documentary Hypothesis to the English-speaking world and was expelled from the Free Church College at Aberdeen for heresy. "W. Robertson Smith, a cleric in Scotland, was subject to a heresy trial by the Scottish Presbyterian Church. He was accused of denying the deity of Christ. He responded, 'How can they say that? I have never denied the divinity of any man, let alone that of Jesus Christ'" (pg. 59, The Speaker's Quote Book, Roy B. Zuck. Grand Rapids, MI: Kregek Publications, 1997; cf. pg. 758, Christian Theology, Millard J. Erickson. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Books, 1998).

1510 Pgs. ix-x, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1511 "Keswick and the Higher Life," http://www.seeking4truth.com/keswick.htm.

1512 Pg. 20, Keswick's Authentic Voice, ed. Stevenson.

interpretation is Steven Barabas, So Great Salvation."[1513] Consequently, the analysis of the Keswick system below will engage Barabas's book in detail while also evaluating other Keswick classics.

Barabas notes that in "the early 1870s . . . the Keswick movement had its rise in England."[1514] The "friends [Quakers] introduced the subject"[1515] of the Higher Life, although there were also very significant background influences of Roman Catholic mystics and heretics such as the monks "Thomas á Kempis[1516] [and] Brother

---

[1513] Pg. 112, Theological Roots of Pentecostalism, Dayton.

[1514] Pg. 15, So Great Salvation, Barabas. Barabas follows W. H. Griffith Thomas in claiming that Walter Marshall's The Gospel Mystery of Sanctification, written in 1692, is a Keswick antecedent. However, "the Keswick view is incompatible with Marshall's because the Keswick view is influenced by a Wesleyan second work of the Spirit that is conditioned on the believer's consecration. . . . Despite their claims to the contrary . . . Keswick theology is both historically and theologically novel" (pg. 72, 211 Let Go and Let God? A Survey and Analysis of Keswick Theology, Andrew D. Naselli). A more accurate and less historically revisionistic view of Marshall's work is that the book is a "Puritan classic on sanctification" (pg. 692, A Puritan Theology: Doctrine for Life, J. R. Beeke & M. Jones). Compare also "Sanctification by Faith: Walter Marshall's Doctrine of Sanctification in Comparison with the Keswick View of Sanctification," Cheul Hee Lee. Ph. D. diss., Westminster Theological Seminary, 2005.

Barabas also claims that William Romaine's books The Life of Faith, The Walk of Faith, and The Triumph of Faith were Keswick antecedents. However, J. C. Ryle's assessment that the books taught the older evangelical doctrine of sanctification, not the Keswick doctrine, is more accurate (cf. pg. xxix, Holiness: Its Nature, Hindrances, Difficulties and Roots, J. C. Ryle. London: William Hunt and Company, 1889).

Barabas may perhaps be cleared somewhat from historical revisionism in that he only implies that Walter Marshall and William Romaine taught Keswick theology, without actually stating it. In the midst of his discussion of the actual origination of Keswick theology by the Pearsall Smiths, he cites Romaine and also Griffith-Thomas's claim that the essentials of Keswick are found in Marshall. The only specific claim Barabas himself makes for Marshall and Romaine is that the men taught "the possibility of fellowship with Christ closer than than enjoyed by the generality of Christians" (pg. 16, So Great Salvation). Of course, an affirmation that Christians can walk more closely with God could be made for just about every devotional book ever written in Christendom. The reader will naturally assume that Barabas is not just making an empty affirmation that Marshall and Romaine wrote books that explained how one could draw closer to God but that the two men actually taught Keswick theology. It is uncertain whether Barabas qualified his specific affirmations simply because he wrote carelessly or because he knew that neither Marshall nor Romaine actually taught Keswick doctrine.

Contrast Barabas's inaccurate and hagiographical explanation of the development of the Keswick movement with B. B. Warfield's accurate one, where the widespread influence of both Mr. and Mrs. Smith, and their connection to earlier and later errors in sanctification, is carefully documented ("The 'Higher Life' Movement," Chapter 4 in Perfectionism, vol. 2, Benjamin B. Warfield, pgs. 463-558. Note also Chapter 5, "The Victorious Life," pgs. 559-611; and Chapter 1, pgs. 3-218, "Oberlin Perfectionism," which examines the perfectionist errors of Mahan, Finney, and others.).

[1515] Pg. 224, The Keswick Convention: Its Message, Its Method, and Its Men, ed. Charles Harford.

[1516] Thomas á Kempis, out of his "monastic formation," zealously practiced the anti-Christian piety that springs from the Roman Catholic false gospel. Thomas loved:

> Marian devotion . . . [believed in] the sacrificial character of the Eucharist . . . "meritorious" works . . . [and] den[ied] the crucial importance of Christ's mediatorship and sacrifice. . . . [In his writings, such as] The Imitation of Christ . . . the atoning significance of Christ's work is overshadowed by the exemplary perspective . . . the Holy Spirit . . . remains unmentioned . . . throughout . . . [Thomas has] little to say . . . about the Lord Jesus as a ransom and as our righteousness . . . [he] cannot be considered a fore-runner of the Reformation . . . [but] brokers . . . ideas that are characteristically Roman Catholic" (pgs. 97-102, Sweet

Lawrence,"[1517] and especially the Catholic mystical quietist "Madame Guyon."[1518] Catholics and Quakers were essential theological background for the rise for the rise of the Keswick movement.

The "Higher Life teaching . . . [in] the books of the American religious leaders, T. C. Upham and Asa Mahan . . . [and] W. E. Boardman's The Higher Christian Life"[1519] are also undisputed theological background for the development of the Keswick theology; Barabas thus recognizes Thomas C. Upham as a Keswick antecedent.[1520] He notes without a hint of criticism that Upham wrote Life and Religious Experience of Madame Guyon, a book which Barabas affirms contributed to "the interest of the Church in the subject of sanctification and the Spirit-filled life," as did other works of Upham.[1521] What, then, was Upham's theology? Upham "experienced [entire] sanctification under Phoebe Palmer's influence and gave popular expression to the doctrine in a series of books drawing . . . explicitly on Catholic mysticism and Quietism."[1522] Upham taught, in addition to his Quietistic and Romanist Higher Life doctrine of sanctification associated with Wesleyan perfectionism and Pelagianism, that God was a duality of Father and Mother instead of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. However, this Duality became a Trinity through the appearance of a Son, who is identified with the created order itself. Upham saught to prove this gross idolatry from sources ranging from ancient Gnostics such as Valentinus and Heracleon, to the Jewish Cabala, to assorted other later heretics and perfectionists. He blasphemously wrote:

> God is both Fatherhood and Motherhood . . . from the eternal Fatherhood and Motherhood . . . all things proceed. [A] Maternal Principle . . . Sophia . . . [exists] in the Divine nature[.] . . . [T]he Jewish Cabala . . . [speaks of] a feminine deity . . . called Sophia. . . . John's Gospel . . . identif[ies] the Logos and the Sophia. . . . Sophia . . . was God; not only with God, but was God. . .

Communion: Trajectories of Spirituality from the Middle Ages through the Further Reformation, Arie de Reuver).

It is, therefore, not surprising that "Ignatius Loyola, founder of the Jesuit order[,] . . . was accustomed to reading a chapter in the book [The Imitation of Christ] daily" (pgs. 74-75, ibid).

1517 Pg. 223, The Keswick Convention, ed. Harford; cf. pg. 482, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875, for testimony to discovery of the Higher Life through "Brother Lawrence" at Brighton.

1518 Pg. 223, The Keswick Convention, ed. Harford.

1519 Pg. 16, So Great Salvation, Barabas. The wider background to the Keswick Convention included the "work of such figures as Charles Finney; Asa Mahan; W. E. Boardman; Hannah Whitall Smith and her husband, Robert Pearsall Smith; Charles Cullis; and others" from the Wesleyan, Oberlin, and Higher Life perfectionisms and continuationisms (pg. 104, Theological Roots of Pentecostalism, Dayton); thus, for example, as noted in more detail below, both the persons and books of Mahan and Boardman were promoted at the Oxford Convention (e. g., pg. 90, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874).

1520 Pg. 16, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1521 Pg. 16, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1522 Pg. 81, Theological Roots of Pentecostalism, Dayton.

> . [T]he somewhat mystic words of the Apostle John . . . [are] the announcement of the infinite Paternity and the infinite Motherhood. . . . Valentinus . . . speaks of the Aeon Sophia . . . [T]he mystics and Quietists . . . recognized . . . the divine Sophia[.] . . . [T]he Sophia . . . or Maternal Essentia or Personality of the Godhead . . . incarnated itself in Christ . . . caused him, in a mother's Spirit though in a male form, to endure his great sufferings[.] . . . [T]he Familists . . . recognize the Maternal Principle as a true and distinct Personality in the Godhead. . . . [The] Shakers . . . [and] Bible Communists . . . [recognize] that the Divine Nature is dual in its personalities . . . and includes the fact of a divine maternity[.] . . . [T]he Catholic Church is often regarded . . . as embodying the idea of the Motherhood element which exists in the Infinite, in its recognition of the holy or deific nature of Mary . . . and in the high honors, and even worship, which it is understood to render to her. . . . [U]nder the influence of inward suggestions, which I will not stop to explain and define . . . [and to] the thoughtful mind . . . the duality of the Divine Existence, written everywhere in the book of nature, necessitates a Trinity. . . . we must supplement the eternal Fatherhood and Motherhood by the eternal Son . . . the great and unceasing out-birth of the Divine Duality. . . . Generically, or considered in the whole of its extent, the trinal out-birth, otherwise called the Son of God, without which the eternal Fatherhood and Motherhood could have neither name nor power nor meaning, is the whole of creation from its lowest to its highest form. . . . [N]ot an insect that floats in the air, nor a fish that swims in the sea, nor a bird that sings in the forests, nor a wild beast that roams on the mountains; not one is or by any possibility can be shut out and excluded from the meaning and the fact of the divine Sonship[.] . . . All living nature then . . . constitutes the Son of God.[1523]

Upham continues to develop his stomach-turning idolatry in the subsequent pages of his book, but the quotation above is enough, if not far more than enough, of a sampling of his vile and devilish nonsense to give the sense of his doctrine. Despite being an unconverted idolator, he was very influential:

> Upham . . . became a Methodist holiness leader after contact with Phoebe Palmer. He studied Fenelon and Guyon, writing a biography of the latter entitled Life, Religious Opinions, and Experience of Madame Guyon. His [works] . . . influenced much of nineteenth and early twentieth century thinking on faith, including A. B. Simpson . . . leade[r] of [the] CMA [Christian & Missionary Alliance].[1524]

Like many other Higher Life writers, Upham also emphasized ecumenicalism and sought to prepare for the one-world religious system of Revelation 17. "On the basis of his experience of the baptism of the Spirit, T. C. Upham proposed the foundation of a League of Nations."[1525] Such a man was Keswick antecedent Thomas Upham.

Barabas also recognizes Asa Mahan, leader of the Oberlin perfectionism, as a Keswick antecedent.[1526] The Oberlin perfectionism of Asa Mahan and his mentor 1523 Pgs. 49-78, Absolute Religion, Thomas C. Upham. New York, NY: Putnam, 1873, pgs. 45-67; cf. also pgs. 337-459, Warfield, Perfectionism vol. 2. Italics in original. The "inward suggestions" Upham speaks of came from the devil, who worked through the Higher Life preacher's corrupt and unregenerate nature.

---

1524 Pg. 43, Only Believe: Examining the Origin and Development of Classic and Contemporary Word of Faith Theologies, Paul L. King. See also "The Mystical Perfectionism of Thomas Cogwell Upham," Chapter 3 in Perfectionism, vol. 2, B. B. Warfield.

1525 Pg. 21, The Pentecostals, Hollenweger.

1526 Pg. 16, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

Charles Finney were indeed important to the rise of the Keswick system,[1527] and were recognized by Keswick as essential historical background for the genesis of their doctrine. "In 1872, [Mahan] moved to England and directly influenced the Keswick movement by his leadership in the Oxford and Brighton Conferences that immediately preceded the first Keswick Convention."[1528] Mahan's books were widely propogated in Higher Life circles, so that "Keswick writers . . . often mention or quote Asa Mahan . . . and Charles G. Finney."[1529] Indeed, "none . . . of . . . the 'conversational meetings' at Oxford . . . . was of more interest than that . . . under the guidance of Asa Mahan," who strongly taught orally the necessity of Christians receiving Spirit baptism, as he had already proclaimed in his book The Baptism of the Holy Ghost.[1530] As a consequence of Mahan's "pressing upon" people, "[d]ay after day," the necessity of Christians receiving Spirit baptism, "a[n] . . . experience we should not and must not be without," "many . . . realised in his conversational meetings the baptism" and entered into Mahan's experience.[1531] Likewise, at "the Brighton Convention (of which he was one of the conveners) Mahan directed a series of sectional meetings . . . crowded to overflowing . . . [e]ach afternoon,"[1532] proclaiming post-conversion Spirit baptism. "Mahan carried the message" of the necessity of a post-conversion "Baptism of the Holy Ghost . . . to the Oxford (1874) and Brighton (1875) meetings from which the Keswick movements emerged . . . he spoke and led very popular seminars on the subject,"[1533] leading many into his second blessing Baptism experience,[1534] as Robert P. Smith and others led many to adopt the doctrine of the "physical thrills" of a post-conversion erotic Spirit baptism

---

[1527] Compare A. T. Pierson's recognition of Finney as a Higher Life antecedent and promulgator of the libertarian "liberty of the Human Will, in salvation and sanctification," so that all effectual influences of the Holy Spirit on the human will, and compatiblist views of freedom, were rejected (pg. 10, Forward Movements of the Last Half Century, Pierson).

[1528] Pgs. 98-99, Let Go and Let God? A Survey and Analysis of Keswick Theology, Andrew Naselli; pgs. 18-24, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

[1529] Pg. 251, Vision of the Disinherited: The Making of American Pentecostalism, Robert Anderson.

[1530] Compare pgs. 49, 81-83, 141-143, 192, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.

[1531] Pg. 143, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874; cf. pgs. 176, 192, 215, 241, 278, 333, 341, 356, 360, 369, 371-372, 376, 381.

[1532] Dayton, Donald W., "Asa Mahan and the Development of American Holiness Theology," Donald Dayton. Wesleyan Theological Journal 9:1 (Spring 1974): 60-69; cf. pg. 141, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874 & pgs. 383-385, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875.

[1533] Pgs. 46-47, Aspects of Pentecostal-Charismatic Origins, ed. Synan.

[1534] Pgs. 384-385, 457, 466-469, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton.

through the propogation of this doctrine at Oxford and elsewhere. Indeed, as Mahan and Robert P. Smith explained, the "object of the . . . Meeting at Oxford . . . was to lead Christians to . . . [be] baptised with the Holy Ghost."[1535] William "Boardman . . . link[ed] up with Mahan to conduct revivals in both America and Britain, and both were to have a direct influence on the spiritual and theological direction of the Keswick Conferences."[1536]

Mahan, as "the major architect . . . of the controversial 'Oberlin Perfectionism,'"[1537] in addition to teaching "the immediate attainment of entire sanctification by a special act of faith directed to this end,"[1538] denied the doctrine of original sin[1539] and promulgated other heresies along with the perfectionism of his mentor and colleague Charles Finney at Oberlin College.[1540] Mahan's development of the post-conversion crisis of sanctification and Spirit baptism contributed greatly to the "rise of modern Pentecostalism . . . [i]t is not surprising that modern Pentecostalism should sprout in th[e] well prepared ground" of the heterodox Oberlin holiness and pneumatological doctrines powerfully promulgated by Mahan, and, through his influence, "there seem to be several instances of this experience [of tongues] in holiness circles between 1870 and the outbreak of Pentecostalism in 1900."[1541]

Finney, whose theology helped to destroy the Second Great Awakening and hinder subsequent revival,[1542] likewise taught at Oberlin a Pelagian view of sin while denying substitutionary atonement in favor of the governmental atonement heresy,[1543] among other damnable heresies. For Finney, the "atonement . . . was not a commercial transaction . . . [not] the payment of a debt . . . [but] was intended as a satisfaction of public justice."[1544] He also wrote:

1535 Pg. 19, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.

1536 "Wesleyan and Reformed Impulses in the Keswick and Pentecostal Movements," Peter Althouse. Pneuma Foundation. http://www.pneumafoundation.org.

1537 "Asa Mahan and the Development of American Holiness Theology," Donald W. Dayton. Wesleyan Theological Journal 9:1 (Spring 1974): 60-69.

1538 Pg. 67, Perfectionism vol. 2, Warfield.

1539 Pg. 126, Perfectionism vol. 2, Warfield.

1540 Compare pgs. 1-218, Perfectionism, vol. 2, Warfield.

1541 "Asa Mahan and the Development of American Holiness Theology," Donald W. Dayton.

1542 See "Considerations on Revival in American History," by Thomas Ross. Elec. acc. http://faithsaves.net.

1543 Compare pg. 102, the Evangelical Dictionary of Theology, Walter Elwell, ed., Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Books, 1984, and pgs. 312-330, Lectures in Systematic Theology, Henry C. Thiessen, Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1949, for a statement and a refutation of the governmental theory.

1544 Pgs. 219-222, Finney's Systematic Theology, Charles Finney.

> Moral depravity . . . cannot consist . . . in a sinful constitution . . . [or] an attribute of human nature . . . [m]oral depravity is not then to be accounted for by ascribing it to a nature or constitution sinful in itself. To talk of a sinful nature, or sinful constitution, in the sense of physical sinfulness, is to ascribe sinfulness to the Creator, who is the author of nature. . . . What ground is there for the assertion that Adam's nature became in itself sinful by the fall? This is a groundless, not to say ridiculous, assumption, and an absurdity. . . . This doctrine is . . . an abomination alike to God and the human intellect.[1545]

Furthermore, Finney's denial of substitutionary atonement led him to reject justification by the imputed righteousness of Christ to teach salvation by personal obedience: "If [Christ] obeyed the law as our substitute, then why should our own return to personal obedience be insisted upon as a sine qua non of our salvation?"[1546] Finney plainly stated that the truth of justification by faith alone based on the imputed righteousness of Christ (Romans 3:19-28) was a different gospel from the one he believed and taught. By rejecting the true gospel, Finney indicated that he was an accursed false teacher who suffered eternal damnation (Galatians 1:8-9). In his Systematic Theology, Finney accurately summarized the true gospel and then plainly rejected it:

> Those who hold that justification by imputed righteousness is a forensic proceeding, take a view of final or ultimate justification, according with their view of the transaction. With them, faith receives an imputed righteousness, and a judicial justification. The first act of faith, according to them, introduces the sinner into this relation, and obtains for him a perpetual justification. They maintain that after this first act of faith it is impossible for the sinner to come into condemnation; that, being once justified, he is always thereafter justified, whatever he may do; indeed that he is never justified by grace, as to sins that are past, upon condition that he ceases to sin; that Christ's righteousness is the ground, and that his own present obedience is not even a condition of his justification, so that, in fact, his own present or future obedience to the law of God is, in no case, and in no sense, a sine qua non[1547] of his justification, present or ultimate. Now this is certainly another gospel from the one I am inculcating. It is not a difference merely upon some speculative or theoretic point. It is a point fundamental to the gospel and to salvation, if any one can be. Let us therefore see which of these is the true gospel. I object to this view of justification[.] . . . The doctrine of a literal imputation of Adam's sin to all his posterity . . . [and] of the literal imputation of Christ's righteousness or obedience to the elect, and the consequent perpetual justification of all that are converted from the first exercise of faith, whatever their subsequent life may be—I say I regard these dogmas as fabulous, and better befitting a romance than a system of theology.[1548]

Finney called men to surrender to Christ because, as befit his doctrine of salvation by personal obedience and rejection of the eternal security of the believer, perfect consecration of life and his version of sinless perfection were an essential condition for entrance into heaven:

> We shall see that perseverance in obedience to the end of life is also a condition of justification . . . present, full, and entire consecration of heart and life to God and His service, is an unalterable condition of present pardon of past sin, and of present acceptance with God. . . . [T]he penitent soul remains justified no longer than this full-hearted consecration continues.[1549]

1545 Pgs. 249-250, 261-263, Finney's Systematic Theology, Charles Finney.

1546 Pg. 218, Finney's Systematic Theology, Charles Finney.

1547 Latin for "an essential condition."

1548 Pgs. 369-371, Finney's Systematic Theology, Charles Finney.

1549 Pgs. 367, 369, Finney's Systematic Theology, Charles Finney.

Mahan and Finney's false gospel were intimately bound up with their perfectionism. The perfectionist doctrine of sanctification promulgated by Finney and Mahan was very influential in the development of the Keswick theology, both through Mahan's personal preaching and through the books of both men:

> The links between Keswick and New School revivalism [Oberlin perfectionism] were many. Both Mahan and Boardman's involvement in the Oxford and Brighton conferences helped unify the higher life aspirations arising from the "Oberlizing of England." Furthermore, the Reverend John Moore was close friends with Charles Finney, a relationship which no doubt had influence on his son, C. G. Moore, one of the early Keswick speakers.[1550]

The rationale of Old School opposition to Finney and Mahan is noteworthy:

> Old School advocates . . . opposed the "second blessing" heresy [of Finney and Mahan] because [they] believed it not only violated the . . . doctrine of depravity, but that it adopted the modernist reliance of human ability. The concern of Old School advocates was that New School proponents were being unduly influenced by German liberal theology, particularly in the elevation of humanist philosophy. . . . New School theology was not only influenced by the rational pragmatism of the nineteenth century, particularly in the new measure procedures, but . . . the emphasis upon human responsibility in [the] New School . . .was the direct result of modernist thought.[1551]

Indeed, "[f]rom . . . the person and work of Charles Finney . . . the line is a straight one that leads through the holiness movement directly into Pentecostalism."[1552] Such were Asa Mahan and Charles Finney, architects of the Oberlin perfectionism and antecedents to the Keswick theology. Sadly, Stephen Barabas, with criminal neglect, suppresses, fails to warn of, and breaths not a whisper about the heresies of Keswick antecedents such as Thomas Upham and Asa Mahan, just as he entirely ignores the heresies, false gospel, and demonism associated with Hannah and Robert P. Smith.

While earlier perfectionist heretics were important, Barabas recognizes that "the Keswick movement had its [actual] genesis . . . [through] Mr. and Mrs. Robert Pearsall Smith [and the influence of three of their books, including Mrs. Smith's] The Record of a Happy Life,"[1553] after "Conferences . . . at Broadlands . . . Oxford . . . [and] Brighton.

1550 "Wesleyan and Reformed Impulses in the Keswick and Pentecostal Movements," Peter Althouse. Pneuma Foundation. http://www.pneumafoundation.org. Quotation marks from Althouse's quote of Bundy have been removed.

1551 "Wesleyan and Reformed Impulses in the Keswick and Pentecostal Movements," Peter Althouse. Pneuma Foundation.

1552 Pg. 42, A Theology of the Holy Spirit, Bruner.

1553 Pgs. 15-16, So Great Salvation, Barabas; cf. pg. 193, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall.

One must not confuse Mrs. Smith's memoir of her son Frank, who died at eighteen years of age (cf. pgs. 33-37, Remarkable Relations, by Barbara Strachey), entitled The Record of a Happy Life (New York, 1873), with Mrs. Smith's classic statement of Higher Life doctrine, The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life (Boston, 1875; often reprinted); one hopes that Barabas has not done so, but has simply cited Mrs. Smith's far less influential biography of her son for some reason instead of her far more influential Keswick classic. Both works do contain Higher Life theology.

Robert and Hannah [Smith] were at the very center of it all."[1554] Barabas provides not a whisper of warning about Mrs. Smith's universalism and other poisonous false doctrines, despite repeatedly citing her book My Spiritual Autobiography: How I Discovered The Unselfishness of God, which she wrote specifically to turn people from Christian orthodoxy to heresy, and where her universalist heresy is blatently and grossly set forth.[1555] In any case, it is clear that "the first steps . . . [towards] [t]he Keswick Convention . . . owe . . . everything to a Quaker glass manufacturer from Philadelphia, Robert Pearsall Smith[.]"[1556] Mr. Smith "was instrumental, not only in establishing Keswick as a perennial convention, but also in introducing the Keswick emphases back into the United States."[1557] Barabas indicates that "[b]oth [the Smiths] were born and bred Quakers,"[1558] having "always held the Quaker teaching concerning the Inner Light and passivity."[1559] They brought their Quaker theology and other distinctive heresies into the Keswick movement which they founded.

The "new revelation [of the Keswick theology of sanctification] came to Mrs. Pearsall Smith about 1867. . . . At first her husband . . . was somewhat frightened . . . thinking she had gone off into heresy . . . [but then he] came into her experience when she called his attention to Romans vi. 6."[1560] Unfortunately, Mrs. Smith did not interpret Romans 6:6 correctly, and she led her husband into an erroneous view of the verse as well. The erroneous interpretation of Romans six adopted by Hannah and Robert P. Smith continued to dominate the Keswick convention for many decades:

> In the history of the Keswick Convention, if one passage of Scripture is to be identified as playing a larger role than any other, it would have to be Romans chapter 6. Evan Hopkins said at the thirty-first Convention that no passage of Scripture was more frequently to the fore at Keswick than this one. Steven Barabas finds himself not only agreeing with this statement but adding: "it is doubtful whether a Keswick Convention has ever been held in which one or more speakers did not deal with Romans 6. . . . There is no understanding of Keswick without an appreciation of the place accorded by it to this chapter in its whole scheme of sanctification." The key to this chapter, in the early Keswick teaching . . . [of] Robert Pearsall Smith and his wife Hannah . . . is verse 6.[1561]

1554 Pg. 13, Religious Fanaticism, Strachey.

1555 Pgs. 17-18, So Great Salvation, Barabas. Compare the discussion of Hannah W. Smith and her writings above.

1556 Pg. 920, "A Hundred Years of Keswick," John Pollock. Christianity Today 19:18 (20 June 1975): 6-8.

1557 Pg. 86, Aspects of Pentecostal-Charismatic Origins, ed. Vinson Synan.

1558 Pg. 17, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1559 Pg. 316, The Puritans: Their Origins and Successors, D. M. Lloyd-Jones.

1560 Pg. 18, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1561 pgs. 228-229, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall, citing pg. 94, The Keswick Week, 1906, & So Great Salvation, Barabas.

The misinterpretation of Mr. and Mrs. Pearsall Smith "was largely unchallenged from the Keswick platform until 1965 when John Stott gave Bible Readings on Romans 5-8."[1562] It was very easy for the Smiths to misinterpret Scripture because "[n]either of [the Smiths] had any training in theology,"[1563] in keeping with their Quaker backgrounds; for example, Hannah Smith testified: "[A]s a Quaker, I had no doctrinal teaching . . . I knew literally nothing of theology, and had never heard any theological terms" since in her youth "no doctrines or dogmas were ever taught us . . . a creature more utterly ignorant of all so-called religious truth . . . could hardly be conceived of in these modern times [that is, in 1902]. The whole religious question for me was simply whether I was good enough to go to heaven, or so naughty as to deserve hell."[1564] Despite woeful ignorance of theology and an inability to accurately exegete Scripture, following Hannah's lead, both Mr. and Mrs. Smith embraced and began to zealously propogate the doctrines of the Higher Life that were enshrined in the Keswick movement.

From its "beginning . . . some of the foremost leaders of the Church attacked [the Keswick doctrine] as being dangerously heretical."[1565] Indeed, "the opposition the work was subjected to at the beginning, even from Evangelical clergy,"[1566] was extreme, so that, indeed, the Keswick theology was "looked upon with the gravest suspicion by those who were considered as the leaders of the Evangelical section of the Church."[1567] Consequently, "very few Evangelical leaders ever attended . . . the Keswick Convention . . . which was quite an independent movement," since "the leading Evangelicals held aloof and viewed it with undisguised suspicion," and evangelicals "openly denounced it as dangerous heresy."[1568] Evangelical opposition to Keswick was intense because the founders of Keswick seriously compromised and corrupted or even outright denied the [1562] pg. 234, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall. "Increasingly, the teaching at Keswick in the later decades of the twentieth century would owe more to traditional Reformed thinking about sanctification as a process than to Keswick's nineteenth-century and earlier twentieth-century views . . . [t]he change in emphasis can be traced by looking at the way in which expositions of the letter to the Romans were given" (pg. 80, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall).

---

[1563] Pg. 18, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

[1564] Pgs. 163, 45, The Unselfishness of God, Hannah W. Smith. Princeton, NJ: Littlebrook, 1987. Note Hannah's false gospel of salvation by works.

[1565] Pg. 5, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

[1566] pg. 168, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

[1567] Pg. 162, Memoir of T. D. Harford-Battersby, Harford. The specific reference in the quotation is to the leaders of evangelical Anglicanism, but what was true of them was so much the more true of English nonconformity.

[1568] Pgs. 193, 127, Handley Carr Glyn Moule, Bishop of Durham: A Biography, John B. Harford & Frederick C. Macdonald.

evangel,[1569] the gospel. For example, Hannah believed, among other damnable heresies, that every single person would be saved, denied justification by the imputed righteousness of Christ, the sole authority of Scripture, and the new birth. Robert, while formally adopting a weak and wobbly concept of justification by faith for a time, instead of simply rejecting that core gospel doctrine as he had before, continued to reject eternal security and tied his Higher Life theology into his opposition to the preservation of the saints. Warfield describes Robert Smith's argument against progressive sanctification being incomplete until death, and its connection to Arminianism, as propounded by Smith at the Oxford Union Meeting of 1874, as follows:

> Smith, in the very same spirit, exhorted his hearers not to put an arbitrary limitation on the power of God by postponing the completion of their salvation to the end of their "pilgrimage," and so virtually attributing to death the sanctifying work which they ought to find rather in Christ. "Shall not Christ do more for you than death?" he demands, and then he develops a reductio ad absurdum. We expect a dying grace by which we shall be really made perfect. How long before death is the reception of such a grace possible? "An hour? A day? Peradventure a week? Possibly two or three weeks, if you are very ill? One good man granted this position until the period of six weeks was reached, but then said that more than six weeks of such living" — that is, of course, living in entire consecration and full trust, with its accompanying "victory"—"was utterly impossible!" "Are your views as to the limitations of dying grace," he inquires, "only less absurd because less definite?" The absurdity lies, however, only in the assumption of this "dying grace" . . . Smith describes it as "a state of complete trust to be arrived at, but not until death." The Scriptures know of no such thing; they demand complete trust from all alike, as the very first step of the conscious Christian life. It finds its real source in the Arminian notion that our salvation depends on our momentary state of mind and will at that particular moment. Whether we are ultimately saved or not will depend, then, on whether death catches us in a state of grace or fallen from grace. Our eternal future, thus, hangs quite absolutely on the state of mind we happen (happen is the right word here) to be in at the moment of death: nothing behind this momentary state of mind can come into direct consideration. This absurd over-estimate of the importance of the moment of dying is the direct consequence of the rejection of the Bible doctrine of Perseverance and the substitution for it of a doctrine of Perfection as the meaning of Christ being our Saviour to the uttermost. The real meaning of this great declaration is just that to trust in Jesus is to trust in One who is able and willing and sure to save to the uttermost — to the uttermost limit of the progress of salvation. Death in this conception of the saving Christ loses the factitious significance which has been given to it. Our momentary state of mind at the moment of death is of no more importance than our momentary state of mind at any other instant. We do not rest on our state of mind, but on Christ, and all that is important is that we are "in Christ Jesus." He is able to save to the uttermost, and faithful is He that calls us, who also will do it. He does it in His own way, of course; and that way is by process—whom He calls He justifies, and whom He justifies He glorifies. He does it; and therefore we know that our glorification is as safe in His hands as is any other step of our salvation. To be progressively saved is, of course, to postpone the completion of our salvation to the end of the process. Expecting the end of the process only at the time appointed for it is no limitation upon the power of the Saviour; and looking upon death as the close of the process is a very different thing from looking upon death as a Saviour.[1570]

1569 εὐαγγέλιον.

1570 Chapter 4, "The Higher Life Movement," in Perfectionism, vol. 2, B. B. Warfield; see pgs. 55-57, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874.

Hannah W. Smith also believed, at least for a while, that Christ was the "redeemer . . . from past sins" who will only "redeem . . . from all future sins . . . if [one] will . . . submit . . . wholly to Him,"[1571] a clear anti-eternal security position; however, since she had become a universalist before becoming a Keswick preacher, denying eternal security had became largely a moot point for her. Since Robert and Hannah Smith held extremely compromised views of the gospel, and Hannah even avowed, "I cannot enjoy close contact with [those who] . . . preac[h] . . . a pure gospel,"[1572] it was not surprising that those who loved the true and pure gospel violently opposed the Keswick movement.

Furthermore, "Robert . . . did not try to convert unbelievers; his call was to [preach] a state of Holiness in those who already believed, whatever their creed."[1573] What is more, both Robert and Hannah Smith "belie[ved] in the inner light [doctrine of Quakerism,] to which they [were] . . . united in sentiment. . . . Mr. P. Smith [and his wife's writings] embod[y] the mysticism of Madame Guyon and the medieval mystics, as well as the semi-Pelagianism of Professor Upham."[1574] Consequently, both Mr. and Mrs. Smith rejected sola Scriptura—Robert, for example, proclaimed: "I get one half of my theology from the Bible, and the other half by watching my children," citing "Coleridge" as support for this astonishing affirmation.[1575] Both the Smiths also anticipated Word of Faith heresies.[1576] The demonism and spiritualism of the Mount-Temples and their influence on the Smiths and Keswick through the Broadlands Conferences also constituted a matter of grave concern. Evangelical rejection of Keswick theology was entirely natural. Nevertheless, despite vociferous and continuing evangelical opposition, both Mr. and Mrs. Smith began to preach to large audiences a "doctrine of sanctification

---

[1571] Journal, April 7, 1852, reproduced in the entry for January 12 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter.

[1572] Pg. 29, Remarkable Relations, Strachey; Italics in original.

[1573] Pg. 42, Remarkable Relations, Barbara Strachey. Robert Smith's call was "communicating" the Higher Life "to Christians of all names and connections alike" ("Die Heiligungsbewegung," Chapter 6, Perfectionism, B. B. Warfield, vol. 1).

[1574] Pg. 102, "The Brighton Convention and Its Opponents." London Quarterly Review, October 1875.

[1575] Pg. 118, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874. Likewise, Hannah W. Smith preached at the Broadlands Conference: "I have learnt to know God in my nursery with my children on my lap" (pg. 222, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.).

[1576] For example, Robert preached at the Oxford Convention: "[B]e sure to say [Christian language] aloud—there is marvelous power reflected by thoughts put into spoken words. Keep on saying [such language], even when the heart rebels" (pg. 221, Account of the Union Meeting for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness, Held at Oxford, August 29 to September 7, 1874. Chicago: Revell, 1874; cf. pg. 42). Hannah similarly advised: "[I]f thee continually talks of thyself as being old, thee may perhaps bring on some of the infirmities of age" (pg. 187, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, reproducing Letter to her Daughter, Mary Berreneson, March 5, 1907).

by faith [alone that had been] allowed to lie dormant for centuries, unknown and unappreciated . . . it remained for Keswick to call the attention of the Church to it."[1577]

Specifically, the Keswick form of the Higher Life theology was formulated through the central influence of Hannah W. and Robert P. Smith at the Broadlands, Oxford, and Brighton Conventions that immediately preceded the first Keswick Convention. The first and following Broadlands Conferences was held at the invitation of the dedicated spiritualists Mr. and Mrs. Mount-Temple, and all sorts of infernal spirits, doctrinal differences, and heresies were always present. Speakers included the universalist George MacDonald, who received his prominent speaking position at the direction of his good spiritualist[1578] friends[1579] the Mount-Temples.[1580] He became good friends with fellow universalist Hannah W. Smith.[1581] Nonetheless, while Christian [1577] Pg. 107, So Great Salvation, Barabas. Barabas qualifies his admission that the Keswick doctrine of sanctification was unknown for centuries with the statement "except by a few isolated Christians," since to admit that the Keswick doctrine was unknown to the church of God for over 1800 years would lead to severe doubts about its character. None of these alleged "few isolated Christians" who believed in the Keswick doctrine before the latter portion of the nineteenth century are named, nor do they appear to have provided any written evidence that they ever existed, unless Barabas views idolators like Upham as Christians speaks of them.

---

It should also be noted that it is more appropriate to denominate the distinctively Keswick position "sanctification by faith alone" rather than simply "sanctification by faith," because the fact that without faith it is impossible to please God or be progressively sanctified is obvious and non-controversial on just about any position on sanctification that is adopted by those who recognize the authority of the Bible.

[1578] "Lord and Lady Mount Temple" determined that MacDonald should "have an hour all to himself" to address the Holiness Conference participants. (Circular letter, Broadlands, & December 30-31, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter); cf. pg. 33, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall. MacDonald was perfectly aware of the spirititualism of the Mount-Temples; he wrote, e. g., to his wife about how he witnessed a medium at Broadlands winning a convert to spiritualism by employing her supernatural powers (pg. 26, Ruskin, Lady Mount-Temple and the Spiritualists: An Episode in Broadlands History. Van Akin Burd. London: Brentham Press, 1982).

[1579] Cf. pg. 27, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1580] E. g., Mrs. Smith recorded the events of another conference at Broadlands in 1887 where George MacDonald taught (pg. 98, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith, reprinting a Letter to Her Friends of August 1887).

[1581] The friendship between Mrs. Smith and Mr. MacDonald continued for many years; for example, in 1893 he was her guest at her home, and she wrote of him: "George MacDonald . . . is the dearest old man, so gentle and yet so strong, and with such a marvellous insight into spiritual things. . . . [H]e has done a beautiful work in the world" (pg. 120, A Religious Rebel: The Letters of "H. W. S," ed. Logan Pearsall Smith; from Letter to Her Friends, September 11, 1893). Hannah recommended George MacDonald's book Diary of an Old Soul to her daughter Mary, affirming that it "will help you" (Letter to Mary, January 27, 1883, reproduced in the entry for December 9 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter). Hannah wrote of her great "unity" with "George MacDonald," that they "got very close," and affirmed: "It has been a sort of dream of my life to . . . sit at the feet of [him]," as she was able to do at the Holiness Conferences at Broadlands. MacDonald was a welcome presence and speaker at English Holiness Conferences, for if Hannah W. Smith's universalism was no barrier to her, neither was his universalism a barrier to him—indeed, to Mrs. Mount-Temple, universalism was a reason to receive orthodoxy was by no means held in common by the Broadlands speakers, "[t]he 'Seed,' of which George Fox spoke, was rooted in them all,"[1582] and those in "the Society of Friends"[1583] rejoiced at the messages brought, as did the spiritualist Mount-Temples, who continued their very influential patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Smith. At the first and flagship 1874 Broadlands Convention Robert "Pearsall Smith was chairman and principal speaker, though, before the week was done, it became evident that his wife, Hannah Whitall Smith, was a herald of the evangel they carried yet more effective than himself."[1584] She was the chief of the Broadlands preachers.[1585] Further Conventions, along the same lines and led by Mr. and Mrs. Pearsall Smith, were held at Oxford and Brighton[1586] with ever-larger attendance.[1587] Mrs. Smith was an overwhelmingly captivating preacher, for at those "Conferences at Oxford and Brighton . . . no hall was large enough to accommodate the crowds that flocked to hear her."[1588] The meetings reminded Hannah W. Smith and others "of the days when George Fox," the founder of the Quakers, saw countless numbers "convinced . . . during . . . his meetings," or of the "wonderful Yearly Meetings" that took place in the days of the prominent Quakers "Elisabeth Fry and Joseph John Gurney."[1589] Following these Conventions, meetings specifically in the English town of Keswick, from which the new doctrine preached by promotion and influence (Circular letter, Broadlands, & December 30-31, The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter).

---

[1582] Pg. 62, Evan Harry Hopkins: A Memoir, Alexander Smellie.

[1583] Pg. 64, Evan Harry Hopkins: A Memoir, Alexander Smellie.

[1584] Pg. 64, Evan Harry Hopkins: A Memoir, Alexander Smellie.

[1585] Note, e. g., that a list of Broadlands Conference speakers and attendees places the Smiths first, following only the hosts, Lord and Lady Mount-Temple (pg. 34-35, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910. Cf. pgs. 186-187, where in the list of participants in the last Conference of 1888, she is prominent again, the first woman in the list after the Mount-Temples.). "Amongst the speakers [the Broadlands historian] think[s] first of Mrs. Pearsall Smith[.] . . . 'The angel of the churches,' Lady Mount-Temple used to call her" (pgs. 48-49, ibid).

[1586] "The most popular sessions of the Brighton Convention were those in which Hannah [W. Smith] preached her practical secrets of the happy Christian life to audiences of 5,000 or more, mostly clergymen who were theologically opposed [correctly, 1 Timothy 2:9-15; 1 Corinthians 14:34-37] to the preaching ministry of women" ("Smith, Hannah W. & Smith, Robert Pearsall," Biographical Dictionary of Evangelicals, ed. Timothy Larsen).

[1587] Approximately eight thousand attended the Brighton Convention from around twenty-three countries (pg. 23, So Great Salvation, Barabas).

[1588] Pg. 124, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910.

[1589] Letter to Father and Mother, June 9, 1875, reproduced in the entry for July 26 of The Christian's Secret of a Holy Life, Hannah W. Smith, ed. Dieter. Compare the articles on Elisabeth Fry and Joseph John Gurney in The Biographical Dictionary of Evangelicals, ed. Larsen.

the Smiths came to obtain its name, were proposed in 1875. An Anglican minister,[1590] "Canon T. D. Harford Battersby . . . [who] . . . was part of an old and well-to-do west-[1590] Barabas, who fails to mention that the Anglican minister in question, T. D. Harford-Battersby, had a Quaker background, does record that Harford-Battersby had made the theological rounds from apostate Anglo-Catholicism, to modernistic and evolutionary Anglican broad-churchism, to more evangelical Anglican low-churchism that was "strongly influenced by English Methodism" (pgs. 15, 24-25, So Great Salvation, Barabas). One hopes that Mr. Harford-Battersby did not just adopt better theology than the Anglo-Catholic and modernistic heresies that he had formerly followed but was himself personally born again after turning to Anglican low-churchism, although Barabas makes no mention of such an event. Indeed, Harford-Battersby's two hundred and thirty page biography only states that he "he drew by degrees, but steadily, towards a calm and firm settlement in what are known as evangelical beliefs" (pg. x, Memoir of T. D. Harford-Battersby, Harford), "[b]eginning as a Tractarian, [but] little by little be[ing] led to Evangelical views" (pg. 75, Evan Harry Hopkins: A Memoir, Alexander Smellie). Not a single sentence of the biography of Battersby mentions a new birth experience associated with his rejection of high-Anglican or Tractarian heresies.

It is not at all a good sign that the only record of anything like a conversion to Christ in Harford-Battersby's biography is his own testimony that he first began to repent and believe when he received confirmation. He wrote:

> I had little of Christian principle. I was altogether a thoughtless, vile creature. I . . . was plunged . . . into idleness and dissipation . . . justly might I have been cut off in the midst of this course, but the Lord most graciously kept me[.] . . . [In] the care and goodness of God to me[,] He so ordained it that confirmation should come very soon[.] . . . Then I first learned to turn my thoughts really towards heaven, to repent, and believe in Jesus. (pg. 6, Memoir of T. D. Harford-Battersby, Harford)

Harford-Battersby thus indicates that he was a vile person, full of idleness and dissipation, but the Lord graciously kept him alive until he received the rite of confirmation, through which he came to repent and believe in Jesus. Belief in such a ritualistic false gospel in his allegedly more evangelical and non-Tractarian childhood would provide an easy explanation for his ability to adopt the Roman Catholic heresies taught by (the later Roman Catholic Cardinal) Newman and the other high-Anglican Tractarians at Oxford during Harford-Battersby's college days, such as a "visible church with sacraments and rites, which are the channels of invisible grace, an episcopal dynasty descended from the apostles, [and] an obligatory body of doctrine, to be found in Scripture, but only recognised there by the aid of Church tradition" (pgs. 24-25, Memoir). "Mr. Battersby came under the spell. He missed no opportunity of hearing, not only Newman himself, but Manning and Pusey, and other leaders of the [Anglo-Catholic] movement. He discussed the sermons with his friends. He wrote about them in his letters home, and thus drew down upon himself grave warnings from his father as to the dangers of Romanising views" (pgs. 28-29, ibid). Thus, one can hope against hope that Harford-Battersby was indeed born again at some point, but there is certainly no mention of such an event at any point in his biography. Neither in his childhood before he adopted—which a true Christian will not do—an accursed sacramental false gospel (Galatians 1:8-9), nor after his entry into Anglican holy orders, when he "elected to begin ministerial work in a High Church parish" where baptismal regeneration and other sacramental heresies were taught because of his "admiration for Newman and the other leaders of the Oxford movement," (pg. 52, cf. 43ff, ibid), is there any evidence at all of a genuine conversion. All that is recorded is that he gradually abandoned ritualism for rationalism and the broad-church Anglicanism of Frederick Myers, the curate of the town of Keswick under whom Harford-Battersby served after leaving his first ministry, and whom he regarded as "a guide and as a prophet" (pg. 288, Biographical Dictionary of Evangelicals) although Myers was a spiritualist (pgs. 23-24, The Keswick Story, Polluck). Under him Harford-Battersby learned not to be concerned about "trying to find out the right theory of inspiration" (pg. 67, Memoir of T. D. Harford-Battersby, Harford). He finally replaced Myers as curate after his predecessor's death and then gradually moved towards evangelical ideas—which meant assent to the "truth of Protestant principles" rather than "Anglo-Catholicism" (pg. 60, ibid), not personal conversion and the new birth. Finally, after being convinced by the doctrine of Hannah W. and Robert P. Smith, Harford-Battersby was "persuaded that the current teaching of the Evangelical school itself was defective and one-sided, and . . . of the general truth of the teaching upon which the holiness movement was based" (pgs. 175-176, ibid). He then abandoned mainstream Anglican evangelicalism for the Higher Life doctrine characteristic of the Keswick theology, country Quaker family that had moved into evangelical Anglicanism in the early 19th century,"[1591] and "a friend of his, Mr. Robert Wilson, a Quaker who also was specially blessed [at the earlier Higher Life meetings led by the Smiths] . . . decided to hold a Convention at Keswick, where similar teaching should be given." The "chief Brighton speakers," of whom the most important were certainly "Mr. and Mrs. Pearsall Smith, [were] to take part in it."[1592]

Thus, Quakers were so far from being convicted of sin and of their need to turn from their false religion and false gospel to Christ for the new birth, and instead so happy with the Higher Life theology of Keswick, that one of them could become co-founder[1593] of the meetings at Keswick, be the "the heart and soul" of the Keswick mission fund,[1594] be lauded by many Keswick writers and speakers,[1595] and even be termed "the father of the Convention."[1596] Since the Quakers Hannah and Robert Smith formulated and spread the Keswick theology at the preparatory Broadlands, Oxford, and Brighton Conventions,[1597] such acceptance of Quakerism was entirely expected. As one Quaker periodical noted, extolling the teaching of the Brington Convention:

> [T]his wonderful gathering . . . [taught the] truth [of the Higher Life and] the renewed [post-conversion] baptism of the Holy Spirit . . . [which had been] revived in a time of darkness by the destitute of a clear testimony to a new birth, but possessed of a clear testimony to the second blessing of the Higher Life. Such was the spiritual life of the Anglican Canon without whose entry into the Higher Life at the "Oxford Convention . . . the . . . Keswick Convention would never have had a beginning" (pg. 29, Forward Movements, Pierson).

---

1591 pg. 340, Review by Ian S. Rennie of Keswick: A Bibliographic Introduction to the Higher Life Movements. by D. D. Bundy. Wilmore, Kentucky: Asbury Theological Seminary, 1975, in the Journal of the Evangelical Theological Society 19:4 (Fall 1976) 340-343.

1592 Pg. 170, Memoir of T. D. Harford-Battersby, Harford.

1593 Pgs. 25, 168, So Great Salvation, Barabas. Canon Harford-Battersby, despite Wilson's Quaker theology, considered him a "dear brother" (pg. 195, Memoir of T. D. Harford-Battersby, Harford), and at the Canon's deathbed, Wilson was by his side (pg. 219, ibid).

1594 Pg. 145, The Keswick Convention: Its Message, Method, and its Men, ed. Harford.

1595 For example, the Keswick classic The Keswick Convention: Its Message, Method, and its Men, ed. Charles Harford, is dedicated "to the memory of Thomas Dundas Harford-Battersby and Robert Wilson, Founders of the Keswick Convention." In a chapter on Keswick men, J. Elder Cumming breathes not the slightest warning about Quaker heresies but concludes his very laudatory description of Robert Wilson with the following affirmation, after recounting Mr. Wilson's death: "Truly, the end of that man was peace! Who would not wish for such an end, if prepared for it, as he was?" (pg. 64, The Keswick Convention, ed. Harford). Thus, although Quakers deny justification by the imputed righteousness of Christ and other essential aspects of the Biblical gospel, Keswick leaders wished to be in the same place as Quakers like Mr. Wilson at death. While one can hope that, somehow, Mr. Wilson did not actually believe in Quakerism and its false gospel but was truly converted, wishing to be associated in death with Quakers is not a little unwise.

1596 Pg. 110, Evan Harry Hopkins: A Memoir, Alexander Smellie.

1597 Pg. 118, Memorials [of William Francis Cowper-Temple, Baron Mount-Temple], Georgina Cowper-Temple. London: Printed for private circulation, 1890; pgs. 335, 371, 407, 416-420, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875.

> early Friends[.] . . . It has been often said that the Friends have always upheld this cardinal truth[.] . . . This is undoubtedly true, and many of the early Friends walked in the light of it, as testified by the writings of Fox, Penn, Barclay, Penington, and others[.] . . . Hannah W. Smith . . . felt that she had an especial message to the Friends in this country, and from [her] lucid setting forth of this truth many of us have derived deep and lasting benefit. . . . Perfection lies in this [Higher Life system]. . . . [T]housands . . . every day flocked to hear the Bible readings of Hannah W. Smith, eagerly accepting her clear and winning settings forth of the life of faith . . . [at] the Friends' Meeting House . . . to a crowded assembly, those of our own body were proclaiming in triumphant strains the glory and richness of this full salvation[.][1598]

Quakers were unequivocally welcomed at Keswick as true Christians.[1599] Thus, "[a]t the outset the management of the Convention was entirely in the hands of the two conveners, Canon Harford-Battersby and Mr. Robert Wilson."[1600] The Quaker "Robert Wilson [was] one of the two founders of the Convention and its chairman from 1891 to 1900."[1601] Speakers were for some years only selected at "the personal invitation of the conveners," Wilson and Battersby, although in later times the "the Trustees of the Convention" began to make the selections.[1602] William Wilson, Robert Wilson's son, continued his father's work when Robert became Keswick chairman,[1603] Robert being the "successor" of Harford-Battersby after the latter man's retirement.[1604] The succession was the more natural because Wilson was Harford-Battersby's "principal parish worker," regularly attending the Canon's Anglican assembly Sunday evenings after attending the Friends' Meeting in the morning.[1605] Indeed, Robert Wilson was not only co-founder of Keswick and chairman of the Convention for nearly a decade but was also the author of the Keswick motto "All One in Christ Jesus."[1606] Truly, "without Mr. [Robert] Wilson's support and brave backing, there would have been no . . . Keswick story . . . at all."[1607]

Consequently, the Anglican with a Quaker background, Harford-Battersby, and his chief parish worker, the unrepentant Quaker Robert Wilson, together founded the Keswick convention and "invited . . . leading speakers [such as] Mr. and Mrs. Pearsall 1598 Pgs. 453-464, "Reflections on the Brighton Convention," The Friends' Quarterly Examiner, 9:23-26. London: Barrett, Sons & Co, 1875. Note that pages 416-420 of the Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875 consists of excerpts from this article in the Friends' Quarterly Examiner extolling the teaching at Brighton.

---

1599 Pg. 111, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention, Polluck.

1600 Pg. 13, The Keswick Convention: Its Message, Method, and its Men, ed. Charles Harford.

1601 Pg. 60, The Keswick Convention, ed. Harford; cf. pg. 119, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention, Polluck.

1602 Pg. 20, The Keswick Convention, ed. Harford.

1603 Pg. 14, The Keswick Convention, ed. Harford.

1604 Pg. 51, The Keswick Convention, ed. Harford.

1605 Pg. 30, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention, Polluck.

1606 Pg. 60, The Keswick Convention, ed. Harford.

1607 Pg. 61, The Keswick Convention, ed. Harford.

Smith. Mr. Pearsall Smith promised to preside."[1608] "Robert . . . [was] invited . . . to preside and . . . Hannah Pearsall Smith . . . to give daily Bible Readings," that is, to preach,[1609] as well as to run the ladies' meetings;[1610] Keswick was to be "arranged around the Pearsall Smiths."[1611] However, the Keswick movement almost collapsed as a result of Mr. Smith's hasty withdrawal because of a doctrine and practice that the Brighton Convention Committee[1612] was hesitant to explain, namely, that the baptism of the Holy Ghost was accompanied by physical sexual thrills because of the esoteric union of Christ with His people as Bridegroom and Bride, as described in the Song of Solomon. Publicly admitting what Robert Smith had been teaching would certainly have cast a dark shadow over Keswick, as it was an indisputable fact that even without Mr. and Mrs. Smith's presence "a continuity of teaching [was] maintained . . . the same as that given at the Oxford Conference,"[1613] where the great spiritual secret of erotic Baptism was publicly proclaimed. Besides, in that day of Victorian propriety very few would want to propogate and preach a theology of sanctification invented by such persons. The Keswick leaders consequently deemed it best to conceal the reasons for the withdrawal of Mr. and Mrs. Smith and get along as best they could.

Nonetheless, despite the withdrawal of Robert and Hannah Smith and "other expected speakers,"[1614] the first Keswick Convention took place, "acknowledging the debt [the speakers] owed to Mr. Pearsall Smith,"[1615] and propogating the Higher Life theology of sanctification Mr. Smith had learned from his wife. Despite "violent criticism and opposition . . . [such that to] identify oneself with the . . . Keswick

---

1608 Pg. 25, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1609 Pgs. 29, 149, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall.

1610 Pg. 197, The Keswick Convention: Its Message, its Method, and its Men, ed. Harford.

1611 Pg. 11, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention, Polluck.

1612 The Committee included Evan Hopkins, Stevenson Blackwood, the chairman of the Mildmay Conference, and Lord Radstock. All these were solid Broadlands men, and Blackwood's suggestion led to the expansion of the 1874 Broadlands Conference at the Oxford Convention (pg. 17, The Life that is Life Indeed: Reminiscences of the Broadlands Conferences, Edna V. Jackson. London: James Nisbet & Co, 1910).

1613 Pg. 20, The Keswick Convention, ed. Harford. Harford-Battersby testified to the profound influence of Robert P. Smith upon him and countless others: "Not that I would shrink from confessing the great debt which I, and thousands more with me, owe to that remarkable man whose name has become a by-word and a reproach in the estimation of many whom I greatly honour" (pg. 173, Memoir of T. D. Harford-Battersby, Harford). Thus, "Mr. Smith . . . was at this time an honoured instrument in the hands of God for reviving the spiritual life in the hearts of hundreds, and even thousands, of devoted servants of Christ, both in this country [England] and on the Continent" (pgs. 174-175, ibid). That the teaching of Keswick was that of the Smiths is historically indisputable.

1614 Pg. 26, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1615 Pg. 26, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

Convention . . . [and] Higher Life teaching meant to be willing to be separated from the leaders of the Evangelical Church,"[1616] including opposition by men such as "Mr. Spurgeon," "Dr. Horatius Bonar,"[1617] and "Canon Ryle,"[1618] Mr. Battersby "and Mr. Wilson decided to hold another convention. After that there was never any doubt that it should be held yearly."[1619] The fact that "the greatest Leaders and Teachers of Evangelical Truth thought it their duty to oppose to the utmost what they considered 'very dangerous Heresy'" taught at Keswick and its antecedent Holiness Conventions, so that "the Evangelical Leaders of that day felt it their duty to oppose what they believed to be a false doctrine of 'Perfection in man'" taught at Keswick, was not going to stop

---

[1616] Pg. 27, So Great Salvation, Barabas. "Indeed, it was within the ranks of the Evangelicals that the hostility was most pronounced" (pg. 81, Evan Harry Hopkins: A Memoir, Alexander Smellie), for "the whole holiness movement was subjected to violent criticism and opposition amongst evangelical Christians" (pgs. 31-32, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall).

[1617] Pg. 87, "The Brighton Convention and Its Opponents." London Quarterly Review, October 1875. Dr. Bonar, for example, wrote:

> One thing has struck me sadly in the authorized reports of the Brighton Conference—the number of perverted passages of Scripture; and this is really the root of the whole evil. The speakers first disclaim, I might say, derived theology, and then they proceed to distort the Word of God. . . . I was grieved beyond measure . . . these perversions are part of the system. It cannot stand without them. . . . One of my chief objections to the Perfectionst [Keswick] Doctrine is that it subverts the whole argument and scope of the epistles to the Romans and the Hebrews. . . . Have I written too strongly? I don't think so. Years are now upon me, and I may claim to be entitled to speak; and . . . have this as my testimony before God and the Churches, that I know few errors more subversive of what the Bible really teaches, and of what our fathers of the Reformation died for, than this modern Perfectionism. The thing now called holiness is not that which we find in Scripture, and the method of reaching holiness, by an instantaneous leap, called an act of faith, is nowhere taught us by the Holy Ghost. (pgs. 88, 90, 93, "The Brighton Convention and Its Opponents." London Quarterly Review, October 1875)

[1618] Pg. 87, "The Brighton Convention and Its Opponents." London Quarterly Review, October 1875. Ryle had a blessed and credible testimony to a genuine new birth:

> In 1837 Ryle experienced his own conversion. First, Algernon Coote, a friend from Eton, urged him to "think, repent and pray"; then he heard the epistle one Sunday afternoon in church: "By grace are ye saved (pause) through faith (pause) and that not of yourselves (pause) it is the gift of God." The succession of phrases brought full conviction to Ryle. "Nothing," he said, "to this day appeared to me so clear and distinct as my own sinfulness, Christ's presence, the value of the Bible, the absolute necessity of coming out of the world, and the need of being born again, and the enormous folly of the whole doctrine of Baptismal Regeneration." (pg. 573, Biographical Dictionary of Evangelicals, ed. Larsen)

Some Keswick apologists affirm that Ryle changed his mind about his criticisms of Keswick; however, all that actually happened is that Ryle, in 1892, led in prayer the Sunday after a Convention ended on the platform where the Keswick Convention had been in session the week before. Ryle prayed during a meeting in which D. L. Moody, whose work Ryle commended, was speaking. Ryle supported Moody, while he did not support the Keswick Convention. The fact that Bishop Ryle would lead in prayer in a service where Moody was preaching by no means proves that he had become amenable to the Keswick theology, any more than the fact that he had preached at St. John's Anglican congregation in 1879 before the Keswick Convention proves his endorsement of Keswick, whose meetings in the Keswick Tent he never frequented. Consequently, affirmations such as that of Polluck that Ryle was a "foremost past critic" and his actions indicated that by "1892 . . . Keswick stood accepted by British evangelicals" is not supported by the evidence, at least in the case of Bishop Ryle (cf. pgs. 77-78, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention, Polluck).

[1619] Pg. 27, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

Wilson and Battersby.[1620] Since that time "the Keswick message . . . [has been] carried . . . to almost every corner of the world";[1621] "its influence is seen to-day in every quarter of the globe."[1622] In modern times, Keswick Conventions are held in many cities throughout countries such as England, the United States, Australia, Canada, Romania, New Zealand, India, Jamaica, South Africa, Japan, Kenya, and "other parts of Africa, Asia, and South America"—there are "numerous conventions around the world on every continent which are modelled on Keswick."[1623] Keswick theology appears in devotional compositions by men such as Andrew Murray,[1624] F. B. Meyer,[1625] J. Oswald Sanders,[1626] and Hudson Taylor,[1627] and has "impact[ed] . . . the Welsh revival,[1628] the German holiness movement, Foreign Missions, Conventions Abroad, the American holiness movement, the American Pentecostal movement . . . the Christian and Missionary Alliance . . . American fundamentalism . . . [and] English fundamentalism or conservative evangelicalism,"[1629] as well as offshoots of Pentecostalism like the Health

---

1620 Pg. 38, The Keswick Convention, ed. Harford. Cf. pg. 40.

1621 Pg. 28, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1622 Pg. 30, Forward Movements, Pierson.

1623 Pgs. 11-12, 37, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall.

1624 Murray gave "testimony to the . . . Lord, and what He has done for me at Keswick . . . [and] was in close fellowship with . . . the great Holiness movement . . . [and] what took place at Oxford and Brighton, and it all helped me" (pg. 177, 180, So Great Salvation, Barabas; pg. 448, The Life of Andrew Murray, DuPlessis). Murray spoke "at Keswick . . . [in] 1895 . . . [and] for many years he led a similar Convention in South Africa," where he was a minister in the Dutch Reformed Church (pgs. 177, 182, So Great Salvation, Barabas). Note the discussion of Murray's theology in the chapter on him below.

1625 Note the chapter on Meyer below.

1626 Sanders acted as a "Keswick speaker" and "Chairman of the Upway 'Keswick' Convention, Australia" (pg. 143, So Great Salvation, Barabas), advocating the second-blessing doctrine of "Wesleyan Perfectionism" (pg. 110, Keep In Step With The Spirit, Packer), as "Chambers used the language of Wesleyan entire sanctification," having adopted "Keswick teaching . . . through F. B. Meyer" (pg. 49, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall).

1627 pgs. 150-152, So Great Salvation, Barabas. Hudson Taylor, who spoke at the Keswick Convention of 1883 (pg. 81, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention, Polluck) after discovering "the Exchanged Life," held a partial-Rapture view, following the lead of Edward Irving and Robert Govett, as did D. M. Panton, Evan Roberts, Jessie Penn-Lewis, Otto Stockmeyer, Watchman Nee, and many other advocates of Keswick theology and the Pentecostalism that developed from it.

1628 Evan Roberts, co-laborer with Jessie Penn-Lewis and the center and leader of the Welsh holiness revival, was strongly impacted by the Keswick theology, as was Mrs. Penn-Lewis. Note the discussion of Roberts and Penn-Lewis in the respective chapter below.

1629 pg. 341, Review by Ian S. Rennie of Keswick: A Bibliographic Introduction to the Higher Life Movements. by D. D. Bundy. Wilmore, Kentucky: Asbury Theological Seminary, 1975, in the Journal of the Evangelical Theological Society 19:4 (Fall 1976) 340-343. Barabas even records that "Mrs. William Booth [cofounder, woman preacher, second blessing perfectionist, and coleader of the Salvation Army] . . . remarked that Keswick had been one of the principal means of establishing the Salvation Army" (pg. 151, and Wealth or Word-Faith movement which "arose out of the classic Higher Life, Keswick, and Pentecostal movements."[1630] Keswick became extremely influential:

> Keswick-like views of sanctification [were] promoted by A. B. Simpson, Moody Bible Institute[1631] (D. L. Moody, R. A. Torrey, James M. Gray), Pentecostalism, and Dallas Theological Seminary (Lewis S. Chafer, John F. Walvoord, Charles C. Ryrie). Simpson founded the Christian and Missionary Alliance, Moody founded Moody Bible Institute, and Chafer cofounded Dallas Theological Seminary. Pentecostalism, which subsequently dwarfed Keswick in size and evangelical influence, is the product of Wesleyan perfectionism, the holiness movement, the early Keswick movement, Simpson, Moody, and Torrey. Dallas Theological Seminary, the bastion of the Chaferian view of sanctification, is probably the most influential factor for the [strong influence] of a Keswick-like view of sanctification in modern fundamentalism and conservative evangelicalism.[1632]

The tremendous influence of Hannah W. and Robert P. Smith continues to this day. Not only are their teachings being spread worldwide through the continuing widespread

---

So Great Salvation, Barabas; cf. pg. 151, The Keswick Convention: Its Message, its Method, and Its Men, ed. Charles Harford; pg. 20, Forward Movements, Pierson).

1630 Pg. 64, Only Believe: Examining the Origin and Development of Classic and Contemporary Word of Faith Theologies, Paul L. King. Note also the trajectory from the Keswick movement to Pentecostalism and the Health and Wealth heresy in the discussion of A. B. Simpson and John A. MacMillan in the respective chapters below.

1631 "From Northfield," Moody's annual conference, "Keswick speakers, with Moody's backing, were able to penetrate further into American evangelicalism," so that "in the 1890s Keswick was a significant force molding sections of the evangelical constituency in North America" (pgs. 56-59, Transforming Keswick: The Keswick Convention, Past, Present, and Future, Price & Randall). Moody's "old friend F. B. Meyer" was key in bringing Moody's ministry to the side of Keswick; "a Keswick speaker [was] . . . at every summer conference" at Northfield (pgs. 116-117, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention, Polluck). Moody, with thousands before him, at the time Robert P. Smith was leading the Brighton Convention, asked the crowds to pray for a special blessing "on the great Convention that is now being held at Brighton, perhaps the most important meeting ever gathered together," a public endorsement of Brighton that Moody pronounced on both the first and last day of the Convention (pgs. 47, 319, Record of the Convention for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness Held at Brighton, May 29th to June 7th, 1875. Brighton: W. J. Smith, 1875).

1632 Pg. 255, Keswick Theology: A Historical and Theological Survey and Analysis of the Doctrine of Sanctification in the Early Keswick Movement, 1875-1920, by Andrew Naselli. Ph. D. Dissertation, Bob Jones University, 2006. Abbreviations employed in the source text for institutions have been expanded to give their full names. In addition to Dallas seminary, the influence of Moody and Scofield on the spread of Keswick theology in fundamentalism is very significant: "The return of the holiness teaching to America . . . i[n] [its] Keswick form, was . . . related to the work of D. L. Moody. . . . Moody . . . taught very similar views . . . [to] Keswick . . . and made them central in his work. . . . C. I. Scofield . . . eventually more or less canonized Keswick teachings in his Reference Bible" (pgs. 78-79, Fundamentalism and American Culture, Marsden). D. L. Moody not only prayed for blessing upon the Higher Life meetings at Brighton during his evangelistic campaign in Convent Garden in 1875 (pgs. 23-24, So Great Salvation, Barabas) but also brought many Keswick speakers in who propogated Keswick theology at Moody's conferences at Northfield: "The visits of Rev. F. B. Meyer, and notably of Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe, of London, and Andrew Murray, of Wellington, S. Africa (who were at Northfield in 1895), and the late G. H. C. McGregor introduced into Northfield conferences the grand teaching of Keswick" (pg. 164, Forward Movements of the Last Half Century, A. T. Pierson. New York, NY: Funk & Wagnalls, 1900; cf. pg. 163, So Great Salvation, Barabas; pg. 6, Out of His Fulness: Addresses Delivered in America, Andrew Murray. London: J. Nisbet & Co, 1897). The Keswick theology of Moody, Scofield, and their associates were in turn very influential in Pentecostalism (cf. pgs. 111-113, Vision of the Disinherited: The Making of American Pentecostalism, Robert Anderson).

propogation of Keswick theology, but their message is the root of other forms of error and apostasy in Christiandom, such as, most notably, the Pentecostal, charismatic, and Word of Faith movements.

2.) The Scriptural Aspects of Keswick Theology

Regenerate proponents of the Keswick theology[1633] rightly exalt the Lord Jesus Christ, His power to sanctify sinners, and the necessity of faith in the Christian life. A high regard for these tremendous truths will indubitably strengthen the believer's spiritual walk, and Keswick's proclamation of these Biblical doctrines has unquestionably been a means of Divine blessing upon many. Furthermore, Keswick's preaching that believers must immediately surrender to the Lord and confess sin that is yet unrepented of is eminently Biblical. If, because of Keswick's calls to the surrender of the will, "no man can attend a Keswick Convention and be the same afterwords: he is either a better or a worse man for it,"[1634] such a fact is highly commendable. Strong Biblical preaching does not leave hearers unmoved.[1635] A call to the "renunciation of all known sin . . . and . . . surrender to Christ for the infilling of the Holy Spirit"[1636] is an excellent and commendable message, at least if terms are defined properly. When Keswick emphasizes "the exceeding sinfulness of sin"[1637] and seeks to have "laid bare . . . the cancer of sin eating at the vitals of the Christian . . . [so that] the Christian is urged to cut it out at once"[1638] and come to "an unreserved surrender to Christ . . . in . . . heart and life,"[1639] it does very well. Furthermore, Keswick deserves commendation when it seeks to have the "Holy Spirit exalted . . . [and] looked to as the divine Guide and Governor . . . [and] prayer is emphasized as the condition of all success and blessing."[1640] When some[1641]

1633 The fact that the Keswick theology developed very largely from the writings and preaching of unregenerate individuals such as Hannah and Robert Smith certainly does not mean that all advocates of Keswick theology or those sympathetic to the Higher Life system either endorse or hold to the gross errors of those associated with the development of Keswick. Indeed, the generality of modern advocates of Keswick are ignorant of the corrupt fountain from which their system flows.

1634 Pg. 32, So Great Salvation, Barabas. While it is very hard to prove that "no man" has ever been the same after attending a Keswick Convention, such a goal is, at least, unquestionably commendable.

1635 Acts 2:37-41; 5:33; 7:54-58.

1636 Pg. 35, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1637 Pg. 39, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1638 Pg. 52, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1639 Pg. 58, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1640 Pgs. 131-132, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

1641 Many classic Keswick and Higher Life founders and leaders, from William Boardman to Hannah and Robert P. Smith to Andrew Murray, denied that all believers have the Holy Spirit, affirming instead modern Keswick writers teach that the Holy Spirit "dwells in every child of God . . . [but] not every Christian is filled with the Spirit . . . [and] to be filled with the Spirit is not presented in Scripture as an optional matter, but as a holy obligation that rests upon all Christians,"[1642] they do well. The Holy Spirit, although He does not speak of Himself (John 16:13), is nonetheless God, equal in essence to the Father and the Son, and worthy of all reverence, trust, and worship. Keswick is correct that the "Christian is expected to live in communion with the Spirit[.]"[1643] Furthermore, prayer is unquestionably key to a Biblical Christianity, to the extent that believers are characterized as those who call on the Lord (1 Corinthians 1:2). Keswick emphasis upon the impossibility of "mere moral processes to overcome sin"[1644] and upon the error of self-dependence in sanctification (cf. 2 Corinthians 1:9) is important and correct, as is its affirmation that the believer's "union with Christ in His death and resurrection . . . secures moral renovation as well as justifying grace."[1645] "Anyone who is sensitive to the high demands of the Christian vocation . . . must find himself in deep agreement with the earnest contrition which has characterized so many of the Keswick leaders and with their insistent plea for the appropriation and application of the resources of God's cleansing and sanctifying grace."[1646] Furthermore, Keswick is correct in its affirmation "that in Scripture sanctification comes by faith."[1647] Modern Keswick emphasis upon evangelism and missions[1648] is clearly Scriptural (Acts 1:8) and is a tremendous blessing. Believers who that only those who entered into the Higher Life possess the Spirit. Stephen Barabas does well to reject this false teaching of many early Keswick leaders, although he does not do well when he ignores the facts, revises history, and affirms that the Scriptural position that all believers have the Spirit is universal Keswick teaching.

---

[1642] Pgs. 131-132, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

[1643] Pg. 137, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

[1644] Pg. 75, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

[1645] Pg. 104, So Great Salvation, Barabas. The quotation comes from R. W. Dale, who is supposed to support the contention that "only since Keswick first called attention to the vital significance of [Romans 6] to the whole question of sin and sanctification have theologians even begun to give it its proper place." Barabas also quotes from "John Laidlaw," whom he alleges "bec[ame] one of Keswick's enthusiastic supporters." However, the "biography . . . by his son . . . [of the] great Birmingham Congregationalist, R. W. Dale . . . expressly states . . . that his father did not associate himself with Keswick. It is also highly doubtful that John Laidlaw of New College, Edinburgh, had any significant involvement" (pg. 341, Review by Ian S. Rennie of Keswick: A Bibliographic Introduction to the Higher Life Movements. by D. D. Bundy. Wilmore, Kentucky: Asbury Theological Seminary, 1975, in the Journal of the Evangelical Theological Society 19:4 (Fall 1976) 340-343. Barabas's employment of source material is too often hagiographal, revisionistic, and historically inaccurate.

[1646] Pg. 282, Collected Writings of John Murray, vol. 4, a review by Murray of So Great Salvation, Barabas.

[1647] Pg. 97, So Great Salvation, Barabas.

[1648] The earliest Keswick Conventions, in keeping with the universalism of Hannah W. Smith and the denial of an eternal hell by many others, had no particular missions emphasis and rejected calls to have a missions meeting. When asked, the initial Keswick attitude was that appeals for missions were "quite out gain a greater understanding and practice of Biblical truths such as these through hearing Keswick preaching or reading Keswick literature will be able to grow closer to God and be more effective in serving Him as a result. Such Keswick teachings explain why many have received definite spiritual blessings at Keswick Conventions.

However, while these aspects of the Keswick theology are Biblical, refreshing, and key to an increase in spiritual life, they are not unique to Keswick or to Higher Life doctrine. The historic Baptist doctrine of sanctification has taught all of these truths,[1649] and many old-line evangelical Protestants have done so likewise. One can learn all of these great truths from the Bible alone or from Christian writings without any connection with the Keswick movement. For example, J. C. Ryle, the classic nineteenth century devotional writer and opponent of the Keswick theology, wrote:

> As to entire "self-consecration" . . . of which so much is said in the new [Keswick] theology . . . I never in my life heard of any thorough evangelical minister who did not hold the doctrine and press it upon others. When a man brings it forward as a novelty I cannot help thinking that he can never have truly known what true conversion was. . . . [T]hat the duty and privilege of entire self-consecration is systematically ignored by Evangelicals, and has only been discovered, or brought into fresh light by the new [Keswick] theologians, I do not for a moment believe.[1650]

Nor is the doctrine that sanctification is through faith by any means a Keswick distinctive. The body of non-Keswick Bible-believing Christians hold to this truth:

> Sanctification is by faith . . . Whatever believers get from Christ, they must of necessity get by faith . . . faith is the one receptive grace, the sole apprehensive grace, that hand of the soul that lays hold upon Christ, and puts the believer in possession of the fulness that is in him[.] . . . [A]ll gifts of God come from grace, and all come to faith. Grace is the only fountain, faith the only channel. . . . That sanctification is by faith, then, is essentially a principle of Protestant theology, and is no distinctive feature of the new [Keswick] teaching. . . . [T]he doctrine of sanctification by Christ, through faith . . . had quite as prominent a place as is now assigned to it [in the Keswick theology] in the theology and preaching of the Reformers, of the Puritans, of the divines and preachers of the Second Reformation in Scotland . . . of the sturdy old Evangelicals of the English Church . . . and of the equally sturdy Evangelicals of the Nonconformists . . . [a]nd an equally prominent place does it hold in the dogmatic and homiletic and catechetic teaching of our evangelical contemporaries [in the late 19th century] in all sections of the Christian Church. It is not, then, in respect of these fundamental principles that we differ from the new [Keswick] school. On the contrary, we deny that they have any exclusive propriety in these principles[.] . . . [Rather, what is truly distinctive about Keswick is the idea] that there is a special act of faith . . .

---

of the question; you surely misunderstand; these meetings are for edification!" (pg. 275, Forward Movements, Pierson. Italics in original). Thankfully, this unscriptural Keswick attitude was eventually challenged and reformed.

[1649] See, for example, the historic Baptist doctrinal material in the various chapters of this work. Doctrines such as being filled with the Spirit are found among Baptists far before the advent of the Keswick movement, as documented in the chapter in this book on Ephesians 5:18 and the doctrine of being filled with the Spirit. It is not a little presumptuous to assert: "One has to go back to the book of Acts for a parallel to the exaltation of the Holy Spirit found in the meetings at Keswick" (pg. 38, So Great Salvation, Barabas).

[1650] Pg. 111, "The Brighton Convention and Its Opponents." London Quarterly Review, October 1875. Regretably, Stephen Barabas's bibliography provides no evidence that he read this critique of the Higher Life movement.

> subsequent to . . . conversion . . . [which] Mr. Boardman calls "second conversion," [and] Mrs. Smith calls "entire consecration."[1651]

Sanctification by faith is a Biblical teaching that is by no means a Keswick distinctive—only the unscriptural doctrine of the "second blessing,"[1652] which is connected with a quietistic idea of sanctification by faith alone, is a Keswick distinctive.

The necessity of experiential communion with Jesus Christ through the Spirit by faith is also by no means a Keswick distinctive. John Owen,[1653] who has led many away from Keswick theology to a more Biblical piety,[1654] wrote:

> [Christians ought to] make this observation of the lively actings of faith and love in and towards Jesus Christ their chiefest concern in all their retirements, yea, in their whole walk before God. . . . [T]he effects of his presence with us, and the manifestation of himself unto us[,] [are as follows:]
>
> (1.) Now the first of these is the life, vigor, and effectual acting of all grace in us. This is an inseparable consequent and effect of a view of his glory. Whilst we enjoy it, we live; nevertheless not we, but Christ lives in us, exciting and acting all his graces in us. This is that which the apostle instructs us in; while "we behold his glory as in a glass, we are transformed into the same image, from glory to glory," 2 Corinthians 3:18—that is, whilst by faith we contemplate on the glory of Christ as revealed in the gospel, all grace will thrive and flourish in us towards a perfect conformity unto him. For whilst we abide in this view and contemplation, our souls will be preserved in holy frames, and in a continual exercise of love and delight, with all other spiritual affections towards him. It is impossible, whilst Christ is in the eye of our faith as proposed in the Gospel, but that we shall labor to be like him, and greatly love him. Neither is there any way for us to attain unto either of these, which are the great concernments of our souls—namely, to be like unto Christ, and to love him—but by a constant view of him and his glory by faith; which powerfully and effectually works them in us. All the doctrinal knowledge which we have of him is useless, all the view we have of his glory is but fancy, imagination, or superstition, which are not accompanied with this transforming power. And that which is wrought by it, is the increase and vigor of all grace; for therein alone our conformity unto him does consist. Growth in grace, holiness, and obedience, is a growing like unto Christ; and nothing else is so. . . .

1651 Pgs. 257-259, "Means and Measure of Holiness," Thomas Smith. The British and Foreign Evangelical Review (April 1876) 251-280. Similarly, Jacob Abbott, critiquing William Boardman's The Higher Christian Life, notes:

> Christians all believe that sanctification is the work of faith: that the victory which overcomes the world is our faith. They all hold that the renewal and purification of our sinful nature is, from first to last, the work of God; and that faith connects us with the source of life and power in God; that the ife which we now live in the flesh, we live by the faith of the Son of God. So that it may be as truly affirmed of sanctification, as of justification, that it is all of faith—by grace—and glorying is excluded . . . [for] self-righteousness . . . is such a foe to grace. (pg. 511, Review of William E. Boardman's The Higher Christian Life, Jacob Abbott. Bibliotheca Sacra (July 1860) 508-535)

1652 Compare, e. g., The Two Covenants and the Second Blessing, Andrew Murray. Chicago, IL: Fleming H. Revell, 1898.

1653 Despite the profound impact John Owen's works have made on the Christian world's understanding of the doctrine of sanctification, and the importance non-Keswick evangelicals and historic Baptists place on his writings as a model of non-Keswick Biblical piety, Stephen Barabas's extensive bibliography in So Great Salvation does not include even one work by John Owen. Not a single work by Jonathan Edwards, John Bunyan, John Flavel, or many other classic writers on sanctification are listed either.

1654 E. g., "J.I. Packer's . . . earliest personal Christian experience [was] marked by frustration with Keswick piety then liberation through the influence of John Owen" (pg. 181, The Theology of the Christian Life in J. I. Packer's Thought, D. J. Payne). Note that while elements of Packer's doctrine of Christian sanctification are superior to those of Keswick, his theology as a whole contains serious errors.

This transforming efficacy, from a spiritual view of Christ as proposed in the Gospel . . . [is] the life of religion . . . there must be a view of Christ and his glory, to cause us to love him, and thereby to make us conformable or like unto him . . . [which] is by our beholding his glory by faith, as revealed in the Gospel, and no otherwise. . . . [S]o, unto our stability in the profession of the truth, an experience of the efficacy of this spiritual view of Christ transforming our souls into his own likeness, is absolutely necessary. . . . [T]he beholding of Christ is the most blessed means of exciting all our graces, spiritualizing all our affections, and transforming our minds into his likeness. . . . [I]t is a real experience of the efficacy that there is in the spiritual beholding of the glory of Christ by faith, as proposed in the Gospel, to strengthen, increase, and excite all grace unto its proper exercise, so changing and transforming the soul gradually into his likeness, which must secure us against all [sinful] pretences[.] . . .

[I]f we grow weak in our graces, unspiritual in our frames, cold in our affections, or negligent in the exercise of them by holy meditation, it is evident that [Christ] is at a great distance from us, so as that we do not behold his glory as we ought. If the weather grow cold, herbs and plants do wither, and the frost begins to bind up the earth, all men grant that the sun is withdrawn, and makes not his wonted approach unto us. And if it be so with our hearts, that they grow cold, frozen, withering, lifeless, in and unto spiritual duties, it is certain that the Lord Christ is in some sense withdrawn, and that we do not behold his glory. We retain notions of truth concerning his person, office, and grace; but faith is not in constant exercise as to real views of him and his glory. For there is nothing more certain in Christian experience than this is, that while we do really by faith behold the glory of Christ, as proposed in the Gospel, the glory of his person and office, as before described, and so abide in holy thoughts and meditations thereof, especially in our private duties and retirements, all grace will live and thrive in us in some measure, especially love unto his person, and therein unto all that belongs unto him. Let us but put it to the trial, and we shall infallibly find the promised event. Do any of us find decays in grace prevailing in us—deadness, coldness, lukewarmness, a kind of spiritual stupidity and senselessness coming upon us? Do we find an unreadiness unto the exercise of grace in its proper season, and the vigorous acting of it in duties of communion with God, and would we have our souls recovered from these dangerous diseases? Let us assure ourselves there is no better way for our healing and deliverance, yea, no other way but this alone—namely, the obtaining a fresh view of the glory of Christ by faith, and a steady abiding therein. Constant contemplation of Christ and his glory, putting forth its transforming power unto the revival of all grace, is the only relief in this case[.]

Some will say, that this must be effected by fresh supplies and renewed communications of the Holy Spirit. Unless he fall as dew and showers on our dry and barren hearts—unless he cause our graces to spring, thrive, and bring forth fruit—unless he revive and increase faith, love, and holiness in our souls—our backsliding will not be healed, nor our spiritual state be recovered. . . . And so it is. The immediate efficiency of the revival of our souls is from and by the Holy Spirit. But the inquiry is, in what way, or by what means, we may obtain the supplies and communications of him unto this end. This the apostle declares in [2 Corinthians 3:18]: We, beholding the glory of Christ in a glass, "are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even by the Spirit of the Lord." It is in the exercise of faith on Christ . . . that the Holy Spirit puts forth his renewing, transforming power in and upon our souls. This, therefore, is that alone which will retrieve Christians from their present decays and deadness. . . . [The] remedy and relief [of a] . . . dead [and] dull . . . condition . . . is, to live in the exercise of faith in Christ Jesus. This himself assures us of, John 15:4, 5, "Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches: he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing."

There is a twofold coming unto Christ by believing. The first is that we may have life—that is, a spring and principle of spiritual life communicated unto us from him: for he is "our life," Colossians 3:4, and "because he liveth, we live also," John 14:19. Yea, it is not so much we that live, as he liveth in us, Galatians 2:19, 20. And unbelief is a not coming unto him, that we may have life, John 5:40. But, secondly, there is also a coming unto him by believers in the actual exercise of faith, that they may "have this life more abundantly," John 10:10; that is, such supplies of grace as may keep their souls in a healthy, vigorous acting of all the powers of spiritual life. And as he reproacheth some that they would not come unto him that they might have life, so he may justly reprove us all, that we do not so come unto him in the actual exercise of faith, as that we might have this life more abundantly.

(2.) When the Lord Christ is near us, and we do behold his glory, he will frequently communicate spiritual refreshment in peace, consolation, and joy unto our souls. We shall not only hereby have our graces excited with respect unto him as their object, but be made sensible of his acting toward us in the communications of himself and his love unto us. When the Sun of Righteousness ariseth on any soul, or makes any near approach thereunto, it shall find "healing under his wings"—his beams of grace shall convey by his Spirit holy spiritual refreshment thereunto. For he is present with us by his Spirit, and these are his fruits and effects, as he is the Comforter, suited unto his office, as he is promised unto us.

Many love to walk in a very careless, unwise profession. So long as they can hold out in the performance of outward duties, they are very regardless of the greatest evangelical privileges—of those things which are the marrow of divine promises—all real endeavors of a vital communion with Christ. Such are spiritual peace, refreshing consolations, ineffable joys, and the blessed composure of assurance. Without some taste and experience of these things, profession is heartless, lifeless, useless; and religion itself a dead carcass without an animating soul. The peace which some enjoy is a mere stupidity. They judge not these things to be real which are the substance of Christ's present reward; and a renunciation whereof would deprive the church of its principal supportments and encouragements in all its sufferings. It is a great evidence of the power of unbelief, when we can satisfy ourselves without an experience in our own hearts of the great things, in this kind of joy, peace, consolation, assurance, that are promised in the Gospels. For how can it be supposed that we do indeed believe the promises of things future—namely, of heaven, immortality, and glory, the faith whereof is the foundation of all religions—when we do not believe the promises of the present reward in these spiritual privileges? And how shall we be thought to believe them, when we do not endeavor after an experience of the things themselves in our own souls, but are even contented without them? But herein men deceive themselves. They would very desirously have evangelical joy, peace, and assurance, to countenance them in their evil frames and careless walking. And some have attempted to reconcile these things, unto the ruin of their souls. But it will not be. Without the diligent exercise of the grace of obedience, we shall never enjoy the grace of consolation. . . .

It is peculiarly in the view of the glory of Christ, in his approaches unto us, and abiding with us, that we are made partakers of evangelical peace, consolation, joy, and assurances. These are a part of the royal train of his graces, of the reward wherewith he is accompanied. "His reward is with him." Wherever he is graciously present with any, these things are never wanting in a due measure and degree, unless it be by their own fault, or for their trial. In these things does he give the church of his loves, Song of Solomon 7:12. "For if any man," saith he, "love me, I will love him, and will manifest myself unto him," John 14:21—"yea, I and the Father will come unto him, and make our abode with him," verse 23; and that so as to "sup with him," Revelation 3:20—which, on his part, can be only by the communication of those spiritual refreshments. The only inquiry is, by what way and means we do receive them? Now, I say this is in and by our beholding of the glory of Christ by faith, 1 Peter 1:8, 9. Let that glory be rightly stated . . . the glory of his person, his office, his condescension, exaltation, love, and grace; let faith be fixed in a view and contemplation of it, mix itself with it, as represented in the glass of the gospel, meditate upon it, embrace it, and virtue will proceed from Christ, communicating spiritual, supernatural refreshment and joy unto our souls. Yea, in ordinary cases, it is impossible that believers should have a real prospect of this glory at any time, but that it will in some measure affect their hearts with a sense of his love; which is the spring of all consolation in them. In the exercise of faith on the discoveries of the glory of Christ made unto us in the Gospel, no man shall ever totally want such intimations of his love, yea, such effusion of it in his heart, as shall be a living spring of those spiritual refreshments, John 4:14; Romans 5:5.[1655]

Such declarations were by no means an exception, centuries before the invention of the Keswick theology, in the Biblically-based piety of Owen and vast numbers of like-minded Christians. He wrote elsewhere:

> The . . . daily exercise of faith on Christ as crucified . . . is the great fundamental means of the mortification of sin in general, and which we ought to apply unto every particular instance of it. This the apostle discourseth at large, Romans 6:6-13. "Our old man," saith he, "is crucified with Christ, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin." Our "old man," or the body of sin, is the power and reign of sin in us. These are to be destroyed; that is, so mortified that "henceforth we should not serve sin," that we should be delivered from the power and rule of it. This, saith the apostle, is done in Christ: "Crucified with him." It is so meritoriously, in his actual dying or being crucified for us; it is so virtually, because of the certain provision that is made therein for the mortification of all sin; but it is so actually, by the exercise of faith on him as crucified, dead, and buried, which is the means of the actual communication of the virtue of his death unto us for that end. Herein are we said to be dead and buried with him; whereof baptism is the pledge. So by the cross of Christ the world is crucified unto us, and we are so to the world, Galatians 6:14; which is the substance of the mortification of all sin. There are several ways whereby the exercise of faith on Christ crucified is effectual unto this end: —
>
> (1.) Looking unto him as such will beget holy mourning in us: Zechariah 12:10, "They shall look on me whom they have pierced, and mourn." . . . A view of Christ as pierced will cause mourning in them that have received the promise of the Spirit of grace and supplication there mentioned. And this mourning is the foundation of mortification. It is that "godly sorrow which worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of," 2 Corinthians 7:10. And mortification of sin is of the essence of repentance. The more believers are exercised in this view of Christ, the more humble they are, the more they are kept in that mourning frame which is universally opposite unto all the interests of sin, and which keeps the soul watchful against all its attempts. Sin never reigned in an humble, mourning soul.
>
> (2.) It is effectual unto the same end by the way of a powerful motive, as that which calls and leads unto conformity to him. This is pressed by the apostle, Romans 6:8-11. Our conformity unto Christ as crucified and dead consists in our being dead unto sin, and thereby overthrowing the reign of it in our mortal bodies. This conformity, saith he, we ought to reckon on as our duty: "Reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin;" that is, that you ought so to be, in that conformity which you ought to aim at unto Christ crucified. Can any spiritual eye behold Christ dying for sin, and continue to live in sin? Shall we keep that alive in us which he died for, that it might not eternally destroy us? Can we behold him bleeding for our sins, and not endeavor to give them their death-wound? The efficacy of the exercise of faith herein unto the mortification of sin is known unto all believers by experience.
>
> (3.) Faith herein gives us communion with him in his death, and unites the soul unto it in its efficacy. Hence we are said to be "buried with him into death," and to be "planted together in the likeness of his death," Romans 6:4, 5. Our "old man is crucified with him," verse 6. We have by faith communion with him in his death, unto the death of sin. This, therefore, is the first grace and duty which we ought to attend unto for the mortification of sin.[1656]

[1655] Pgs. 146-154, Meditations and Discourses Concerning the Glory of Christ, in His Person, Office, and Grace, John Owen.

[1656] Pgs. 36-37, A Treatise of the Dominion of Sin and Grace, John Owen. Note that in Owen's day "virtue" meant "power," as it does, at times, in the Authorized Version (Mark 5:30).

The precious Biblical truths set forth by Owen are by no means the peculiar perogative of the Keswick theology, as he wrote of them centuries before the Keswick movement came into existence. Just as Owen declares that "efficacy of the exercise of faith . . . unto the mortification of sin is known unto all believers by experience," and so the necessity of faith for sanctification is by no means a Keswick distinctive.

Perhaps the clearest way to indicate the positive truths affirmed by both Keswick and its critics is to examine the doctrine of sanctification confessed by that staunch advocate of the theology and revivalistic[1657] piety of Old Princeton and inveterate opponent of Keswick, B. B. Warfield. Truths confessed by both Keswick and by Warfield can by no means be labeled Keswick distinctives, but would evidently be the common inheritance of classic evangelical spirituality.[1658]

Warfield, receiving the truth common to old evangelicalism, emphasized the need to depend on the Christ and the Holy Spirit for strength in sanctification, rather than being self-dependent. Indeed, he recognized such dependence was the very essence of religion: "[The] attitude of trust and dependence on God is just the very essence of religion. In proportion as any sense of self-sufficiency or any dependence on self enters the heart, in that proportion religion is driven from it."[1659] The "central truth of complete dependence upon the free mercy of a saving God," Warfield affirmed, "is an absolutely essential element in evangelical religion" which "underl[ies] and g[ives] its form and power to the whole . . . movement" and is key to "a great revival of religion."[1660]

1657 While the theologians of Old Princeton, in light of their recognition that doctrinal error hinders revival, were careful to diagnose and warn about pseudo-revival, they rejoiced to both promote and experience genuine spiritual revival. The love for revival in Princetonians such as Archibald Alexander, who was himself converted in a revival (pgs. 68-69, Studies in Southern Presbyterian Theology, M. H. Smith. Jackson, MS: Presbyterian Reformation Society, 1962) and who wrote Thoughts on Religious Experience (Philadelphia, PA: Presbyterian Board of Publications, 1844), can hardly be disputed. Similarly, Warfield "experience[d] a revival while an undergraduate student at Princeton, one that left a deep and lasting impression" (pg. 568, The Theology of B. B. Warfield: A Systematic Summary, F. Zaspel).

1658 Warfield is probably the best choice to illustrate non-Keswick evangelical piety because of the tendency of Keswick apologists to create, in a historically inaccurate way, orthodox friends of their theology (cf. e. g., pg. 16, So Great Salvation, Barabas; pg. 108, The Faith Response: Understanding and Applying a Biblical View of Dependence on God, John R. Van Gelderen). Thus, Higher Life apologists could claim that writers who lived before the origination of the Convention and advocated classically orthodox piety were actually Keswick antecedents simply because of their advocacy of Biblical truths like living by faith and dependence on the Holy Spirit. Similarly, writers who lived after the origin of the Keswick Convention could be labeled by apologists for the system as teaching Keswick theology, just without knowing about it, for similar reasons. However, it is most doubtful that any Keswick writer would wish to affirm that B. B. Warfield was truly a defender of Higher Life truth, just in disguise. His writings, therefore, provide a safe avenue to a determination of what is involved in evangelical non-Keswick piety.

1659 Pg. 213, The Power of God unto Salvation, B. B. Warfield. Philadelphia: PA: Presbyterian Board of Publication, 1903.

1660 Pg. 357, Calvin and Calvinism: The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 5, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Research Systems, Inc., 2008.

Warfield recognizes that confusing Christian holiness with mere "righteous conduct and of self-sanctification or moral character-formation," so that "the individual Christian sanctifies himself,"[1661] is part of a view of God, sin, and salvation that is a "profoundly immoral doctrine."[1662] The believer must not rely upon his own works for either justification or sanctification; teaching this, Warfield approvingly cited the "the words of the revival hymn" calling men to "'cast our deadly doing down' and make our appeal on the sole score of sheer helplessness . . . [rejecting] . . . self-dependence and [the] power of self-help."[1663] He states that the "very cor cordis of the Gospel" is expressed in the words of the hymn:

> Nothing either great or small,
> Nothing, sinner, no;
> Jesus did it, did it all,
> Long, long, ago. . . .
>
> Doing is a deadly thing,
> Doing ends in death . . .
>
> Cast your deadly doing down,
> Down at Jesus' feet,
> Stand in Him, in Him alone,
> Gloriously complete.[1664]

Consequently, helpless dependence on the perfectly sufficient Christ is the attitude of the Christian:

> [The] characteristic . . . [of] the children of the Kingdom . . . [is to] lay happy and thoughtless . . . in Jesus' own arms. Their characteristic was just helpless dependence; complete dependence upon the care of those whose care for them was necessary. . . . [T]he Kingdom of heaven is made up of those who are helplessly dependent on the King of the Heavens . . . [like] infants who are to be done for, who can not do for themselves.[1665]

Warfield stated:

> [The] evangelical quality of all really evangelical faith [is found in] . . . whoever recognizes in the recesses of his soul his utter dependence on God; whoever in all his thought of salvation hears in his heart of hearts the echo of the soli Deo gloria of the evangelical profession . . . these

---

[1661] Pg. 24, Studies in Perfectionism, Part One, The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 7, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Bible Software, 2008. Italics in original. Warfield is critiquing the theologically liberal perfectionism of Albrecht Ritschl.

[1662] Pgs. 160-161, 63-64; cf. pg. 100, Studies in Perfectionism, Part One, The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 7, B. B. Warfield. Warfield does not limit his reference to the immorality of Ritschl's system to the German rationalist's perfectionist doctrine of sanctification; Ritschl's doctrine of justification and other parts of his system are certainly included and are mentioned in the immediate context of some of the pages referenced.

[1663] Pg. 99, Christology and Criticism: The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 3, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Bible Software, 2008.

[1664] Pgs. 323-324, Faith and Life, B. B. Warfield. New York, NY: Longmans, Green, & Co., 1916.

[1665] Pg. 78, Faith and Life, B. B. Warfield. New York, NY: Longmans, Green, & Co., 1916.

> fundamental principles—which underlie and give its body to all true religion—[ought] to work themselves freely and fully out in thought and feeling and action.[1666]

Warfield explained elsewhere that this utter dependence on the Holy Spirit is characteristic of the Christian piety of all Bible-believing Protestant denominations:

> The evangelical note is formally sounded by the entirety of organized Protestantism. That is to say, all the great Protestant bodies, in their formal official confessions, agree in confessing the utter dependence of sinful man upon the grace of God alone for salvation, and in conceiving this dependence as immediate and direct upon the Holy Spirit, acting as a person and operating directly on the heart of the sinner. It is this evangelical note which determines the peculiarity of the piety of the Protestant Churches. The characteristic feature of this piety is a profound consciousness of intimate personal communion with God the Saviour, on whom the soul rests with immediate love and trust.[1667]

Every single spiritual good comes from the Holy Spirit, Warfield taught, and Biblical religion necessitates utter dependence on Him. Possession of the Spirit is the highest glory of the believer:

> [T]he Spirit of God is the author of all right belief and of all good conduct,—to assure us that then, too, on Him depended all the exercises of piety, to Him was due all the holy aspirations and all the good accomplishments of every saint of God. And certainly the New Testament tells us in repeated instances that the Holy Spirit was active throughout the period of the Old Dispensation, in all the varieties of activities which characterize the New. The difference between the two lies not in any difference in the utter dependence of men on Him[.] . . . Paul . . . is full of joy . . . to have . . . God's Holy Spirit . . . working faith in him[.] . . . He claims no superiority [to other believers] in the matter. If he has a like faith, it is because he is made by God's grace to share in a like fountain of faith. The one Spirit who works faith is the common possession of them and of him; and therein he finds his highest privilege and his greatest glory. . . . [T]he operations of the Spirit . . . Paul represents as the height of Christian privilege to possess.[1668]

Warfield unabashedly identified himself with those in the history of doctrine who were the champions of the grace of God. Self-dependent moralism was the very antithesis of Biblical Christianity:

> The champion[s] of grace . . . entire system revolved around the assertion of grace as the sole source of all good in man as truly and as completely as did that of Pelagius around the assertion of the plenary ability of the unaided will to work all righteousness. . . . [W]e are aided by the grace of God, through Christ, not only to know but also to do what is right, in each single act, so that without grace we are unable to have, think, speak, or do anything pertaining to piety[.] The opposition between the two systems was thus absolute. In the one, everything was attributed to man; In the other, everything was ascribed to God. In them, two religions, the only two possible religions at bottom, met in mortal combat: the religion of faith and the religion of works; the religion which despairs of self and casts all its hope on God the Saviour, and the religion which puts complete trust in self; or since religion is in its very nature utter dependence on God, religion in the purity of its conception and a mere quasi-religious moralism.[1669]

[1666] Pg. 356, Calvin and Calvinism: The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 5, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Research Systems, Inc., 2008.

[1667] Pg. 87, The Plan of Salvation: Five Lectures, B. B. Warfield. Philadelphia, PA: Presbyterian Board of Publication, 1915.

[1668] Pgs. 237-238, Faith and Life, B. B. Warfield. New York, NY: Longmans, Green, & Co., 1916.

[1669] Pgs. 40-41, The Plan of Salvation: Five Lectures, B. B. Warfield. Philadelphia, PA: Presbyterian Board of Publication, 1915.

Rejection of self-dependence, a recognition of the need to trust in the Lord Jesus and the power of the Holy Spirit for strength to live the Christian life, and a rejection of sanctification sourced in the believer's works, is by no means a Keswick distinctive.

Warfield taught that the essence of Christianity is that "all [is] of God and nothing of ourselves"—God's unmerited love gives His people all. Since "the Christian life as a life" is one "of continuous dissatisfaction with self and of continuous looking afresh to Christ as the ground of all our hope,"[1670] believers must always look to the Lord Jesus and depend on Him for grace:

> We may rightly bewail our coldness: we may rightly blame ourselves that there is so little response in our hearts to the sight of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, or even to the manifestation of His unspeakable love in the death of His Son. Oh, wretched men that we are to see that bleeding love and not be set on fire with a flame of devotion! But we may be all the more thankful that it is not in our frames and feelings that we are to put our trust. Let us abase ourselves that we so little respond to these great spectacles of the everlasting and unspeakable love of God. But let us ever remember that it is on the love of God and not on our appreciation of it that we are to build our confidence. Jesus our Priest and our Sacrifice, let us keep our eyes set on Him! And though our poor sinful hearts so little know how to yield to that great spectacle the homage of a suitable response, His blood will yet avail even for us.
>
> "Nothing in my hand I bring, > Simply to Thy cross I cling"—
>
> here—and let us bless God for it—here is the essence of Christianity. It is all of God and nothing of ourselves.[1671]

Through the "gospel the eye is withdrawn from self and the face turned upward in loving gratitude to God, the great giver [in a] . . . continual sense of humble dependence on God and of loving trust in Him."[1672] Warfield noted the teaching of Scripture that, in the workings of the Lord towards His people, "[a]t every step it is God, and God alone, to whom is ascribed the initiative; and the most extreme care is taken to preserve the recipients of the blessings consequent on His choice from fancying that these blessings come as their due, or as reward for aught done by themselves, or to be found in themselves."[1673] Nothing was the product of the believer's own strength; thus, Warfield could encourage believers:

> Faint not! It is not your own strength—or rather weakness—that is . . . in question; it is the power of Almighty God. . . . It was of His own purpose that He called you; the grace that has come to you was given you from all eternity. . . . It is this Almighty God who is using you as His instrument and organ. Nothing depends on your weakness; all hangs on His strength.[1674]

1670 Pg. 90, Studies in Perfectionism, Part One, The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 7, B. B. Warfield.

1671 Pgs. 253-254, The Power of God unto Salvation, B. B. Warfield. Philadelphia: PA: Presbyterian Board of Publication, 1903.

1672 Pg. 213, The Power of God unto Salvation, B. B. Warfield. Philadelphia: PA: Presbyterian Board of Publication, 1903.

1673 Pg. 12, Biblical Doctrines: The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 2, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Bible Software, 2008.

1674 Pg. 408, Faith and Life, B. B. Warfield. New York, NY: Longmans, Green, & Co., 1916.

Since every aspect of salvation was sourced in God alone, Warfield passionately warned of the dangers of self-sufficiency and called upon men to live by faith and to surrender themselves entirely to the Lord:

> The very point of this passage [Habbakuk 2:4] is the sharp contrast which is drawn between arrogant self-sufficiency and faithful dependence on God . . . [I]t is by faith that the righteous man lives . . . the righteous appear . . . as men who look in faith to God and trustingly depend upon His arm. . . . Here we have, therefore, thrown into a clear light the contrasting characteristics of the wicked, typified by the Chaldæan, and of the righteous: of the one the fundamental trait is self-sufficiency; of the other, faith. This faith, which forms the distinctive feature of the righteous man, and by which he obtains life . . . is a profound and abiding disposition, an ingrained attitude of mind and heart towards God which affects and gives character to all the activities.[1675]

Indeed, "[T]he very core of Old Testament religion . . . [is] entire self-commitment to God [and] humble dependence on Him for all blessings," so "[s]elf-sufficiency is the characteristic mark of the wicked . . . while the mark of the righteous is that he lives by his faith (Hab. 2:4)."[1676] Warfield wrote that trusting in God and rejecting self-dependence was not just the very core of Old Testament true religion, but of all true religion in any dispensation whatever: "Now this attitude of trust and dependence on God is just the very essence of religion. In proportion as any sense of self-sufficiency or any dependence on self enters the heart, in that proportion religion is driven from it."[1677] Consequently, Warfield extolled those in church history he understood as recognizing that the essence of true religion is dependence on God, despair of any confidence in themselves, and rejection of mere religious moralism. Such an understanding is key to being filled with love and joy in believing:

> Self-despair, humble trust, grateful love, fullness of joy—these are the steps on which his own soul[1678] climbed upward: and these steps gave their whole color and form both to his piety and to his teaching. In his doctrine we see his experience of God's seeking and saving love toward a lost sinner expressing itself in propositional form; in his piety we see his conviction that the sole hope of the sinner lies in the free grace of a loving God expressing itself in the forms of feeling. In doctrine and life alike he sets before us in that effective way which belongs to the discoverer, the religion of faith as over against the religion of works—the religion which despairing of self casts all its hope on God as over against the religion that to a greater or less degree trusts in itself: in a word, since religion in its very nature is dependence on God, religion in the purity of its conception as over against a quasi-religious moralism. . . . [W]e are admitted into the very life of [the godly man] and are permitted to see his great heart cleansing itself of all trust in himself and laying hold with the grasp first of despair, then of discerning trust and then of grateful love upon

---

1675 Pgs. 469-470, Biblical Doctrines: The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 2, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Bible Software, 2008.

1676 Pg. 11, Biblical Doctrines: The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 2, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Bible Software, 2008.

1677 Pg. 213, The Power of God unto Salvation, B. B. Warfield. Philadelphia: PA: Presbyterian Board of Publication, 1903.

1678 Warfield speaks here of Augustine of Hippo. In light of Augustine's strong advocacy of sacramental salvation and of the idea that outside of the Catholic Church there was no salvation, Warfield's high estimation of Augustine needs not a little modification. Nevertheless, Warfield's statements still show what the Princetonian valued highly as true piety.

> the God who [is] his salvation . . . [such truths have] perennial attractiveness and [the] supreme position . . . [for] edification.[1679]

Warfield believed that the advocates of system of doctrine he embraced were in a special way "called upon to defend the treasures of truth that had been committed to the[m] from the inroads of that perpetual foe of the grace of God which is entrenched in the self-sufficiency of the natural heart."[1680] Warfield believed that part of his calling as a defender of the faith was, in a special way, to fight against that awful foe, self-sufficiency. He wrote: "As over against all teaching that would tempt man to trust in himself for any, even the smallest part, of his salvation, Christianity casts him utterly on God. It is God and God alone who saves, and that in every element of the saving process."[1681] Justification, sanctification, glorification, and everything else in the doctrine of salvation was all sourced in God, not in man himself. Since every aspect of salvation comes from God, Christian life involves despairing of confidence in oneself and a humble and joyful trust in the Lord alone. B. B. Warfield, and the old evangelical piety of his theological tradition, emphasized these truths—they were by no means the peculiar possession of the Kewick theology.

Warfield embraced and warmly advocated the life of faith as the distinctive mark of true piety, affirming the centrality of living by faith not only in the New Testament, but in the Old also:

> [F]rom the very beginning the distinctive feature of the life of the pious is that it is a life of faith[.] . . . Thus the first recorded human acts after the Fall . . . are expressive of trust in God's promise . . . in the great promise of the Seed (Gen. 3:15). Similarly, the whole story of the Flood is so ordered as to throw into relief, on the one hand, the free grace of God in His dealings with Noah (Gen. 6:8, 18, 8:1, 21, 9:8), and, on the other, the determination of Noah's whole life by trust in God and His promises (Gen. 6:22, 7:5, 9:20). The open declaration of the faith-principle of Abraham's life (Gen. 15:6) only puts into words, in the case of him who stands at the root of Israel's whole national and religious existence, what not only might also be said of all the patriarchs, but what actually is most distinctly said both of Abraham and of them through the medium of their recorded history. The entire patriarchal narrative is set forth with the design and effect of exhibiting the life of the servants of God as a life of faith, and it is just by the fact of their implicit self-commitment to God that throughout the narrative the servants of God are differentiated from others. This does not mean, of course, that with them faith took the place of obedience: an entire self-commitment to God which did not show itself in obedience to Him would be self-contradictory, and the testing of faith by obedience is therefore a marked feature of the patriarchal narrative. But it does mean that faith was with them the precondition of all obedience. The patriarchal religion is essentially a religion, not of law but of promise, and therefore not primarily of obedience but of trust; the holy walk is characteristic of God's servants (Gen. 5:22, 24, 6:9, 17:1, 24:40, 48:15), but it is characteristically described as a walk "with God"; its peculiarity consisted precisely in the

---

[1679] Pgs. 252-253, Studies in Tertullian and Augustine: The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 4, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Bible Software, 2008.

[1680] Pg. 144, Studies in Theology: The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 9, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Bible Software, 2008.

[1681] Pg. 59, The Plan of Salvation: Five Lectures, B. B. Warfield. Philadelphia, PA: Presbyterian Board of Publication, 1915.

> ordering of life by entire trust in God, and it expressed itself in conduct growing out of this trust (Gen. 3:20, 4:1, 6:22, 7:5, 8:18, 12:4, 17:23, 21:12, 16, 22). The righteousness of the patriarchal age was thus but the manifestation in life of an entire self-commitment to God, in unwavering trust in His promises. . . . The piety of the Old Testament thus began with faith.[1682]

Indeed, "faith . . . on the human side is the fundamental element of religion, as grace is on God's side."[1683] Consequently, the Christian must continually trust and look to God through Christ in every area of his daily life, for not to do so is "practical atheism." Believers are to commit all their cares, burdens, and needs to the Lord, trusting that He will take care of them:

> There is a formal atheism of opinions and words and reasonings which declares that there is no God and seeks to sophisticate the understanding into believing that there is none. This the Bible describes as an open folly: the fool has said in his heart, There is no God. But even when the lip and the mind behind the lip are true to right reason and confess that there is a God who rules the world and to whom we are responsible in our every thought and word and deed, there is often a practical atheism that lives as if there were no God. Formal atheism denies God; practical atheism is guilty of the possibly even more astounding sin of forgetting the God it confesses. How many men who would not think of saying even in their hearts, There is no God, deny Him practically by ordering their lives as if He were not? And even among those who yield, in their lives, a practical as well as a formal acknowledgment of God, many yet manage, practically, to deny in their lives that this God, acknowledged and served, is the Lord of all the earth. How prone we are to limit and circumscribe the sphere in which we practically allow for God! We feel His presence and activity in some things but not in others; we seek His blessing in some matters but not in others; we look for His guidance in some affairs but not in others; we can trust Him in some crises and with some of our hopes but not in or with others. This too is a practical atheism. And it is against all such practical atheism that [Matthew 6:33] enters its protest. . . . It protests against men reckoning in anything without God.
>
> How are we to order our lives? How are we to provide for our households—or, for our own bodily wants? Is it true that we can trust the eternal welfare of our souls to God and cannot trust to Him the temporal welfare of our bodies? Is it true that He has provided salvation for us at the tremendous cost of the death of His Son, and will not provide food for us to eat and clothes for us to wear at the cost of the directive word that speaks and it is done? Is it true that we can stand by the bedside of our dying friend and send him forth into eternity in good confidence in God, and cannot send that same friend forth into the world with any confidence that God will keep him there? O, the practical atheism of many of our earthly cares and earthly anxieties! Can we not read the lessons of the birds of heaven and the lilies of the field which our Father feeds and clothes? What a rebuke these lessons are to our practical atheism, which says, in effect, that we cannot trust God for our earthly prosperity but must bid Him wait until we make good our earthly fortunes before we can afford to turn to Him. How many men do actually think that it is unreasonable to serve God at the expense of their business activity? To give Him their first and most energetic service? How many think it would be unreasonable in God to put His service before their provision for themselves and family? How many of us who Have been able to "risk" ourselves, do not think that we can "risk" our families in God's keeping? How subtle the temptations! But, here our Lord brushes them all away in the calm words, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; land all these things shall be added unto you." Is this not a rebuke to our practical atheism?[1684]

1682 Pgs. 485-486, Biblical Doctrines: The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 2, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Bible Software, 2008.

1683 Pg. 155, Faith and Life, B. B. Warfield. New York, NY: Longmans, Green, & Co., 1916.

1684 Pgs. 44-46, Faith and Life, B. B. Warfield. New York, NY: Longmans, Green, & Co., 1916.

The need to daily—indeed, constantly—live by faith, looking always to the Lord in confident trust, is by no means a Keswick distinctive. It is a glorious truth held in common by classic Baptist and old evangelical piety, one fervently proclaimed for many centuries before the origin of the Higher Life theology.

Warfield emphasized the need for surrender and consecration to Christ. He rejoiced that the Bible revealed to him "a Christ to love, to trust and to follow, a Christ without us the ground of our salvation, a Christ within us the hope of glory."[1685] Indeed, Warfield taught that "[s]urrender and consecration . . . are the twin key-notes of the Christian life."[1686] Divine blessing in Christian ministry depends upon surrender and consecration, and in proportion as they are emphasized may the Christian hope for success: "[O]ur life as ministers of the Gospel is nothing else but one side of our Christian life—the flower and fruit of our Christian life—[so] surrender and consecration must be made also its notes. It is in direct proportion as they are made its key-notes that we may hope for success in our ministry[.]"[1687] Surrender and consecration can by no means be divorced from faith—they are inextricably bound together: "[T]he two essential elements of all religion [are] surrender and consecration—the passive and active aspects of that faith which on the human side is the fundamental element of religion, as grace is on God's side, when dealing with sinful men."[1688] Warfield also recognized the absolute need for the strength of the Holy Spirit to enable surrender and consecration; God the Spirit's work is always primary and initiatory, while the believer's response is dependent upon Divine working. Therefore, on account of the believer's weakness, constant dependence upon God, prayer to Him, and constant empowerment from the Holy Ghost is absolutely necessary:

> Thus, then, the Spirit helps our weakness. By His hidden, inner influences He quickens us to the perception of our real need; He frames in us an infinite desire for this needed thing; He leads us to bring this desire in all its unutterable strength before God; who, seeing it within our hearts, cannot but grant it, as accordant with His will. Is not this a very present help in time of trouble? As prevalent a help as if we were miraculously rescued from any danger? And yet a help wrought through the means of God's own appointment, that is, our attitude of constant dependence on Him and our prayer to Him for His aid? And could Paul here have devised a better encouragement to the saints to go on in their holy course and fight the battle bravely to the end?[1689]

Indeed, as Warfield emphasized that believers are always weak and in need of the enablement of the Spirit, so he taught that Christians are always unworthy and always in 1685 Pg. 73, Revelation and Inspiration: The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 1, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Bible Software, 2008.

---

1686 Pg. 155, Faith and Life, B. B. Warfield. New York, NY: Longmans, Green, & Co., 1916.

1687 Pg. 155, Faith and Life, B. B. Warfield. New York, NY: Longmans, Green, & Co., 1916.

1688 Pg. 155, Faith and Life, B. B. Warfield. New York, NY: Longmans, Green, & Co., 1916.

1689 Pgs. 200-201, Faith and Life, B. B. Warfield. New York, NY: Longmans, Green, & Co., 1916.

continual need of God's grace. Anything good in them whatsoever must be ascribed, not to themselves, but to grace alone, received from the Holy Spirit alone "[e]very grace of the godly life . . . [is] a fruit of His working."[1690] Warfield explained:

> IT belongs to the very essence of the type of Christianity propagated by the Reformation that the believer should feel himself continuously unworthy of the grace by which he lives. At the center of this type of Christianity lies the contrast of sin and grace; and about this center everything else revolves. This is in large part the meaning of the emphasis put in this type of Christianity on justification by faith. It is its conviction that there is nothing in us or done by us, at any stage of our earthly development, because of which we are acceptable to God. We must always be accepted for Christ's sake, or we cannot ever be accepted at all. This is not true of us only "when we believe." It is just as true after we have believed. It will continue to be true as long as we live. Our need of Christ does not cease with our believing; nor does the nature of our relation to Him or to God through Him ever alter, no matter what our attainments in Christian graces or our achievements in Christian behavior may be. It is always on His "blood and righteousness" alone that we can rest. There is never anything that we are or have or do that can take His place, or that can take a place along with Him. We are always unworthy, and all that we have or do of good is always of pure grace. Though blessed with every spiritual blessing in the heavenlies in Christ, we are still in ourselves just "miserable sinners": "miserable sinners" saved by grace to be sure, but "miserable sinners" still, deserving in ourselves nothing but everlasting wrath. That is the attitude which the Reformers took, and that is the attitude which the Protestant world has learned from the Reformers to take, toward the relation of believers to Christ.[1691]

Since every aspect of salvation, whether justification, sanctification, or glorification, arises purely from the grace decreed by the Father, purchased by the Son, and applied by the Holy Ghost, the believer's spiritual strengthening is not a self-dependent moralism, but is sourced in the Son and wrought by the Holy Spirit through the instrumentality of faith:

> [S]piritual strengthening is contingent on, or let us rather say, is dependent on the abiding presence of Christ in their hearts. The indwelling Christ is the source of the Christian's spiritual strength. This is, of course, not to set aside the Holy Spirit. But he has read his New Testament to little purpose who would separate the Holy Spirit and Christ: Christ abides in the heart by the Spirit. The indwelling of the Holy Ghost is the means of the indwelling of Christ and the two are one and the same great fact. We are strengthened in the inner man with might by the Holy Spirit, because by the operation of the Spirit in our hearts, Christ abides there—thus and not otherwise. And here we learn then the source of the Christian's strength. Christ is the ultimate source. His indwelling is the ground of all our strength. But it is only by the Spirit—the executive of the Godhead in this sphere too—that Christ dwells in the heart. It is the Spirit that strengthens us, and He so strengthens us that He gives us "might" in our inner man. The way He does this is by forming Christ within us.
>
> The Apostle [Paul] is one of the most fecund writers extant, and thus it happens that he does not leave the matter even there. It is by the Spirit that Christ dwells in us—that is the objective fact. But there is a subjective fact too, and the Apostle does not fail to touch it—it is by our faith, too, that Christ dwells in us. "That Christ may abide in your hearts by your faith," he says. He does not say "by faith" merely, though he might well have said that, and it would have covered the whole necessary idea. But, in his habitual fullness of expression, he puts in the article,[1692] and thus implies that he recognizes their faith as already existent. They are Christians, they already believe, Christ is already dwelling in them by faith; he prays that He may abide in them by their faith. The stress is everywhere laid on continuance. May God strengthen your inner man, he says, by His Spirit. That is to say, he adds, may that Christ whom ye have received into your hearts by faith abide continuously in your hearts by that faith of yours. As much as to say, Christ is brought into your hearts by the Holy Ghost. He abides there by that Holy Ghost. May God thus continually strengthen your hearts by His Spirit, and that, even with might. I pray to Him for it, for it is He that gives it. But do not think, therefore, that you may lose hold on Christ. It is equally true that He abides in your hearts by your faith. When faith fails, so do the signs of His presence within: the strengthening of the Spirit and the steady burning of the flame of faith are correlative. As well expect the thermometer to stand still with the temperature varying as the height of your faith not to index the degree of your strength. Your strength is grounded in the indwelling Christ, wrought by the Spirit by means of faith.

---

[1690] Pg. 129, Biblical Doctrines: The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 2, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Bible Software, 2008.

[1691] Pgs. 113-114, Studies in Perfectionism, Part One: The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 7, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Bible Software, 2008.

Thus we have laid before us the sources of the Christian's strength. It is rooted in Christ, the Christ within us, abiding there by virtue of the Spirit's action quickening and upholding faith in us. And only as by the Spirit our faith is kept firm and clear, will Christ abide in us, and will we accordingly be strong in the inner man.[1693]

Evangelical piety has long recognized the necessity of surrender and consecration to Christ, the believer's continual weakness and need for grace, and the supernatural Divine source of all spiritual growth in the Triune God. Keswick theology did not contribute any new Scriptural teaching or new positive emphasis in relation to these blessed truths.

Warfield also recognized, because of the absolute dependence of the Christian on God and His grace, the supreme importance of prayer. The believer is to live in perpetual communion with God and to seek Him earnestly in prayer:

The thing for us to do is to pray without ceasing; once having come into the presence of God, never to leave it; to abide in His presence and to live, steadily, unbrokenly, continuously, in the midst of whatever distractions or trials, with and in Him. God grant such a life to every one of us! . . .

We must not undervalue the purely subjective or reflex effects of prayer. They are of the highest benefit to us. Much less must we undervalue the objective effects of prayer. In them lies the specific meaning of that exercise of prayer which we call petition. But the heart of the matter lies in every case in the communion with God which the soul enjoys in prayer. This is prayer itself, and in it is summed up what is most blessed in prayer. If it be man's chief end to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever, then man has attained his end, the sole purpose for which he was made, the entire object for which he exists, when he enters into communion with God, abides in His presence, streaming out to Him in all the emotions, I do not say appropriate to a creature in the presence of his Maker and Lord, apprehended by him as the Good Lord and Righteous Ruler of the souls of men, but appropriate to the sinner who has been redeemed by the blood of God's own Son and is inhabited by His Spirit and apprehends his Maker as also his Saviour, his Governor as also his Lover, and knows the supreme joy of him that was lost and is found, was dead and is alive again,—and all, through the glory of God's seeking and saving love. He who attains to this experience has attained all that is to be attained. He is absorbed in the beatific vision. He that sees God shall be like Him. . . .

If there is a God who sits aloft and hears and answers, do we not see that the attitude into which prayer brings the soul is the appropriate attitude which the soul should occupy to Him, and

---

[1692] That is, Ephesians 3:17a reads: κατοικῆσαι τὸν Χριστὸν διὰ τῆς πίστεως ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν. (This explanatory note was written by the author of this entire book, not by B. B. Warfield, who is being quoted.)

[1693] Pgs. 270-272, Faith and Life, B. B. Warfield. New York, NY: Longmans, Green, & Co., 1916.

> is the truest and best preparation of the soul for the reception of His grace? The soul in the attitude of prayer is like the flower turned upwards towards the sky and opening for the reception of the life-giving rain. What is prayer but an adoring appearing before God with a confession of our need and helplessness and a petition for His strength and blessing? What is prayer but a recognition of our dependence and a proclamation that all that we dependent creatures need is found abundantly and to spare in God, who gives to all men liberally and upbraids not? What is prayer but the very adjustment of the heart for the influx of grace? Therefore it is that we look upon the prayerful attitude as above all others the true Christian attitude—just because it is the attitude of devout and hopeful dependence on God.[1694]

Warfield called believers to a passionate and intimate life of fellowship with their Triune Redeemer in prayer. Conscious, direct, and intimate fellowship with the Triune God through the Holy Spirit, and immediate dependence on Him, is the distinguishing mark that separates evangelical piety from false systems such as sacerdotalism and which gives true Christianity its joy and power:

> [T]he sacerdotal system separates the soul from direct contact with and immediate dependence upon God the Holy Spirit as the source of all its gracious activities. . . . The Church, the means of grace, take the place of God the Holy Spirit in the thought of the Christian, and he thus loses all the joy and power which come from conscious direct communion with God. It makes every difference to the religious life, and every difference to the comfort and assurance of the religious hope, whether we are consciously dependent upon instrumentalities of grace, or upon God the Lord himself, experienced as personally present to our souls, working salvation in his loving grace. The two types of piety, fostered by dependence on instrumentalities of grace and by conscious communion with God the Holy Spirit as a personal Saviour, are utterly different, and the difference from the point of view of vital religion is not favorable to sacerdotalism. It is in the interests of vital religion, therefore, that the Protestant spirit repudiates sacerdotalism. And it is this repudiation which constitutes the very essence of evangelicalism. Precisely what evangelical religion means is immediate dependence of the soul on God and on God alone for salvation.[1695]

Keswick teaching on prayer and fellowship with God added nothing to the store of Biblical truth already possessed and treasured by traditional evangelical piety.

Warfield taught that the believer must be filled with and empowered by the Spirit—the Spirit-filled life was the goal of Apostolic piety, and it was the goal towards which the Princeton theologian likewise pointed men:

> It is only in our Head that the victory is now complete: in us who are members, it appears as yet only in part: and it is only when we put off our flesh, according to which we are liable to infirmity, that we shall be filled with the power of the Holy Spirit.[1696]
>
> On the basis of this great declaration the Apostle erects, then, his exhortation. Nor is he content to leave it in a negative, or merely inferential form. In the accomplishment of the Spirit-filled life he sees the goal, and he speaks it out in a final urgency of exhortation into which he compresses the whole matter: "Having, therefore, such promises as these (note the emphasis), beloved," he says, "let us purify ourselves from every defilement of flesh and spirit and perfect holiness in the fear of God." It is perfection, we perceive, that the Apostle is after for his followers; and he does not hesitate to raise this standard before the eyes of his readers as their greatest incitement to effort.

1694 Pgs. 153, 438-439, 149, Faith and Life, B. B. Warfield. New York, NY: Longmans, Green, & Co., 1916.

1695 Pgs. 81-82, The Plan of Salvation: Five Lectures, B. B. Warfield. Philadelphia, PA: Presbyterian Board of Publication, 1915.

1696 Pg. 334, Calvin and Calvinism: The Works of Benjamin B. Warfield, vol. 5, B. B. Warfield. Bellingham, WA: Logos Research Systems, Inc., 2008.

> They must not be content with a moderate attainment in the Christian life. They must not say to themselves, O, I guess I am Christian enough, although I'm not too good to do as other men do. They must, as they have begun in the Spirit, not finish in the flesh; but must go on unto perfection.[1697]

The work of the Holy Spirit is absolutely essential in every aspect of salvation:

> Let us remind ourselves moreover that the matters which fall under discussion here are of the order of what the Bible calls "things of the Spirit," things which are not to be had at all except as imparted by the Holy Ghost; and that it is therefore peculiarly infelicitous to speak of them as "attainable," merely on the ground of "natural ability." In so speaking of them, we seem gravely in danger of forgetting the dreadful evil of sin as the corruption of our whole nature, and the absolute need of the Spirit's free action in recovering us from this corruption. The unregenerate man cannot believe; the regenerate man cannot be perfect; because these things are not the proper product of their efforts in any case but are conferred by the Spirit, and by the Spirit alone. . . . The Scriptures do not . . . subordinate the Spirit's action to that of man; they do not think of the gifts of the Spirit as "attained," but as "conferred." . . . [We] rightly emphasiz[e] the supernatural nature of sanctification, as of regeneration, and of salvation at large. We do not sanctify ourselves by our own power; we do not even sanctify ourselves by using the Spirit as the instrument by which alone we can accomplish this great result. It is God who sanctifies us; and our activities are consequent at every step on His, not His on ours. . . . [We ought to] rise to the height of the Scriptural supernaturalness of sanctification . . . [and] recognize[e] the supernaturalness of the actual process of the sanctifying work[.][1698]

The old evangelical piety represented by Warfield taught that believers must not rest satisfied with moderate Christian attainments, but press on towards the standard of the absolute perfection of Christ. In this goal, they must not trust in the flesh, but be filled with the Spirit, for sanctification is absolutely and utterly depedent upon His work. Keswick contributed no new truth to the old orthodox piety in these key doctrinal and practical areas.

The following quotation summarizes the warm evangelical piety that Warfield, as a representative of old evangelical orthodoxy, embraced, preached, and defended:

> [T]he systematic theologian is preëminently a preacher of the gospel; and the end of his work is obviously not merely the logical arrangement of the truths which come under his hand, but the moving of men, through their power, to love God with all their hearts and their neighbors as themselves; to choose their portion with the Saviour of their souls; to find and hold Him precious; and to recognize and yield to the sweet influences of the Holy Spirit whom He has sent. With such truth as this he will not dare to deal in a cold and merely scientific spirit, but will justly and necessarily permit its preciousness and its practical destination to determine the spirit in which he handles it, and to awaken the reverential love with which alone he should investigate its reciprocal relations. For this he needs to be suffused at all times with a sense of the unspeakable worth of the revelation which lies before him as the source of his material, and with the personal bearings of its separate truths on his own heart and life; he needs to have had and to be having a full, rich, and deep religious experience of the great doctrines with which he deals; he needs to be living close to his God, to be resting always on the bosom of his Redeemer, to be filled at all times with the manifest influences of the Holy Spirit. The student of systematic theology needs a very sensitive religious nature, a most thoroughly consecrated heart, and an outpouring of the Holy Ghost upon him, such as will fill him with that spiritual discernment, without which all native intellect is in vain. He needs to be not merely a student, not merely a thinker, not merely a systematizer, not

---

